send agents or consuls to the countries she desires to trade with, and ascertain the exact patterns and styles of goods that will suit them, and then they can manufacture with a good prospect of success. Her Eastern trade will be increased enormously, as it is now only awaiting development. The shackles and semi-barbarism of ages are being broken off. The great strides of the West in civilization, in religion, in the arts and sciences, are being felt in the most remote Eastern towns and villages. Those nations are now moved as they were never moved before. God has opened up a grand opportunity to the missionaries, to the philanthropists, to the inventors, to the manufacturers, to the shippers; and if Britain accepts her great, her God-given responsibility—sends forth faithful, honest men and women, full of wisdom, of love to God and love for the souls of men—they will win those nations to Christ and hasten on millennial glory; while the artisan, the manufacturer, the merchant, the shipper and in fact all classes in Great Britain will make an immense amount of wealth from the trade which will without doubt spring up amongst those Orientals, while the Christian will have his heart rejoiced to see the great, the noble, the grand pedestal of glory on which God has placed her as mistress of the seas, to blow the gospel trumpet over every land. The ordinary jungle products of the Eastern Archipelago form the chief trade of the colony at present; being guttapercha, india rubber, rattans, camphor, birds' nests, beeswax, timbers of various valuable species. Tobacco, sago, pepper and gambier have been introduced lately. On the sea coast pearl oysters and beche de mer abound. The colony has not many settlers, and no great fighting tribe like those in other parts of the island. Gold and some traces of tin have been found in several of the rivers. The soil and climate are considered by competent people from Ceylon, Sumatra and Australia to be well suited for the cultivation of sugar and other tropical products, especially tobacco and pepper, which

THE NATIVES HAVE CULTIVATED FOR AGES.

Nearly 200,000 acres of land have been selected for plantations, but owing to the dulness of trade there has not been much progress made yet. By the company's regulations the price of land is fixed at a dollar per acre, and under special circumstances at 30 cents. The valuable bilian or iron wood tree is abundant. The Government is a Crown colony, administered by the Governor, assisted by a council composed of the Colonial Secretary and residents. The rainfall is very equally distributed over the colony. There are mild types of wet and dry seasons. The rain falls mostly at night, and a continuous wet day is seldom seen. The temperature varies little during the year, being about an average of 67.5 to 77.5 degrees Fahrenheit. The nights are cold, the coldest time being from 2 to 5 a.m. The highest temperature recorded is 93.5 degrees Fahrenheit. The coldest period in the year is from November to March inclusive, while in the middle of the warm season the temperature falls in June and July. The temperature depends greatly on the rainfall, if it is heavy the weather will be cooler. It is never oppressively warm, a straw hat at any hour of the day is a sufficient protection against the heat. The southwest monsoon prevails from April to November, and the northeast from December to March. The first and last months of each monsoon are variable, sometimes the wind is stronger and at other times lighter. The changes of the monsoons are the most unhealthy periods of the year.

SQUALLS OCCUR OCCASIONALLY

in the evening or at night, but they are not severe. Hurricanes do not occur so near the equator. Some parts of the colony are unhealthy, but will no doubt improve as the country is cleared up. When the forests are chopped down and the wind gets free access the sea breezes will purify the atmosphere, and North Borneo will in all probability be one of the healthiest climates of any tropical country. There has not been any bank established yet, but a paper and a copper currency are issued under the guarantee of the company, with proper reserves, and the banking facilities afforded by the Government Treasury assist in providing for the requirements of the country, as the company's notes are payable by their agents in Hong Kong and Singapore. North Borneo is greatly blessed in being out of the line of typhoons and earthquakes, which cause such devastation and havoc in the Philippines in the north and the Dutch possessions further south. The forest trees of British North Borneo comprise seventy-eight varieties, the quantities of which are vast; many of these are valuable the world over, particularly in China and Australia, each of which are only about 1,100 miles distant by sea, and will require enormous quantities of them. The colony has 700 miles of sea coast, dotted with creeks, harbors and large rivers, affording great facilities for carrying on enormous lumbering establishments, which would be sure to pay immense dividends if skilfully managed. The colony contains 31,000 square miles, the greater portion of which is covered by dense forests, containing trees up to ten feet in diameter, and 100 feet to the lowest branch. Some of the woods are very handsome, and have received from cabinet-makers the names of

BORNEO MAHOGANY,

Borneo walnut, Borneo cedar, Borneo ironwood, etc. The woods shown at the exhibition were as follows, and exist in large quantities in the colony: The billian wood, or Borneo ironwood; it grows on low, swampy ground; as it is seasoned it turns a dark red, is very hard and durable; it grows from one to three feet in diameter and fifty feet up to the lowest branch, and is proof against ants, teredos and sea worms. Mirabou is a heavy, dark yellow colored wood; it becomes darker with age; has a fine, regular grain; is very tough and durable; it makes beautiful furniture and takes a fine polish. Kiempas, or impas, is a reddish, coarse-grained wood, distinguished from mirabou by its coarseness and a curious cross-grain; it attains a large size and makes excellent beams, joists, etc. The massive, four-inch planks, of from four to five feet wide, of these and many other beautiful woods, polished like mirrors, had a surprising effect on the mind and plainly told the vast trade that must spring up e'er long between this colony and the neighboring nations, for these beautiful timbers for furniture, house building and many other useful purposes, as the supply is large enough to last for a century or more. The jungle produce consists of an immense variety of articles, amongst which the following were very conspicuous in the North Borneo Court: Mangrove bark, Damar tanah, Damar mata kuching, gutta-susa or india-rubber, tepi, sulang putch, gutta-merah or gutta-percha, tortoise-shells, beche de mer, Armadilla scales, beeswax, clams, rattans, sugar, sagama (used for collecting birds' nests), camphor, camphor wood, camphor oil, tobacco, alluvial gold, black sand or mundie, found with gold. The jungle sea produce was represented by batu tepi, sharks' maws, black birds' nests, white birds' nests, land shells, black sharks' fins, white sharks' fins. Amongst the native manufactures on exhibition there were silk handkerchiefs, silk trousers, silver tobacco boxes, silver betelnut pincers, silver finger rings, brass finger rings, brass sirih boxes, brass tobacco boxes, knives for splitting rattan, cocoa scrapers, Malay knives, Malay perangs, or axes, Malay chandong, Malay billiongs, or adzes, Malay mats, bed curtains, pillow case and dish cover, Sulu plains and embroidered cloth, Sulu pipes, turbans for men and for women, dress trousers, Sulu dress coat, woman's shawl and slippers, Sulu Chief's coat, and

MALAY ORNAMENTS FOR CHILDREN.

In native musical instruments there were several Bornean flutes (one of which was played by the nose), and jewsharps. Native implements of husbandry and household implements were represented by a rice decorticator, harrow, reaping knife, rice crushers, distaffs, lombar leaf cloth, a Dusun hat, guitar or sindatong, reed and gourd instrument called a sampotong, a bamboo lyre, rope made of the timbaran tree, female waist ornaments, sago flour, sleeping mats made of pandan grass, native hood worn by the female aborigine, native baskets for carrying burdens on their backs, aboriginal ropes, rice pounding machine and pounder. Samples of petticoats worn by the Dunsun women made of the fibre of gunob jackets made of the bark of the timbaran tree, worn by the Dunsun Dyaks of the Upper Kamanis, by both men and women, who make them by heating the bark to make it workable; other jackets worn by the men and women of the Upper Kamanis, made by the Kijows of cotton grown by themselves; petticoats worn by the Dunsun Dyak women of the Upper Kamanis; ropes made of the bark of the ijok tree, used for cables; tobacco cases and flints for striking fire; quivers for holding belts made of the bark of the ijok tree, and other articles of dress worn by the Dunsun women round their hips like our ladies' bustles; Dunsun bracelets, hats, knives worn by the Tegas and Kijows of Papar suspended by a string round their necks; bear skin hats, baskets made by the Kijows, and used by them and other native tribes around the coast for carrying burdens, war jackets (bunghats) and (leatules) war hats and bajow shields used by that tribe, ornaments worn by the Dunsun and Tegas women round their ankles. Yanti, head dresses worn by the Dunsun priestesses when performing religious rites. Gold embroidery made by the Brunei Malay women for covering dishes, water bottles and other utensils. Coal, sago flour, seed pearls found in the pearl oyster shells, vegetable tallow, Brunei sashes, Dunsun knapsacks, pearls, elephants' tusks, Illanum swords, Brunei swords, Dyak swords, suit of mail, poisoned arrow quivers and hundreds of other curious articles used by the various native tribes for dress, household purposes, war, travelling, religious rites, etc. Quadrupeds were represented by elephants' teeth, armadillo skins, monkeys, wild cats, squirrels, rhinoceros' skull, horn, feet and tail, buffalo horns, an immense stuffed ourang-outang skin, which might be styled a biped, as it stood about five and a half feet high on its feet, with its arms extended so as to be in a position to give a rather loveable embrace. I had just been examining the aborigines of Australia, one group in particular, composed of a man, a woman and infant, and a boy of perhaps 15 years of age, exhibited on a patch of white sandy ground, the lad lying naked on the sand, the man and woman in sitting postures, he with a raw bird in his hands, which he appeared to be eating, while the woman sat by his side with the baby in her arms. The parents dressed in the heighth of primitive fashion, with scanty loin clothes only, and the baby and boy in mother nature's full dress of very black soft hides. The whole tout ensemble of the group was low and animal in the extreme. The man's face, almost to the eyes, was covered with exceedingly black, bushy hair, with the bird with its feathers on held in both hands, which he seemed about to devour, the high cheek bones, the sunken ferret like eyes, the villainously low forehead, the long slight fingers, with black nails, the broad, open mouth, all than man. Passing from them I came into the Court of North Borneo, and vis-a-vis with His Majesty, the orang-outang above named. I examined him carefully, his hands, arms, feet, legs, body and head. His nails were the same semi-rounded form as my own, only black like the aboriginal Australians; his head, like the latter, had a large, base-retreating forehead, very little brain to represent the perceptive faculties, none to represent the moral faculties—the God-given reasoning powers of mind had no place in his brain to correspond with, to manifest the soul—all was animal on close inspection and immensely inferior to the wild Australian aborigines in the moral faculties and reasoning powers. I took hold of his hand and said, "How are you, brother?" but from the miserably small development of brain, and its purely animal shape, I felt that God had never breathed into the monkey race the breath of lives—the immortal spirit He breathed into man—the never-dying soul. Ornaments for the adornment of the fair sex were shown largely. Pearl breast pins, a diamond and pearl bracelet found in Bornean waters, gold cloths, mother of pearl shells, pearl oyster and other shells, also warriors' dresses and caps with feathers, shields with human hair, Malay execution Kris, Saribus Dyak instrument for procuring fire, Milanow instrument for flattening the heads of children; coal, a native wooden hat;

THEIR POISONED DARTS,

BETOKENED THE ANIMAL MORE

THE LAST PIRATE FLAG

taken by the British in Darvel Bay; model of the pirate Depong, of Darvel Bay; bark of the Russack tree, used by the Dunsans for mixing with their toddy to make it intoxicating. The sources from which the revenue is chiefly drawn are licenses for purchasing and retailing opium for smoking, licenses for selling spirits and other excisable articles, all of which are farmed out to private individuals; 10 per cent. royalty on jungle produce exported, a poll tax which is an established source of revenue among the natives in lieu of land taxes, and stamp duty. The land revenue comprises the proceeds of sales of public lands, quit rents and fees on transfers. There are, in addition, judicial fees and post-office stamps. These and a few remaining miscellaneous items make up the various sources of revenue.

A THRILL OF HORROR FILLS MY SOUL

when I see that men from England—sons of Britain—with the blessed Bible in their hands, which teaches them to love God supremely; to love their fellow creatures as themselves; which commands them to do unto others as they would that others should do unto them; which tells them to love their enemies, to bless those who curse them, to do good unto those who hate them and despitefully use them and persecute them—that they who have probably attended church all their lifetime, who have promised before God and man at their confirmation to renounce the devil and all his works, that they, for the sake of a paltry revenue, would license a lot of fiends in human form to procure and sell to the poor ignorant inhabitants of a heathen land, over which they have become the rulers and ought to be the protectors of the people, those foul agents of death, those poisons which weaken their brain power, make them imbecile, or madden their brains, excite the foulest passions of their nature—imbruit them—make them murderers—and then hang them, because they killed their fellow creatures while bereft of their reason by those very alcoholic poisons that they licensed an army of fiends to go forth and sell to them, well knowing that those poor aborigines would drink and smoke those deadly drugs until they would be quite unable to control their brutish passions. Certainly the North Bornean judges make fearful mistakes in this matter—they should have the members of the Government arrested,

TRIED FOR THEIR LIVES AND HANGED

for being accessories before the crimes were committed. But while condemning the North Bornean license system, permitting hundreds of the vilest creatures who ever wore the human form to murder the poor aborigines by the thousand, we are led to look at our own most degrading system—our own wretched laws, which grant licenses to thousands of saloons, and tens of thousands of taverns in our Dominion, to sell the distilled damnation to millions of our boys, young men, old men and women too, well knowing that alcoholic liquors impart no strength to the human system, they merely excite the brains of the dupes who drink them, and make them feel strong and rich while under the excitement; the next morning their systems are quite unstrung, weakness and lassitude prevail until the morning glass is taken to raise the excitement again. Every time it takes a little more to satisfy the morbid craving for the poison. The quantity of liquor which would make a young man drunk one day would (if he practiced drinking a glass or two daily) have no visible effect on him a year later. Every glass creates an appetite for another, and hundreds of our young men have become drunkards before they are fully aware of the fearful danger which is threatening them. They fancy they can take it or let it alone, as they wish; but, alas! they will not let it alone. They feel a forbid burning thirst for something to buoy them up. They take heavier and still heavier draughts of the deadly poison, which imparts no strength, but which prevents the natural discharge of the effete matter from the bodies of its victims, which, were it not used, would pass off through the skin, and good health would be maintained, but the pores of the skin of the face being obstructed, the alcohol, fusel oil and other poisonous drugs in the liquor cause disease to attack the liver, the

NOSE AND CHEEKS ARE SOON PAINTED RED,

the skin of the face becomes glossy, as if rubbed over with oil, the nose grows redder and still redder as the disease of the liver advances, the heavy drinkers make themselves walking advertisements by their evil practices, telling every one who studies human nature, and looks at their faces, that they are drunkards. Disease still fed by poison fastens more fatally on the vital parts, a slight cold, a hurt from a fall or a contagious disease seizes them, which a person whose blood was not poisoned would throw off in a few days, but it inevitably carries their poisoned and generally bloated carcases to the grave some twenty, thirty or forty years before they would have died had they never taste alcohol, which biteth like a serpent, which stingeth like a scorpion. Many of those who get saloon and tavern licenses, when times are a little dull, stand at their doors and accost every likely person they see passing, in hopes of drawing them into their bar-rooms, to drink the accursed thing. Then on Saturday nights and Sundays there are many places where all the initiated who are thirsty, by giving a certain kind of rap at back doors, can get in and get all the liquor they wish. The drinking habits of society are wrecking thousands of once happy homes in our Dominion. Idleness, sickness and death are wasting our resources and carrying off thousands of our people in every Province thereof, very many years before their time; filling our jails with criminals, our charitable institutions with orphans and helpless beggars, our penitentiaries and lunatic asylums with thieves, murderers and madmen, all on account of licensing places to sell poison, to destroy our people. Thousands of poor drunkards and miserable children by inches in this fair land, though kind and affectionate when free from the effects of alcohol, that curse of Canada, whether in beer, whiskey, wine or brandy, it is the devil in solution—it maddens the brain—it fires the imagination into frenzy, and all the ire of the demon falls upon his miserable, heart broken, half-starved wife and terror-stricken children. Twice in my life I have known those poor victims of saloon and tavern keepers, whose companions were the idols of their hearts e'er they fell into the awful snares which imbruted them. When married they were the kindest of husbands, but, alas, as the love of liquor increased their poor wive's sorrows increased also—at last, worn out with misery untold, they died broken hearted—kind friends called to see those who should have been their protectors, to try earnestly, if at all possible, to rescue them from destruction—to pluck them as brands from eternal woe. Supposing that contrition had reached their hard hearts upon the death of those they had formerly loved so well, they thought it a favorable opportunity, while they expected they were crushed down with sorrow for their past conduct towards the poor and helpless children, to try to draw them to review their past lives—to think of the happy days that they and those who now lie peacefully folded in the arms of death, where the wicked cease from troubling, and where the weary are forever at rest—had spent together in early wedded life—to think of the sorrows they had brought on them and themselves—to think of the misery—the inexpressible woe which these dear ones who were the best of wives—who had kept their houses and children clean, neat and pleasant looking through all their agony,

ARE KILLING THEIR WRETCHED WIVES

UNTIL THEIR POOR HEARTS BROKE

with the weight of woe which crushed their weary spirits from their frail tenements—to think of these things—of the sad consequences which had resulted from their fall, of the fearful consequences which would still result to their poor children, and the awful consequences to themselves if they still continued to drink. But Oh! horror of horrors! Let the frightful revelation spur on thousands, yea, tens of thousands, to fight the drinking practices of the day—to fight the license system—to fight for an absolutely prohibitory law, which shall at once and for ever banish alcoholic liquors from our Dominion—from the rock-bound stormy shores of the Atlantic to the placid bosom of the Pacific on the sandy shores of Western Victoria. The heart-broken wives died in the morning, the husbands were lying in drunken stupors for many hours later, quite unconscious of the awful fact.

Some Old London Lady Celebrities.

Lady Colin Campbell looked extremely handsome in black, with yellow flowers and orange velvet introduced into her black lace bonnet. It rose in a peak above her forehead, a shape which suits her admirably. Orange velvet strings were pinned back in loops under each ear with its wonderful diamond earring. A bunch of daffodils in the front of her dress matched exactly with the flowers in her bonnet. * * * Mrs. Oscar Wilde remains an exponent of the school departed. Her dress made her look "straight up and down," as children say, like the "human" figures in a Noah's Ark; and the contrast of a very large hat (very becoming, by the way) was one of prolixity with brevity. This lady has given up wearing birds. I am very glad. I do wish every nice woman would.

Photographing in Colors.

A new process of taking photographs in colors is thus described by a writer in Life: "I think it but just to Mr. Mayall, the eminent photographer of Bond street, that I should place on record his wonderful discovery in colored photography, which he exhibited to the press for the first time on Tuesday. Mr. Mayall, who is a member of most of the learned societies in the Eastern and Western hemispheres, took advantage of the occasion to detail at some length his fifty years' experience of the camera, and expressed great pleasure that at his advanced age he could still look forward to the development of the idea which would make colored photographs as common as those at present in vogue. Magnificent specimens of the new departure were inspected."

A Man to be Pitied.

Here comes a man whom I wish to observe. Behold him. His face is pallid and his eyes are lusterless. His lips are set in pain. His steps are slow and the dull throbbing of a heavy headache beats at his temples. His days are heavy and his nights are sleepless, and life is a weariness to him. He is a mere wreck of his early manhood. His friends avoid him. When he goes home his children hunt for the dark corners, and his poor wife wishes she were dead. What has wrought all this ruin and misery? Rum? The demon Rum? Oh, no, not exactly; pie and hot bread and fifteen minute dinners did it. The poor man has the dyspepsia, that's all. But that's enough.—Burdette in Brooklyn Eagle.

A merino ram at Middlebury, Vt., produced a weight of 29 pounds and 11 ounces of fleece from 376 days' growth, although the carcase weighed only 100 pounds, the wool being nearly 30 per cent. that of the carcass. Another ram, which was sheared of his sixth fleece, gave 38½ pounds of unwashed wool.

It is better to build up than to tear down. Harmony must rule, or we will all be the sufferers.—Craftsman.

The Four-Leaf Clover.

Through the meadow sweet with clover
Strolled a maiden and her lover;
Wrapped in meditation deeply,
With their hearts united sweetly,
Did they plight their troth anew;
Seeking oft the meadow over—
He with brown eyes, she with blue—
Searching for a four-leaf clover.

Walked they thus their watch still keeping,
'Mid the blooming clover seeking
For the auguring leaflets growing
In the meadow sweetly blowing,
With the brooklet flowing by;
Where they spent their sportive childhood
'Neath the same eternal sky,
In the meadow and the wildwood.

In their hearts a temple lifted,
Filled with love, and richly gifted
With the virtues ever dwelling
In the hearts, with passion swelling,
Which requited loves imbue.
Thus they strolled the meadow over—
He with brown eyes, she with blue—
Seeking for a four-leaf clover.

And the maiden with her lover
Found at length a four-leaf clover,
And above it faiths were plighted,
And their hearts fore'er united
In the holy name of love.
And beside the sacred altar,
Their betrothal rites to prove,
Came they, without word or falter.

And they dwelt beside the wildwood,
Where they'd spent the gladsome childhood;
And the shadows still are sleeping
'Neath the vines in silence creeping,
In the sunlight and the dew;
And two children now stroll over—
He with brown eyes, she with blue—
Through the meadow sweet with clover.

JASPER LEE HUNT.

The Miller's Man.

They've titles nowadays for all,
And names for Jacks of every trade,
Workmen and servants, great and small,
"Employees" now all masquerade.
"Professor" A., he cuts my hair,
An "Artist" makes my pot and pan;
But ha! ha! ha! the world is fair,
That calls me still—The Miller's Man.

A farmer's team brings in the wheat,
And, in our country water mill,
We make it flour that all may eat
Of wholesome bread a hearty fill.
I back my sacks, eight to each ton,
Such long has been our English plan,
And who can stand beneath each one
And walk it off?—The Miller's Man.

The good old Saxon word for me;
Call me a Man, and I'm content.
Let those be called, who like to be,
The Tradesman's "Help," the dealer's "Gent."
By honest work and labor still
To earn my "Wages" is my plan;
So here's good luck to Master's Mill,
And luck to me—The Miller's Man.

The Old Man Was Wise.

"He is a man of rank, papa,
A lord of high degree,
His wealth is simply fabulous,
And he wants to marry me."

"Be still, my child," the old man said,
"And cease your idle fuss.
I've learned that both his wealth and rank
Are simply fabulous."

Running an Engine Through Bush Fires.

"It would be no surprise to me," said a locomotive engineer at the Northwestern depot yesterday afternoon, "if the forest fires now raging in Wisconsin and Michgan would burn everything up for miles around. In all the years I have driven an engine in the Northwest I never yet have seen the country so dry. It is seldom that one sees the sides of the track burned over at this time of the year, yet there is scarcely a hundred feet of turf along the rails from Milwaukee to Chicago that is not scorched. In many places the fences have been burned and beautiful lawns ruined. I saw an engineer on the Wisconsin Central in Milwaukee yesterday, and he told me that he had run through a mile of flames on his last trip. The heat was so intense that his signals were destroyed, and the paint on his engine blistered in a hundred places. The windows in the cab were cracked, and the smoke was so dense that the engineer and his fireman were compelled to tie handkerchiefs over their mouth and wear goggles. If the people up North don't have rain within forty-eight hours I predict that the loss will be incalculable and the suffering widespread and terrible."—Chicago Herald.

A Wise Young Wife.

"There," said the young wife, turning from the mirror to her husband and giving him a sweet smile, "what do you think of these bangs? Do they become me?"

Charles, who was at that moment engrossed in the task of reckoning up the total cost of bonnets, bangs, dresses, etc., answered with a clouded brow:

"I should think you would be ashamed to ask such a question, Mary. Your vanity is becoming absolutely insufferable."

"Charles," she said, in a tremulous voice, "if I am vain it is for you. You would not love me if I was a slattern and a dowdy. It is for your sake that I try to make myself as attractive as possible."

Having said this she burst into tears.

Then Charles arose and gathered her in his arms, and kissed her fondly, and said:

"Your bangs are lovely, dear, and you are lovely, and if all wives were as neat and desirous of attracting the admiration of their husbands as you are, there would be a great deal more conjugal happiness in the world than there is at present. There, my love. Now, forgive me for my rudeness."—Boston Courier.

Taking the Census.

"I have a scheme to make some money when the next census is taken in Dakota," said one Sioux Falls man to another. "What is it?" "Why, I'll make a proposition to the Legislature to take the census of the towns at about $5 per town and make a whole barrel of money." "Why, you couldn't make a cent at that rate." "Couldn't, hey? Well, I know I could get rich at it. I can take the census of a town for 50 cents; you see, I'll give a man half a dollar to hitch up a sick horse and drive it out on the main street and let it lie down, and then after five minutes I'll get up on the waggon and count 'em."—Dakota Bell.

A sheep raiser in Runnels County, Texas, has a beard five feet four inches long, and twenty-one inches wide at its broadest part. It is of a rich chestnut color, and its owner is very proud of it.—San Diego Union.

A book agent called upon the superintendent of schools at Cleveland, O., and not finding him rang a bell close at hand. It proved to be a fire alarm, at the sound of which six hundred well trained pupils arose and filed out of the building. The agent quickly departed for "fields fresh."

Archbishop Taché has consented to testify before Senator Schultz's Committee on the Natural Food Products of the Northwest as soon as his health will permit.

DOMINION PARLIAMENT.

The Speaker announced he had received a letter stating that John R. Dunn, Returning-officer for Queen's, N. B., was present and awaited the pleasure of the House.

Hon. Mr. Thompson, introducing a Bill to amend the Supreme and Exchequer Court Act, explained that it was to establish a special Exchequer Court, the judge of which would have the combined Exchequer Court jurisdiction now possessed by the judges of the Supreme Court and the jurisdiction of the Dominion arbitrators. Cases might be referred to this court by any Minister of the Crown. The judge would have a salary of $6,000 and there would be a registrar with a salary of $2,000. There might be appeal to the Supreme Court in any cases involving more than $500. The Dominion arbitrators would be continued and would be at the disposal of the judge to send to distant points to take evidence regarding claims, thus saving expense. As the offices of the Dominion arbitrators became vacant official referees would be appointed in their stead.

Mr. Mills asked whether it was intended that the new judge should have judicial powers or only powers of recommendation which the Government might disregard, as in the case of the Dominion Arbitrators?

Hon. Mr. Thompson stated that the judge would have the full powers invested in the judges of the Supreme Court as Exchequer Court judges.

The Bill was read a first time.

Sir Adolphe Caron, replying to Mr. O'Brien, stated that the York and Simcoe provisional battalion had made application for kit allowance, but it did not appear the claim was well founded, and it was not allowed.

Mr. Langelier, for Mr. Prefontaine, asked whether the amnesty to those taking part in the troubles in the Northwest applied to Gabriel Dumont; whether Dumont was free to return to Canada, and whether, if he returned, proceedings would be taken against him.

Hon. Mr. Thompson said that the amnesty applied to all those who had not committed homicide except in actual warfare. Dumont must know whether it applied to him or not.

The following Private Bills were considered in committee, reported and read a third time:

To revise and amend the Act to incorporate the Saint Gabriel Levee & Railway Company—Mr. Curran.

To incorporate the Goderich & Canadian Pacific Junction Railway Company—Mr. Porter.

To incorporate the Kincardine & Teeswater Railway Company—Mr. McCarthy.

Respecting the Ontario & Quebec Railway Company—Mr. Patterson (Essex).

To incorporate the Manufacturers' Life & Accident Insurance Company.—Mr. Brown.

The following Bills were read a second time:

To incorporate the Southwestern Railway company.—Sir Donald Smith.

To incorporate the Oshawa Railway & Navigation Co.—Mr. Smith (Ontario.)

To incorporate the Londonderry Iron Company.—Mr. Kenny.

To revive and amend the charter of the Quebec and James Bay Railway Company and to extend the time for commencing and completing the railway of the said company.—Mr. Grandbois.

To incorporate the Canadian Horse Insurance Company.—Mr. Small.

Mr. Edgar moved the second reading of the Bill to amend the Dominion Elections Act. He said that no session could be more appropriate for considering amendments to the election law than the session first following an election, when its incidents were fresh in the minds of members of the House. He explained that his Bill was intended to improve the mechanical appliances of balloting, in order to ensure greater secrecy of voting, and also to make it clear that Deputy Returning officers and poll clerks shall not be disqualified from voting, and to prevent votes being cast by persons not on the list, under cover of certificates issued to them as agents for candidates, and to make further provision as to declaration of result of polling.

Hon. Mr. Thompson said that the Government intended to introduce the same amendments to the Elections Act this session and other amendments next session. He moved the adjournment of the debate.

Mr. Mills (Bothwell) said that if amendments to the election law were to be introduced, there were some points to which he would like to call attention. For instance, there was the question of the right of aliens to vote. Under the present law persons of British birth who had become naturalized in the United States were allowed to vote in Canada.

Messrs. Davies, Ives, Landerkin and Freeman referred to other defects in the election law. The debate was then adjourned.

Mr. McCarthy introduced a Bill for the protection of railway employees. He said its object was to enable railway companies, as experience had shown to be necessary, to afford reasonable protection to their employees. One provision dealt with the packing of frogs. Another was for placing a running bar and railings to freight cars, and a third was in reference to oil cups. Most of the provisions were embodied in an Act passed by the Legislature of Ontario, but it had been found that the Act only applied to Provincial railways.

The Bill was read a first time.

Mr. Thompson introduced a Bill to amend the Electoral Franchise Act. Improvements were contemplated in the Franchise Act to simplify the procedure of revision, and this Bill proposed to dispense with revision this year and keep in force for the next twelve months the voters' lists of last year. The Bill further declared as valid any lists, notwithstanding the want of qualification of any deputy revising officers.

Mr. Weldon pointed out that some revising officers had already commenced work this year.

Mr. Thompson said the time for commencing revision proceedings was the 1st of June, and not much work had been done.

Mr. Tisdale said the officers were already at work in his riding. He hoped the Government would hurry the Bill through.

Sir John Macdonald said notice would be sent to the officers at once.

Mr. Trow asked if there was any provision dealing with changes in property.

Mr. Thompson said it was simply proposed to continue the lists as they stood.

Mr. Mills said the termination of leases of sale and property would deprive 10 per cent. of the electors of the right to vote, while a great many young men who were justly entitled to the franchise would be prevented for twelve months from getting on the roll.

Mr. Ives said there would be few elections this year and the proposal of the Government seemed a reasonable one.

The Bill was read a first time.

Sir John Macdonald, introducing a Bill to amend the Election Act, said its object was to declare that deputy returning-officers, poll clerks and constables employed in connection with a Dominion election shall have and always have had the right to vote at such election if on the voters' list.

The Bill was read a first time.

Sir John Macdonald, introducing a Bill to amend the Act respecting the Department of Agriculture, said it was part of the scheme of departmental re-organization. The Bill proposed to place patents and copyright matters under the Department of Secretary of State and industrial designs and trade marks under the new Minister of Trade and Commerce.

The Bill was read a first time.

The House resolved itself into a Committee of Supply.

On the item, country savings banks, New Brunswick, Nova Scotia and British Columbia, charges of management, $16,000,

Sir Charles Tupper said the Government had considered the fact that a considerable proportion of the deposits in the Government Savings Banks were in such large sums as to make it apparent that those depositaries were being made use of by a class of people for whom they were not intended. With the view, therefore, of preserving the savings banks for the convenience of small depositors the Government had issued instructions to its officers to put in force the Order-in-Council passed last year limiting the deposits to $1,000 for each depositor. It was also proposed that deposits shall only be withdrawn from the office where the account is opened.

The item passed.

The following Bills were read a second time:

To consolidate and amend the Acts relating to the Winnipeg & Hudson Bay Railway & Steamship Company — Mr. Scarth.

To incorporate the Dominion Oil Pipe Line & Manufacturing Company.

To incorporate the Cobourg, Blairton & Marmora Railway Company—Mr. Guillet.

Latest Northwest News.

Considerable local feeling exists at Battleford because of the decision of the Government to collect the arms of the home guard and remove them to Winnipeg. The residents of Battleford think the arms should be left there as a measure of precaution.

It is rumored that McGinty, who was shot by Conductor Selkirk at Donald, B.C., is dead.

Peter Fant, the man who shot Chief McRae, has effected his escape. The Chief is doing well and no danger is apprehended. The bullet has not been extracted yet.

Senator Schultz was interviewed yesterday in Montreal while on his way to Ottawa. Speaking of the importance of measures for increasing the national food supply of the Northwest in view of the extinction of the buffalo, he said the principal points to which attention could be drawn were the fish product, wild rice and the cultivation of the rabbit.

A petition to the Dominion Government praying for certain amendments to the Lands Act has been drafted by a committee appointed at a public meeting held in Regina, and will be forwarded to Ottawa.

In reply to a request from the Council of Whitewater, Man., for the extension of the Manitoba Southwestern Railway, Mr. Van Horne stated that the Canadian Pacific Railway Company had no money to expend on branches in Manitoba.

An immense mass meeting was held yesterday in Winnipeg to discuss the railway situation, all parts of the Province of Manitoba being represented. The proposed railway to the boundary was enthusiastically endorsed, and resolutions condemning the disallowance policy and Sir Geo. Stephen's recent telegram and urging the immediate construction of the road were adopted. Ground has been broken at Grand Forks, Dak., for the Northern Pacific extension to the boundary, to connect with the Manitoba line.

The first train on the C. P. R. reached Vancouver, B. C., on Monday last, the engineer on the occasion being Mr. P. Wright, and the conductor Mr. Bernhardt. On a shield on one side of the engine was a banner with the inscription, "Our National Highway," and on the other, "From Ocean to Ocean." The whole train was draped with bunting and banners. The town had been tastefully decorated for the occasion with arches, evergreens, etc.

Reports have been received at Regina that the Blood Indians have stolen forty horses from the Gros Ventres, south of the line, and serious results are feared. Lieut.-Governor Dewdney, with a detachment of Mounted Police, has left for MacLeod, to endeavor to pacify the Gros Ventres.

A Boston Man and a Detroit Girl.

It was on a west-bound train. A Boston young gentleman had struck up a conversational acquaintance with a Detroit young lady.

"Do you like Smollett?"

"I—I guess I've never seen him. Who's he with?"

The Boston young man started, but fearing that he had been misunderstood, he heeded not the query.

"You are surely fond of Fielding?" he continued.

"Oh, yes, it will do," replied the Detroit girl, "but slugging is what I like, and you just wait till our big four get after your bean-eaters—they'll make 'em think its raining baseballs out in the back end of your park."—Chicago Herald.

The observant Philadelphia North American notes that festive anglers are now preparing their hooks and lies for the summer campaign.

—The Grimsby Independent complains of a scarcity of small bills in that place. Hereabouts, large bills are the scarce denomination.

BLUSTERING RUFFIANISM.

How the New England Fishermen on the Fish Question are Looked Upon at Washington.

A Washington despatch to the New York Star says: "If the delay in the matter of the fisheries controversy should, as now seems probable, result in a more intelligent apprehension of the question by the people of this country, Mr. Bayard will have earned the gratitude of both sides of the St. Lawrence. From the very outset of the dispute the true character of the issues involved has been sedulously obscured by a set of demagogues in New England and in Congress. From the very outset, it has been made to appear that the Canadians sought to oppress and outrage our fishermen. The humblest effort by the Dominion authorities to assert their undoubted and conspicuous rights was converted into a brutal and wicked assault upon our manhood. The establishment by them of custom house regulations for their own coasts and ports was described as an act of rowdy bravado; the enforcement of those regulations became a grinding insult too hideous for endurance. It was never once admitted that the Dominion had any claims which we were bound to respect. It was never hinted that Canada's territorial privileges amounted to anything more than an idle metaphor, or that her disposition to uphold them could be other than a vicious and unprincipled assault on our dignity. While we were claiming the whole Pacific Ocean north of the fiftieth parallel, denying the right of English vessels to come within 100 miles of our shores, and regarding these colossal assumptions as miracles of modesty and self-abnegation, we flushed with a noble rage at the establishment by Canada of a three-mile limit along her Atlantic coast, and fairly gasped with fury when it appeared that our vessels would not be allowed to violate Canadian revenue laws within Canadian jurisdiction. There was never a more impressive exhibition of blustering ruffianism, and it is to the imperishable honor of the Administration that it refused to lend itself to the senseless clamor of that time. It stood like a rock against the furious tide of misrepresentation and malignity. It offered a stern and immovable barrier to the most vicious conspiracy of the generation. And now the fruit of this manly course is beginning to appear. A clearer understanding of the case has presented itself to men. Within the past fortnight two signal indications of this have transpired, notably in the powerful speech of Congressman Butterworth, of Ohio, delivered in his city a few nights ago. The fact is cropping out that vast and far-reaching mutual interests unite Canada and the United States, interests which, in their present aggregate and their future promise, are to the question of the fisheries as a mountain to a mole hill. The people of the cities along the lakes are awakening to the knowledge that they cannot afford to sacrifice a great and growing branch of their traffic to the unreasonable and arrogant pretensions of Senator Frye's Yankee fishermen. Everybody agrees—the entire country demands with one voice—that our citizens shall receive fair and courteous treatment at the hands of the Dominion authorities, and none will more jealously and more vigilantly guard this point than President Cleveland and Secretary Bayard. But it is no longer possible to delude the country with a false presentation of the case, and to inflame the public mind against Great Britain through the medium of slanderous exaggerations. This delay, which has been so angrily criticized by Senator Frye's organ, is coming to be understood as a fortunate and auspicious interlude, during which the country has had leisure to learn much truth and to relinquish many mischievous delusions."

A Somnambulist Woman Who Hugged a Policeman in Her Sleep.

Patrolman Warren, of the 3rd precinct, was standing on the corner of Temple and Cambridge streets about 2.30 o'clock yesterday morning when he saw a white object moving through Lynde street towards Cambridge street. At first he supposed it was a spirit of some west ender. However, he waited until the object reached the corner, when he saw that it was a woman with only a night dress on and with her hair hanging loosely about her shoulders. He then surmised that it was some insane person. He had taken but a few steps when the woman started down Cambridge street at a rapid pace. He pursued her but could not overtake her until she had run as far as the corner of Chambers and Allen streets. He then saw that she was asleep. He took her to the station. Lieut. Gaskin, who was on duty, was looking to see if she was still asleep when she placed her arms around his neck and laid her head on his manly breast. The lieutenant tried in vain to break her hold and he ordered Dr. Cilley to be called. The woman remained asleep until the physican reached the station and then opened her eyes. After looking at the lieutenant a second or two she exclaimed:

"My God! Where am I?"

The lieutenant told her not to be alarmed, as she was in the hands of friends. A quilt was wrapped around her and Officer Warren took her to her home in Lynde street. She refused to give her name. The officers of that district say that she is subject to somnambulism and has on several occasions been found walking in sleep on the street. —Boston Globe.

One, but Yet So Different.

If Germany kicks a Frenchman, France kicks a German; if France mobilizes her troops, Germany will mobilize her troops; if France says "Booh!" Germany says "Bah!" To such an extent do these countries carry their unnatural imitation that if France should go to war with Germany, Germany would probably go to war with France.—San Francisco Examiner.

Is There No Refuge?

Girls are scarce in Dakota. When a new girl enters the territory all the brass bands turn out en masse and serenade her with "Sweet Violets."—East Texas Rambler.

A man while riding on a Maine railroad a few days ago thought that he felt a bug crawling on his neck and grabbed for it. Then there was a scream, and the man found himself clutching the back hair of a woman who had been sitting behind with her back to his.

ST. LOUIS LAWYERS

Indulge in Fisticuffs and Street Brawls and One Gets a Ride in the Patrol Waggon.

A St. Louis despatch says: The Court House was turned into something of a prize ring for about two hours Saturday afternoon, State Legislator William P. Macklin and his son and Alexander J. P. Garesche and two sons figuring as combatants. The parties are all prominent, the older Garesche being one of the leading lawyers in the city. The trouble grew out of a lawsuit, and W. P. Macklin found occasion to consult the elder Garesche and then to strike him. The latter struck back and chased young Macklin out of the Court House. Alexander Garesche, jun., heard of the trouble and went in search of Macklin, and revenged his father's ill-treatment with a kick and a blow. Again Macklin fled, but soon returned backed by his father and a brick which he had tied in a handkerchief. The Garesches were talking to several lawyers when they were confronted by the Macklins. A scrimmage ensued and Macklin, jun., threw the brick at the younger Garesche's head, but missed it. Judge Vallyant, with several of the court officers, separated the belligerents. Two hours later Macklin, jun., was met on the street by Edmond Garesche, another son of the eminent lawyer. He took Macklin to task for abusing an old man, and when Macklin retorted Edmond struck at him. A lively retreat saved him and in the chase Edmond fell, and Macklin, seeing his advantage, kicked him in the face. The younger Garesche regained his feet and for two blocks chased Macklin, capturing him in a saloon. It took two minutes for the police to get on the scene, and half of that time Garesche was getting ready for his victim, but the last minute was put in with a vengeance, and when Macklin rode down to the Four Courts in the patrol waggon his face was out of shape and a mass of bruises. All the parties were released on bail.

EGYPT'S FUTURE.

The Terms Under Which England Proposes to Evacuate the Country.

A London cable says: The Anglo-Turkish convention relative to Egypt provides for the maintenance of all existing firmans and the neutralization of the Suez Canal, and guarantee internationally the inviolability of Egypt. It also provides that the British shall withdraw from Egypt in three years unless the country is threatened with danger either internal or external. England shall, after the withdrawal of her troops, supervise the whole Egyptian army for further two years, with the right to re-occupy, with or without the aid of Turkish troops, if order is disturbed or an invasion is feared. Certain branches of the Egyptian administration will be specially settled without fresh discussion. All the powers, except Russia, co-operate with England to expedite a settlement, and England made every possible concession to arrive at an understanding with Turkey. The contingency of eventual military movements by way of the Suez Canal will form a subject for future discussion. The convention is received with favor in all quarters at Constantinople.

A St. Petersburg cable says: The Novoe Vremyia says the convention places Egypt under the perpetual tutelage of England, France and Russia, this paper says, are expected to protest that the Porte has no right to dispose of the future destinies of Egypt, inasmuch as Turkey has no proprietary right in Egypt, but merely the right of usufruct.

A Mischief-Making Parrot.

A short time ago a middle-aged gentleman in Dublin presented an intelligent parrot to a Miss Angelina, whom he meant to marry. He is now being sued for breach of promise on account of the same bird. He knocked at his fiancee's door and the parrot said "Come in." He went in, discovered a strange young man sitting on the sofa with the young lady, and then the parrot imitated a long string of kisses and laughed fiendishly. The match was declared off, and the young lady brings suit. She declares that the parrot was wrong.

Queen Victoria's Needle.

A remarkable needle is owned by Queen Victoria. Indeed, it is likely that there is no other needle so wonderful in the whole world. It represents the column of Trajan in miniature. This Roman column is adorned with many scenes in sculpture which tell of the heroic deeds of the Emperor Trajan. On the little needle are pictured scenes from the life of Queen Victorio, but the pictures are so small that it is necessary to use a magnifying glass in order to see them. The needle can be opened. It contains a number of needles of smaller size, which also contain microscopic pictures.

Chops and Kisses.

An epicure recently discoursed to the editor concerning various culinary matters, and one remark he made about mutton chops may bear quoting: "People do not eat chops soon enough after they are cooked," he said. "You should treat a chop as you would a woman. When it is ready don't dally, but be instant with your lips."—Boston Courier.

Mr. Pullman's Kyar.

"Is Mr. Pullman aboard?" he asked of the porter of a sleeping-car on an Ohio railroad. "No, sah, he ain't." "Do you represent Mr. Pullman?" "Well, sah, Misser Pullman built dis kyar, an' de rigular conductor runs de train, but in case you want waluable informashun I reckon you'd better interview me. I'ze a sort of middleman, I 'spose."—Wall Street Daily News.

Promptly Explained.

"Why is it," said a husband to his wife, "that married women, as a rule, are such terrible gossipers?"

"Because they find such attentive listeners in their husbands," replied the lady, easily.—New York Sun.

Lincoln wrote that famous paper (the Gettysburg oration) in so many different ways that he must have written and rewritten it at least a thousand times. Still, it was worth the trouble.—Jersey City Argus.

The first colored man ever elected Mayor of a town north of the Ohio river is Isaiah Tuppins, of Reekville, Ohio.

THIS PAPER may be found on file at Geo. P. Rowell & Co's Newspaper Advertising Bureau (10 Spruce St.), where advertising contracts may be made for it IN NEW YORK.

THE ADVANCE.

Is published

Every Thursday,

FROM THE OFFICE,

Collingwood Street, - - Flesherton, Ont.

TERMS OF SUBSCRIPTION:

$1 per annum when paid strictly in advance
$1.50 per annum when not so paid.

A. R. FAWCETT,
Editor and Proprietor.

FLESHERTON:
THURSDAY, JUNE 9, 1887.

EDITORIAL NOTES.

Some of our Canadjan parliamentarians ought to be dropped on an iceberg or shut up in a refrigerator in order to give them a chance to cool off.

The immense amount of roller flour disposed of in this place at our feed stores furnishes considerable food for thought to philosophers; yea, verily, and also to saints and sinners.

At this season of the year it is impossible to evade the almost omnipresent mosquito. Like the ward politician it turns up everywhere—generally when least expected and often—very often!—when not wanted!

Hon. Edward Blake has retired for a time from the leadership of the Reform party. The Toronto World—the most reliable paper in that city—is of opinion that the retirement will be permanent. The scholarly and gentlemanly Sir Richard Cartwright is mentioned as Mr. Blake's successor.

The Secretary of the South Grey Teachers' Association, Mr. Wm. Irwin, deserves to be patted right heartily on the back for the grand success achieved in connection with the Convention held in Flesherton last week. He worked like a Trojan and it is safe to say that the members of the S. G. T. A. never assembled under more auspicious circumstances. Our citizens seconded Mr. Irwin's efforts in their usual hearty and generous style.

It has been said that "God hates a coward." We are of the belief that He also hates a mean man. Under such circumstances there is one man in Artemesia who should tremble until his hair stands on end like porcupine quills. He lives between Flesherton and Markdale, on the Toronto and Sydenham road.

And now the pathmaster, with fire in his eyes and the people's filthy lucre in his pocket, will proceed to adorn the street in front of his premises at the public expense. After which he will interview the Agricultural Editor of this great journal with a shot-gun and ramrod for "sticking his nose into other people's business!!"

"Come-er-er-eouwt for a walk er-eow, Mar-r-riar!" sang out a masculine cat the other night, as with curved spine, and enlarged tail it moved gracefully along the top of THE ADVANCE kitchen chimney. A boot-jack, three boots, sixteen bottles, and fifty-seven glass alleys convinced John Thomas that "Mariar" must be keeping company with some low, ill-bred pussy in the next block.

One of our correspondents this week tells of a gentleman who is sorry he did not go to Dakota twenty years sooner than he did. We know of more than one man who expresses the most profound regret that they were ever induced to pitch their tents in Dakota at all, and who actually came back to Ontario hundreds of dollars poorer than when they left the "banner province" some two or three years previous. What suits one does not always suit another, you see.

It has been often observed that ministers of the Gospel are called of the Lord to preach. It has also been noticed that the promise of a larger salary has frequently induced ministers to forsake their "beloved" flocks and a smaller salary. Notable and grand exceptions are to be found, however,—and not a thousand miles from Flesherton or Markdale either. These latter are amongst that noble but small army of men who are a tower of strength in the Christian world. Would there were more of them!

A NASAL INJECTOR free with each bottle of Shiloh's Catarrh Remedy. Price 50 cents. Sold at Medical Hall.

TEMPERANCE JUBILEE!

Everybody should make it a point to attend the magnificent Jubilee celebration in Flesherton, on Monday, June the 20th. See next week's ADVANCE.

COMPETITION SERIES.

6.—How many yards of carpet 15 inches wide will cover a floor 22½ ft. by 19 feet.

7.—If a room be 13½ ft. square, what must its height be in order that the area of the walls may be 75 sq. yds.?

8.—The weight of lead is 19·35 and that of copper 29·70 of an equal bulk of platinum. How many cubic inches of lead will be the same weight as a cubic foot of copper?

9.—A man sold two lots for 100 each, gaining thereby 20% on one and losing 20% on the other. Did he gain or lose and how much?

10.—A laborer demands 10 hours pay for 9½ hours work, what increase % in wages is this equivalent to?

Flesherton Station Items.

To the Editor of The Advance.

Dear Sir,—Mr. Samuel Whittaker, of Aurora County, Dakota, U. S., brother to Mr. Richard Whittaker, Flesherton Station, is visiting friends in Artemesia, being at present the guest of his brother-in-law and sister, Mr. and Mrs. William Stone. Mr. W. is one of those enterprising, look-ahead kind of farmers who add materially to the benefit of any community. He has been five years in Dakota, the amount of farm property owned by the family consists of 2,240 acres, the land is prairie and of excellent quality. The winter season in that locality is mild and fully two months shorter than here, being located in the South-eastern corner of Dakota, and Mr. W. sadly regrets that he did not go there twenty years ago.

Master Fred. Whittaker, a ten year old son of Mr. A. W. Whittaker, and brother of the late George Whittaker, who was killed by lightning in Dakota, two years ago, left here on the 24th inst., en route for Dakota to join his father. We hope the little fellow arrived safely at his destination.

ARE YOU MADE miserable by Indigestion, Constipation, Dizziness, Loss of appetite, Yellow Skin? Shiloh's Vitalizer is a positive cure. Sold at Medical Hall.

THE REV. GEO. H. THAYER, of Bourbon, Ind., says: "Both myself and wife owe our lives to SHILOH'S CONSUMPTION CURE." Sold at Medical Hall.

A WONDERFUL ORGAN. The largest organ and one that plays a controlling part of the health of the body is the liver. If torpid or inactive the whole system becomes diseased. Dr. Chase's Liver Cure is made specially for Liver and Kidney diseases, and is guaranteed to cure. Receipe book and medicine $1. Sold by all dealers.

CONSUMPTION IN FLESHERTON.

There being good prospects of a fresh quantity of Flour to be consumed in the village and surrounding country the present season, the undersigned has opened out with a good stock of the following lines:—

ROLLER FLOUR!

Best Brands.

Rolled & Granulated Oat-Meal.

Corn Meal,
Cracked Wheat,
Chop,
Shorts,
Bran and Oats,

At Bottom Prices for Cash.

Special Discounts

According to amount of Purchase.

W. W. TRIMBLE,

Next door to Clayton's Shoe Store.

(312 3610)

Strayed.

CAME to the premises of the undersigned, Lot 133, West T. & S. Road, Artemesia, one Ewe, about a month ago. Owner can have same by proving property and paying expenses.

JOHN McKEE,
Flesherton P.O.

Artemesia, May 27th, 1887.

J. B. SLOAN

Has any quantity of Shingles, &c., on hand at Eugenia.

Cheap for Cash.

James Sullivan,

The Tinsmith, - Flesherton

Repairing, Eavetroughing, and in fact everything in the business will receive my prompt and careful attention at reasonable prices.

TO RENT.—Dwelling House opposite Strain's block, Flesherton. Apply on the premises. W. WRIGHT.

SHILOH'S CATARRH REMEDY—a positive cure for Catarrh, Diptheria and Canker Mouth. Sold at Medical Hall.

BEON YOUR GUARD.—Don't allow a cold in the head to slowly and surely run into Catarrh, when you can be cured for 25c. by using Dr. Chase's Catarrh Cure. A few applications cure insipient catarrh; 1 to 2 boxes cures ordinary catarrh; 2 to 5 boxes is guaranteed to cure chronic catarrh. Try it. Only 25 cents and sure cure. Sold by all dealers.

Sore Eyes

The eyes are always in sympathy with the body, and afford an excellent index of its condition. When the eyes become weak, and the lids inflamed and sore, it is an evidence that the system has become disordered by Scrofula, for which Ayer's Sarsaparilla is the best known remedy.

Scrofula, which produced a painful inflammation in my eyes, caused me much suffering for a number of years. By the advice of a physician I commenced taking Ayer's Sarsaparilla. After using this medicine a short time I was completely

Cured

My eyes are now in a splendid condition, and I am as well and strong as ever.—Mrs. William Gage, Concord, N. H.

For a number of years I was troubled with a humor in my eyes, and was unable to obtain any relief until I commenced using Ayer's Sarsaparilla. This medicine has effected a complete cure, and I believe it to be the best of blood purifiers.—C. E. Upton, Nashua, N. H.

From childhood, and until within a few months, I have been afflicted with Weak and Sore Eyes. I have used for these complaints, with beneficial results, Ayer's Sarsaparilla, and consider it a great blood purifier.—Mrs. C. Phillips, Glover, Vt.

I suffered for a year with inflammation in my left eye. Three ulcers formed on the ball, depriving me of sight, and causing great pain. After trying many other remedies, to no purpose, I was finally induced to use Ayer's Sarsaparilla, and,

By Taking

three bottles of this medicine, have been entirely cured. My sight has been restored, and there is no sign of inflammation, sore, or ulcer in my eye.—Kendal T. Bowen, Sugar Tree Ridge, Ohio.

My daughter, ten years old, was afflicted with Scrofulous Sore Eyes. During the last two years she never saw light of any kind. Physicians of the highest standing exerted their skill, but with no permanent success. On the recommendation of a friend I purchased a bottle of Ayer's Sarsaparilla, which my daughter commenced taking. Before she had used the third bottle her sight was restored, and she can now look steadily at a brilliant light without pain. Her cure is complete.—W. E. Sutherland, Evangelist, Shelby City, Ky.

Ayer's Sarsaparilla,

Prepared by Dr. J. C. Ayer & Co., Lowell, Mass.
Sold by all Druggists. Price $1; six bottles, $5.

THE MARKETS.

FLESHERTON.

Carefully Corrected Each Week.

Flour	$4 00	to 4 20
Fall Wheat	$0 85	to 0 85
Spring Wheat	0 85	0 85
Barley	0 30	0 45
Oats	0 26	0 26
Peas	0 47	0 48
Butter	0 11½	0 12½
Eggs, fresh	0 11	0 11
Potatoes bush.	0 50	0 50
Pork	5 60	5 60
Hay, per ton	10 00	10 00
Hides	6 00	7 00
Wool	20	20
Sheepskins	0 40	0 50
Geese	0 05	0 05
Turkeys	0 8	0 8
Chickens per pair	0 25	0 30
Ducks per pair	0 40	0 50

AT GORDON'S
HARNESS SHOP
FLESHERTON.

You will find an assortment of

Heavy and Light Harness,

Whips, Brushes, Curry Combs, Sweat Pads, and the celebrated "Harness Oil."

COLLARS A SPECIALTY.

Cheap for Cash. Call and Examine.

R. J. SPROUL,

Flesherton. Conveyancer, Appraiser, Valuator and Money lender. Deeds, Mortgages, leases and Wills drawn up and Valuations made on shortest notice. Charges very low. Apply to R. J. SPROULE, Postmaster, Flesherton.

CLAYTON'S
HARNESS SHOP!
FLESHERTON,

Is the place to get your Harness Collars, &c, made up in good style.

Shop in W. Clayton's Boot & Shoe Store, Flesherton.

HARNESS
HARNESS.

...If you want Harness, Single or Double, or Horse Blankets, Trunks, Bells, Valises, Curry Combs, Brushes or the celebrated Harness Oil, call & examine before purchasing elsewhere.

R. J. WATSON,
PRICEVILLE.

PHOTOGRAPHY.

MRS. BULMER.

Photographer,

Flesherton, - Ont.

Having spent some time in the studio of the famous Toronto Photographer, Mr. S. J. Dixon, where I acquired valuable knowledge in Retouching, I feel assured I can give good general satisfaction. A call respectfully solicited.

MRS. BULMER.

Flesherton, Sept. 17th, 1885.

THE CELEBRATED Dr CHASE'S MANDRAKE & DANDELION LIVER CURE

HAVE YOU

Liver Complaint, Dyspepsia, Indigestion, Biliousness, Jaundice, Headache, Dizziness, Pain in the Back, Costiveness, or any disease arising from a deranged liver, DR. CHASE'S LIVER CURE will be found a sure and certain remedy.

NATURE'S REMEDY

The unqualified success of Dr Chase's Liver Cure in Liver Complaint rests entirely with the fact that it is compounded from nature's well-known liver regulators, MANDRAKE AND DANDELION, combined with many other invaluable roots, barks and herbs, having a powerful effect on the Kidneys, Stomach, Bowels and Blood. 500,000 SOLD

Over one-half million of Dr. Chase's Receipe Books were sold in Canada alone. We want every man, woman and child who is troubled with Liver Complaint to try this great remedy.

SOMETHING NEW. GIVEN AWAY FREE

Wrapped around every bottle of Dr. Chase's Liver Cure is a valuable Household Medical Guide and Recipe Book (84 pages), containing over 200 useful recipes, pronounced by medical men and druggists as invaluable, and worth ten times the price of the medicine.

TRY CHASE'S CATARRH CURE. A safe and positive remedy. Price, 25 cents.

TRY CHASE'S KIDNEY AND LIVER PILLS, 25 cts. per box.

SOLD BY ALL DEALERS

T. EDMANSON & CO., Sole Agents, Bradford

Flesherton
Meat Market.

S. SPIRIT, - - PROPRIETOR.

Cash paid for fat Cattle and Sheep.

Fresh Meats constantly on hand for Cash. Orders promptly filled.

FLESHERTON.
MARBLE WORKS:
E. VANZANT,

ALL KINDS OF

Marble and Monumental Works,

Such as Monuments, Tomb Tables, Headstones Counter and Table Tops—in American and Italian Marble and Granite, and made on short notice. Also Mantles in Marble and Marbleized Slate, &c., &c.

Flesherton, Aug. 30, 1883.

HEALTH FOR ALL.

HOLLOWAY'S PILLS & OINTMENT

THE PILLS

Purify the Blood, correct all Disorders of the

Liver, Stomach, Kidn'ys, and Bowels.

They invigorate and restore to health Debilitated Constitutions, and are invaluable in all Complaints incidental to Females of all ages. For Children and the aged they are priceless.

THE OINTMENT

Is an infallible remedy for Bad Legs, Bad Breasts, Old Wounds, Sores and Ulcers. It is famous for Gout and Rheumatism. For disorders of the Chest it has no equal.

For SORE THROAT, BRONCHITIS, COUGHS, COLDS

Glandular Swellings, and all Skin Diseases it has no rival; and for contracted and stiff joints it acts like a charm.

Manufactured only at Professor HOLLOWAY'S Establishment,

78, New Oxford Street (late 533, Oxford Street), London,

and are sold at 1s. 1½d., 2s. 9d., 4s 6d., 11s., 22s., and 33s. each Box or Pot, and may be had of all Medicine Vendors throughout the World.

Purchasers should look to the Label on the Pots and Boxes. If the address is not 533, Oxford Street, London, they are spurious.

FOR SALE.

The undersigned has White Ash Butter Tubs and Churns for sale,

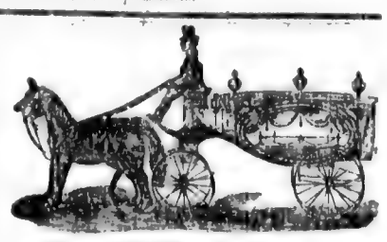
JOS. McCORMICK,
Flesherton.

304 320,

FLAGS AND BANNERS

of superior quality, for Orange and other Societies. Order early.

W. M. TEGART,
Thornbury, Ont.



J. W. BATES,

Furniture Dealer and Undertaker,

FLESHERTON, ONT.

—EUGENIA—
Real Estate Agency

MONEY TO LOAN at lowest rates of interest and on terms of repayment to suit borrower.

FARMS bought and sold.

CONVEYANCES of all kinds properly executed.

COMMISSIONER for taking affidavits in H.C.J., Agent for the Norwich Fire Insurance Society. All business promptly, carefully and confidentially attended to.

Office, Corner of Inkerman and Napoleon Streets.

HENRY MELDRUM,
AGENT.

SOUTH GREY TEACHERS.

Report of Their Annual Convention held in Flesherton.

The annual convention of the South Grey Teachers' Association was held in the Flesherton schoolhouse on Thursday and Friday of last week. The fraternity was largely represented, both sexes being pretty evenly divided as to numbers.

Mr. C. Ramage, the energetic, original and painstaking President of the Association, occupied the chair. His opening address abounded in practical suggestions and well rounded periods. He strongly supported the keeping up of Township Associations, as it had a tendency to bring Teachers together, inducing a healthy interchange of ideas and preventing that isolation which so largely prevailed in many parts of the county. Mr. Ramage then introduced the newly appointed Public School Inspector, Mr. Campbell, to the Convention, in graceful and appropriate terms, and amidst great applause.

Mr. F. J. Hunter's paper on the "Teacher's Influence" next came on. It contained several good points and a number of inferior ones. It was, however, quite interesting, often edifying, and sometimes positively instructive.

THURSDAY AFTERNOON.

Mr. R. J. Ball's paper on the "New School History" possessed considerable interest for those who heard it, and contained some excellent suggestions.

Miss Taylor's "Object Lesson (with class)" was received with considerable applause. It was excellent.

Mr. J. J. Tilley, Director of Teachers' Institutes, read a capital paper on "Discipline." It was "brim full and running over" with common sense ideas pertaining to discipline in the school-room. School-rooms should be made attractive—something boys and girls would be proud of. Self-government and self-control were the great lessons to be learned, the great ends to be attained. Obedience should be cultivated until it becomes a habit. It should be an enlightened obedience. The school should be regarded as a model little world, the active co-operation of the pupils being necessary for the good government thereof; and Teachers should have a constant interest in their pupils, both in and out of the school-room. Parents and trustees should be induced to visit the school from time to time—not in an official capacity, but in a friendly manner. Teachers should get as nearly on a level with their pupils as possible. Nature illustrates the true principles of moral discipline. Discipline should be regular and not spasmodic. As for instance: a breach of school discipline that would not be tolerated one day should certainly not be tolerated the next day. Children soon accommodate themselves to a regular discipline. Artificial rules are often broken on account of natural instincts. The Teacher should study child nature. Discipline should be unobtursive—rather a means than an end. He should be kind, and should not expect the dull boy to keep pace with the bright boy. Home surroundings had much to do with the pupils progress. Curiosity was very strong in children; they should have something to do and a motive for doing it. There should be emulation of a desire to excel. Great caution should be exercised in the matter of corporal punishment. Mr. Tilley is a pleasing speaker and clothes his thoughts in simple, common sense language. The paper was criticised by Mr. R. J. Oxenham, Mr. Boyle, of Toronto, Mr. Ramage and Inspector Campbell. Mr. Tilley's replies were short, pointed and courteous.

Mr. Wherry, head master of Durham Model School, next read his paper on "Examinations." It was a common sense one in every respect. The mistakes of medical men, under certain circumstances, was referred to in a most happy and humorous manner. One or two points in Mr. Wherry's paper provoked some lively criticism on the part of our genial young friend, Mr. Blakeston, and others.

Inspector Campbell's address on "Temperance in Schools" had been looked forward to with considerable interest by many citizens and others, and we are safe in saying that not one in the room went away disappointed. The Inspector thought a Temperance education was needed among the masses. Let the schools be thoroughly permeated with its principles. Temperance signifies something more now than it did once. It now means total abstinence. Now-a-days a practical reason for everything was required, and he was in favor of the scientific or experimental method of explaining the uses and abuses of alcohol. He would give object lessons on the pupils themselves. The Teacher should be full of his subject in order to teach it successfully. Pupils will carry away ideas on physiology if presented in a proper manner. Want of space prevents us doing that justice to the Inspector's excellent and practical address which it deserves.

FRIDAY MORNING.

Devotional exercises by the President and the reading of the minutes by Secretary-Treasurer Irwin, of Flesherton.

Mr. Boyle, of Toronto, then delivered his eloquent, humorous and sensible address on the "Educational Society." In the course of his remarks he referred to the combination of Trustees for the furtherance of their interests, and suggested that teachers might go and do likewise. It was possible to increase the salaries of Teachers without imposing on the innocent rural Trustees. He paid a touching tribute to the "ramshackle old building" in which they were assembled, and suggested the erection of Teacher's residences. The Teaching profession was overcrowded, and no class pursued a more suicidal policy than they did. 20% of the fraternity in this province were teaching on permits, a fact to be deplored. The rich and prosperous county of Welland had 30 or 40 "permit" teachers, caused by the sycophancy of the Inspector there. The speaker's statement that the same salary should be paid to lady as to gentlemen Teachers, if equally qualified, was received with applause by the male Teachers. Numerous instances of Teachers "underbidding" each other were given and Mr. Boyle took his seat amidst great applause. A short discussion followed in which the President, Inspector Campbell, Mr. Tilley and Mr. Wherry took part.

Mr. Tilley's "Grammar, with Class" was very interesting and instructive.

Mr. Merchant, head master of the Owen Sound High School, delivered an eminently practical address on the "College of Preceptors," which was listened to with marked attention. It was logical and convincing.

NOTES.

Mr. Tilley's lecture in the Methodist Church on Thursday evening, entitled, "Success in life, with special reference to Young Men," was very largely attended, the lecture room being crowded by an intelligent and appreciative audience. The lecture was unusually interesting and instructive as well as practical and frequently elicited hearty outbursts of applause. The proceedings were varied by the rendering of well selected solos, duets, etc. by Flesherton's best vocalists.

Mr. Dixon's paper on "Map Drawing," on Friday afternoon, was interesting and practical. Mr. Dixon is certainly one of the cleverest members of the fraternity we ever met in our life.

Inspector Campbell is a tall, slim, kindly looking young man, with a prominent nose. He is very popular with Teachers and, in fact, everybody.

Proton Pointers.

From our own Correspondent.

HOW THE WILD CATS WERE CAPTURED.

Monday of last week as Mr. Wm. Campbell—who lives north of Hopeville—was in the bush, he came across two wild cats (Canadian Lynx) and their young ones. He secured the kittens, keeping the old cats away with an axe. Next day Mr. Campbell and Mr. Robt. Parslow set out to secure the old ones if possible. Taking one of the captives they hung it by its hind legs to a tree. It, of course, set up a terrible scream, which soon brought its mother near the spot. Mr. Parslow could just discern the outline of the old wild cat through the foliage of the trees, and drawing a bead upon her, fired, putting eight buckshot in her breast. The hunters naturally feel very proud over their success and hope to catch the masculine species before long.

FOOT BALL MATCH.

A foot ball match took place Saturday of week before last, between the Swinton Clippers and the Greenside Levellers. The Clippers won the "toss" for goal, consequently the ball was kicked off by the Levellers at 6:30 p. m. The game was a very exciting one and the teams were evenly matched; thus when "half time" was called neither side had scored a goal. After five minutes intermission, playing resumed, both teams doing excellent work. It seemed evident that neither side was to be the loser, but by some unfortunate bungling on the part of the Clippers the Levellers scored a goal eight minutes before time was called, thus leaving the score 1 to 0. The players were as follows:—

Levellers.		Clippers.
T. Legate	Goal	W. Aldcorn.
A. McKelvie, W. Watson	Backs	W. Campbell, N. McMillen
C. Snail, R. Snail	½ Backs	J. Aldcorn, E. Maher
J. McArthur	Centre	W. Knox
W. Hastie, W. McKelvie	Forwards	W. Blakeston, J. Maher
R. Moore	Rt. Wing	J. Haw
W. Legate, J. Scott	Left Wing	G. Parslow, G. Black
T. Coleridge	Umpire	G. Watson

J. Laughton, Referee.

Inistioge.

From our own Correspondent.

The crops around here look splendid and this year has a prospect so far for an abundant harvest.

Rev. J. W. Mahood preached his farewell sermon here last Sabbath to a large congregation.

The Inistioge Division of the Sons of Temperance has a membership of fifty, and is continually increasing. We believe they are going to celebrate the Queen's Jubilee by holding a picnic at Eugenia Falls.

Death has again put in his appearance its victim is Charlotte daughter of Mr. R. Campbell who died last Saturday, aged 10 years. Her remains were interred in the Methodist cemetery here last Sabbath. The funeral sermon was preached by Rev. J. W. Mahood.

Mr. A. Jamieson, of Shelburne, has been visiting friends here.

It was decided at a meeting held here last Tuesday night to erect a shed in connection with the Methodist church with a hall and speaking hall above it.

Master H. Hutchinson who has been visiting his parents here has returned to Orangeville.

Master J. Roseborough has recovered from his illness and has resumed his studies at the Collingwood Collegiate Institute.

This is all that I can think of now, Mr. Editor, so I will have to stop. MAUD.

SLEEPLESS NIGHTS, made miserable by that terrible cough. Shiloh's Cure is the remedy for you. Sold at Medical Hall.

"HACKMETACK," a lasting and fragrant perfume. Price 25 and 50 cents. Sold by Medical Hall.

Kimberley.

From our Correspondent.

[The following items were crowded out of last week's ADVANCE.]

Fine warm weather and crops looking well—especially fall wheat, although it will scarcely be an average crop. I never saw pasture looking so well at this date, I think, as it does now.

Seeding about through and the busy farmers hard at work getting their potatoes in. Always busy, you see, like yourself.

I was in Kimberley to-day, but saw no loafers—every man trying to mind his own business, which principles, I think, you teach through your paper.

I would suggest that a good stone drinking trough—for public use—be placed where that pure stream of spring water crosses the road near the town line between Artemesia and Euphrasia. Although the water is in Artemesia, it is near enough our own Township to warrant me in thinking Euphrasia would assist in defraying the small expense necessary to put in the trough. It would be a great boon to man and beast if there were watering troughs all along our public roads, wherever available.

A Valuator's Liability.

Globe, 26th April, 1887.

The suit of O'Sullivan v. Lake, which was decided before Chief Justice Cameron yesterday, involved the liability of a valuator. D. A. O'Sullivan, of Toronto, was applied to for a loan on the Frederick Murphy property, about 27 acres on the mountain brow, just east of the city. He sent J. N. Lake, of Toronto, to value it, and on Lake's report loaned Murphy $8,000. The mortgage was not paid, and though the property was twice offered for sale no bids could be had. Mr. O'Sullivan sued Mr. Lake and Mr. Peter Balfour, of this city, who had been consulted, for the difference between $8,000 and the real value of the property. The suit as against Mr. Balfour was discussed before going to the jury, but a verdict was found as against Mr. Lake for $2,000.

ADVICE TO MOTHERS.—Are you disturbed at night and broken of your rest by a sick child suffering and crying with pain of Cutting Teeth? If so send at once and get a bottle of "Mrs. Winslow's Soothing Syrup" for Children Teething. Its value is incalculable. It will relieve the poor little sufferer immediately. Depend upon it, mothers; there is no mistake about it. It cures Dysentery and Diarrhœa, regulates the Stomach and Bowels, cures Wind Colic, softens the Gums, reduces Inflammation, and gives tone and energy to the whole system. "Mrs. Winslow's Soothing Syrup" for children teething is pleasant to the taste and is the prescription of one of the oldest and best female physicians and nurses in the United States, and is for sale by all druggists throughout the world. Price twenty-five cents a bottle. Be sure and ask for "MRS. WINSLOW'S SOOTHING SYRUP," and take no other kind.

Volunteers.

No. 6 Company, 31st Batt. will meet at the Drill Shed, Flesherton, on Saturday evenings for drill, until further orders. 25 young men wanted to fill up the above company. Apply to J. J. Field, Lieut., No. 6 Company, Flesherton. t.f.

FOR DYSPEPSIA and Liver Complaint, you have a printed guarantee on every bottle of Shiloh's Vitalizer. It never fails to cure. Sold at Medical Hall.

SHILOH'S CURE will immediately relieve Croup, Whooping Cough, and Bronchitis. Sold at Medical Hall.

For Toilet Use.

Ayer's Hair Vigor keeps the hair soft and pliant, imparts to it the lustre and freshness of youth, causes it to grow luxuriantly, eradicates Dandruff, cures all scalp diseases, and is the most cleanly of all hair preparations.

AYER'S Hair Vigor has given me perfect satisfaction. I was nearly bald for six years, during which time I used many hair preparations, but without success. Indeed, what little hair I had, was growing thinner, until I tried Ayer's Hair Vigor. I used two bottles of the Vigor, and my head is now well covered with a new growth of hair. —Judson B. Chapel, Peabody, Mass.

HAIR that has become weak, gray, and faded, may have new life and color restored to it by the use of Ayer's Hair Vigor. "My hair was thin, faded, and dry, and fell out in large quantities. Ayer's Hair Vigor stopped the falling, and restored my hair to its original color. As a dressing for the hair, this preparation has no equal.—Mary N. Hammond, Stillwater, Minn.

VIGOR, youth, and beauty, in the appearance of the hair, may be preserved for an indefinite period by the use of Ayer's Hair Vigor. "A disease of the scalp caused my hair to become harsh and dry, and to fall out freely. Nothing I tried seemed to do any good until I commenced using Ayer's Hair Vigor. Three bottles of this preparation restored my hair to a healthy condition, and it is now soft and pliant. My scalp is cured, and it is also free from dandruff.—Mrs. E. R. Foss, Milwaukee, Wis.

Ayer's Hair Vigor,

Sold by Druggists and Perfumers.

PERFECT SAFETY, prompt action, and wonderful curative properties, easily place Ayer's Pills at the head of the list of popular remedies for Sick and Nervous Headaches, Constipation, and all ailments originating in a disordered Liver.

I have been a great sufferer from Headache, and Ayer's Cathartic Pills are the only medicine that has ever given me relief. One dose of these Pills will quickly move my bowels, and free my head from pains—William L. Page, Richmond Va.

Ayer's Pills,

Prepared by Dr. J. C. Ayer & Co., Lowell, Mass. Sold by all Dealers in Medicine.

NEW ADVERTISEMENTS.

CAPE BRETON RAILWAY.

Sec.—Strait of Canso to Grand Narrows.

TENDER FOR THE WORKS OF CONSTRUCTION.

SEALED TENDERS, addressed to the undersigned and endorsed "Tender for Cape Breton Railway," will be received at this office up to noon on Wednesday, the 6th day of July, 1887, for certain works of construction.

Plans and profiles will be open for inspection at the Office of the Chief Engineer and General Manager of Government Railways at Ottawa, and also at the Office of the Cape Breton Railway, at Port Hawkesbury, C. B., on and after the 6th day of June, 1887, when the general specification and form of tender may be obtained upon application.

No tender will be entertained unless on one of the printed forms and all the conditions are complied with.

By order,
A. P. BRADLEY,
Secretary.

Department of Railways and Canals,
Ottawa, 27th May, 1887.

NOTICE.

GRAY CHAMPION!

A THOROUGH-BRED DURHAM BULL, with good pedigree, will stand for service at Lot 142 West T. & S.R., Artemesia. TERMS, $1 if paid on or before Jan. 1st, 1888; otherwise, $1.25.

Also thorough-bred BERKSHIRE BOAR at same place. JACOB A. LEVER.

DUNDALK

PUMP WORKS!

C. R. PHILLIP'S,

Manufacturer of all kinds of PUMPS.

Cylinder Check Valve & Cistern Pumps.

Orders Respectfully Solicited and satisfaction guaranteed.

JAMES SULLIVAN,
Tin-Smith, Agent,
FLESHERTON

WHAT IS IT?

IT IS A FACT AND NO CONTROVERSY THAT

JOHNSON'S

TONIC BITTERS

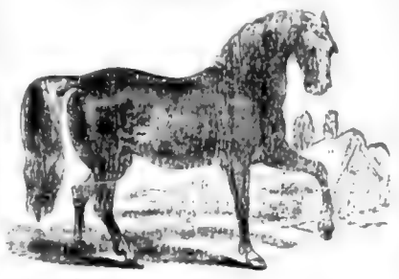
and NERVINE is the best remedy in the market for nervous diseases of any sort. Hysteria, Loss of Appetite, Debility from loss of fluids or overwork, Paleness of Complexion so often seen in young females and all complaints arising from poverty of blood.

It is a fact and no gainsaying that JOHNSON'S TONIC LIVER PILLS are the very best in the market for diseases caused by Torpid Liver and derrangement of the Stomach or Kidneys.

It is a fact and no one will deny it that JOHNSON'S ALL HEALING WHITE OINTMENT is the best in the market for Burns, Scalds, Chilblains, Salt Rheum, Barbers Itch, Pimples and all Skin Disorders arising from scrofulous taint.

W. S. CHRISTOE has been appointed Agent for the above and has them on sale at his Medical Hall, Flesherton. Try for yourselves and be satisfied.

THE ROADSTER STALLION



BILLY V.!

WILL leave his own stable in Flesherton, on MONDAY, MAY 2nd, 1887, at 12 o'clock noon, and proceed to Linley's hotel, Maxwell, where he will remain over night.

TUESDAY, will proceed to Jonathon Irish's, Wareham, for noon, thence to Johnston's hotel, Dundalk, where he will remain till Thursday morning.

THURSDAY, will return to Flesherton for the night.

FRIDAY, will proceed to Atkinson's hotel, Priceville, for noon, and return to his own stable for the night.

SATURDAY, will proceed to Marsh's hotel, Markdale, for noon, and return to his own stable in Flesherton, where he will remain till the following Monday.

The above route will be continued during the season, health and weather permitting.

Description and Pedigree:

BILLY V., foaled June 18th, 1883, is a dark dappled bay, stands 15 hands 3½", weighs 1150 pounds, and for bone, muscle, style and action, cannot be surpassed, was sired by Clear-Grit jr., dam by Kennett, 2nd dam by Royal George, 3rd dam by Bloor's Messenger.

TERMS:

To insure a foal $10.00, payable March 1st, 1888. Season mares $8.00, payable last round of horse, or not later than July 12th, 1887, if not then paid said mares will be charged as insured mares. Single leap $6.00, payable at time of service. All mares not returned regularly to horse will be charged as insured mares. All accidents to mares at risk of owners. Owners trying their mares to said horse and knowing them to be afflicted with any contagious disease, will be liable in damages. Groom's Fee 25 cents.

A. S. VANDUSEN, Owner. GEO. GLASSFORD, Groom.

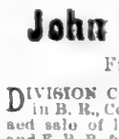
A POSITIVE CURE FOR CATARRH. GIVES Immediate Relief FOR Cold In Head, HAY FEVER. EASY TO USE.

Not a Snuff, Powder or Irritating Liquid. Price 50 cts. and $1.00. If not obtainable at your druggists, sent prepaid on receipt of price. Address FULFORD & CO., Brockville, Ont.

Medical.

DR. CARTER,
M.C.P. & S., ONT.
PHYSICIAN, SURGEON, &c.
FLESHERTON.
Office, Strain's block. Residence, Wm. Wright's

Dentistry.



J. P. MARSHALL, L.D.S
DENTIST,

GRADUATE of Toronto School of Dentistry will be at Markdale the 1st and 3rd Wednesday of each month, and at Flesherton on the 1st and 3rd Thursday in each month for the practice of his profession.

Legal.

J. W. FROST, LL.B.,
Barrister, Solicitor, Conveyancer.
Office,—Strain's Building, FLESHERTON.
A. A. CHESLEY, Solicitor and Conveyancer, Resident Manager.
MR. FROST will be found at the Office on Thursdays as heretofore.

P. McCULLOUGH,
Barrister, &c.
Office, over McFarland's Store, Markdale. Money to Loan.

MASSON & MASSON,
BARRISTERS, SOLICITORS, &c.
OFFICES—Owen Sound, in Vicker's Block Poulett St; Branch office in Markdale, over McFarland's store, on Friday and Saturday every week.
J. MASSON, Q.C. S. MASSON. W. MASSON.
N.B.—Private & Company's funds to invest at from Six to Eight per cent.

Business Cards.

John W. Armstrong,
FLESHERTON, Co. GREY.
DIVISION COURT CLERK, COMMISSIONER in B. R., Conveyancer, &c. Agent for purchased sale of lands. Appraiser for C. L. C. Co. and F. P. B. & S. Society. Money to Loan on the most reasonable terms. ISSUER OF MARRIAGE LICENSES. NOTARY PUBLIC.

MONEY TO LOAN.
At 6 Per Cent.
On Town or Farm Property,
S. DAMUDE,
Flesherton.

ANDREW McGIRR,
Issuer of Marriage Licenses,
FEVERSHAM, . . ONT.

W. J. BELLAMY.
TWP. CLERK ARTEMESIA.
CONVEYANCER, COMMISSIONER, INSURANCE AGT, &C.
DEEDS, MORTGAGES, LEASES, &c., prepared and properly executed. Insurance effected in first-class companies. Money to lend at lowest rates.

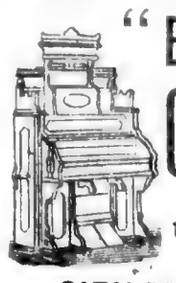
GET YOUR MEAT
—:FROM:—
Petch & Mitchell,
GENERAL BUTCHERS,
FLESHERTON!
Cash paid for fat cattle, &c., &c.

NEW LIVERY!

THE undersigned begs to announce that he has started a first-class Livery in the stand opposite Munshaw's Hotel, Flesherton, where the travelling public can be accommodated with good rigs and horses at most reasonable prices. Try me and be convinced.

Respectfully yours,
W. H. JOHNSTON.
Flesherton, Nov. 19th, 1886.

Picture Framing,
Neatly, Cheaply & Quickly Done, by
J. E. MOORE,
Durham St., Opposite Clayton's Harness Shop



"BELL" ORGANS
Unapproached for Tone and Quality.
CATALOGUES FREE.
BELL & CO., Guelph, Ont.

FATAL PARISIAN FIRE.

The Opera Comique Takes Fire During a Performance.

GRAPHIC DESCRIPTION OF THE TRAGEDY.

Two Hundred Persons Cremated in the Parisian Fire.

Extraordinarily Exciting Scenes — The Theatre Previously Condemned.

A last (Wednesday) night's Paris despatch says: The Opera Comique took fire this evening, and the whole building is now wrapped in flames. Several persons have been injured. Fourteen persons who jumped from the windows are dead and 43 were injured. It is probable that many were crushed to death in the galleries, but at present this is uncertain. The fire broke out during the first act of the opera "Mignonne." One of the wings caught fire from a gas jet, and the entire stage was immediately enveloped in flames. The fire soon spread to the whole house. Madame Mergvillier and Messrs Tasquin and Boquard were on the stage when the fire broke out. All the actors ran out in their stage costumes. The audience got out easily, but the gas was turned off before all had left the building and it is feared some were left in the upper tiers. The roof soon fell in, sending showers of sparks around. With the exception of Madame Sellier, who perished in the flames, all the actors escaped, though several of the supernumeraries were injured severely.

Five bodies, terribly burned, were conveyed to the National Library. Among them was the body of a woman grasping a little boy in her arms.

The money receipts were saved.

The firemen showed the greatest courage. Messrs. Goblet, Thibaudin and Gagnon were on the spot soon after the fire started, and they remained throughout with the fire officials. The Military Club rendered great assistance in the work of rescuing the people. Nineteen persons are now known to be dead. Many of these were supers.

An artificial fire apparatus, which had been placed in position in readiness for the burning of the place in the second act, rolled down from its place near the roof and exploded below. Women, half-clad and carrying their costumes, fled from the stage screaming. The supers and members of the chorus were terrified, and some of the latter fled with nothing on but tights. The flames spread with such rapidity that in fifteen minutes the stage was a vast furnace.

Several actors escaped by climbing to the roof on the side of the Rue Marivanta, where they were rescued. The audience was delayed a few minutes by a dense smoke and insufficient light. The director of the Soleil, his wife and two children, escaped without injury. The killed included four firemen. There was not a frantic rush in the theatre, but it is believed that the staircase became blocked. M. Tasquin implored the audience to remain seated until the exits were opened, which they did. If they had made a rush for the doors the loss of life would have been terrible. The police outside were unable to restrain the crowd, who besieged the building, inquiring for their friends inside, until a military cordon was called. One man, who wanted to rescue his brother and sister, raved and tore his hair and menaced with a stick the people who stopped him from rushing into the blazing building.

The scene outside was one of wildest excitement. Falling embers struck horses in the surrounding streets, causing them to plunge and rear. Flames shot out of every window, forcing the crowd into the narrow streets, where the crush was terrific.

A figurante says there were 150 persons on the stage when the fire broke out. She heard the glass falling like a hailstorm, but told the other girls not to mind it. But while she was speaking a column of flame burst through the wings with a roar, and all rushed pell-mell from the stage.

It is still unknown how many persons were unable to escape from the doomed building.

Only a fortnight ago M. Stenackors called attention in the Chamber of Deputies to the dangerous condition of the Opera Comique, which was the oldest theatre in Paris. The Figaro also called attention to the same thing after a recent twelve-hour benefit performance.

A last (Thursday) night's Paris cable says: The greatest excitement prevails in the city to-day over last night's terrible accident. At first it was thought the loss of life was small, and that only professionals were burned, but every hour adds to the number of the dead, and not alone ballet girls and stage hands fell victims to the cruel flames, but also many well known in the best Paris society.

At exactly a quarter before 9, just as the curtain was about to fall at the end of the first act of "Mignon," Mlle. Merguillier, who, as Philene, was singing the waltz song to the chorus accompaniment, suddenly ceased singing and disappeared. She had stood in front of the cottage at the right of the stage, which was overhung with trees, when showers of glowing cinders began falling about her. The instant she vanished M. Taskin, who sang Lothario, stepped to the front amid the falling embers and said: "Don't move! It's nothing." In the stalls and the pit, where the danger was most evident, the audience began rapidly but quietly to leave the house. In the galleries, where the magnitude of the fire was not visible, people remained seated. By the time the stalls were emptied the house was full of smoke and the entire stage ablaze. Scenes of terror followed. The screams of the ladies mingled with the shouts of the people upon the stage. A frantic crowd came tumbling over each other. Pretty women in full evening dress and delicious toilets from Worth, Felix and Rouff, rushing pell-mell with shop girls and cocottes, came pouring out like an avalanche into the Place Boieldieu. Cloaks and wraps, of course, were left behind. A cold rain came down steadily, but luckily there was not a breath of wind. Other scenes of panic occurred in the Rue Favart, where from the stage entrance bevies of figurantes and half dressed ballet girls came tearing down, followed by chorus singers, the scene shifters and the carpenters.

No one knew as yet whether there were any casualties. There were hundreds of people in the galleries, but the police and the firemen declared that the most of them escaped. The official report, however, states that there are 17 dead and 110 wounded. I saw one scene shifter—a young-looking man, with bushy black beard—dragged out of the flames, suffocated and bleeding from a bad gash in the head, and brought into the ultra fashionable Cafe Anglais, at the corner of the Boulevard des Italiens and the Rue Marivaux, where he was placed on the dining table, and died in about five minutes. Six stout firemen made a gallant charge, axes in hand, through the flames, and rescued an iron safe containing the receipts of the evening, which they carried to the editorial rooms of the Gaulois, near by.

The consternation of the boulevards reached its climax at about 10 o'clock, when at least a hundred thousand people blocked all the streets leading to the burning theatre, while the firemen, in brazen helmets, aided by a battalion of the 31st regiment of the line, kept back the crowd and helped to take the wounded to the police station of the Rue Rechlieu, where military ambulances stood in readiness to convey them to their homes in cots.

At the police station I saw three figurantes, pretty young girls, lying dead. Their clothing was burned off them, and their chests and arms were black with the flames. The number of dead in this police station is eleven and the wounded twenty-eight. Men and women were lying about groaning with pain from burns, while the doctors are hard at work doing their best to resuscitate those who are but partially suffocated.

Mlle. Merguillier, who played Philene, gives the following graphic account of her experience: "Ah! my poor theatre! I loved it so!" she exclaimed, tragically. "It seemed a part of me. I was in the scene with the choristers when the fire began. I had finished the duo with M. Soulacroix, 'Il faut Savior,' when he said to me, raising his eyes, 'Look! we are afire! Save yourself without delay.' I left the stage in the midst of the scene, but, notwithstanding, cast my eyes over the auditorium, where already the people were springing to their feet, climbing over the stalls and rushing rearward with cries of terror. I hurried to the green-room, where I hoped to find comrades whom I could accompany to the stage entrance, but it was deserted and almost dark. The loneliness terrified me, but I tried to collect my thoughts. I remembered that a corridor running parallel with Rue Marivaux ended in an exit reserved for the administration. In two seconds I was face to face with that door. It was fast. I knocked violently with bleeding knuckles, but without answer. At that moment I was filled with a terrible anguish. I was caught in a trap. I was lost. My retreat across the stage was cut off. I felt that behind me were unknown horrors. I knew not where to turn for aid Already the corridor was full of smoke, which choked me. Then, in sheer hopelessness and despair, I shrieked. A voice without answered, 'We wil save you!' The door was burst in, and I fainted. I came to in a cafe on the Rue Marivaux. Then after a little time I came home. I am sure that many unfortunate people have been lost. Oh! I am so sorry!"

At 2 p.m. twenty bodies, in a terribly mutilated condition, have been recovered from the ruins. The remains are principally those of ballet girls, choristers and machinists. Five of the bodies are those of elderly ladies, and one of them is that of a child. The firemen are lowering some of the bodies from the fourth story of the theatre by means of ropes.

At 4 p.m. twenty more bodies were recovered from the ruins of the Theatre Comique. The search for victims continues.

The remains of three men and two women were found in the stage box, where the victims had taken refuge from the flames. It is ascertained that many bodies lie buried in the debris in the upper galleries, from which escape was exceedingly difficult. Late this afternoon the bodies of eighteen ladies, all in full dress, were found lying together at the bottom of the staircase leading from the second story. These ladies all had escorts to the theatre, but no remains of men were found anywhere near where the women were burned to death.

This theatre was first opened in 1838, it being built upon the site of the Favart Hall, which was also destroyed by fire. The theatre was situated alongside of the Boulevard des Italiens, facing on the Rue Favart, the Rue de Marivaux and the Place Boieldien, and one of the landmarks of the period of Louis Phillippe. The interior construction was in every way defective, and it has been often remarked that should a fire ever break out a terrible catastrophe would result. The seating capacity of the house was about eighteen hundred. The main exit from the Opera Comique was on the Rue Boieldien.

The walls of the theatre began falling this evening and the search for the bodies had to be abandoned for the day.

The library attached to the theatre was entirely destroyed, with all its contents, including many valuable scores.

Six thousand costumes were burned in the wardrobe.

The Government propose to close several of the theatres because of their deficiency in exit.

The work of searching for the bodies of the victims of last night's fire was resumed to-night, and a number more were exhumed.

The official statement says fifty bodies have already been recovered.

M. Reveillon, a Deputy, speaking in the Chamber of Deputies this afternoon, estimates that at least 200 persons lost their lives in the fire.

The Chamber of Deputies has voted a credit of 200,000 francs for the relief of the sufferers by the Opera Comique fire.

The Opera Comique was insured for one million francs.

To-day 156 missing persons have been inquired for by relatives. They are supposed to have perished in the flames.

The bottom of the theatre is flooded with water to a depth of five feet and sixty bodies have been found floating in the water by the firemen.

The finding of charred remains continue. The remains can be identified only by means of trinkets.

A Paris cable says: The roll call of the attaches of the Opera Comique made today shows that seventeen actors and employees are missing, exclusive of the supernumeraries, who were engaged nightly as they were needed, and of whom no record was kept.

There are one hundred missing; that is to say, there are that many whose relatives and friends have reported them to the police as having gone to the Opera Comique on Wednesday night, but who have not turned up. This brings the total list of casualties up to 226. Crowds stand around the police stations eagerly gazing at the face of each newly unearthed victim, in the hope of finding a lost father, brother, mother or sister. The streets are filled with women in tears. Nearly all the bodies are those of well-dressed persons. Almost all still have on their gloves. Many of the bodies are twisted into strange, weird shapes. Some seemed broiled, as if on a gridiron.

Under the debris of a narrow staircase I saw a group of seven corpses, whose charred and blackened members were intertwined in almost Laocoon coils. One of these was that of a woman whose face was literally roasted like an overdone piece of beef. In her ears glistened a pair of large solitaire diamond earrings. Her right arm was fractured; her left arm was wound about a smaller corpse—apparently that of a girl 12 years old—probably her daughter. Other corpses in this group were so black and so mangled that it was almost impossible to say whether they were the remains of human beings or of animals.

A few yards distant were the remains of a young ballet girl. Her limbs were still clothed in rose-colored tricots that made her look as if still living. No part of her body was burned, nor did it bear any traces of wounds. Her death was evidently caused by suffocation, for the poor girl had torn from her skirts a handful of gauze which she had crammed into her mouth in her vain efforts to keep out the smoke.

REMARKABLE RESCUE.

A Child Pulled 160 Feet Up a Well Hole With a Hook.

A San Antonio, Texas, despatch says: The story of a singular and serious accident comes from a German settlement near New Braunfels, fifty miles north of this city. One of the farmers in that vicinity recently started boring an artesian well in his back yard. After going 160 feet without signs of water he abandoned the project and removed the framework around the well hole, which was eleven inches in diameter. From time to time neighbors examined the well and by this means the hole was left uncovered. One day this week the farmer's 2-year-old child was playing in the vicinity of the well and when its mother came to look for the little fellow he had disappeared. Becoming alarmed she searched the yard, and going to the well heard from its dark bottom the plaintive cry of "Papa! papa! papa!" When the woman realized the truth she was frantic, and running to the field called her husband and his helpers. The news quickly spread among the neighbors, who congregated to offer assistance. At first the parents could think of no way to rescue the child. A rope was dropped down, but the child could not grasp it. The cry grew fainter and fainter, and at the end of the first six hours a stout iron hook was lowered; and after many fruitless attempts, occupying two days and nights, the distracted parents succeeded in dragging the child to the surface more dead than alive. The little fellow now lies in a very critical condition, its body, fearfully lacerated by the hoop and greatly exhausted from its long immurement.

DYING OFF LIKE SHEEP.

Frightful Ravages of Cholera at Buenos Ayres.

A Philadelphia telegram says: Chief Officer Gray, of the barque McLeod, of St. John, N.B., which arrived at this port to-day from Buenos Ayres, tells a frightful story of death from cholera in that portion of the Argentine Republic. He says that while his vessel was lying in the harbor of Buenos Ayres the people of that city and the suburbs were dying off like sheep, and the disease seemed to spread like wild fire. The wife of the captain of the barque Golden Rule, the chief mate and one man of the barque Bremen, and four men of the barque Wylower, were stricken down with the disease while the McLeod was in port. As fast as cases were discovered the patients were removed to a hospital in the city, and when death relieved the victims from their suffering they were at once removed, and their bodies burned. It was only after earnest efforts and appeals that the body of the wife of the Golden Rule was saved from cremation.

O'Brien at Montreal.

A Montreal despatch says: The demonstration in honor of O'Brien last evening was most enthusiastic. There were about 1,500 torches in the procession, in which were four bands. As they passed along the streets O'Brien and Kilbride were loudly cheered. Chaboilles square, where the meeting took place, was filled with people. In his speech Mr. O'Brien strongly denounced his assailants in the west and inveighed against Lord Lansdowne. Resolutions were passed condemning the attacks on Mr. O'Brien in the west and Lord Lansdowne's treatment of his tenants. After the meeting O'Brien was banquetted at the St. Lawrence Hall by the local branch of the National League. From 100 to 150 persons sat down, representatives being present from Ottawa and other places.

The Common Council of Utica, N. Y., has passed an ordinance which requires farmers who sell their products from house to house or on the streets to pay a license fee of $5.

John W. Keely, having, as he says, completed his great motor, is at work on an improved telephone. But where is the motor moting?

Probably the largest vineyard in the world is that owned by Senator Stanford, near Vina, Cal. On a 30,000-acre ranch he has 3,500 acres planted in bearing vines. The vineyard is divided into 500-acre tracts, and most of the work is done by Chinese.

A prominent nurseryman says that nursery practices in peach propagation and culture have weakened the vital power of the tree, which is unable to resist as depressing influences as formerly when the trees from seeding grew well and lived to old age.

DISASTROUS CONFLAGRATION.

A Million Dollars' Worth of Property Destroyed in New York.

HUNDREDS OF HORSES ROASTED ALIVE.

A last (Friday) night's New York despatch says: The Belt Line car stables, extending from 10th avenue between 53rd and 54th streets westward to about the middle of the long block, took fire about 1.30 o'clock this morning. The hay made a brilliant blaze at first, but soon clouded a large part of the neighborhood in dense smoke. The general call for all engines was sounded. The flames leaped across 10th avenue, 53rd and 54th streets, and set many frame dwellings and stables on fire. These were all destroyed. The police reserves from all the adjoining precincts were called out. The stables, which were of brick, were entirely destroyed. The rapid spread of the flames was due chiefly to the fact that a strong wind was blowing. The inflammable character of the building, divided up as it was into stalls with loose wooden partitions, and the great amount of hay and straw stored in it, contributed to make the spread of the flames almost irresistible. There were very few watchmen or stablemen on duty and the flames were so fierce and spread so rapidly that only 25 out of the 1,300 horses in the stable were got out before the smoke and flames drove the men from the vicinity. The houses on the east of 10th avenue were two story frame structures and burned fiercely. the inhabitants being forced to rush from their rooms to the street in their night-clothes in order to save their lives. In the rear of the tenements was a large coal yard, which caught fire. A six-story tenement house on Fifty-fourth street, opposite the stables, was next seen to be in flames. As far as is known all the tenants escaped with their lives and without serious injury, but none of them were able to save much furniture or clothing. The streets were filled with

THE PANIC-STRICKEN OCCUPANTS

of the tenement houses, not only those whose houses had been burned over their heads, but others who feared that in so tremendous a conflagration their homes also would be destroyed. Notwithstanding the kindness of neighbors, the night was a hard one for many who were thus rudely driven from their homes. Two policemen and a number of firemen were overcome by the heat, but they soon recovered. In the first few minutes the fire had gained headway the horses screamed terribly, but the dense, black smoke from the burning hay and straw soon did its work. At a quarter to 3 the fire was burning in four separate blocks, and on the west side it was spreading toward 11th avenue, the firemen being so closely occupied that they could not check it in this direction. The rear of the houses on 55th street to the north were also catching on fire. By 3 o'clock the fire was rapidly spreading southward and threatened to entirely consume the block bounded by 10th and 11th avenues and 53rd and 52nd streets.

The fire was finally got under control at 4 o'clock this morning. The stables with contents and the frame houses on the opposite side of 10th avenue and down 54th street were destroyed. The loss will be over $1,000,000. Elizabeth Walsh, aged 76, one of the occupants of house 540 west 54th street which was burned, was sick in her bed. The police rescued her and brought her to the sidewalk, where she expired from fright and the shock.

JUMPED FROM A WINDOW.

A Detroit Hotel Boarder Throws Himself from a Fourth Story Window and is Dashed to Death.

A Detroit despatch says: Chas. M. Haslett, who arrived at Detroit about a week ago, and for the last few days was stopping at the Brunswick Hotel, at 1 o'clock yesterday morning jumped from the window of his room in the fourth story and struck upon the stone pavement beneath. He was frightfully crushed and died almost immediately. The coroner was summoned and began an investigation and took charge of his effects, which consisted principally of a gold watch and some $70 in money. From a letter found in Haslett's satchel it appears that he was a druggist, and had come to Detroit to negotiate for the purchase of a drug store. A letter was also found, evidently from a lady friend in Three Rivers, dated May 2nd and signed "Hattie." In it she urges him to beware of his failing, hopes for the best, but fears the worst, saying, "But if you do as I think you will do, then God help you." The dead man was about 35 years of age, with dark brown hair and short side whiskers, and presented the appearance of a thorough business man. He had been drinking heavily for the past few days.

Canada's Salt Fish Trade with Spain.

A London cable says: The English Consul at Cadiz says the Canadian salt fish trade with Spain has for years been heavily handicapped. The anticipation that the Dominion would secure a fair portion of the trade as a result of the commercial convention between Great Britain and Spain proved fallacious. The Government bounty enables the French colonies to undersell ours, the difference in price amounting to eight or nine shillings per fifty kilos. The state of affairs is peculiarly hard to our colonies, for while taking on an average 150 cargoes of salt yearly from Cadiz we do not sell a single cargo of fish.

Tragedy at a Revival Meeting.

A Charlottetown, P. E. I., despatch says: At O'Leary Station, a school teacher and singing master named Mackinnon got into an altercation with one Currie at the close of a meeting held by Blue, the evangelist. Currie took off his coat to fight. They clinched, and Currie was heard to exclaim, "My God, I am stabbed." The fight was stopped, and it was found that Currie was stabbed through the left lung. Currie cannot live. Mackinnon was arrested and committed for trial. He says he acted in self-defence.

A span of mules drawing a plow near Montgomery, Ala., were attacked by a swarm of bees a few days ago and stung to death. The driver saved his life by running away after a vain effort to drive the bees from the mules.

HATE AND JEALOUSY

Result in an Extraordinary Poisoning Tragedy in Austria.

A last (Thursday) night's Vienna cable says: Five thrilling acts might easily be made out of a peasant tragedy just reported from Galicia. In a little village with an unpronounceable name lived a happy family, consisting of an old man called Dackof, his wife, Maruncka, and two sons, Josef and Peter. Some time ago Josef was married, and in due course his wife presented him with two children. The extraordinary fondness of old Dackof for his grandchildren awakened the jealousy of Maruncka, who, after watching her husband, came to the conclusion that he was carrying on an intrigue with his daughter-in-law. Meanwhile Peter Dackof, the unmarried son, had grown suspicious that his brother was trying to cheat him out of his inheritance. Jealousy soon turned to hate, and, after talking matters over, mother and son resolved on vengeance. The next Sunday they asked Josef's wife and children to dinner and set a hearty meal before them, with a toothsome cake to crown the feast. Nobody touched the cake that day, however, which was lucky, for it was poisoned. The Sunday following Maruncka renewed the experiment on a more elaborate scale. This time she made two similar cakes—one poisoned, the other harmless—and to induce the victims to eat she herself took a piece of one cake. A few hours later she expired, having eaten of the wrong cake. Peter Dackof now tried his hand and succeeded better than his mother. One day he contrived to put some poison into the soup of his sister-in-law and her children. The children both died in convulsions, but their mother, having taken very little soup, recovered after a terrible illness. The murderer, happily, did not escape. Having been arrested on suspicion, he was tried and condemned to death. His appeal against this sentence has just been rejected, and Peter will shortly be handed over to the hangman.

A PRISON ROMANCE.

A Hardened Criminal Reformed by the Wife He Married in His Cell.

A Wilmington, Del., despatch says: Charles Blake, a once hard criminal, was released from Newcastle jail to-day, after finishing a three years' sentence for burglary. When he began his term of imprisonment he was required to stand in the pillory an hour, and was to have received thirty lashes; but, through the pleading of Blake's sister, Governor Stockley remitted the lashing. He escaped from jail three times while serving his sentence, but was as often recaptured. A glamor of romance surrounded Blake during his entire term at Newcastle. Women admirers kept him supplied with flowers, fruits and dainty trappings for his cell; and in September, 1884, Sheriff Martin permitted him to be married to the woman of his choice. The bride was Miss Gussie Turner, of Philadelphia, and the wedding took place in his cell. She has since been very assiduous in her attentions to him, and was at the jail when he was released, so they left Newcastle together. Blake recently signed a pledge to abstain from all intoxicating liquors, and declared to the Sheriff and others at the jail his intention of leading a respectable life. It will not be the fault of his devoted wife if he fails to adhere to this laudable determination.

KILLED BY A SPIDER.

Death of an Infant in New York After Twenty-Four Hours' Agony.

A New York despatch says: Fritz Kibitz, 1 year and 8 months old, was playing about the floor of his home at 650 Fifth street, about 4 o'clock on Saturday afternoon, when suddenly he began screaming. His mother ran to him and saw a big spider on his left hand. The little fellow held the hand up and acted as though he was in great pain. Mrs. Kibitz killed the spider, and observing a small red mark on the child's hand, concluded that the spider had bitten it. She applied some lotion, but the child still continued its cries. A few hours later a small red lump appeared on the hand, which kept spreading until the swelling extended to the arm. A physician was called in, and measures were taken to stop the spread of the poison. His efforts were unsuccessful, and on Sunday the child's arm almost to the shoulder was badly swollen. The little fellow suffered great agony, and cried incessantly until Sunday night, when he died. The spider was described as having a small drab body.

Late Scottish News.

Mr. William Watson, late Sheriff-Substitute of Aberdeenshire, the pioneer of the movement which resulted in the introduction of industrial schools into Scotland, died in Edinburgh on the 12th of May.

A committee of gentlemen has been appointed to receive competitive designs for a statue of Burns for Ayr. Sir John McDowall, Athens, has generously offered a block of marble for the pedestal of the statue.

Mrs. Andrew Carnegie, New York, has, through Dr. Charles Rogers, of Edinburgh, requested to be allowed the privilege of contributing a bust of Sir Walter Scott to the Statuary Hall of the National Wallace Monument.

Mr. Thomas Stevenson, C.E., son of the builder of the Bell Rock Lighthouse and father of the distinguished essayist and story-teller, Mr. Louis Stevenson, died on the 8th of May at his residence in Heriot row, Edinburgh, in his 69th year.

The Original Ragged School, founded by the late Dr. Guthrie in 1847, was on the 6th of May removed from Ramsay lane, Castle hill, Edinburgh, to new and commodious premises at Liberton, which have been erected at a cost of about £10,000.

Rev. Dr. Story has resigned his charge as minister of the parish of Roseneath. Dr. Story was recently appointed Professor of Ecclesiastical History in the Glasgow University, and in consequence he has been obliged to sever his long connection with that parish.

In Pittsburg, Pa., a few nights ago a somnambulist walked off a balcony, fell about twenty feet, was picked up and carried into the house, and after a time he awoke. The shock of the fall, which sprained his foot and bruised him generally, did not rouse him from his sound sleep.

Kitty of Coleraine.

The quaint old Irish ballad, "Kitty of Coleraine," is charmingly illustrated by Edwin A. Abbey in the May "Harper's." As this little ballad is seldom found in collections of poetry, it is here given entire:

As beautiful Kitty one morning was tripping,
With a pitcher of milk from the fair of Coleraine,
When she saw me she stumbled, the pitcher it tumbled,
And all the sweet buttermilk water'd the plain.

Oh, what shall I do, now? 'Twas looking at you, now.
Sure, sure, such a pitcher I'll ne'er meet again.
'Twas the pride of my dairy. Oh, Barney M'Leary,
You're sent as a plague to the girls of Coleraine!

I sat down beside her, and gently did chide her,
That such a misfortune should give her such pain.
A kiss then I gave her. Before I did leave her,
She vow'd for such pleasure she'd break it again.

'Twas the haymaking season. I can't tell the reason—
Misfortunes will never come single—that's plain—
For, very soon after poor Kitty's disaster,
The devil a pitcher was whole in Coleraine.

The authorship of these verses is generally given as anonymous, but careful investigation has recently discovered that the writer is Edward Lysaght. Mr. Abbey's illustrations are four beautiful pages, beside a head-piece and tail-piece. The climax expressed in the last line is the title of one of the pages which is assigned the position of honor as frontispiece of the number.

THE SHEPHERD OF THE SALT LAKE.

A Story in Three Chapters.

CHAPTER III.

Summer waned, and the autumn came with a breath of freshness and a sobering touch that lent a fuller charm to the mulga ridges, and chastened the sun's heat with gentle breezes. Its first month brought no new experience to the two lonely dwellers by the Salt Lake further than that testified by the change in heir surroundings. They lived their solitary life—undisturbed, except by the rare visits of the sheep overseer from the head station—pursuing a daily routine that seldom altered. The old shepherd fulfilled his trust to the uttermost letter. He scarcely ever allowed the child out of his sight. He made her a bunk in his hut, and every night undressed her, and remained by her till she had fallen asleep. He looked after her with a tenderness her own mother could not have surpassed. His quiet flock required little care; of their own accord they would come and go to the yards at the accustomed time; and so he was able to devote himself almost entirely to his little charge. No act of his that could give her pleasure was too much trouble for him. He lived in the child. Her slightest wish was law. Almost the whole day was spent in trying to amuse her.

At first little Lizzie enjoyed to the utmost the liberty and independence of her new life. She had no lessons to do now—no reading or spelling. And Scotty cooked her nice things. She could have as much "brownie" as she wanted. It was very nice to have so much cake; and sometimes he made her "lolly" from the brown ration sugar. Then he got her luscious currajong roots—bush cocoanut, as he called it—and wild fruits and berries and nice sour binil grass. It was all very pleasant at first, and Lizzie felt herself a veritable queen. Scotty would do anything she asked him—make her toys and tell her stories and carry her pick-a-back when she was tired, and catch a sheep for her to play with, and hold her hand at night till she fell asleep. But soon the solitude began to weigh upon the child's spiritz. She longed for her father and mother again, even for the sound of the hammering and the ring of the axe strokes that used to make her head ache so. The bush was so silent now that sometimes it frightened her, and even the battering of the mawl on the iron wedges would have been a welcome change. As the days dragged on their weary length this feeling became stronger and stronger. The child began to pine for other companionship than that of the half-witted old man; the very intensity of his affection became irksome to her.

And so the months of autumn passed, and then a sudden change came to the mulga ridges and the silent Salt Lake. The wet season was unusually late that year, but when at last the rain did set in, it fell in unusual quantities. For two days it came down in an almost continuous downpour, and then cleared off, only to recommence in lighter showers. During that time little Lizzie was confined to the hut; and a weary, weary time she found it. The old shepherd would take advantage of any temporary break in the weather to let his flock out, in order that the sheep might pick up a mouthful; but he would not allow Lizzie to accompany him, fearful of her getting wet.

The rain came down, and the patient sheep stood nearly all day long with hanging heads under the lee of the brush yards; the mulga ridges and the Salt Lake were blotted out; the air was heavy and moist; and the hut was so dreary that poor Lizzie, used to being out in the fresh air all day long, hardly knew what to do with herself. All Scotty's efforts failed to amuse her any longer. She longed for some change in her dull life; she sighed for the return of the sunshine, for her father and mother to come back again.

It was better when the rain cleared off, and the warm sun came out again, and made everything bright and pleasant. As though by magic the mulga ridges, with the stoney hollows between, assumed a new appearance. Two days of bright weather were sufficient to bring the sweet-smelling herbage out, and to cause the grasses to put forth their tender green shoots. Pools glistened in the hollows; the red loam—before so parched—was moist and soft, and exhaled a fresh earthy smell that mingled with the more delicate perfume of the young herbage. The mulga trees assumed a fresher green; the drooping fronds of the tall peppermint trees dripped a resinous thanksgiving for the fresh nutriment their spreading roots sucked up; even in the patches of scrub the rain seemed to have washed off some of the dinginess. All was bright and fresh, and Lizzie, freed from her imprisonment, forgot, for the time, her weary longing and impatience.

The two were seated one day near the gibbera hole, now overflowing and filling the narrow gully. The sheep were scattered along the edge of the Salt Lake, nibbling greedily at the tender young herbage that had sprung up, as it were, almost by magic.

Old Scotty was gazing out at the desolate waste of the Salt Lake.

"Why are you looking like that?" asked Lizzie curiously, laying her hand on the old man's knee.

"I'm thinking what a terrible place it is," he answered mechanically. "Look at it. It's nothing but a steaming bog. And see, it's trembling and shaking like a hungry thing. It's hidyus."

The lake presented a strange appearance. A gray exhalation, drawn out of the rain-sodden, spumy soil by the heat of the sun, partially hid its surface; through it the vilty incrustations glittered with a strange salorless shimmer. It may have been the cobration of the heated air, or it may have been the quivering of the rising mist, but the whole surface of the lake seemed to be trembling and shaking.

"Ay, it's the curse," muttered old Scotty, fearfully. "It's a dreffal thing to see it; it drors the life out of you. It's always worse after the rain."

"Couldn't you walk across it now?" asked the child, gazing with a shudder at the misty waste.

"Walk! It's nothing but a hungry bog that would swallow you up. Nothing dare go on it now, after the rain. See how the sheep keep away from it. They know what a hidyus thing it is—and I know it, too. Look at it shaking. Come away, child, or it'll blight you the same as it has done me."

The next day, as they were returning with the sheep, toward sundown, the crack of a whip in the distance suddenly broke the stillness of the bush.

"It's mother and father!" cried Lizzie, with a joyful cry. "Oh! they've come back at last."

She ran in the direction of the sound, leaving old Scotty to yard the sheep. Soon the creaking wheels sounded near at hand, and the dray slowly came into view, surmounting the last of the mulga ridges. When it stopped at length, before the tent left standing by the fencers, the little girl, weeping bitterly, and with her hand clasped in that of Duke's mate, approached the old man.

"They've not come," she cried, sobbing pitifully. "It's only Larry come alone."

The man nodded to Scotty, and gave him the usual bush greeting.

"Yes, I'm by myself this time, Liz," he said. "But don't you cry. I've come to take you to mother."

"To take her away!" cried Scotty in a scared voice.

"Ay. Her mother's waiting for her at Gidanga. But I'll turn out the horses first. They've had a heavy time of it. I was near boiled up by the rain. Them mulga ridges are as soft as butter now; it was as much as the horses could do to pull the empty dray. They'll be glad of a spell."

He unharnessed the horses, and then, leading them down the gibbera hole for water, hobbled them out. Scotty watched him as though in a dream. It had come to an end, then, at last! The child was to be taken away from him. Their happy life together was over. He would see her no more; hear the sound of her voice and her happy laughter; hold her hand in his; watch her untroubled sleep, no longer. She was to be taken from him. His feeble mind had hardly realized that such a day must come in the end. Happy in her companionship, he had never thought of separation. It had seemed as if their peaceful, happy life must go on forever. And now the evil day had come. He was to lose her. A terrible despair—all the more powerful by reason of its dreadful suddenness—took hold of him. Heart and brain felt numbed and stupified. He uttered one hoarse cry, but that was all. His grief and despair were too deep for outward expression.

That evening, when little Lizzie had been laid tenderly to rest by the old shepherd, the fencer told his story.

"I didn't tell her," he said, seated on a wooden block before the fire, "because I didn't want to frighten her. But there's been an accident. Poor Duke's dead—crushed under the wheel of the dray. It was at the Culgoa crossing. There wasn't much water in the river, but the crossing place is a bad one. I was in the dray holding his missis up, preventing her from being jolted, for it was nigh on her time, and she was very weak. The place was pretty steep and rough, and he was leading the horses down. There isn't a brake to the dray, and the leader fell, coming down on him. The wheel went right over poor Duke, crushin' his head in. He was dead when I jumped down and pulled him out. He never moved. It was orful sudden, poor fellow."

The old shepherd listened as though in a dream. He was dead, then—her father—and still they wanted to take her away from him.

"I took his missis into the township," Larry continued, "and poor Duke's body, too. She had a bad time of it, poor soul; but I got her in safe to the doctor's, and she's there now. She got a child—a boy, and I've come out to take little Liz to her. She isn't comin' back here now her old man's killed, and I ain't either. I've given up the fencin' contract, the boss allowing me and her for what work me and Duke did. She hadn't got the heart to come out here again, and I'm going to stop and take care of her. Duke and me were mates for nigh on five years, and I'm going to look after his missis and the kids. We're going to get married when she's better. So I've come out with the dray to get the tent and tools, and take little Liz back with me to Gidanga."

Poor Scotty! His paralyzed mind hardly understood what the other was saying. Only one idea whirled through his brain. Her father was dead, and they still wanted to take the child from him.

"No, no," he exclaimed, answering his thoughts more than the other's words. "Don't take her away. Leave her with me."

"Leave her? What would I leave her for? Her mother wants her."

"But I want her," he cried in tones of agony. "I can't give her up. She's mine. I love her so. Oh, leave her with me."

The fencer looked with an air of astonishment at the trembling old man.

"Why, you're off your head, mate," he said, with rough good nature. "I suppose a mother can have her own gal. No; I can't leave her. I've come out special for her."

"I love her so, I love her so," muttered poor Scotty.

"Oh, you'll get over that. There's others coming out to take up the fencin'. There's a contractor coming with five or six men and his family. He's got four children. You'll find one of them to take up with."

Scotty made a hopeless gesture, and his head sank on his breast in mute despair.

"Well, I'll turn in. I'm pretty tired," said Larry, rising and laying his hand on the old man's shoulder. Don't be downhearted, mate. You'll soon take up with them others. I'm going to spell the horses for a couple of days. Then I'll pull down the tent and load up and be off."

"Little Lizzie," murmured Scotty, wagging his head unmeaningly. "No, no; don't take her away."

The next two days were spent by the old shepherd in a state of pitiable collapse. The shock was so sudden that it seemed completely to take away the remnants of reason that remained to him. Almost for the first time during all those long years he neglected his flock. He never went near it, but sat for hours together holding the girl's hand in his; or else, when she ran away to join her newly-found companion, in gazing vacantly out at the Salt Lake. His mind seemed to be completely unhinged. He mumbled unmeaningly to himself: his head wagged from side to side; his bleared eyes were sometimes dimmed by moisture, sometimes lighted up by a gleam of excitement. At times he followed the child about like her shadow, praying her in broken accents to stop with him, wildly offering her every inducement he could think of. At night he sat by her bed, gazing absorbedly at her peaceful face, listening to her regular breathing. He would sit motionless like that all through the night, listening, watching, bowed down with anguish and despair.

Toward the end of the second day a change came over him. He muttered constantly to himself; his hands and arms moved restlessly; his eyes gleamed with excitement. Her father was dead; why should she be taken from him? That was the one thought that surged through his mind. The man who had come to take her away was nothing to her; he should not have her. The old man's mutterings and his wild exclamation showed what was passing in his mind; but he made no further appeal to the fencer.

And so the evening of the second day came, and on the morrow Lizzie and her new protector were to take their departure. The tent had been struck and rolled up, the tools collected, the dray laden, and everything was ready for an early start at sunrise.

Scotty passed the night at the child's bedside, at first in dumb despair, then in gradually increasing excitement. It was the last night. In seven hours she would be taken from him—in six—in five. The thought was madness. Once he woke her gently to ask if she would not stop with him, and when she answered yes, fretful at being aroused, but knowing with childish intuition that that answer would satisfy him, a gleam of wild joy lighted up his face. After that he never stirred again during the whole of the night, but sat there with bowed head watching the sleeping child.

With the first gray streak of dawn a footstep outside the hut aroused him. It was the fencer, who had camped for the night under the dray.

"Hullo! You up?" he said, peering into the dark hut. "You're early. I'm going after the horses, for I want to make an early start. Make up the fire and put the billy on, will you? Liz and me have got a long day's journey before us. I'll wake her up. It's nearly time she got dressed."

It had come at last, then.

"No, no," cried Scotty, suddenly starting up and brandishing his arms in mad excitement; "leave her be. She's not going. She's going to stop with me; she said so."

"Goin' to stop with you! You're off your head. Here, get out of the way and let me pass."

"No, no; stand back."

The man made his way into the hut; but Scotty, whipping up the child from the bed, with a hoarse cry darted past him in the obscurity, and gained the door. Rudely awakened, little Lizzie began to cry.

"Where are you off to, you looney?" exclaimed the fencer. "Come back, will you?"

But the old shepherd, still grasping his burden, ran quickly from the hut. Uttering a startled oath the man followed, trying to overtake him. Outside, a grey mist obscured everything. Nothing was visible but the nearest trees, standing shadowy and impalpable like phantom forms. The mulga ridges were veiled by the dense fog; the Salt Lake was nothing but an indistinguishable mass of shadows.

The old man's flying steps took him in the direction of the gibbera hole; he staggered along the top of the rock, the child crying bitterly in his arms. He did not seem to know where he was—his sole idea appeared to be to escape with his burden from his pursuer. He staggered blindly across the plateau of rock, slippery with the fog.

A shrill cry broke from the fencer's lips, and he stopped suddenly, with blanched face.

"Stop, stop, you madman," he screamed. "The Salt Lake! The Salt Lake!"

Right beneath the feet of the flying shepherd curled the chill mists that hid the lake. But he did not seem to be conscious of anything. He staggered on, stumbled, recovered himself, and then tottered blindly over the edge, the crying child tightly pressed to his heart.

There was a loud scream from little Lizzie—a hideous, dead thud as man and child fell into the morass—a dull splash of the foul spume—a sickening gurgle as the choking slime closed over them—and then all was quiet. The Salt Lake had its victims at last.

The Italian Chamber of Deputies yesterday passed a Bill to increase the army, entailing an additional charge of $2,200,000.

Herr Krupp has finished a 40-centimetre gun, the biggest ever made, at Essen. At a trial of the weapon it shot into pieces armor 97 centimetres thick at a distance of 3,000 feet.

Germany is contemplating a common legislation for all her colonies, and the Governors of the various dependencies will meet in Berlin at an early date to interchange views on the subject.

MEXICO SHAKEN.

An Earthquake Shock Yesterday Morning Scared the Natives.

A last (Sunday) night's City of Mexico despatch says: A heavy earthquake shock was felt in this city and throughout the valley at 2.50 this morning. Saturday afternoon had been extremely warm, in fact the weather for the last four days had been extraordinarily warm for this region, which generally enjoys a very mild degree of temperature even in summer. Late Saturday afternoon there were several whirlwinds in the valley and in the city, carrying clouds of dust and fine gravel high in the air. Old citizens, with the memory of previous earthquakes in mind, predicted shocks here, and to-day they are regarded as prophets. At exactly 10 minutes to 3 o'clock there was felt, not only in the city but suburban towns, a violent shaking of the earth or sort of lifting motion which lasted five seconds. Next there came, prefaced by a low roar as from the bowels of the earth, and accompanied by a stiff breeze, a violent oscillation of the earth from east to west, which awoke nearly every one, lasting, as it did, thirty-nine seconds. Houses swayed as if they were ships at sea, and persons arising from their beds were in some cases thrown with force to the floor. Bells were rung in hotels, and everywhere doors were forced open. Then came still another oscillation of much violence, proceeding from north to south. During this shock crockery was thrown down and pictures demolished in several houses. A scene of the wildest confusion followed. Thousands of persons dressed themselves and did not go to bed again. Reports received to-day do not show any fatalities as the result of the earthquake. At the School of Mines the seismic instrument showed that a heavy shock had taken place. These instruments are self registering, and prove that the shock this morning was a severe one. The weather to-day is still warm, and another shock is predicted.

The Correct Time.

There are very few men who do not pride themselves on always having the correct time; and wonderful and delicate mechanisms are devised to enable them to do so. But the more delicate a chronometer is made, the more subject it becomes to derangement, and unless it be kept always perfectly clean it soon loses its usefulness. What wonder, then, that the human machine—so much more delicate and intricate than any work of Man—should require to be kept thoroughly cleansed. The liver is the main-spring of this complex structure, and on the impurities left in the blood by a disordered liver depend most of the ills that flesh is heir to. Even consumption (which is lung scrofula) is traceable to the imperfect action of this organ. Kidney diseases, skin diseases, sick headache, heart disease, dropsy, and a long catalogue of grave maladies have their origin in a torpid, or sluggish liver. Dr. Pierce's Golden Medical Discovery, by establishing a healthy, normal action of the liver, acts as a cure and preventive of these diseases.

One of the latest devices is a hinged lamp-post. Its chief advantage is that no ladder is required to enable it to be cleaned and repaired. It can be lighted by bending it over, the lamplighter carrying a key for that purpose.

I feel it a duty to speak in highest terms of McCollum's Rheumatic Repellant. I was laid up six months with rheumatism, and suffered intensely day and night. I tried doctors and remedies without relief, but was perfectly cured by taking this remedy. —W. W. Austin, Springford, Ont.

An Exception.

Colonel May, the Michigan prohibition leader, declares that there is no middle ground. All men must be drunk or all sober. Now, as for us, we only want a little at sheep-shearing time.—San Francisco Alta.

$500 Reward

is offered in good faith, by the manufacturers of Dr. Sage's Catarrh Remedy for a case of catarrh which they cannot cure. It is mild, soothing and healing in its effects, and cures "cold in the head," catarrhal deafness, throat ailments, and many other complications of this distressing disease. 50 cents, by druggists.

Frank Boynton, an old soldier, committed suicide at Bar Mills, Me., rather than testify against a neighbor accused of selling cider.

A Memory of Early Days.

Bane of childhood's tender years,
Swallowed oft with groans and tears,
How it made the flesh recoil,
Loathsome, greasy castor oil!
Search your early memory close,
Till you find another dose
All the shuddering frame revolts
At the thought of Epsom salts!
Underneath the pill-box lid
Was a greater horror hid,
Climax of all inward ills,
Huge and griping old blue pills!

What a contrast to the mild and gentle action of Dr. Pierce's Pleasant Purgative Pellets, sugar-coated, easy to take, cleansing, recuperating, renovating the system without wrenching it with agony. Sold by druggists.

There is some doubt as to whether Maxwell, the St. Louis trunk murderer, will be hanged or not. If he doesn't die of old age his prospects are believed to be fair.—New York Mail.

Struck With Lightning,

Neatly describes the position of a hard or soft corn when Putnam's Painless Corn Extractor is applied. It does its work so quickly and without pain that it seems magical in action. Try it. Recollect the name—Putnam's Painless Corn Extractor. Sold by all druggists and dealers everywhere.

Mr. Henry Hart has been elected President of the Pacific Mail Steamship Company, Mr. Geo. Gould having declined the position.

It is estimated that the recent forest fires in the northern peninsula of the State of Michigan have caused a total loss of $7,000,000. Eight lives are known to have been lost.

A boarding shanty at Merritt's Corners, N. Y., at shaft No. 2 of the new aqueduct, was burned shortly after midnight Saturday night. There were seventy-five men asleep in the house at the time, but all escaped except two, who were burned to a crisp.

Some Lost Arts

Making glass malleable.

Being courteous in public conveyances.

Coloring and gilding glass by the Assyrian process.

Tempering bronze and copper to the hardness of steel.

Making Damascus blades.

Painting and powdering the female face so as perfectly to imitate nature.

Lifting monoliths to such heights as the tops of the Pyramids.

Growing brave without growing bold.

Making iridescent glass.

Being satisfied with the Present as certainly as good as the Past and possibly better than the Future.

In Paris the use of bicycles is only permitted on certain streets, while tricycles are allowed on all the avenues and public drives of the city.

Dr. Pierce's Pleasant Pellets The Original LITTLE LIVER PILLS.

BEWARE OF IMITATIONS. ALWAYS ASK FOR DR. PIERCE'S PELLETS, OR LITTLE SUGAR-COATED PILLS.

Being entirely vegetable, they operate without disturbance to the system, diet, or occupation. Put up in glass vials, hermetically sealed. Always fresh and reliable. As a laxative, alterative, or purgative, these little Pellets give the most perfect satisfaction.

SICK HEADACHE,

Bilious Headache, Dizziness, Constipation, Indigestion, Bilious Attacks, and all derangements of the stomach and bowels, are promptly relieved and permanently cured by the use of Dr. Pierce's Pleasant Purgative Pellets. In explanation of the remedial power of these Pellets over so great a variety of diseases, it may truthfully be said that their action upon the system is universal, not a gland or tissue escaping their sanative influence. Sold by druggists, 25 cents a vial. Manufactured at the Chemical Laboratory of WORLD'S DISPENSARY MEDICAL ASSOCIATION, Buffalo, N. Y.

$500 REWARD

is offered by the manufacturers of Dr. Sage's Catarrh Remedy, for a case of Chronic Nasal Catarrh which they cannot cure.

SYMPTOMS OF CATARRH.—Dull, heavy headache, obstruction of the nasal passages, discharges falling from the head into the throat, sometimes profuse, watery, and acrid, at others, thick, tenacious, mucous, purulent, bloody and putrid; the eyes are weak, watery, and inflamed; there is ringing in the ears, deafness, hacking or coughing to clear the throat, expectoration of offensive matter, together with scabs from ulcers; the voice is changed and has a nasal twang; the breath is offensive; smell and taste are impaired; there is a sensation of dizziness, with mental depression, a hacking cough and general debility. Only a few of the above-named symptoms are likely to be present in any one case. Thousands of cases annually, without manifesting half of the above symptoms, result in consumption, and end in the grave. No disease is so common, more deceptive and dangerous, or less understood by physicians.

By its mild, soothing, and healing properties, Dr. Sage's Catarrh Remedy cures the worst cases of Catarrh, "cold in the head," Coryza, and Catarrhal Headache. Sold by druggists everywhere; 50 cents.

"Untold Agony from Catarrh."

Prof. W. HAUSNER, the famous mesmerist, of Ithaca, N. Y., writes: "Some ten years ago I suffered untold agony from chronic nasal catarrh. My family physician gave me up as incurable, and said I must die. My case was such a bad one, that every day, towards sunset, my voice would become so hoarse I could barely speak above a whisper. In the morning my coughing and clearing of my throat would almost strangle me. By the use of Dr. Sage's Catarrh Remedy, in three months, I was a well man, and the cure has been permanent."

"Constantly Hawking and Spitting."

THOMAS J. RUSHING, Esq., 1902 Pine Street, St. Louis, Mo., writes: "I was a great sufferer from catarrh for three years. At times I could hardly breathe, and was constantly hawking and spitting, and for the last eight months could not breathe through the nostrils. I thought nothing could be done for me. Luckily, I was advised to try Dr. Sage's Catarrh Remedy, and I am now a well man. I believe it to be the only sure remedy for catarrh now manufactured, and one has only to give it a fair trial to experience astounding results and a permanent cure."

Three Bottles Cure Catarrh.

ELI ROBBINS, Runyan P. O., Columbia Co., Pa., says: "My daughter had catarrh when she was five years old, very badly. I saw Dr. Sage's Catarrh Remedy advertised, and procured a bottle for her, and soon saw that it helped her; a third bottle effected a permanent cure. She is now eighteen years old and sound and hearty."

D C N L, 23 87.

$500 AT MARRIAGE—DON'T marry until you have joined the Mutual Endowment Association, of Altoona, Pa. (Incorporated.) Money paid immediately after marriage, not three and five years afterwards as in other societies, or, if you don't marry, a most excellent investment to join. Costs only $3 to become a member, both sexes eligible, married or single. Send for circulars, Secretary Mutual Endowment Association, Schenk's Block, Eleventh Avenue, Altoona, Pa., P. O. Address, Lock Box 379.

CONSUMPTION.

I have a positive remedy for the above disease; by its use thousands of cases of the worst kind and of long standing have been cured. Indeed, so strong is my faith in its efficacy, that I will send TWO BOTTLES FREE, together with a VALUABLE TREATISE on this disease to any sufferer. Give express and P. O. address.

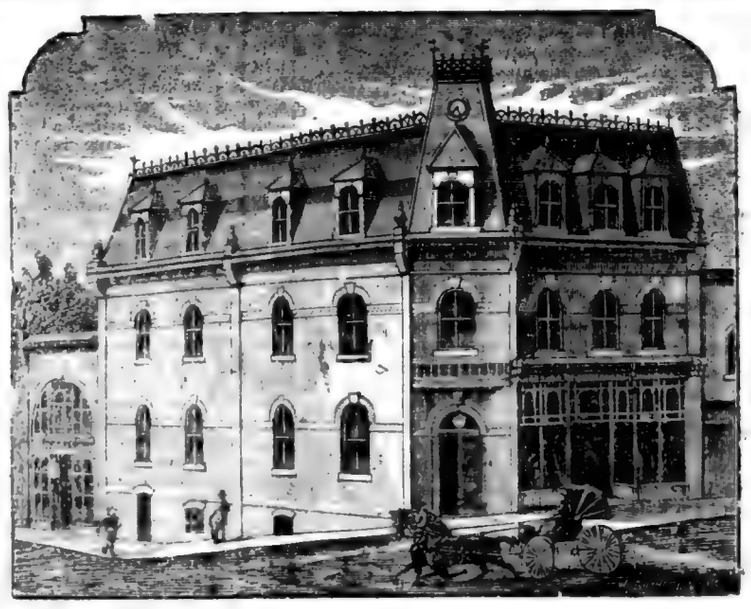
DR. A. SLOCUM,
Branch Office, 37 Yonge St., Toronto

DUNN'S BAKING POWDER
THE COOK'S BEST FRIEND

I CURE FITS!

When I say cure I do not mean merely to stop them for a time and then have them return again. I mean a radical cure. I have made the disease of FITS, EPILEPSY or FALLING SICKNESS a life-long study. I warrant my remedy to cure the worst cases. Because others have failed is no reason for not now receiving a cure. Send at once for a treatise and a Free Bottle of my Infallible remedy. Give Express and Post Office. It costs you nothing for a trial, and I will cure you. Address DR. H. G. ROOT,
Branch Office, 37 Yonge St., Toronto.

THE LARGEST GENERAL STORE



IN THE COUNTY OF GREY!

OWING TO HAVING MADE EXTRAORDINARY

Large Purchases of TWEEDS!

For the Spring and Summer trade, in anticipation of the certain advance in manufacturer's prices. Our stock is still heavy and we propose to REDUCE it in June by OFFERING LIBERAL DISCOUNTS!

WE OFFER

All-Wool Tweeds From 30 Cents per Yard up!

A Man's Suit Length for $2!

We have a range of 150 patterns to select from, embracing the Newest Styles and finest textures made for this season's trade. Our

READY-MADE CLOTHING, HATS AND CAPS!

And GENTS' FURNISHING Department is now admitted unequalled in this County. We carry a large range of Children's Clothing.

In extent and variety our General Dry Goods stock exceeds that of any former season and we offer Extra Values in Prints and Dress Goods!

OUR MILLINERY DEPARTMENT is crowded with customers daily. All are pleased who come to buy, and the general Verdict of the Ladies is, "A splendid stock and prices low!" All departments, including

Boots and Shoes, General Groceries, Hardware, Glass, China, Crockery, and Wall Papers,

Are constantly kept assorted with seasonable goods and can give special low quotations for building contracts for NAILS, GLASS & other Hardware.

We buy Butter, Eggs, Wool and Grain for Cash.

And to those who prefer trade our extensive stock offers the most favorable conditions to our customers for profitable exchange.

We thank our old customers, with many of whom we have had constant and most pleasant business relations for over twenty years, and we ask their continued confidence and patronage. We solicit a trial from new customers. We are here to serve the public to the best of our ability, and our experience, judgement, time and means will be devoted to that end.

M. RICHARDSON & CO.

FLESHERTON, May 25th, 1887.

FLESHERTON ADVANCE.

"TRUTH BEFORE FAVOR."—"PRINCIPLES, NOT MEN."

VOL. VII., NO. 313. FLESHERTON, ONTARIO, JUNE 16, 1887. A. R. FAWCETT, EDITOR & PROPRIETOR.

W. A. BROWN,

—THE—

PEOPLE'S JEWELLER,

Keeps the only First-Class Stock of American Watches, Clocks, Jewellery, Wedding Rings, Specs, etc., between Shelburne and the Sound. Hampden Watches, my own name, accurately timed, 2 and 5 years warrant, $8.50 to $28.00. Fahys, Waltham or Toronto Cases, 2 to 5 oz. Waltham, P. S. Bartlett's, 3 oz. coin case, $17.50; Ellery's, $14.50, lower grades, $6.00, to $11.00; Elgins if preferred. Ladies 10 & 14 k. Watches, and Gents 10 & 14 k. filled cases always in stock. It is safe to buy Watches from me because I do business for myself, in my own name, and can be held to my warrant. 34 Seth Thomas, New Haven and Ansonia Clocks now in stock, bought close.

They will be sold below the "Terrible Bargains," prices at least 25 per cent.

It is easy to come down when goods are away up. I don't do a catch business.

Straight dealing ensures success,

I shall stay on that line. Small profits, modest prices. I secure patronage through low prices. Assortment Complete. Send for quotations. If I do not save you money I will make other Jewellers take cost. 18 years at the trade.

SPECIALTISE:
Watch Repairing, Fitting Spex.

Address Box 5, MARKDALE, ONT.

SAY, HALLO THERE! ADVERTISING PAYS! Of course it does. Just plant an advertisement in THE ADVANCE and see for yourself. Hundreds have done so and were benefitted. Have you a farm you want to sell or rent? Advertise in THE ADVANCE. Have you anything under the sun you want to sell or trade? An advertisement in THE ADVANCE will bring you customers every time. Do you want to buy anything or hire help? Advertise in THE ADVANCE every time. Address or call on A. R. Fawcett, ADVANCE Office, Flesherton, for terms, &c.

CARD OF THANKS!

In thanking my customers for their liberal patronage in the past, I have much pleasure in being still able to supply them with the following celebrated machines, viz.,

The Toronto Light Binder.
The Toronto Mower.
The Sharp Sulky Rake.
The Massey Harvester.
The Massey Mower.
The Tolton Pea Harvester.
The Fox Pea Harvester.
Hamilton's Combination Plow.
Tolten's Centre Draught Jointer Plow.
Hamilton's Scufflers.
Hamilton's Boss Gang Plow.
Wisner's Spring Tooth Cultivators.
The Chatham Fanning Mill.
A full stock of REPAIRS always on hand.

Parties requiring any of the above will do well to call and inspect Machines, which will be found in Sproule's warehouse.

A. S. VanDUSEN,
FLESHERTON.

PRINTING! YES, OH, YES! IT WILL PAY all manners of persons who read this advt. to get their Printing done at THE ADVANCE Office, Flesherton. Good work at honest prices every time! A dollar saved is a dollar earned—so the proverb goes. Pamphlets, Posters, Circulars, Programs, Dodgers, Streamers, Bill Heads, Note Heads, Receipts, Note Forms, Business Cards, Visiting Cards, Labels, Tags, &c., Plain or Colored. Address or call on A. R. Fawcett, ADVANCE Office, Flesherton, for terms.

ADVERTISE in The ADVANCE

See bills referring to Mr. Joseph LeGiard's famous Devon Bull.

Mr. James Belmer has returned home from the "Soo" for a short visit.

Mr. Dannode is paying the highest price for wool as usual at the Tannery.

For the best Flour and Feed obtainable go to Keefer's, Flesherton.

See advt. elsewhere in reference to Mr. Donald Mackenzie's celebrated Durham Bull, "Dauntless."

Master Geo. Treadgold, of Flesherton, has secured a position on the Dundalk Herald. He went there last week.

The only place in this country to get your Watch repaired properly is at Russell's, Flesherton. 2t.

Mr. D. White, of this place, got kicked on the cap of the knee by a horse recently.

Remember Union Sabbath School Picnic on the Beaver Meadow, Flesherton, at one o'clock on Thursday afternoon next, June 23rd.

Miss Lizzie McGruther, of Nottawasaga, was visiting her aunt, Mrs. R. McGruther, last week.

Mr. and Mrs. Mayman White, of Collingwood Township, were visiting friends in this neighborhood last week.

Mr. H. Down, of the fourth line, Artemesia, had sheep worried by dogs on Tuesday night of last week.

To the children—small and large! I have a small Pictorial Card for every one who will call for it on Jubilee day in Flesherton, Monday, June 20.—WM. CLAYTON.

Flour from $3.25 per barrel up can be obtained at Mrs. Thompson's bakery, Flesherton. All kinds of Feed, Chop, &c. equally cheap. Meals at all hours.

The people in this county are so astonished at Russell's prices that they exclaim, "how can they sell so cheap?" The fact is we buy right and only ask small profits. 2t.

The annual Picnic in connection with Salem Sabbath School will be held on Wednesday next, June 22nd, to wind up with an entertainment in the evening. For particulars see bills.

Mrs. Smith of this village brought to town several fine heads of full blown barley and fall wheat taken from the farm of Mr. Teeter, Meaford Road, on the 10th inst.

25 per cent. discount, 25 per cent. discount for one day only, on Monday next, we will give 25 per cent. on all cash sales of $1 and over. Visitors to the Jubilee, you had better take advantage of positively one day only.

RUSSELL'S

Noted Jewelery Store,

FLESHERTON,

Has the only First-Class Stock of American Watches, Clocks, Jewelery, Wedding Rings, Spex &c. between Shelburne and the Sound. Hampden, Columbus, Waltham, Elgin, and Swiss Watches, bearing warrants from 2 1-2 to five years from $7.50 to $25.00. Fahys, Waltham or Toronto cases 2 to 5 1-2 oz. We never ask any more than $16.00 for a P. S. Bartlett 3 oz. coin silver case, some dealers have the cheek to ask $17.50. Ellery's $13.25, while other dealers ask $14.50. Lower Grades from $6.90 to 11.50. Ladies & Gents Gold Watches. All kinds of American Clocks at lower prices than elsewhere. The fact is, other dealers cannot begin to compete with us notwithstanding the fact we do not sell at auction or trade on the church. A fine Stock just arrived at lower prices than ever. Always take your Watches, Clocks, & Jewelry to RUSSELL to repair, the only genuine Watchmaker & Jeweler in this section of country. Come right along and secure some bargains. It will pay you to come 20 miles to deal with us. You can save 25 per cent. by dealing at

RUSSELL'S

Noted Jewelry Store, Flesherton.

TOP BUGGY FOR SALE.—One Top Buggy nearly new, will be sold cheap for cash, or exchange for a good driving horse. W. W. TRIMBLE.

Dr. Christoe occupied the pulpit of the Methodist church here last Sunday evening; Mr. M. Richardson preached in the same place in the morning.

Barley out in head some days ago on the farm of Mr. Jas. Brodie, Meaford Road, Artemesia, and a splendid sample it is. How is that for the "Heart of Misery?"

Dominion Day is to be celebrated in Flesherton this year. The program will consist of Athletic Games & Sports, Tug of War, &c., &c. For particulars see large posters just issued.

Another new stock arrived at Russell's Noted Jewelry Store, Flesherton, consisting of ladies and gents Gold Watches, ladies and gents Silver Watches and at terrible low prices. 2t.

Mr. Will Campbell has gone to Pearl River, Algoma District, where he has taken a position as operator on the C. P.R. We wish friend Will unbounded success.

"Consumption" positively cured by buying Flour at Keefer's, Flesherton, at from $3.50 per barrel up to $4.30. Now's your chance. All kinds of Meals, Biscuits, Confectionery, &c., always on hand.

On Monday evening last, Mr. Spirit tied his horse in the stable with too long a strap. The horse got its leg fast in the strap and came near hanging itself. Neighbors hearing the noise came to its assistance and extricated it from its perilous position.

The Flesherton ADVANCE celebrated its sixth birthday last week and announces with great pride that its eye-teeth are cut. It is a bright, newsy paper, well printed, and deserves the success it has attained. We wish it continued prosperity.—Shelburne Free Press.

The Flesherton ADVANCE is six years old and enters upon its seventh "sound in wind and limb" and with hopeful prospects for success and usefulness in future. We view with pleasure the progress made from year to year by Mr. Fawcett in the ADVANCE, and wish him continued prosperity.—Markdale Standard.

The contract for the erection of the Flesherton schoolhouse, on the handsome grounds recently purchased from Mr. W. K. Flesher, has been let to the well known Markdale builder, Mr. Richards, and will be pushed forward with all speed. Mr. Aylesworth, of Collingwood, is the architect.

Bill Nye says that the first paper he ever edited was owned by a joint stock company, who published it in a room over a livery stable, and that is why they called it a joint stock company. There were two ways of entering the printing rooms. One was to ascend the spiral staircase, and the other was to twist the mule's tail and then take the elevator.

Grand Jubilee celebration in Flesherton on Monday, next, 20th inst., under the auspices of the Sons of Temperance. All members of sister organizations are invited to attend both afternoon meeting in Flesher's Park at 2 o'clock, and entertainment in the Town Hall at 8 o'clock sharp in the evening. W. K. Flesher, Esq., has kindly consented to occupy the chair. Admission, 25 cents; children under 12 years of age, 15 cents.

Mr. S. Spirit, butcher of this place, was driving into town on Thursday last, near the tannery, when his horse suddenly bolted and sprang into the spongy morass at the side of the road. When extricated the animal was covered with mud from head to foot and it was only after considerable washing and cleaning that Mr. Spirit got his spirited horse in his usual well groomed and neat condition.

Visitors to the Jubilee on Monday next will do well to call at Russell's, Flesherton, and secure one of his famous watches. You can save 25% by buying there. 2t.

The Cranberry Marsh in the Southern part of this Township is reported as being in a very bad condition. Our Council has time and again expended large sums of money on it, but it would almost seem as if the bog in question had no bottom at all. Our Township Fathers are determined, however, to leave no stone unturned in order to make a good solid roadway over this cantankerous "Cranberry Marsh." How to accomplish the task successfully is now the great problem to solve.

We regret to have to announce this week the death of two old and respected residents of Artemesia, viz., Mrs. Alfred Ward and Mr. James McNally—both deaths occuring on Saturday last. Of the former we can say she was a woman who commanded the respect and esteem of all who knew her; of the latter we can only say that we believe he was and honorable and upright man, as our acquaintance with him was very slight. The remains of both were laid to rest in the Flesherton cemetery on Monday last.

Mr. and Mrs. Proctor, their two children, and an old lady—all of Dundalk—were driving from the Station in the direction of Flesherton, on Friday last, when the bridle slipped off one of the horse's heads. The horses started to run and in turning a sharp curve the vehicle upset, throwing the occupants out on the ground with considerable violence. Mr. Proctor and the two children escaped injury, but Mrs. Proctor and the old lady were rather severely bruised. The horses continued running along the Station road until they came about opposite the residence of Mr. John Adams, where they were stopped by somebody.

Flesherton Volunteer company will give a good account of itself at Niagara camp ground this year. Tuesday morning last they turned out in full force at the Drill Shed here and marched to the Station. Every vacancy in the company has been filled with smart young recruits, and, indeed, quite a number of applications for membership had to be declined. We observed one of the Volunteers wearing one of the badges given out after the late North-West rebellion. On enquiry, we found he had seen much active service during those troublous times.

25 per cent. discount, 25 per cent. discount for one day only, on Monday next we will give 25% on all cash sales of $1 and over. Visitors to the Jubilee you had better take advantage of positively one day only.

FARMERS!

WOOLEN FACTORY

Don't forget there is good work done at the Flesherton

And we are doing all in our power to please. Customers are finding out it is to their advantage to deal with us as our Prices are Low and Our Goods are Reliable, and notwithstanding prove being cut so close on account of hard times, I intend to reduce the quantity in nearly every branch, viz., CARDING, ROLL CARDING, SPINNING, WEAVING, &c., &c. Give us a trial and see for yourself.

W. H. FLESHER.

Flesherton, May 19th, 1887.

SIR HUGH'S LOVES.

CHAPTER I.

PROLOGUE—THE WANDERER.

Tears, idle tears, I know not what they mean,
Tears from the depth of some divine despair
Rise in the heart, and gather to the eyes,
In looking on the happy Autumn-fields,
And thinking of the days that are no more.
Tennyson's Princess.

Not much of a picture, certainly!

Only a stretch of wide sunny road, with a tamarisk hedge and a clump of shadowy elms; a stray sheep nibbling in a grass ditch; and a brown baby asleep on a bench; beyond, low broad fields of grain whitening to harvest, and a distant film and haze—blue cloudiness, and the deep monotonous sound of the great sea.

Yellow sunshine, green turf, the buoyancy of salt spray in the air; some one, trailing a white gown unheeded in the sandy dust, pauses a moment under the flickering elms to admire the scene.

She is a tall, grave woman, with serious eyes and dead-brown hair, the shade of withered leaves in autumn, with a sad beautiful face.

It is the face of one who has suffered and been patient; who has loved much and will love on to the end; who, from the depths of a noble, selfless nature, looks out upon the world with mild eyes of charity; a woman, yet a girl in years, whom one termed his pearl among women.

Just now, standing under the elms, with her straight white folds and uncovered hair, for her sun-bonnet lay on the turf beside her, her wistful eyes looking far away seaward, one could have compared her to a Norman or a Druidical priestess under the shadow of the sacred oak; there is at once something so benignant and strong, so full of pathos, in her face and form.

Low swaying of branches, then the pattering of red and yellow rain round the rough-hewn bench, the brown baby awakes and stretches out its arms with a lusty cry—a suggestive human sound that effectually breaks up the stillness; for at the same instant an urchin whittling wood in the hedge scrambles out in haste, and a buxom-looking woman steps from the porch of an ivy-covered lodge, wringing the soap-suds from her white wrinkled hands.

Trifles mar tranquility.

For a moment silence is invaded, and the dissonant sounds gather strength; for once infant tears fail to be dried by mother smiles, and, as if in answer to the shrill cries, flocks of snow-white geese waddle solemnly across the grass; the boy leaves off whittling wood and chases the yellow-bills; through the leafy avenue comes the loaded corn-wain, the jocund waggoner with scarlet poppies in his hat, blue corn-flowers and pink convelvuli trailing from the horses' ears; over the fields sound the distant pealing of bells.

The girl wakes up from her musing fit with a deep sigh, and her face becomes suddenly very pale; then she moves slowly across the road towards a path winding through the bare harvest fields, where the gleaners are busily at work. From under the tamarisk hedge comes the shadow of a woman; as the white gown disappears and the lodge-keeper carries off her wailing child, the shadow becomes substance and grows erect into the figure of a girl.

Of a girl in shabby black, footsore and weary, who drags herself with hesitating steps to the spot where the other woman's feet have been rested, and there she stoops and hurriedly gathers a few blades of grass and presses them to her lips.

Silence once more over the landscape; the glitter of sunshine round the empty bench; the whirling of insects in the ambient air; under the shadowy elms a girl smiling bitterly over a few poor grasses, gathered as we pluck them from a loved one's grave.

* * * * *

Catharine, the lodge-keeper, sat rocking her baby in the old porch seat: through the open door one could catch glimpses of the bright red-tiled kitchen with its wooden settle, and the tortoise-shell cat asleep on the great wicker chair; beyond, the sunny little herb-garden with its plots of lavender, marjoram, and sweet-smelling thyme, the last monthly roses blooming among the gooseberry bushes; a child cliqueting up the narrow brick path with a big sun-bonnet and burnished pail; in the corner a toy fountain gurgling over its oyster-shell border, and a few superannuated ferns.

Catharine sat contentedly in the shady porch, on her lap lay the brown baby with his face all puckered up with smiles; his tiny hole of a mouth just opened ready for the small moist thumb, and his bare rosy feet beating noiseless time to the birds; he was listening besides to his mother's voice as she sat rocking him and talking unconsciously aloud.

"'Heaven bless her!' she muttered, with a cloud on her pleasant face; yes, those were her very words, as she stood like a picture under the old trees yonder."

"'Heaven bless her and him too,'—but there was not a speck of color in her face as she said the words, and I could see the tears in her beautiful eyes. Oh, but you are a saint, Miss Margaret—every one knows that; but, as I tell Martin, it is a sin and a shame to ring the joy bells for a feckless chit that folk never set eyes on; while our darling, Miss Margaret, is left alone in the old place."

"What about Margaret, Catharine, for heaven's sake, what about Margaret?" and the shadow that had come from behind the tamarisk hedge now fell across the porch straight before the startled woman.

Catharine put down her apron from her eyes with something like a cry, and stood up trembling.

"Good gracious! is that you, Miss Crystal? why, you come before one like a flash of lightning on a summer's day, to make one palpitate all over for fear of a storm."

"And about as welcome, I suppose," returned the young stranger, bitterly, "my good Catharine, your simile is a wonderfully true one."

"I don't know nought about 'similies,' Miss Crystal, but I know you are as welcome as the flowers in May. Come in—come in—my lamb, and don't stand scorching your poor face in the sun; come in and I'll give you Martin's wicker chair by the open window, where you can smell the sea and the fields together, and I'll fetch you a sup of Daisy's new milk, for you look quite faint and moithered, like a lost and weary bird, my pretty. Yes, just like a lost and weary bird."

"You are right," murmured the girl through her pale lips; then aloud, "have your own way, for you were ever an obstinate woman, Catharine, and fetch me a draught of Daisy's sweet milk and a crust of the old brown loaf, and I will thank you and go; but not before you have told me about Margaret—all that you know, and that you hope and fear, Catharine."

"Heaven bless you, Miss Crystal, it is the same tender heart as ever, I see. Yes, you shall hear all I know; and that's little enough, I'll be bound." And so saying, she hustled up her dress over her linsey petticoat, and, taking a tin dipper from the dresser, was presently heard calling cheerfully to her milky favorite in the paddock, on her way to the dairy.

Left to herself, the girl threw herself down—not in the wicker chair, where the cat lay like a furry ball simmering in the sun, but on the old brown settle behind the door, where she could rest her head against the wall, and see and not be seen.

She had taken off her broad-brimmed hat, and it lay on the table beside her: and the sunlight streamed through the lattice window full on her face.

Such a young face, and—heaven help her—such a sad face; so beautiful too, in spite of the lines that sorrow had evidently traced on it, and the hard bitter curves round the mouth.

The dark dreamy eyes, the pale olive complexion, the glossy hair—in color the sun-steeped blackness of the south—the full curled lips and grand profile, might have befitted a Vashti; just so might the spotless queen have carried her uncrowned head when she left the gates of Shushan, and have trailed her garments in the dust with a mien as proud and as despairing.

There she sat motionless, looking over the harvest-fields, while Catharine spread a clean coarse cloth on the small oaken table beside her and served up a frugal meal of brown bread, honey and milk, and then stood watching her while the stranger ate sparingly and as if only necessity compelled.

"There," she said at last, looking up at Catharine with a soft pathetic smile that lent new beauty to her face: "I have done justice to your delicious fare; now draw your chair closer, for I am starving for news of Margaret, and 'like water to a thirsty soul is news from a far country.' How often I say those words to myself."

"But not bad news, surely, Miss Crystal; and it is like enough you'll think mine bad when told. Hark, it only wants the half-hour to noon, and they are man and wife now."

"Man and wife! of whom are you talking, Catharine?"

"Of whom should I be talking, dearie, but of the young master?" but the girl interrupted her with strange vehemence.

"Catharine, you will drive me crazy with that slow soft tongue of yours. How can Hugh Redmond be married while Margaret stands under the elm trees alone?"

"But it is true, Miss Crystal, for all that—as sure as the blue sky is above us—Sir Hugh Redmond weds to-day with a bonnie bit child from foreign parts that no one set eyes on, and whom he is bringing home as mistress to the old hall."

"I don't believe you!" exclaimed the girl stormily; but in spite of her words the olive complexion grew pale. "You are jesting, Catharine; you are imposing on me some village fable—some credulous report. As I love Margaret I refuse to believe you."

"The time was when a word from Catharine would have contented you, Miss Crystal," replied the woman sorrowfully, and her honest face grew overcast. "Do you think Miss Margaret's own foster-sister, who was brought up with her, would deceive you now? But it is like enough that sorrow and pride have turned your head, and the mistake of having made the first false step beside."

"Forgive me," returned the girl hoarsely; and she took the work-hardened hand and pressed it between both her own. "I will try to believe you, though I cannot realise it that Margaret—my Margaret—has been jilted."

"No, nor that either, dearie. We must not blame the poor young master beyond his deserts. He loved her true, Miss Crystal; he loved her that true that his heart was like to break; but for all that he was forced to give her up."

"I cannot understand it," in a bewildered voice. "When I left the dear old home that summer's day a year ago they had been engaged nine months; yes, it was nine months, I remember, for it was on her birthday that he asked her to be his wife, and they had loved each other long before that. Do you think I can ever forget that time?"

"I daresay not. Anyhow, things went on well for a time; the young master was always at the Grange, or Miss Margaret and Mr. Raby at the Hall; and when he was away, for he was always a bit roving, he wrote her a heap of letters; and all was as right as it could be till the old master came home."

"Ah, true! I had forgotten Sir Wilfred."

"Ay, he had been away for more than two years in the East, working for that fine book of his that folks talk about so much; but he was in bad health, and he had a strange hankering to die in the old Hall. There is an awful mystery in things, Miss Crystal; for if it had pleased Providence to have taken the poor old master before he reached the Hall, our dear Miss Margaret might have been happy now."

"Do you mean that Sir Wilfred objected to the match?"

"Well, I don't rightly know what happened, but Martin and me think there is some mystery at the bottom. Folks say, who know the young master, that he has a way of putting off things to the morrow as should be done to-day, and either he did not tell his father of his engagement to Miss Margaret, or his letters went astray in those foreign parts; but when the old master heard that Mr. Hugh had promised to marry Miss Margaret, he made an awful scene, and swore that no Ferrers should be mistress of Redmond Hall."

"Good heavens! what reason could Sir Wilfred have for refusing his consent? Margaret was beautiful, rich, and well-born. Do you mean to say that Sir Hugh was so poor a creature as to give her up for a whim?"

"No, no, Miss Crystal, dear, we don't understand the rights of it. When Mr. Hugh left the old master he just rushed up to the Grange to see Miss Margaret, and to tell her of his father's opposition; but she had a right brave spirit of her own, and she heartened him up, and bade him wait patiently and she would win over the old man yet. Well, it is a sad story, and, as I told you, neither Martin nor me know what rightly happened. Sir Wilfred came up to talk to Miss Margaret, and then she sent for Mr. Hugh, and told him they must part, that she would never marry him. That was before the old master had that stroke that carried him off, but she held firm to it after his death, and nothing that Mr. Hugh could say would move her."

"And yet, if ever woman loved man, Margaret loved Hugh Redmond."

"I know it, dearie, no one could look at her and not see that the light had gone out of her life, and that her heart was just breaking—how white you have gone, Miss Crystal!"

"I am so sorry for Margaret. Oh! Catharine, Catharine, if I had any tears left I think I could shed them all for Margaret."

"Keep them for yourself, my dearie, maybe they will cool the fever in your heart, and make you see clear, and bring you back to us again."

"Hush, hush! I will not hear you. I will only talk of my poor Margaret. She would not marry him you say."

"No, she was like a rock, not all the poor young master could say could change her resolution. I know she told him that his father was right to forbid their marriage, and though it was a cruel trouble to them both, they must bear it, for it was God's will, not Sir Wilfred's, that separated them; but he would never listen to her, and at last he just flung away in a rage and married the other."

"The other!—whom do you mean, Catharine?"

"Well, you have heard of Colonel Mordaunt, who lived up at Wyngate Priory, the big place, up yonder, some of the land adjoins the Hall lands, but the house is no better than a ruin."

"Yes, I know; Colonel Mordaunt died in India."

"Well, maybe you did not know that the Colonel had a daughter, a bit bonnie lass, who was brought up by an aunt in the country. It seems Sir Wilfred and the Colonel had always hoped to bring about a match between the young people, and after Sir Wilfred's death they found a letter with the will, charging Mr. Hugh by all that was sacred not to marry Miss Margaret, and begging him to go down to Daintree, and see Colonel Mordaunt's beautiful young daughter. Miss Margaret told me with tears in her eyes what a loving fatherly letter it was, and how it prayed Mr. Hugh to forgive him for crossing his will; but told him at the same time that no blessing could ever follow his marriage with Margaret Ferrers."

"No blessing? There is some mystery here, Catharine."

"That is what I say, Miss Crystal, but reason or not, the poor young master was half-crazed with the disappointment; he was for setting aside everything, and going on reckless-like, but Miss Margaret she was like a rock—she could not and would not marry him; and in his anger against her, and because he did not care what became of him, he went down to Daintree and settled the matter with Miss Mordaunt, and that is all I know, Miss Crystal."

"One—two—three—four," counted the girl with a bitter smile, "four broken hearts, four mutilated lives, and the sun shines, and the birds sing—one hungers, thirsts, sleeps, and wakes again, and a benignant Creator suffers it; but hush! there are footsteps, Catharine, hide me, quick."

"My dearie, don't look so scared like, it is only Mr. Raby—he passed an hour ago with the parson; but there is only wee Johnnie with him now."

"Is he coming in? I am sure I heard him lift the latch of the gate; you will keep your faith with me, Catharine?"

"Yes—yes, have I ever failed you; bide quite a bit; he cannot see you. He is only standing in the porch, for a sup of milk. I'll fetch it from the dairy, and he'll drink it and go."

"If only Johnnie were not there," murmured the girl, anxiously.

"No, no, he has sent him on most likely to the Vicarage."

"My good Catharine," observed a quiet voice from the porch, "how long am I to wait for my glass of milk?"

"I am sorry, Mr. Raby, I am indeed," answered Catharine's cheery tones in the distance.

"Don't be sorry," returned the same voice; "waiting will do me good." And then there was silence.

The stranger stole out and peeped through the half opened door.

There was a tall man standing in the porch; a man so tall that the clustering ivy round the trellis-work quite trailed about him and touched his forehead; a man broad-shouldered and strong, but with a stooping gait like a giant worn out with labor; he was in clerical dress, but his soft felt hat was in his hand, and the grand powerful head with its heavy dead-brown hair and pale face were distinctly visible under the shadow of the ivy. He did not move at the sound of the stealthy footstep or at the light shadow that fell across him, though the girl crept so close that he could have touched her with his right hand; but on Catharine's reappearence she shrunk back with a gesture of mingled entreaty and command.

"There is the milk, Mr. Raby, and it is yellow and rich with cream to reward your patience, sir."

"Thank you," he replied, smiling, and putting out a large white hand; the stranger took the glass from Catharine and held it to him; he drank it with seeming unconsciousness and with lowered eyes. "A most delicious draught; but your hand is trembling, Catharine; are you tired or unwell?"

"Neither, sir, thank you," replied Catharine, huskily, while the girl drew back in evident alarm. "Ah, there is Johnnie come for you, he is waiting at the gate; here is your stick, Mr. Raby. Don't forget your hat, for the sun is very powerful."

"No, no," returned the clergyman, absently. "Good morning, Catharine." Then, as he walked down the little brick-paved path, "How strange Catharine's hand never felt like that; it always seemed puckered and rough to me, but this felt soft and cold as it touched me, and shook so that it could hardly hold the glass. Johnnie, lad, is there any one standing in the porch with your mother?"

"No, sir, only mother."

"Strange," he muttered, "strange; I suppose it was my fancy, I am always fancying things:" and then he sighed and put his hand on the boy's shoulder, for Raby Ferrers was blind.

CHAPTER II.

THE BLIND VICAR OF SANDYCLIFFE.

Over proud of course,
Even so!—but not so stupid, blind, that I,
Whom thus the great Taskmaster of the world
Has set to meditate, mistaken work,
My dreary face against a dim blank wall
Throughout man's natural lifetime,—could prevent or wish.
Browning's Aurora Leigh.

About five miles from Singleton, where Redmond Hall stands, is the little village of Sandycliffe, a small primitive place set in corn-fields, with long sloping fields of grain, alternating with smooth green uplands and winding lanes, with the tangled hedge-rows, so well known in southern scenery.

Sandycliffe is not actually on the sea-shore, but a short walk from the village up one of those breezy uplands would bring the foot-passenger within view of the blue sea line; on one side is Singleton, with its white cliffs and row of modest, unpretending houses, and on the other the busy port of Pierrepoint, with its bustle and traffic, its long narrow streets, and ceaseless activity. Sandycliffe lies snugly in its green hollow; a tiny village with one winding street, a few white-washed cottages grouped round a small Norman church, with a rose-covered vicarge inhabited by the curate's large family. The vicar lived a mile away, at the Grange, a large red brick house with curious gables, half covered with ivy, standing on high ground, with a grand view of the sea and the harbor of Pierrepoint.

It might seem strange to any one not conversant with the facts of the case that the small, sparsely-populated village should require the services of a curate, and especially a hard-working man like Mr. Anderson; but a sad affliction had befallen the young vicar of Sandycliffe; the result of some illness or accident, two or three years after his ordination, had left him totally blind.

People who had heard him had prophesied great things of Mr. Ferrers—he had the rare gift of eloquence; he was a born orator, as they said—a rising light in his profession; it was absurd that such powers should be wasted on a village congregation, made up of rustics and old women; he must preach from some city pulpit; he was a man fitted to sway the masses in the east end of London, to be a leader among his fellows; it was seldom that one saw such penetration and power united with such simple unobtrusive goodness.

Mr. Ferrers would smile a little sadly when these speeches reached his ear. He was a man who cared little for the praises of his generation; his one aim in life was to devote his talents to his Master's service—to work in the corner of the vineyard allotted to him. His inner consciousness, indeed, told him that he had capabilities for a larger sphere, a wider range of work; when the call came he would be ready to leave his few sheep in the wilderness and go out into pastures new. He was like a knight watching beside his armor until the reveille sounded; when the time came he was ready to go down to the battle.

When the call came! Alas! it never came in this world for Raby Ferrers. In the full prime of youth and strength the mysterious doom of blindness came upon the young vicar and left him groping in a darkened world.

There was bitter trouble at the Grange just then; a young cousin of Margaret and Raby Ferrers, who had lived with them from childhood, and had been the spoilt darling of the house, had left her home suddenly, leaving no trace behind her.

Gossip had been rife in Sandycliffe, but no one except Hugh Redmond knew the rights of the case, or why the girl should have abandoned her home when Raby Ferrers was lying on a bed of suffering, and Margaret was watching beside him in trembling anguish for the result.

There were weeks and months of bodily suffering and fierce internal conflict—bitter hand to hand fights with despair. And then the strong will and faith of Raby Ferrers triumphed; back from the shadow of the valley of death he came, mutilated, scarred, and victorious; and like blind Samson, led by a boy, he one day electrified his people by entering his pulpit again; and at the sight of the changed pale face, and of the deep melodious voice speaking with its old tender authority, there was hardly a dry eye in the church.

From that day Mr. Ferrers never flinched from the purpose he had set before him as far as lay in his power to do his duty. Bound by his ordination vows, he still gloried in the dignity of his priesthood. Sunday after Sunday saw him occupying the pulpit of his little church, which, as the fame of his rare eloquence went abroad was always crowded with strangers.

He had secured the services of an earnest hard-working man—the ill-paid, overworked curate of an east end parish with a large sickly family—and installed them in the sunny pleasant vicarage.

(To be continued.)

Socks With a Place for Each Toe.

Speaking of hose reminds me of an imported idea in gentlemen's foot-wear, or "sox," as they are called by the haberdashers. They are made like gloves, with a place for each toe, and are said to be far ahead of the old style in matter of comfort, also as to expense.—New York Letter in Boston Record.

Perishable Freight.

A freight car was left at Chippewa Falls by a north-bound train. It was marked "perishable goods." When the agent opened the door after the departure of the train out walked four tramps.—Milwaukee Journal.

A Bustle de Luxe.

Bustles are a never-ending source of misery or pleasure, but really the bustle de luxe is one I have just seen. It is made of silk, filled with hair, and has dainty white ribbons for ties.—New York Star.

A meeting of Presbyterian ministers and elders was held in Toronto yesterday, when it was decided to divide the city into districts for mission purposes, and a permanent organization was formed for mutual counsel on all matters of common interest.

Dr. Anderson Critchett, of London, was recently offered a fee of £7,000—probably the largest medical honorarium on record—to go to India to treat one of the native princes, but declined the offer.

"Mamma," said a little 5-year-old girl, pointing to a turkey gobbler strolling around a neighbor's yard, "ain't that red-nosed chicken got an awful big bustle?"

THE BOOM AT THE SAULT.

What a Hamilton Man Has to Say About It.

James W. Reid, formerly of Hamilton, writes to the Toronto News from Sault Ste. Marie that he went to that place six weeks ago on the report in a Toronto paper that things were booming. He says: "I found on my arrival that there was no shops to rent and it would take a small fortune to buy a lot to build on, as a ring of speculators gobbled up all the property last winter for four or five miles along the river front and away back into the country ever so far, by merely paying down a few dollars on it. In one case I know of only $25 on a $4,800 purchase—and then all agreed to put up the prices so fearfully high that a poor man cannot touch a foot of it. This is killing the town, and keeping it back, as nearly everybody who comes here leaves in a few days, cursing the place instead of staying here and helping to build it up. Over 150 people came in the week I did, but there are only three of them left now. There is plenty of talk about lots, but no sales are being made, and except a few cheap buildings no work going on. It is the deadest place I ever was in. One or two men have the business all in their own hands, and they do not like to see anybody else starting in opposition to them. The hotels charge $7.50 a week for board, and it costs a lot of money to stay here any time. Everybody wants to make a fortune in a month and not work for it."

Latest Scottish News.

It is announced that the talked of change of the 79th Queen's Own Cameron Highlanders into a battalion of the Scots Guards is not to take place.

The last set of girders of the Tay Bridge were raised to their permanent position on the 19th ult. The work of construction has occupied about five years.

The detailed prospectus of the Glasgow International Exhibition has been issued. The guarantee fund, it is stated, already exceeds £240,000, and is still being increased.

Rev. Dr. Hutcheson, of Banchory-Ternan, was chosen Moderator of the General Assembly of the Established Church of Scotland, at Edinburgh, last month, and the Rev. Principal Rainy, of the Free Church.

The same anonymous donor that gave £10,000 to start the Scottish National Portrait Gallery, Edinburgh, has now intimated his intention of being at the cost of finishing the building according to the original designs.

The death is announced of the Dowager Duchess of Leinster, daughter of the late Duke and Duchess of Sutherland, and sister of the late Duchess of Westminster, Lady Blantyre, and the late Duchess of Argyll.

A hundred years ago, on the 4th of June, Robert Burns first went to Dumfries, and received the freedom of the burg, in recognition of his talents, and the service, as a writer of songs, that he had done, and was doing, to his country.

The death of Mr. Alexander Brunton, Inverkeithing, author of the "Life and Heroic Actions of Sir William Wallace," and other books bearing on early Scottish history, is announced. Mr. Brunton was 83 years of age.

To the Wallace monument, at Stirling, five busts have already been offered—namely, those of King Robert the Bruce, Knox, Buchanan, Burns and Scott. Watt should certainly follow next in order. Each bust varies in cost between £80 and £100.

A monument to the Marquis of Montrose, "the great Marquis," is to be placed in St. Giles' Cathedral, Edinburgh, chiefly by gentlemen of the Clan Graham. Dr. Dowland Anderson has furnished the design, the carrying out of which will cost about £1,000.

Peculiar Death of a Boy.

The death in a chest as pathetically set forth in the "Mistletoe Bough" has its latest parallel in the sad fate of little Tommy Gray, a bright New York lad of 7 years, whose body was found on Tuesday evening in a chest forming the seat of an ice waggon, which stood on the street. The little fellow, with several school companions, went bathing in the afternoon in the North River. They were surprised while in the water by a policeman, and in their fear of arrest they scattered in different directions. Little Tommy ran with his clothes under his arm, jumped into the ice waggon and hid in the chest, pulling down the lid, a self-locker. Here the poor little fellow was in the evening found suffocated.

—In a letter to County Crown Attorney McMillan, of Orangeville, Lord Dufferin thus refers to his family: You will, I am sure, be glad to hear that my wife and all my children are flourishing. My eldest daughter has grown up into a very fine handsome young woman, and has now gone home for a year to England after spending two years with us here. My eldest son is a young soldier in a cavalry regiment stationed in India, and the others are all gradually growing up.

LITTLE JIM.

Our little Jim
Was such a limb
His mother scarce could manage him.
His eyes were blue,
And looked you through,
And seemed to say,
"I'll have my way!"
His age was 6,
His saucy tricks
But made you smile,
Though all the while
You said, "You limb,
You wicked Jim,
Be quiet, do!"

Poor little Jim!
Our eyes are dim
When soft and low we speak of him.
No clatt'ring shoe
Goes running through
The silent room,
Now wrapped in gloom,
So still he lies,
With fast shut eyes,
No need to say,
Alas! to-day,
"You little limb,
You baby Jim,
Be quiet, do!"

Policeman—"Give me a pint of peanuts, aunty, and there's 5 cents for you." Aunty—"Hivin bliss ye, sor! I see yez are a new man on the force."—New York Sun.

The Canadian Wimbledon team intend spending a week at Cambridge before taking up their quarters at Wimbledon for practice.

DOMINION PARLIAMENT.

The following Bills were introduced and read a first time :

Respecting the Ontario Pacific Junction Railway Co.—Mr. Rykert.

To incorporate the Manufacturers' Accident Insurance Co.—Mr. Small.

Mr. Thompson, replying to Mr. McMullen, stated that it was the intention of the Government to distribute to justices of the peace an abridgement of the Revised Statutes containing the criminal law, the cost being about one-fifth of the Revised Statutes.

Mr. White (Cardwell), replying to Mr. Mallory, said Rufus Stephenson was in the employ of the Government as Inspector of Colonization Companies at a salary of $3,000 and travelling expenses, the same as those allowed for other employees in Manitoba and the Northwest.

Sir Charles Tupper, replying to Mr. McMullen, stated that three-quarters of the accounts connected with the revision of the voters' lists were paid, and the remainder would be paid within a few days.

Sir John Macdonald, replying to Mr. Rinfret, said the Lieutenant-Governor of Quebec had tendered his resignation on account of ill-health. He had not asked for leave of absence nor been granted it. The resignation had not yet been accepted.

Sir Charles Tupper, replying to Mr. Mitchell, who asked for facts relating to Reciprocity negotiations, said everything possible was being done by the Governments of Canada and Britain to settle the fishery question and promote Reciprocity, but declined at present to make public any particulars.

Mr. Thompson, replying to Mr. Choquette, said the salaries of Revising-officers were not yet fixed, but would be shortly.

Mr. Amyot asked whether the Government proposed to take any steps to protect the Dominion from attacks of the cholera now raging in South America.

Mr. Carling said quarantine would be enforced against all ships coming from South America, whether on the Atlantic or the Pacific side. If any vessel were found infected she would be detained in quarantine.

Mr. Amyot said that yesterday the Minister of Militia (Sir Adolphe Caron) had stated that the reason for ordering the 9th Battalion, of which he was Colonel, to discontinue drill was given in letters to him (Mr. Amyot). This was not so. The battalion, after being called out to drill, had been ordered to stop without a word of explanation and had later been ordered to resume, also without explanation. They were treated in a harsh and grossly insulting way. He had asked also whether the whole report of Major-General Strange on the 9th Battalion had been published in full, and the reply was in the affirmative. But Major-General Strange had published a letter in the press declaring that there were parts of his reports which were not published. He (Mr. Amyot) himself had sent in, at the request of the Department, a report of the operations of the 9th Battalion in the Northwest, but this had never appeared, and the 65th also had been almost completely ignored. Twenty years hence, people reading the reports of how the rebellion was put down would hardly know that there had been two French Canadian regiments engaged in the Northwest. The 9th were cut up into five detachments and distributed to posts of danger among the most dangerous Indians of the Northwest. They had come home amidst applause, had been crowned with wreaths and received with open arms, but since he (Mr. Amyot) had differed from the hon. Minister on the Riel question his regiment had been insulted and oppressed.

Sir Adolphe Caron denied that he had persecuted or insulted the 9th Battalion, and charged that Mr. Amyot had himself insulted the French volunteers by declaring that they were fit only to take care of provisions and forts. He had been forced to produce the correspondence between Mr. Amyot and himself by an order of the House.

The House went into Committee of Supply.

On the item of $90,000 for experimental farms,

Sir Richard Cartwright asked what was done with the $30,000 voted last year, and what was proposed to be done with the $90,000.

Mr. Carling said that a farm of 460 acres had been purchased near Ottawa for $65,000. There were no buildings of any account on the land. It was intended to establish experimental farm stations, one in the Maritime Provinces, one in Manitoba, one in the Northwest and one in British Columbia. It was expected that the cost of site, buildings, stock and machinery for the farm near Ottawa would be $160,000.

After remarks from Mr. Sproule, Mr. Semple and Mr. Gigault, the item passed.

On the item of £20,000 sterling, Canada's contribution to the Imperial Institute,

Sir Charles Tupper explained that it was intended to use the grounds at South Kensington, which had been used for the Indian and Colonial Exhibition. Imposing buildings would be erected, one-half of which would be allotted to the Colonies and India. It was intended that the institute should furnish information as to the products and industries of the British Empire. He had stated clearly to the Prince of Wales and other heads of the Institute that £20,000 would be Canada's entire contribution.

Mr. Mitchell and Mr. Mallory expressed entire disapproval of the scheme.

On the item of $229,525 for immigration,

Sir Richard Cartwright urged the abolition, or at all events the great reduction, of the expenditure under this head.

Sir Charles Tupper charged the Opposition with want of patriotism.

The debate was continued by Sir Richard Cartwright, Mr. Charlton and Mr. Brown.

Mr. Paterson (Brant) said the want of patriotism should be laid at the doors of the present Government, who had placed obstacles in the path of the progress of the country and had placed it at a disadvantage as compared with the United States, a country with inferior natural advantages.

The items relating to immigration and quarantine were passed after a long discussion and the House adjourned at 1.20.

Bill to incorporate the Teeswater & Lake Huron Railway Company. (From the Senate.)

Mr. Foster laid on the table additional papers relating to the Behring Sea seizures.

The House went into Committee of Supply.

On the item militia, $1,286,000,

Mr. Denison drew attention to several recommendations in the Major-General's report with which he could not agree. The report recommended that all officers of permanent corps should be senior in rank to other militia officers. He objected strongly to the idea. It was a slavish following of the English system, while the condition of the two forces was entirely dissimilar. In England there were the volunteers, the militia and the regular army. Here we had only the militia. In England it was not intended and for two or three hundred years the practice had not been followed, that militia or volunteers should be used in foreign service, although it was not the standing army that laid the foundation of England's greatness in the battles of Cressy, Poictiers and Agincourt. Yet in all modern wars in which England was engaged the standing army alone was sent to do the fighting. In England, therefore, the officers of the permanent force had the benefit of experience, which was denied to the officers of militia and volunteers, and that might justify the regulation there, but here it was entirely different. The moment there was any trouble here, calling for military aid, the Canadian militia turned out and served alongside of the permanent corps wherever they might be required. The militia officers of Canada made great sacrifices for the force. They spent their time and their means and did everything they could to further its interests. On the other hand the permanent officers had good pay and were well looked after, and there was no reason why they should have any preference. Again, the Major-General advocated the enlargement of the regular force and a corresponding decrease in the militia as a step necessary to maintain a proper system of defence. He (Mr. Denison) thought that exactly the opposite course should be pursued. The schools should be cut down to the smallest possible limit consistent with supplying the necessary instruction. Of what earthly use would be a standing army of one or two thousand men in the event of trouble with our neighbors to the south? Of no use at all. On the other hand, if we had a militia force of one hundred thousand men, it could, by increasing the service roll of every company from 42 to 125, be enlarged to three hundred thousand, a force which would be of great service to us in an emergency. In Europe the idea was to go in for armed nations, and in his judgment that was the proper course for us to follow. We should endeavor in every way possible to infuse a military spirit into the people. The military force should be at once increased to 50,000, and should be drilled for at least sixteen days in each year. The idea ought to be scouted of going backwards by reducing our strength. He did not think it was to the interests of a young country like Canada to have a large standing army. We could not afford to have any drones in the hive. But by a moderate amount of drilling we could have a large force which would be available and useful at short notice. It was understood at Confederation that one million dollars would be spent annually on the militia, and he did not think it was fair that when reductions anywhere were found necessary this appropriation should suffer. He hoped the Minister would not be guided by the report of the Major-General, and that he would not permit injustice to be done to the Canadian militia by giving regular officers special rank over them.

Mr. O'Brien said he quite agreed with the last speaker in his criticism of the evident intention on the part of some of those in authority to place the permanent corps in a position different from that of the militia. He strongly objected to anything being done which would make the permanent force anything more than that which it was intended from the first to be, a school of instruction.

Sir Adolphe Caron said he agreed with Mr. Denison that a standing army would be altogether out of place in this country. The permanent corps was intended merely for instructional purposes, and its usefulness had been shown in the number of trained men who were turned out every year to render valuable services to the country. He did not place the same interpretation on the report of the Major-General as Mr. Denison had done. The General did not wish to replace our militia system by a permanent army, and he was sure that such views would not be entertained by Parliament.

The item passed.

On the appropriation for the Military College at Kingston,

Sir Richard Cartwright asked for information with regard to the fine of $100 imposed on those cadets who had taken service in the Imperial army.

Sir Adolphe Caron said that matter had been referred to the Minister of Justice for an opinion as to the legality of the fine, and his opinion was that the authorities had a perfect right to impose a fine on those cadets who had entered the Imperial service.

Mr. Denison urged the Government to consider the advisability of giving four cadets at the head of the graduating class of the Royal Military College each year employment in the Civil Service of Canada. If that were done it would encourage those who passed through the college, and would be an advantage in that way to the country. He believed the first four cadets received commissions in the regular army, and it might be optional whether they would take such a commission or else could go into the Civil Service of Canada.

Mr. Jones concurred in the views expressed by Mr. Denison.

Sir Adolphe Caron said if Mr. Jones, when Minister of Militia, held the view he had expressed, that policy had been pretty well followed by this Government. Some of the cadets of the Royal Military College were at present employed in the Militia Department; others had received commissions in the permanent corps or Mounted Police.

Sir Richard Cartwright said he understood Sir Adolphe Caron had made the selections himself. What Mr. Denison and Mr. Jones had suggested was that these appointments be offered as prizes.

The item passed.

The following Bills were read a third time and passed :

To incorporate the Collingwood General and Marine Hospital.—Mr. McCarthy.

To incorporate the Niagara & Woodstock Railway Company.—Mr. Sutherland.

To incorporate the South Norfolk Railway Company.—Mr. Tisdale.

The House resumed in Committee of Supply.

On item drill sheds and rifle ranges, $10,000,

Mr. Denison inquired whether or not an amount would be placed in the supplementary estimates for the drill shed at Toronto.

Sir Adolphe Caron said when the supplementary estimates came down he thought it would be found that Toronto had not been forgotten.

Mr. Kenny inquired if it was intended to enlarge the drill shed at Halifax.

Sir Adolphe Caron said it was impossible out of the money voted to provide every place with drill sheds, and he feared nothing could be done for Halifax this year.

On the item $11,000 for the Halifax extension of the Intercolonial Railway,

Mr. Jones criticized the management of the Intercolonial and objected to the appropriation.

Mr. Kenny complimented the Government on what it had done to promote the interests of Canada, including those of Nova Scotia. He (Mr. Kenny) was a Canadian, and we should have no national existence without the Intercolonial Railway. He wondered if his colleague was a Canadian.

Mr. Jones—No.

Mr. Kenny—I regret to hear the hon. gentleman say that.

Mr. Jones—I am a Canadian by Act of Parliament.

After considerable discussion on the appropriation for the Intercolonial Railway the item was passed.

Sir Charles Tupper presented a special report on the fisheries protection service.

Sir Charles Tupper drew attention to a despatch in the Mail to-day purporting to give the substance of an interview between himself and Secretary Bayard during his recent visit to Washington. He wished to say that statements in the despatch were not only incorrect, but were in almost every particular quite the reverse of the truth.

A New Pet for the Baby.

From Florida comes a suggestion in answer to the question, "How shall I amuse the baby?" Give him a baby alligator to play with. The little creatures are great pets with children, who are not afraid to take them in their hands and to their bosoms, or lay them against their cheeks with loving caresses as they would a doll or pet kitten. They are a cheap plaything, costing but 75 cents, and are very moderate in their wants. A small tub, half filled with water, and a board laid slanting wise—with one end in the water, upon which they can creep up and sun themselves—and twice a week a bit of beef the size of an English walnut, is all they require to sustain existence comfortably. A cheap pet and a charming one, the children think, who every year take hundreds of them north in perforated boxes. The first possession of them is a great delight to their small owners, who in their extravagant admirations take them out of their boxes in the hotel-rooms and allow them to run about freely. The lively little reptile, with his cunning head uplifted and black eyes peering curiously about, has a trick of darting suddenly and disappearing instantaneously, under the most careful watching. He has also a fondness for a warm berth, and is more than likely to turn up, upon search, in the folds of baby's frock, or, if the infant be asleep, cozily nestled about the little one's neck, with his pointed head rooted under the plump chin. Should baby chance to waken he will laugh and coo and clutch at his slippery cradle mate, who will slip away from the little fingers as if they were greased. Children have no repugnance to the young "'gater;" on the contrary, they love them and encourage their familiarities and are never tired of watching their droll, secretive ways.—Washington Post.

Why She Wished to Get Married.

Constance is very young, but she is also better worth quoting than most grown people. Her envy was somewhat aroused by the fact that a wedding was about to take place in the family of her little playmate, and that the playmate thereby had the advantage of her; so she remarked, very complacently, to her little friend's mamma :

"Mrs. ——, did you know that I was engaged to be married?"

"Why, no, Conny. Is that so?"

"Yes, ma'am; I'm engaged to Fritz Ward" (small boy of her acquaintance). "He doesn't know it, but I've got to explain it to him."

"Well, Conny, do you expect to be married soon?"

"Well, I hope so. The fact is, I'm tired of being spanked, and I think we'll be married very soon."—Harper's Magazine.

A Shower of Black Rain.

Lucius Boyd, of Boydville, Queen's County, publishes in the Dublin Express to-day the following singular particulars: A very strange atmospherical phenomenon was witnessed in Castlecomer and the surrounding district for about four miles on Saturday night. A general depression was felt all over the district at about 4 o'clock in the afternoon, accompanied by lightning and thunder and a tremendous rainfall, which continued till about 7 o'clock. More lightning was then apparent, and at 7.30 the town of Castlecomer seemed to be enveloped in a thick black cloud. Animals were frightened, dogs rushed to and fro in a wild and frantic state. At about 7.50 a thick black rain fell, sufficiently black to stain any white cloth, and apparently impregnated with an insoluble dust. The water of the local streams and cisterns was discolored, and in many places could not be used for domestic purposes.—Pall Mall Gazette.

Annual Military Drill.

The militia general orders issued yesterday contain regulations for the annual drill. The maximum number of men in twelve districts to receive pay is 20,255. City corps may be permitted to perform twelve day's annual drill at their local headquarters prior to December. Rations in camp will not be commenced till the morning of the second day, consequently corps will be require to provide one day's cooked rations and one day's forage. Twenty-five cents per officer and man and thirty-five cents per horse will be issued in money in lieu of the first day's rations. Medical inspection of every officer and man must be made before a corps goes into camp.

A ROMANCE OF A RANCH.

Pathetic Story of a Rough Westerner and a Flaxen-Haired Babe.

At Rawlins, Wy., a few weeks ago, I saw one of the saddest incidents it has ever been my misfortune to witness. A rancher rode into town on horseback holding in his arms a dead baby—a sweet little thing with flaxen hair, which curled all over its head, and soft blue eyes which had not been closed even in death. Seventy-five miles across the country that rancher had carried the dead babe in his arms. I talked with him and heard his story. It was like this:

"A year or more ago he had begun a correspondence with a young woman in Chicago, getting her address from a matrimonial paper. The result was an exchange of photographs, and finally marriage. The girl went to live with him on his ranch, but the lonely life there did not suit the city girl, and a few weeks after the birth of her babe she ran away to Chicago, leaving husband and child behind her. There was no woman on the ranch, and the rough father did the best he could to rear the child. I have no doubt that he was tender and attentive—in fact, he said he neglected his stock and did nothing else but care for his child—but, robbed of its mother's care, the little one sickened and died.

"'My life seemed to go out with that 'ar little one,' said the rancher, in his rough way, 'an' when she died I cried like a woman. Then my heart rose in anger against the mother, and I felt that I could kill her. It seemed to me that 'ar babe would be alive an' smilin' an' cooin' to-day if her mother had not deserted her. Then says I to myself, I'll be avenged! And so I wrapped the poor little one in a blanket, jumped on my horse and came here. I'm goin' to send the mother a little present—a peace-offering from her deserted husband. I'm goin' to send her the body of her little 'un.'

"He actually procured a little coffin and laid the babe in it, after kissing the white face again and again, and cutting a few locks of the golden hair from the little round head. There were no tears in his eyes—he seemed to be past that—but as he turned away from the railway station, where he had shipped the body to an address in Chicago which I shall not give, he appeared to me to be the most broken-hearted man I'd ever seen.

"In five minutes he came running back, seized the little box, and exclaimed :

"'No, no! I can't do it. Give me my little 'un. Keep the money, but give me my little girl.'

"Before the station agent could say a word the man had put the box on his shoulder and run away. Five minutes later we saw him on his horse, the box in his arms, galloping back to his ranch."—Chicago Herald.

Solomon's Judgment.

The London Academy gives the following as "Solomon's Judgment in Chinese:"

Two women came before a mandarin in China, each of them protesting that she was the mother of a little child they had brought with them. They were so eager and so positive that the mandarin was sorely puzzled. He retired to consult with his wife, a wise and clever woman, whose opinion was held in great repute in the neighborhood.

She requested five minutes in which to deliberate. At the end of that time she spoke :

"Let the servants catch me a large fish in the river, and let it be brought here alive."

This was done.

"Bring me now the infant," she said, "but leave the women in the outer chamber."

This was done, too. Then the mandarin's wife caused the baby to be undressed and its clothes put on the large fish.

"Carry the creature outside now and throw it into the river in the sight of the two women."

The servant obeyed her orders, flinging the fish into the water, where it rolled about and struggled, disgusted, no doubt, by the wrapping in which it was swaddled.

Without a moment's pause, one of the mothers threw herself into the river with a shriek. She must save her drowning child.

"Without doubt she is the true mother," she declared; and the mandarin's wife commanded that she should be rescued and the child given to her.

And the mandarin nodded his head, and thought his wife the wisest woman in the Flowery Kingdom.

Meanwhile the false mother crept away. She was found out in her imposture, and the mandarin's wife forgot all about her in the occupation of donning the little baby in the best silk she could find in her wardrobe.

How the Girl Graduates Dress.

Fashion's dictum this year for commencement dresses is all white. The designs for making are simple and girlish, and the favorite garniture is ribbon. There are bows on the shoulders, the waist, on the sleeves, supporting skirt draperies and sashes, and they are draped diagonally across the front, sides or back and finished at the ends in graceful flots. Lace is a favorite material, point d'esprit, platt, Val, and Fedora being much used. Point d'esprit dresses often have a flounce at the bottom of the skirt and the lower part of the drapery bordered with rows of narrow satin or moire ribbon set above a deep hem. A pretty idea is to make these dresses over white lawn. It is very effective and not half as expensive as made over silk. Skirts are cut walking length, waists unusually high, or sometimes pointed back and front, or cut square, so most becoming to the wearer. Sleeves are made in puffs finished with a frill at the elbow, or full at the top and gathered into a band at the waist and finished with a band of ribbon and bow.—Brooklyn Eagle.

Aspirations of a Kansas Editor.

Why don't the men assert their independence and go barefooted during the summer? A straw hat, a calico shirt and a linen pair of pants—we wish fashion would decree something of that kind.—Atchison (Kan.) Globe.

The first baby born in South Sioux City, Neb., was given a serenade by the band and presented with a corner lot in that promising town.

Sam Jones on the Married State.

There is many an old mother-in-law that has kicked up the devil right along on that line. There is many a good mother-in-law. I have got a good one. But when you get hold of a bad one, my, my, my. An old meddlesome creature, she won't go to her son-in-law, but sets his wife on him: "He don't do right in this and that." I tell you, my sister, as God is my judge—listen—the most sacred relationship of life ought never to be interfered with by a third party. Brother Small said divorce courts and laws had their origin in hell, and I believe it. Sister, if you have a bad bargain you stick to the title and die by the bargain. Sister, be careful how you marry. Be not unevenly yoked together. But if once the bargain is made stick to it and die by it. That's my doctrine. There is many a pure, good, noble woman that has a very brute for her husband. There is many a sweet-spirited, good, clever, honest fellow that is trying to drown his troubles at home in liquor from day to day. Law, my sister, if your home is not more charming than a gambling hell, or a bar room, you are in a bad fix. When you make home what it ought to be, your husband will stay there or he is a dog. You can take either horn of the dilemma. There is many a woman that lives so that her husband cannot love her and then quarrels with him because he does not. And you sit out there and look just as innocent as if all that you lacked was wings, and I expect some of you had a big quarrel with your husband before breakfast this morning. Sister, it is the wife's place, first and always and forever, to make her home the most sacred, the most lovable and most pleasant place this side of heaven. Oh, how I do pity a man that has got a disagreeable woman for a wife, and instead of getting better she gets worse—an old, moping, sad, disagreeable woman. Well, you say (whining), "if your health was as bad as mine." Good Lord have mercy on you. God knows, if you feel as bad as you look sometimes he ought to remember you. Sisters, I sympathize with you to the very depth of my heart in all your sufferings and cares; but let's carry the spirit and pleasantness, because there is so much at stake. It takes a true hero to carry a pleasant face and cheerful heart through suffering.

A New Medical Plant.

A very interesting discovery that a plant well known in India, which is entirely harmless, destroys the power of tasting sugar, has been recently published in Nature by Professor Thistleton Dyer. The plant is the gymnema sylvestre, growing widely in the Deccan Peninsula, and also met with in Assam and on the Coromandel coast. A late Governor of Madras and other residents of India who have tested the properties of this plant certify that chewing two or three leaves of it absolutely abolishes the tongue's power to taste sweetness. Professor Dyer's experiments with leaves sent to him at Kew, in England, corroborate their testimony. This plant is likely to prove a most valuable addition to modern materia medica. Its power to destroy the taste of sweetness suggests its use by physicians to correct morbid craving for sweetmeats, which is a source of widespread disorders of digestion. General Elles, of Madras, is reported as having found that gymnema abolishes "the power of enjoying a cigar." While smokers may not relish this, physicians may prize immensely a plant which, administered to patients who use tobacco to excess, would for a time, at least, check nordinate smoking. The power of the plant to render tasteless many drugs which are extremely nauseous promises to commend it to the medical profession.

Innovation in the Harem.

When the Pandishah sanctions innovations in the harem it is impossible to predict what may happen next in the world of Islam. For centuries the names of the ladies of the Imperial harem and the particular apartments they occupied have been known only to the Sultan and the Chief of Eunuchs. Latterly, however, this confidence has been shared by two of the physicians attached to the household. Now the Commander of the Faithful, of his own motion it is said, has ordered that in future each Sultana shall enjoy the luxury of a visiting-card, and that she shall affix a copy of it to the outer door of the apartments she occupies in the harem. For whose enlightenment this information is intended does not appear, unless it be to facilitate the inquiries of lady visitors. Possibly there has been a revolution in the harem, and the Sultan has taken this remarkable step in advance by way of making his peace with the lights thereof.—St. James' Gazette.

Big Words from Bismarck's Land.

A Berlin newspaper has been offering prizes for long words, and this is the stately winner :

"Transvaaltruppentropentransporttrampelthiertreibertrauungsthranentragodie."

The intrepretation of this somewhat involved idea would be: "The tearful tragedy of the marriage [though why tragedy and why tearful?] of a dromedary driver on the transport of the Transvaal troops to the tropics."

Another gigantic attempt at allterative word-making looks hardly less appailing :

"Mekkamuselmannenmassenmelchelmordermohrenmuttermarmormonumentenmaeher :" which is supposed to mean "the maker of a marble monument for the Moorish mother of a wholesale assassin among the Mussulmans at Mecca." It is only in Germany that they can do this sort of thing.—Pall Mall Gazette.

Freshness From the Green Isle.

"Well, my girl," said Superintendent Jackson to a young Irish woman who happened to be the only one of her nationality aboard a big steamship filled with Scandinavians, "what kind of a voyage did you have?" "Oh, don't mintion it, sorr. Such jabbering furriners no dacent woman ever crossed the say with before. Divil a wan could understand a wurrud of English!"—New York Sun.

A Different Pain, Though.

"I've been aching to fight that man for a year past."

"Why don't you, then?"

"I did the other day, and I am aching still."

THIS PAPER may be found on file at Geo. P. Rowell & Co's Newspaper Advertising Bureau (10 Spruce St.), where advertising contracts may be made for it IN NEW YORK.

THE ADVANCE.

Is published

Every Thursday,

FROM THE OFFICE,

Collingwood Street, - - Flesherton, Ont.

TERMS OF SUBSCRIPTION:

$1 per annum when paid strictly in advance
$1.50 per annum when not so paid.

A. R. FAWCETT,
Editor and Proprietor.

FLESHERTON:
THURSDAY, JUNE 16, 1887.

EDITORIAL NOTES.

At this season of the year the careful gardener does a great deal of "weeding out" among his vegetables. It has often struck THE ADVANCE that there is quite a "weeding out" process constantly going on in villages, towns and cities. And yet those bad weeds (or bad citizens) are constantly cropping up to the serious detriment of the vegetable world in general and of society in particular.

Dr. Sproule's proposition to set at liberty lesser criminals, in commemoration of Her Majesty's Jubilee, was opposed by the Minister of Justice. Hon. Mr. Thompson was right: there are enough criminals at large already without adding to their numbers by such a doubtful act of executive clemency. At the same time the member for East Grey is to be commended for the high and honorable motives by which he was actuated in the matter.

A drunken tailor leaped out of a passenger car at Hamilton the other day, while the train was in motion. He bounced off the siding like a rubber ball and had he not been caught on the bumper by a trackman would have doubled back under the track and met certain death. So the daily newspapers say. That trackman is evidently a base baller; and if he isn't he ought to be.

The Agricultural Editor is so busy attending to job work and writing dunning letters "these times," that he cannot devote as much attention as usual to his "Editorial Notes" department. In a few week's, however, he hopes to have things in smooth running order again.

In no part of the British Empire does our Sovereign Lady, Her Most Gracious Majesty, Queen Victoria, live more in the hearts of her people than in Canada. Her Majesty's birthday anniversary is celebrated here in a loyal and enthusiastic manner not equalled anywhere else in the Empire—not even in the old land itself, the home of royalty for a thousand years or more. Why this is so we do not know, nor do we stop to enquire. It is sufficient to know that the great heart of Young Canada is loyal and patriotic to the core; and that the prayer of our people this Jubilee year is that our beloved Queen may long be spared to wield sceptre over that Empire "on which the sun never sets."

A NASAL INJECTOR free with each bottle of Shiloh's Catarrh Remedy. Price 50 cents. Sold at Medical Hall.

ARE YOU MADE miserable by Indigestion, Constipation, Dizziness, Loss of appetite, Yellow Skin? Shiloh's Vitalizer is a positive cure. Sold at Medical Hall.

THE REV. GEO. H. THAYER, of Bourbon, Ind., says: "Both myself and wife owe our lives to SHILOH'S CONSUMPTION CURE." Sold at Medical Hall.

OUR VOLUNTEER SYSTEM.

A rotten potato will contaminate scores of good potatoes by which it may happen to be surrounded. "Evil communications corrupt good manners" has passed from the head line in the school boy's copy book into one of our most forcible proverbs. Scores of other sayings might be adduced to show the evil results arising from bad example, but it is not necessary to bring them forward at this time.

We, as a young and undeveloped nation, are proud of our volunteer militia. Where in all the annals of warfare on this continent can we find brighter examples of true heroism and patriotism than in the history of the brave exploits of our soldier-citizens during the recent rebellion? We glory in the grand victories they achieved, we weep over the fallen, and we sympathize and mourn with the bereaved.

But the picture has quite another side to it. Turning it over we find our Volunteer system endangered by the bad example of self-willed men—men who imagine they are the law and the gospel in themselves and who act accordingly. A notorious case in point suggests itself, where one of those know-all individuals established a military discipline of his own in opposition to the laws of his country, deserted the ranks and kept his clothing until compelled to give them up. Perhaps he saw a fenian invasion or a Northwest rebellion in the near future. At anyrate he was dealt with by the authorities and compelled to recognize the fact that the "way of the transgressor is hard." But what is the result of that one bad example? What comes of officers doing their duty? Why the company becomes thinned out and when the next annual drill comes around considerable difficulty is experienced in drumming up recruits enough to present anything like a decent appearance on parade This may cause the "deserter" to chuckle and laugh in his sleeve, but we can assure him and those who have been misguided by his false doctrines, that a remedy is provided in the military law whereby every company officer can easily secure a full quota of men. Our advice is to put this law in force just as soon as recruits are not forthcoming. Far better volunteer your services than be subject to the drafting system provided in case any officer finds himself unable to secure the full complement of men. It will never do to submit to mob law—nay, nor even to the semblance of it.

THE KHAN ON COMMERCIAL UNION.

Editor World: A recreant Irishman named Castlereagh brought about the union between Ireland and England. He did it with the help of Boodle, although they didn't call it by that name in those days. A recreant Canadian named Wiman is up to the same little game in this country and old Boodle is his right hand man. Let us go back to Castlereagh. Ever since his time Ireland has been in a constant state of uproar, unrest and irritation in a hopeless struggle to repeal the union. The same thing would occur here. We would get commercial union and wake up some morning to find that we had made a dreadful mistake. Then we would want to repeal it and the Yankees would say "not for Joe, we've got a soft snap and we are going to hold it down." Then would follow the heart-burnings and wretchedness which has depopulated Ireland, every now and then relieved by Phœnix Park murders Kilmainham Jails and gibbets in the desperate struggle to undo the wrong.

Let us go slow.

Once let the Yankees get a grip round our necks and they will ride us to destruction as the old man of the sea rode Sinbad the sailor. We won't be able to shake them off. The kind of union they want is the union that the boa constrictor makes with the fawn. The boa licks its victim over before swallowing it. The Cleveland Cabinet has sent its hired men to lick us over. They are soft-soaping the tender feet in good shape. Wiman and his gang are using almost the identical arguments used by Castlereagh and his gang. But where Castlereagh had ability, Wiman has gall, and while the great Irishman was a statesman, 'Rastus is simply a boodle conspirator.

Let us go slow.

These are my sentiments. I am going to spend all day to-day meditating over this matter. Any person who wishes to meditate with me in spirit is welcome to chip in. Farmer Fuller and Hoozier McMillan preferred. I will start meditating at 9 a. m. sharp,, will lunch at 1 p. m., will thin turnips till 3 o'clock, and will resume meditation till the cows come home.

Yours till the Glorious First of July,
The Farm, June 11. THE KHAN.

LIQUOR'S WORK.

The following, which we clip from last week's Hanover Post, is only another instance of the baneful effects of liquor on the human system:—

"On Thursday night last a man on his way from Durham to Ayton nearly lost his life. He, in company with another man, left Durham under the influence of liquor, it is said. Shortly after leaving the gravel road at Marshall's corner he fell over the front of the buggy at the horse's heels. He took the reins with him in which he became entangled, causing the horse to back up and tramp upon his head and face. A gentleman who saw the unfortunate fellow a few minutes after says it was the worst looking sight he ever gazed upon, the head and face being badly cut, and blood lying around in pools."

Hundreds of similar instances could be given every week did space permit. And yet Temperance people are called fanatics and warned that it is a fatal mistake to interfere with the "individual rights" of the people in their righteous warfare against the drink curse. What rot!

The meed of merit for promoting personal comeliness, is due to J. C. Ayer & Co., whose Hair Vigor is a universal beautifier of the hair. Harmless, effective, and agreeable, it ranks among the indispensable toilet articles.

A WONDERFUL ORGAN. The largest organ and one that plays a controlling part of the health of the body is the liver. If torpid or inactive the whole system becomes diseased. Dr. Chase's Liver Cure is made specially for Liver and Kidney diseases, and is guaranteed to cure. Receipe book and medicine $1. Sold by all dealers.

CONSUMPTION IN FLESHERTON.

There being good prospects of a fresh quantity of Flour to be consumed in the village and surrounding country the present season, the undersigned has opened out with a good stock of the following lines:—

ROLLER FLOUR!

Best Brands.

Rolled & Granulated Oat-Meal.

Corn Meal,
Cracked Wheat,
Chop,
Shorts,
Bran and Oats,

At Bottom Prices for Cash.

Special Discounts

According to amount of Purchase.

W. W. TRIMBLE,

Next door to Clayton's Shoe Store.

(512-3m)

Strayed.

CAME to the premises of the undersigned, Lot 133, West T & S. Road, Artemesia, one Ewe, about a month ago. Owner can have same by proving property and paying expenses.

JOHN McKEE,
Flesherton P.O.

Artemesia, May 27th, 1887.

J. B. SLOAN

Has any quantity of Shingles, &c., on hand at Eugenia.

Cheap for Cash.

James Sullivan,

The Tinsmith, - Flesherton

Repairing, Eavestroughing, and in fact everything in the business will receive my prompt and careful attention at reasonable prices.

TO RENT.—Dwelling House opposite Strain's block, Flesherton. Apply on the premises. W. WRIGHT.

SHILOH'S CATARRH REMEDY—a positive cure for Catarrh, Diptheria and Canker Mouth. Sold at Medical Hall.

BRON YOUR GUARD.—Don't allow a cold in the head to slowly and surely run into Catarrh, when you can be cured for 25c. by using Dr. Chase's Catarrh Cure. A few applications cure insipient catarrh; 1 to 2 boxes cures ordinary catarrh; 2 to 5 boxes is guaranteed to cure chronic catarrh. Try it. Only 25 cents and sure cure. Sold by all dealers.

AYER'S PILLS. Sugar-Coated Cathartic

If the Liver becomes torpid, if the bowels are constipated, or if the stomach fails to perform its functions properly, use Ayer's Pills. They are invaluable.

For some years I was a victim to Liver Complaint, in consequence of which I suffered from General Debility and Indigestion. A few boxes of Ayer's Pills restored me to perfect health.—W. T. Brightney, Henderson, W. Va.

For years I have relied more upon Ayer's Pills than anything else, to my bowels. These Pills are mild in action, and do their work thoroughly. I have used them with good effect, in cases of Rheumatism, Kidney Trouble, and Dyspepsia.—G. F. Miller, Attleborough, Mass.

Regulate

Ayer's Pills cured me of Stomach and Liver troubles, from which I had suffered for years. I consider them the best pills made, and would not be without them.—Morris Gates, Downsville, N. Y.

I was attacked with Bilious Fever, which was followed by Jaundice, and was so dangerously ill that my friends despaired of my recovery. I commenced taking Ayer's Pills, and soon regained my customary strength and vigor.—John C. Pattison, Lowell, Nebraska.

Last spring I suffered greatly from a troublesome humor on my side. In spite of every effort to cure this eruption, it increased until the flesh became entirely raw. I was troubled, at the same time, with Indigestion, and distressing pains in

The Bowels.

By the advice of a friend I began taking Ayer's Pills. In a short time I was free from pain, my food digested properly, the sores on my body commenced healing, and, in less than one month, I was cured.—Samuel D. White, Atlanta, Ga.

I have long used Ayer's Pills, in my family, and believe them to be the best pills made.—S. C. Darden, Darden, Miss.

My wife and little girl were taken with Dysentery a few days ago, and I at once began giving them small doses of Ayer's Pills, thinking I would call a doctor if the disease became any worse. In a short time the bloody discharges stopped, all pain went away, and health was restored.—Theodore Esling, Richmond, Va.

Ayer's Pills,

Prepared by Dr. J. C. Ayer & Co., Lowell, Mass.
Sold by all Dealers in Medicine.

THE MARKETS.

FLESHERTON.

Carefully Corrected Each Week.

Flour	$4 00 to	4 20
Fall Wheat	$0 85 to	0 85
Spring Wheat	0 85	0 85
Barley	0 30	0 45
Oats	0 26	0 26
Peas	0 47	0 48
Butter	0 11½ to	0 12½
Eggs, fresh	0 12	0 12
Potatoes bush	0 50	0 50
Pork	5 60	5 60
Hay, per ton	10 00	10 00
Hides	6 00	7 00
Wool	20	22
Sheepskins	0 40	0 56
Geese	0 05	0 05
Turkeys	0 8	0 8
Chickens per pair	0 25	0 30
Ducks per pair	0 40	0 50

AT GORDON'S

HARNESS SHOP

FLESHERTON.

You will find an assortment of

Heavy and Light Harness,

Whips, Brushes, Curry Combs, Sweat Pads, and the celebrated "Harness Oil."

COLLARS A SPECIALTY.

Cheap for Cash. Call and Examine.

R. J. SPROUL,

Flesherton. Conveyancer, Appraiser, Valuator and Money Lender. Deeds, Mortgages, leases and Wills drawn up and Valuations made on shortest notice. Charges very low. Apply to R. J. SPROULE, Postmaster, Flesherton.

CLAYTON'S HARNESS SHOP!

FLESHERTON,

Is the place to get your Harness Collars, &c, made up in good style.

Shop in W. Clayton's Boot & Shoe Store, Flesherton.

HARNESS HARNESS.

...If you want Harness, Single or Double, or Horse Blankets, Trunks, Bells, Valises, Curry Combs, Brushes or the celebrated Harness Oil, call & examine before purchasing elsewhere.

R. J. WATSON.
PRICEVILLE.

PHOTOGRAPHY.

MRS. BULMER,

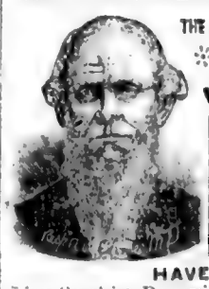
Photographer,

Flesherton - Ont.

Having spent some time in the studio of the famous Toronto Photographer, Mr. S. J. Dixon, where I acquired valuable knowledge in Retouching, I feel assured I can give good general satisfaction. A call respectfully solicited,

MRS. BULMER.

Flesherton, Sept. 17th, 1885.



THE CELEBRATED DR CHASE'S MANDRAKE DANDELION LIVER CURE

HAVE YOU

Liver Complaint, Dyspepsia, Indigestion, Biliousness, Jaundice, Headache, Dizziness, Pain in the Back, Costiveness, or any disease arising from deranged liver, Dr. CHASE'S LIVER CURE will be found a sure and certain remedy.

NATURE'S REMEDY

The unqualified success of Dr Chase's Liver Cure in Liver Complaint rests solely with the fact that it is compounded from nature's well-known liver regulators, MANDRAKE AND DANDELION, combined with many other invaluable roots, barks and herbs, having a powerful effect on the Kidneys, Stomach, Bowels and Blood. 500,000 SOLD

Over one-half million of Dr. Chase's Recipe Books were sold in Canada alone. We want every man, woman and child who is troubled with Liver Complaint to try this excellent remedy.

SOMETHING NEW. GIVEN AWAY FREE

Wrapped around every bottle of Dr. Chase's Liver Cure is a valuable Household Medical Guide and Recipe Book (84 pages), containing over 200 useful recipes, pronounced by medical men and druggists as invaluable, and worth ten times the price of the medicine.

TRY CHASE'S CATARRH CURE. A safe and positive remedy. Price, 25 cents.

TRY CHASE'S KIDNEY AND LIVER PILLS. 25 cts. per box.

SOLD BY ALL DEALERS

T. EDMANSON & CO., Sole Agents, Bradford.

Flesherton Meat Market.

S. SPIRIT, - - PROPRIETOR.

Cash paid for fat Cattle and Sheep.

Fresh Meats constantly on hand for Cash. Orders promptly filled.

—EUGENIA—

Real Estate Agency

MONEY TO LOAN at lowest rates of interest and on terms of repayment to suit borrower.

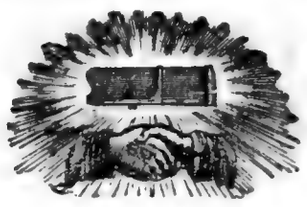
FARMS bought and sold.

CONVEYANCES of all kinds properly executed.

COMMISSIONER for taking affidavits in H.C.J., Agent for the Norwich Fire Insurance Society. All business promptly, carefully and confidentially attended to.

Office, Corner of Inkerman and Napoleon Streets.

HENRY MELDRUM,
AGENT.



Publisher's

Announcement!

In the matter of

FINE JOB

Printing!

It is generally conceded that the

Flesherton Advance

TAKES THE

BISCUIT!

EVERY TIME!

Posters! Posters!

From an Eighth Sheet to a mammoth Three-Sheeter—plain or in colors—at prices that will arrest your attention and surprise you.

PAMPHLETS!

Big, Little, Great and Small.

Auction Sale Bills

WHILE YOU WAIT.

Circulars, Bill Heads,
Note Heads, Streamers,
Flyers, Dodgers,
Business Cards,
Visiting Cards,
Shipping Tags,
Labels, etc. etc.

DRUGGISTS' LABELS

As cheap and as good as can be obtained in the city.

New Material

Is added to our stock every Spring and Fall.

NOTICE!

THE ADVANCE will be sent to any address in Canada or the United States for $1 per year; and to England, Ireland, or Scotland for $1.50

THE ADVANCE unquestionably has no superior as a live Local and Family newspaper in Simcoe, Grey, or Bruce.

A. R. FAWCETT,

Editor and Proprietor,

FLESHERTON, ONT.

For The Advance.

In Memoriam

OF JENNIE A. ALLEN, ELDEST DAUGHTER OF B. ALLEN, ESQ., OWEN SOUND. DIED JUNE 2ND, 1887.

Just as a fragile flower, by rude winds shaken,
Essays to lift its drooping head in vain,
So this loved one, by God in mercy taken,
Succumbed in life's fair morn, to mortal pain.

Gentle in mind, endeared by loving efforts,
A thousand acts recall the dear one now,
Who calmly sleepeth, free from earthly trouble—
No cares—no ills, to mar the peaceful brow.

Those who look back, remember kind words spoken;
Some worthy deed performed, calls up to mind
Her thoughtful ways—some tender gift or token
Speaks forth the power of friendship's chain to bind.

Tho' the loved form is laid away forever.
Still, in our hearts remembrance cannot die;
And oft the stillness seems to sweetly bring us
A whisper from the one no longer nigh.

Back to the home which once her presence brightened,
Back to those halls where once was heard her voice,
The stricken mourners turn, in anguish feeling
How hard, in such an hour, to say "Rejoice!"

Ye weeping ones, bear up through this affliction!
And from this thought a solace strive to gain—
That He, the Great Physician, guards thy treasure,
Where nevermore can enter death nor pain.

Edith B. VanDusen.

Owen Sound, July 3rd, 1887.

W.C.T.U.

Notwithstanding so much has been said and written about the W. C. T. U., there are still a great many people who know almost nothing about its organization and work. It is the outgrowth of the wonderful "Woman's Temperance Crusade" of 1874, which started in the little town of Hillsboro, Ohio, on the 24th of December, 1873, and in a mighty whirlwind drove out before it the saloons of Ohio and the adjoining states, all over the country. The women were stirred to action. Pledge book in hand they went from saloon to saloon, from drug store to hotel, praying, singing and persuading, all the way from Mississippi to Massachusetts. But an excitement like this could not last, and the mothers of the country had other duties to perform and so when the wind subsided many of the liquor sellers who had under pressure given up the business, opened their doors afresh and brought out their beer and whiskey.

Therefore, it was felt that something must be done to keep alive the Temperance sentiment of the country that had been awakened by the crusade, and at Chatauqua the next year the leaders of the movement met in earnest convention and organized the W.C.T.U.,—a mere handful of Christian women, that is all, but like the grain of mustard seed, it has grown until it has "waxed a great tree," planted in prayer and watered by tears, its growth has been marvellously rapid as well as great, until now at the end of thirteen years, it has developed into a veritable Banyon tree, dropping its branches here, there and everywhere, it has spread itself over the whole world.

Woman, it is said is the weaker vessel. Well, perhaps she is weaker in body, but keen intellects and remarkable executive, and administrative ability have planned and conducted the W.C.T.U.

In regard to its organization, there are first the local Unions with their staff of officers and superintendants of departments which manage the work of their own small corner, the county Union comes next, as in cities where there are a number of branch Unions. A district organization is necessary to superintend the whole work of the city. Next the state or provincial Union which meets once a year to plan for the best interests of this large section and then the Dominion or National which is the executive for the whole work of the country. Mrs. Youmans is the President for Canada, Miss Willard for the United States, and lastly the World's W.C.T.U., with Mrs. Bright Lucas in the chair, which plans for the Extension of the work in the world.

Next week we will speak about its work.

A Wild Mustang.

From the Shelburne Economist

Mr. F. F. Bowes, Bailiff, got a wild mustang the other day in a horse trade. He is said to have got the animal from a man who lives near Cooksville, and the Cooksville man is said to have obtained him from some gipsies. Mr. Bowes turned the animal into Mr. S. F. M. O'Flynn's pasture field on Wednesday of last week, and next morning Mr O'Flynn had a two-hour race to catch his own horse, which had got running wild with the mustang. After capturing his own animal Mr. O'Flynn gave notice to Mr. Bowes to get the mustang out of his place or he would shoot him—that is the mustang, not Mr. B. Mr. Bowes then thought it would be as well, for the safety of the mustang, to get him away from Mr. O'Flynn's place, but, notwithstanding the repeated efforts of himself and others, the animal would not be caught. Saturday evening a crowd of about thirty men and boys proceeded to the place, and, after a long struggle, the mustang was taken alive.

Saved the Child but Lost his Money.

From the Owen Sound Times.

On Saturday, the 28th ult., half a dozen men and a woman were crossing from Bruce mines to St. Joseph Island in a sail boat, when a squall struck the boat, tipping it till it half filled with water. When the boat tipped, the woman (Mrs. McDonald,) fell backwards, but managed to grasp and cling to the boat. In doing so, however, she let go of the child she had in her arms, and it was drifting away when Geo. Atkins, a blacksmith from Port Huron, jumped in, swam to it, and brought it back safely. When jumping in, he threw off his coat and vest, which were unfortunately carried off by the swell and lost. Besides losing them, they contained all the money he had, so that the result of his act of bravery was his arrival here a few days subsequently without coat or money.

Witter's Mistake.

From the Orangeville Post.

Last week 'Squire Wilson drove into town with his horse and buggy, intending to remain until the County Council Session was over. The 'Squire always stops at the Commercial, and Mr. Witter ordered the hostler to put the horse in a pasture-field which Mr. Witter has near the C.P.R. Station, until the 'Squire would be leaving. A few evenings later Mr. Witter visited the pasture and found there what he supposed to be a strange horse. He forgot about having sent the 'Squire's there, thought some gipsy was imposing on him, and immediately led the horse to the East Ward pound. When he reached home he bro't the hostler to task for allowing a strange horse in the pasture, and was told that the only strange horse there, was 'Squire Wilson's. Then Mr. Witter realized what he had done. The 'Squire's horse was at once released.

Poundkeeper Campbell did not collect 25 cents, and Witter did not receive the 75 cents reward which the youthful cow snatcher is paid.

Antics of Owen Sound Cows.

From the Owen Sound Times.

We have often heard of a "Bull in a China shop," but never of a cow in a parlor till the other day. This is how it happened. Mr. and Mrs. J. D. McNab, apparently having the utmost confidence in the Cow By-law, left their residences on the west end of the river one day this week without securely fastening the gates. When they found that a couple of vagrant cows, not content with getting into their yard, had forced the door of the house, and marched into the parlor, where they proceeded to make themselves at home, to the ruin of the carpet and damage of the furniture. McNab now says the Cow By-law is a delusion and a snare.

Jubilee Jollities.

The Jubilee issue of Grip's Own Library, entitled Jubilee Jollities, has just been issued and is having a very large sale. In addition to a fine double-page cartoon, there are two full page cartoons the words and music of a popular song by John Imrie, "Queen Victoria's Jubilee," and pictures on almost every page of the book. The price is only ten cents, and it may be had at all bookstores, or will be sent on receipt of price by the publishers. Address GRIP, Toronto, Ont.

The well-bred Durham Bull,

"DAUNTLESS!"

Reg. Pedigree

WILL be for the service of Cows the season of 1887 at his own place, Lot 152, 3rd Range West, T. & S.R., Artemesia.

TERMS: $24.00 per cow, payable on or before Jan. 1st, 1888. Cows not returned regularly to bull will be charged whether in calf or not.

DONALD McKENZIE, Proprietor.

(313-317)

TIMBER AND LAND SALE.

CERTAIN lots and the timber thereon situate in the Townships of Allan, Assiginack, Bidwell, Billings, Carnarvon, Campbell, Howland, Sheguiandah, Tehkummah and Mills on the Manitoulin Island, in the District of Algoma, in the Province of Ontario, will be offered for Sale at Public Auction in blocks of 200 acres, more or less, on the first day of September next, at 10 o'clock, A.M. at the Indian Land Office in the Village of Manitowaning.

Terms of Sale:—Bonus for timber payable in cash, price of land payable in cash, a license fee also payable in cash and dues to be paid accordingly to Tariff upon the timber when cut.

The land on which the timber grows to be sold with the timber without conditions of settlement.

For full particulars please apply to Jas. C. Phipps, Esq., Indian Supt. Manitowaning, or to the undersigned.

No other paper to insert this advertisement without authority through the Queen's Printer.

L. VANKOUGHNET,
Deputy of the Supt. Gen'l. of Indian Affairs.

Department of Indian Affairs,
Ottawa, 2nd June, 1887.

NEW ADVERTISEMENTS.

CAPE BRETON RAILWAY.

Sec.—Strait of Canso to Grand Narrows.

TENDER FOR THE WORKS OF CONSTRUCTION.

SEALED TENDERS, addressed to the undersigned and endorsed "Tender for Cape Breton Railway," will be received at this office up to noon on Wednesday, the 6th day of July, 1887, for certain works of construction.

Plans and profiles will be open for inspection at the Office of the Chief Engineer and General Manager of Government Railways at Ottawa, and also at the Office of the Cape Breton Railway, at Port Hawkesbury, C. B., on and after the 6th day of June, 1887, when the general specification and form of tender may be obtained upon application.

No tender will be entertained unless on one of the printed forms and all the conditions are complied with.

By order,
A. P. BRADLEY,
Secretary.

Department of Railways and Canals,
Ottawa, 27th May, 1887.

NOTICE.

GRAY CHAMPION!

A THOROUGH-BRED DURHAM BULL, with good pedigree, will stand for service at Lot 142 West T. & S.R., Artemesia. TERMS, $1 if paid on or before Jan. 1st, 1888; otherwise, $1.25.

Also thoroughbred BERKSHIRE BOAR at same place. JACOB A. LEVER.

DUNDALK

PUMP WORKS!

C. R. PHILLIP'S,

Manufacturer of all kinds of PUMPS.

Cylinder Check Valve & Cistern Pumps.

Orders Respectfully Solicited and satisfaction guaranteed.

JAMES SULLIVAN,
Tin-Smith, AGENT,
FLESHERTON.

WHAT IS IT?

IT IS A FACT AND NO CONTROVERSY THAT JOHNSON'S

TONIC BITTERS

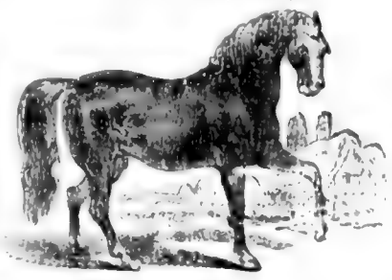
and NERVINE is the best remedy in the market for nervous diseases of any sort. Hysteria, Loss of Appetite, Debility from loss of fluids or overwork, Paleness of Complexion so often seen in young females and all complaints arising from poverty of blood.

It is a fact and no gainsaying that JOHNSON'S TONIC LIVER PILLS are the very best in the market for diseases caused by Torpid Liver and derrangement of the Stomach or Kidneys.

It is a fact and no one will deny it that JOHNSON'S ALL HEALING WHITE OINTMENT is the best in the market for Burns, Scalds, Chilblains, Salt Rheum, Barbers Itch, Pimples and all Skin Disorders arising from scrofulous taint.

W. S. CHRISTOE has been appointed Agent for the above and has them on sale at his Medical Hall, Flesherton. Try for yourselves and be satisfied.

THE ROADSTER STALLION.



BILLY V.!

will leave his own stable in Flesherton, on MONDAY, MAY 2nd, 1887, at 12 o'clock noon, and proceed to Linley's hotel, Maxwell, where he will remain over night.

TUESDAY, will proceed to Jonathan Irish's, Wareham, for noon, thence to Johnston's hotel, Dundalk, where he will remain till Thursday morning.

THURSDAY, will return to Flesherton for the night.

FRIDAY, will proceed to Atkinson's hotel, Priceville, for noon, and return to his own stable for the night.

SATURDAY, will proceed to Marsh's hotel, Markdale, for noon, and return to his own stable in Flesherton, where he will remain till the following Monday.

The above route will be continued during the season, health and weather permitting.

Description and Pedigree:

BILLY V., foaled June 18th, 1883, is a dark dappled bay, stands 15 hands 3 in., weighs 1150 pounds, and for bone, muscle, style and action, cannot be surpassed, was sired by Clear Grit jr., dam by Kennett, 2nd dam by Royal George, 3rd dam by Bloor's Messenger.

TERMS:

To insure a foal $10.00 payable March 1st, 1888. Season mares $8.00, payable last round of horse, or not later than July 12th, 1887, if not then paid said mares will be charged as insured mares. Single leap $6.00, payable at time of service. All mares not returned regularly to horse will be charged as insured mares. All accidents to mares at risk of owners. Owners trying their mares to said horse and knowing them to be afflicted with any contagious disease, will be liable in damages. Groom's Fee 25 cents.

A. S. VANDUSEN, Owner. GEO. GLASSFORD, Groom

TAMARAC ELIXIR
NATURE'S REMEDY.
FOR COUGHS, COLDS, HOARSENESS
THROAT & LUNG COMPLAINTS
INSTANT RELIEF POSITIVE CURE

SOUTHERN ASTHMA CURE
DOUBLE TREATMENT IN EACH PACKAGE
INSTANT RELIEF FOR
ASTHMA AND BRONCHITIS
BY MAIL ON RECEIPT OF PRICE
SAMPLES, 25c.; REGULAR SIZE, $1.00
ADDRESS FULFORD & CO., BROCKVILLE, ONT.

Medical.

DR. CARTER,
M.C.P. & S., ONT.
PHYSICIAN, SURGEON, &c.
FLESHERTON.
Office, Strain's block. Residence, Wm. Wright's

Dentistry.

J.P. MARSHALL, L.D.S
DENTIST,

GRADUATE of Toronto School of Dentistry, will be at Markdale the 1st and 3rd Wednesday of each month, and at Flesherton on the 1st and 3rd Thursday in each month for the practice of his profession.

Legal.

J. W. FROST, LL.B.,
Barrister, Solicitor, Conveyancer.
Office,—Strain's Building, FLESHERTON.
A. A. CHESLEY, Solicitor and Conveyancer, Resident Manager.
MR. FROST will be found at the Office on Thursdays as heretofore.

P. McCULLOUGH,
Barrister, Solicitor, &c.
Office, over McFarland's Store, Markdale. Money to Loan.

MASSON & MASSON,
BARRISTERS, SOLICITORS, &c.
OFFICES—Owen Sound, in Vicker's block, Poulett st.; Branch office in Markdale, over McFarland's store, on Friday and Saturday every week.
J. MASSON, Q.C. S. MASSON. W. MASSON.
N.B.—Private & Company funds to invest at from Six to Eight per cent.

Business Cards.

John W. Armstrong,
FLESHERTON, CO. GREY.
DIVISION COURT CLERK, COMMISSIONER in B. R., Conveyancer, &c. Agent for purchased sale of lands. Appraiser for C. L. C. Com and F. P. B. & S. Society. Money to Loan on the most reasonable terms. ISSUER OF MARRIAGE LICENSES. NOTARY PUBLIC.

MONEY TO LOAN.
At 6 Per Cent.
On Town or Farm Property,
S. DAMUDE,
Flesherton.

ANDREW McGIRR,
Issuer of Marriage Licenses,
FEVERSHAM, ONT.

W. J. BELLAMY.
TWP. CLERK ARTEMESIA.
CONVEYANCER, COMMISSIONER, INSURANCE AGT, &C.
DEEDS, MORTGAGES, LEASES, &c., prepared and properly executed. Insurance effected in first-class companies. Money to lend at lowest rates.

GET YOUR MEAT

—FROM—

Petch & Mitchell,
GENERAL BUTCHERS,
FLESHERTON!
Cash paid for fat cattle, &c., &c.

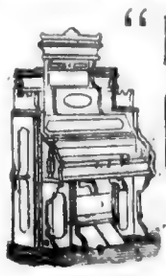
NEW LIVERY!

THE undersigned begs to announce that he has started a first-class Livery in the stand opposite Munshaw's Hotel, Flesherton, where the travelling public can be accommodated with good rigs and horses at most reasonable prices. Try me and be convinced.

Respectfully yours,
W. H. JOHNSTON.

Flesherton, Nov. 19th, 1886.

Picture Framing,
Neatly, Cheaply & Quickly Done, by
J. E. MOORE,
Durham St., Opposite Clayton's Harness Shop.



"BELL" ORGANS

Unapproached for Tone and Quality.

CATALOGUES FREE.

BELL & CO., Guelph, Ont.

CRUEL EVICTIONS.

Bodyke Tenants Fighting for Their Homes —Cayenne Pepper, Boiling Water, Bees, Etc., Used as Weapons of Warfare.

A Dublin cable says: The evictions at Bodyke continue. The tenants are offering all the opposition in their power to the Sheriff and his guard of police and troops, and find various means to seriously annoy the officers. In some of the houses from which the occupants were to be evicted cayenne pepper was burned, the fumes of which nearly choked the bailiff. Boiling water was also thrown from the windows upon the evicting force. At two houses where evictions were effected collisions occurred between the police and the people and a number of arrests were made. When the Sheriff's force arrived at the house of tenant Liddy and ordered the family to leave, a daughter of Mr. Liddy threw an iron hoop at the bailiff who attempted to force the door. The hoop missed the bailiff, but struck a police inspector. The girl was arrested. A brother of the girl was also arrested for inciting the crowd to violence. Another daughter of the tenant, who denounced the treatment her family were receiving, was struck by a policeman and felled to the ground. This maddened the crowd, and they advanced for the purpose of attacking the officers. Michael Davitt, who was present at the eviction, pleaded with the people not to use violence and barely managed to avert a collision. After the Liddy family had been evicted the police made an attack upon the house of a man named McNamara, which was strongly fortified. Crowbars were used and a hole was made through the wall. McNamara's wife and children were in the house and cried piteously until Mr. Davitt shouted words of comfort to them. McNamara was arrested for pelting the bailiffs with dung. The bailiffs smashed the furniture of the house out of pure malice. The force, after leaving the house, proceeded to that occupied by tenant Hussey, for the purpose of evicting him. It is thought the police have extremely warm work before them.

When the evicting force reached Hussey's house they were received with a shower of boiling water, stones and bottles and a swarm of bees were let loose upon them. The tenants desisted from pelting the bailiffs only when the troops threatened to fire. The bailiffs demolished a wall and entered the house, but were repulsed bleeding. The eviction was effected only after a struggle of two hours and a half. The male defenders of the house were arrested. A meeting of tenants was afterwards held, at which Michael Davitt repeated the advice he gave them yesterday, to resist eviction by every means, and defied the Government to arrest him.

Bodyke is in county Clare and the evictions are on the estate of Col. O'Callaghan.

CASTLES IN THE AIR.

New York Magnates to Build a Grand Cathedral.

A New York despatch says: New York was astonished to-day to learn that a project was on foot to build in the Empire City a mammoth Protestant Episcopal Cathedral, a second Westminster Abbey or St. Paul's Cathedral, in fact. Bishop Potter is ex-officio President of the Trustees and of all the committees. The Board now includes among its prominent members Rev. Dr. Morgan Dix, Dr. William R. Huntington, Rev. E. W. Donald, Hamilton Fish, Stephen P. Nash, George MacCulloch Miller, Samuel D. Babcock, William W. Astor, J. Pierpont Morgan, Cornelius Vanderbilt and Richard Anchmuty—names which in themselves are a guarantee that a building done under their direction will be worthy of the city they represent. The plan is to erect the grandest church building in America, and one of the greatest cathedrals in the world. It is only settled that the Cathedral of St. John the Divine—as the edifice is to be known—will be situated on Manhattan Island, and, if possible, on a lofty and conspicuous position, where its monumental character will dominate the entire island. For this purpose a plot at least four times the size of that on which St. Patrick's is built will be needed. Bishop Potter will issue a circular letter in a few days giving the plan of his official sanction, and subscriptions will be called for to carry forward the work. The proposed cathedral, it is estimated, will cost about $6,000,000.

Fighting in South America.

A Panama despatch says: A veritable "funeral party" recently took place near Meriden, Yucatan, Mexico. A general row broke out among the guests who had assembled to celebrate a marriage ceremony, and during the fight seven persons were killed, the groom being among the number.

The following cable message addressed to the Consul of Ecuador at Panama from Guaquaguil, under date of May 24th, has been received: "A fight took place in Esmeraldas on the 18th inst. between fifty regular soldiers and two hundred mountaineers under Sandoval. The latter were defeated. They lost twenty men, had several of their number captured and lost thirty rifles and a number of carbines."

Personal Points.

Rev. Dr. McCosh, President of Princeton College, is ill with bronchitis.

Haggard's best novel has had a curious experience in an English public library. "King Solomon's Mines" is placed among the works on mineralogy.

Calvin S. Brice, who was a poor schoolteacher at Lima, O., a few years ago, has leased James Gordon Bennett's gorgeous villa at Newport for the summer. Mr. Brice has made his fortune as a railroad consolidator, and his transactions have the merit of being legitimate.

An amusing incident occurred recently in London at Buffalo Bill's show. Mr. Justice Lopez was strolling about the Indian village and fell in with a papoose, aged 8 years, who promptly lassoed him round the neck with a rope and refused to let him go. Loud was the laughter of all who beheld the judge bound by an Indian baby.

A Chinese gentleman was admitted as a practising lawyer to the bar of New York last week.

The value of the produce of the fisheries of the Dominion for 1886 was $18,679,283, an increase in the value of the produce of $956,000, compared with 1885.

A BIGAMIST'S ROMANCE.

Strange Story Brought to Light by the Daughter of a Canadian Railway Engine Driver.

A Halifax, N. S., despatch says: The recent death of an engine driver on the Intercolonial Railway, known as Joseph McLellan, has led to the discovery of a romance connected with his life. He came to Halifax from Edinburgh, Scotland, thirty-five years ago. His real name was Joseph McGill. He deserted his wife and seven children there. On his arrival here he assumed the name of Joseph McLellan. Shortly afterwards he obtained a position on the Intercolonial as driver, and was engaged on the road for the third of a century. His deserted wife and family never heard any trace of him. Twenty-five years ago he was married again, to a Halifax girl named Sarah Tobin, by whom he had four children, who survive. Last year the aged bigamist, apparently struck by remorse in his old age, revisited Edinburgh and sought out his first wife and children. They were all dead except two, a daughter, now Mrs. Jane Fraser, and her sister Sarah. These he told the story of his shame and crime, and promised to make provision for them out of property he had accumulated. He returned again to Halifax, but never revealed his romance to his second wife and family. Recently, while oiling his engine, he fell off the step of the locomotive and struck the sharp spout of his oil can, which entered his head above the ear and killed him instantly. A few days ago his daughter, Mrs. Jane Fraser, arrived here from Scotland, made affidavit of the facts of the case to Judge Shannon and has obtained administration of the estate of her late father. Thus she and her sister will secure his life insurance and all his property, and the second wife and her family are left out in the cold.

IN DEATH NOT DIVIDED.

Pathetic Story of an Aged Couple who Chose to Die Together.

A Jersey City, N.J., despatch says: Professor Charles Siedhorf and his wife Matilda, aged 91 and 92 years respectively, tired of a long and futile struggle with destitution, committed suicide this afternoon at Union Hill. Siedhorf, it is said, was a professor of chemistry at one time at Heidelberg University. He came to Union Hill about thirty-five years ago. He supported himself by writing for the newspapers, making translations and occasionally lecturing upon chemistry and electricity. In 1872 he opened a boarding school, which prospered for several years, but his patrons gradually deserted him and the school was closed about eight years ago. An investment in a patent cooking utensil cost him several thousand dollars and he gradually became despondent. The couple had been living in poverty for some time, and the authorities had decided to remove Siedhorf to the county hospital. He was granted a week to arrange his affairs, and to-day when the poormaster called at the apartments occupied by the couple Siedhorf asked for an hour longer. When the officer returned he found the couple lying on the floor. The woman was dead and the man died before medical aid arrived. They had taken cyanide of potassium.

Siedhorf left a number of rambling letters bemoaning his circumstances. He leaves his scientific books to Columbia College.

Wearing Apparel in a Bottle.

Pretty Annie Pixley, a New York favorite, is quite as delightful and droll in private life as she is on the stage. I remember crossing the Canadian border once in company with her and her philosopher husband, to wit, Bob Fulford, whose presence at my elbow reminds me of it.

Somebody had presented Bob with a bottle of choice brandy in case of sudden sickness on the train. With woman's characteristic thoughtfulness, the little Pixley stored the bottle in her handkerchief.

In due course an officer of the customs came along and spying the hand-bag asked the mischievous owner what it contained.

Without an instant's hesitation or confusion she replied: "Wearing apparel."

"Will you open it, please?"

"Certainly," was the ready response, and giving it a flip the bottle of brandy was brought to view.

"Call that wearing apparel?" asked the astonished official.

"Yes, sir," demurely answered the little woman. "It's my husband's "night-cap."

No, my son, the bottle was not confiscated.

Northwest Food Products.

At Senator Schultz's Committee of Enquiry into the Northwest natural food products, the evidence of Mr. Forget was concluded yesterday. He stated that the Indian can eat three times as much as a whiteman. Bacon was unhealthy food for the Indians, and in time of scarcity the Government should supply fresh beef, potatoes, wild rice and barley. The Indians should be encouraged to grow barley, for which a market might be found. Hops might also be cultivated, as they are easily picked by children and squaws. In the rivers running into the Saskatchewan from the Rocky Mountains man with a pan and a shovel could make $1.50 per day washing for gold, with occasional rich finds.

Even the Second-Hand Were Too Dear.

"I reckon we'll have to give up the idee of puttin' pictures in our parlor, Miranda," remarked Jeremiah Turnipseed, as he threw the bridle under the table. "Why?" asked Miranda. "Too dear. Why, I priced one at the city to-day, and the dealer sez, sez he, 'That's an old master; its price is $5,000.' 'Why,' sez I, 'looks like a second-hand pictur'.' 'Yes, it is,' sez he. Then, thinks I, if a second-hand pictur' costs that much, it's no use to price a new un. So, Mirandy, I reckon we'll have to hang up a few mottoes, 'God Bless Our Home,' and the like, and let the picture go."—Pittsburg Commercial.

He Didn't Catch the Word.

Mutual Friend (to travelling Yankee): I want to introduce you to Count Allegro Pianti Conossetti, of the old regime.

Travelling Yankee: Glad to meet you, Count. I haven't got any razors to hone, at present, but if you'll give me your card I'll remember you.—Tid-Bits.

TELEGRAPHIC SUMMARY.

The local subscription to the Queen's (Kingston) endowment amounts to $39,000, exclusive of Mr. J. Carruther's $10,000.

Thomas, the 7 year-old son of James Kavanagh, of Kingston, fell off the wharf there on Saturday night and was drowned.

A deputation from the Montreal Bar will proceed to Ottawa to-day to urge on the Minister of Justice the necessity for an increase in the salaries of judges.

The specifications for the railway to the boundary have been prepared, and tenders for its construction are being called for by the Manitoba Government.

The wife of J. W. Bell, M. P., has received a letter from him at the Toronto Asylum, and it speaks of his recovery of health and probable early return to his home.

The body of Mr. Gillespie, a young married man who disappeared from his home at Clifton about a month ago, was found in the Niagara River at Youngstown on Friday afternoon.

St Jean Baptiste Society of Ottawa has adopted an address to the Queen, and, in the name of the French population of Ottawa, congratulates Her Majesty on attaining to the fiftieth year of her reign.

A memorial from Quebec and Montreal shipping agents and leading captains of the St. Lawrence urging the desirability of providing a harbor of refuge at Father Point will shortly be forwarded to Ottawa.

On Saturday afternoon a farmer named Wm. Kirkpatrick, while driving across the Grand Trunk track ten miles east of Kingston, was struck by an engine and killed. His body was carried several miles on the cowcatcher.

A burglar went through four of the boarders' clothes in Mrs. Graham's boarding house on Park avenue, London, yesterday morning, and secured three watches and chains, one gold and two silver. The back-door was left unfastened. No clue.

In reply to an inquiry whether Lord Lansdowne could accept an invitation to visit Montreal on the occasion of the jubilee celebration, His Excellency states that owing to previous engagements for the same event he is unable to leave Ottawa.

On Saturday afternoon the body of a female infant was found buried in the gravel on the river bed near Kensington Bridge, London. An inquest was held and a post mortem made, but owing to the decomposed condition of the body it was difficult to determine whether the child was born alive or not. The inquest was adjourned for a week.

Efforts are being made by the city of Hull to compel the new Eddy Manufacturing Company to pay the Roman Catholic Public School tax. Previous to incorporation, Mr. Eddy, who is a Protestant, paid the Separate or Protestant school rate, amounting to $800 a year, the Catholic school rate amounting to $4,000. The company will contest the payment.

William Embledon, aged 21, a resident of Harvey, York County, N. B., was instantly killed on Saturday afternoon on the New Brunswick Railway, near Magaguadavic Station. He was coupling cars loaded with logs, standing between the cars. The coupling link missed hold and the cars came together, jamming Embledon's head to a jelly between the ends of two logs.

The Greek Government intend negotiating for a gold loan of $30,000,000.

The final estimate of the victims of the Paris Opera Comique places the number at 130.

Prince Bismarck is anxious for a renewal of the Triple Alliance on a firmer basis than the last.

The Hessian Government are following the Prussian Government in abandoning the conflict with the Vatican.

Two officers, said to have belonged to the United States army and navy respectively, have committed suicide at Monte Carlo.

Dr. Morell Mackenzie, of London, will perform a second operation on Crown Prince Frederick William's throat on Wednesday.

Gen. Ferron, the new French Minister of War, has offered Gen. Boulanger the command of an army corps, but Gen. Boulanger has asked for a few months' rest.

Prof. Stein, the eminent political economist, of Berlin, has issued a pamphlet showing the military importance to Great Britain of the Canadian Pacific Railway.

The Empress of Germany is greatly enfeebled. She does not venture to walk in the grounds of the palace any more, her daily exercise being limited to that derived from being wheeled about in a chair.

King Christian IX. of Denmark has paid a visit to his daughter, the Duchess of Cumberland, at the asylum at Penzing. The condition of the Duchess is unchanged. The King, passing through Vienna incognito, visited the Emperor.

The Ameer of Bokhara has dismissed all the officials of his Government found intriguing against Russia. He has informed the Governor of Turkestan that he and his subjects are impatiently waiting for the great link which will connect their country with Russia and diffuse civilization throughout Central Asia.

A considerable amount of Central Asia produce, especially cotton, is being sent to Russia over the extension of the Trans-Caspian Railway to Samarkand, in Asiatic Russia. Russia has forbidden that Chinese shall acquire land in towns on the Pacific coast. They will only be allowed to lease estates outside of towns.

The New Zealand Government, Sir Robert Stout, Premier, was defeated in a test vote taken in the Colonial Parliament on Wednesday. The Ministry at once resigned. Parliament was dissolved and an appeal to the country taken. The regular elections have been set for September next. There has been general dissatisfaction in the colony for some time past over Sir Julius Vogel's land nationalization scheme and his general management of the Department of Finance, and it is very probable that Major Atkinson, the popular leader of the Opposition, will be returned to power.

Sir Charles Dilke's remarkable article in "The Fortnightly Review" of the month, coupled with Lord Randolph Churchill's speech at Wolverhampton Friday night, have ended by scaring John Bull seriously concerning the lamentable state of his defences. Sir Charles, speaking from diplomatic knowledge acquired abroad, asserts in the most positive terms that any war between one of the great European Powers and England would involve a foreign invasion of the latter. On the other hand, Lord Randolph, speaking from knowledge acquired as Cabinet Minister, asserts that Malta, one of the principal strongholds of Great Britain in Europe, is not provided with provisions or ammunition for more than three weeks.

Mr. W. Reid, editor of the New York Tribune, has been dangerously ill for the last few weeks of typhoid fever. He will recover.

The annual meeting of the American Medical Association will be held in Chicago on Tuesday, June 7th, and will continue in session until the Friday following. From 1,000 to 1,500 physicians and surgeons are expected to be present.

A New York despatch says the report that Walter P. Phillips, general manager of the United Press, has been drowned in the St. Lawrence, is an error. Mr. Phillips is at present in New York and in his usual health.

A Texas & Pacific express train was robbed by four masked men, eight miles west of Fort Worth, Texas, on Saturday night, and $1,360 was taken from the express car and three registered letters from the mail car. The passengers were not molested.

A State ball is to be given at Rideau Hall on June 21st in honor of the Queen's Jubilee.

The License Inspector at Kingston is prosecuting the keeper of a militia canteen for selling liquor on Sunday.

Bishop Walsh on Sunday blessed the corner stone and foundations of St. Philip's (R. C.) Church, at Petrolia. The building will cost about $8,000.

The Governor-General and Lady Lansdowne will go on a fishing trip to Metapedia at the close of the session, afterwards visiting the citadel at Quebec.

The annual meeting of the Bank of Montreal was held in Montreal yesterday, the reports being unanimously adopted and the old Board of Directors re-elected.

The London Board of Aldermen last night voted $3,000 towards the expense of the railway demonstration and Queen's Jubilee celebration on the 20th and 21st inst.

The schooner Alfred, Capt. Longmere, has been seized at Annapolis, U. S., for smuggling oil from the United States. It is stated that other seizures are likely to follow.

The body of an unknown child was found yesterday morning at the end of Percy street, near Stewart's bush, Ottawa. Death had been recent, and evidences of foul play were evident.

It is rumored in Montreal political circles that Mr. Coursol, M. P., has been offered a seat in the Dominion Cabinet in view of the reported resignation of Mr. Chapleau, and that Mr. Girouard, M. P., will be asked to accept it if Mr. Coursol refuses.

A daring robbery was perpetrated yesterday morning in the Montreal Post-office, a package containing from twenty-five to thirty registered letters being abstracted through the wicket of the registry office while the clerks' backs were momentarily turned. The thief got safely away with his booty, and so far no clue has been obtained.

The Department of Marine at Ottawa has received advices that five Newfoundland fishermen, picked up at sea in a small boat by the barquentine Maria, were landed at Little Glace Bay, Cape Breton, yesterday morning. They were almost famished and had been adrift on the ocean for seven days. Their sufferings were terrible. One of them had his toes frozen, which will have to be amputated.

The Germania admits the truth of the report that Duke Paul of Meeklenburg-Schiverin has returned to the Roman Catholic Church.

Emperor William caught a cold during his visit to Kiel last week, and is compelled to remain in his apartments. There are no serious symptoms.

The London Times says Gladstone audaciously triumphs in his own wrong. His apology in his speech at Swansea for the obstruction methods in Parliament of the opponents of the Government Irish Bill, it admits, gives the Government a grave difficulty to confront.

A despatch from Lagos says that a rather serious dispute has arisen between the English and the French with reference to the ownership of a portion of territory on the coast near Porto Novo. The English and the natives had hauled down the French flag.

The King and Queen of Italy yesterday attended the ceremony of unveiling a monument to the Italian soldiers who fell in the recent battle at Dongoli with the Abyssinians. A number of survivors of the battle received demonstrations of sympathy from the people.

A collision occurred in the St. George's Channel yesterday between the British barque Hamburg, from New York for Liverpool, and the steamer Tern. The steamer was sunk, and her captain and four seamen drowned. The Tern was 609 tons burthen, and was from Mediterranean ports.

The House of Commons re-assembled yesterday—the anniversary of the defeat of Mr. Gladstone's Government last year on the budget proposals. Business is so much behind that a drastic step must soon be adopted. The House went into committee on the post-office estimates, and Mr. Raikes announced a new system of patterns post which met with general approval.

A Calcutta cablegram says: It has been proved beyond doubt, by the picking up of the captain's chest, that the steamer Sir John Lawrence was lost in the recent cyclone off this coast. The steamer carried 750 passengers, and it is believed the whole number were lost. The largest part of the passengers are native ladies who were going to Juggernaut, in Orissia, to celebrate the Juggernaut Festival. The catastrophe has cast a feeling of gloom over the Hindoo community here, and all the best families are in mourning for relatives or friends who were among the passengers.

A Queenstown despatch says: The Plan of Campaign has scored a victory on the Ponsonby estates by the landlord's acceptance of the terms offered by the tenants, scores of whom have been evicted within the past fortnight. Ominously enough, the tenantry on the Ponsonby estates were the first to adopt the Plan of Campaign. It was their priest, the Rev. Father Keller, who was incarcerated, and on this estate young O'Hanlan was killed. The victory for the Plan is regarded as one of the greatest importance, because this landlord has been supported by the Landlords' Defence Union and the Orange Clubs in resisting the tenantry.

The French and Russian ambassadors have lodged the objections of their Governments to the ratification by Turkey of the Anglo-Turkish Convention relative to Egypt. M. Nelidoff, the Russian Ambassador, in communicating his Government's objections, hinted that if the Sultan ratified the Convention such action might cost him his throne. He also indirectly charged England with bribing the Grand Vizier with £600,000 sterling and other palace officials with large amounts, to secure their approval of the Convention. The Sultan after his interview with M. Nelidoff immediately summoned Sir Henry Drummond Wolff, special British envoy, and questioned him as to the truth of the charges. Sir Henry indignantly denied that he or his Government had been guilty of bribery. The Turkish officials who were said to have received bribes also warmly protested their innocence.

Half a million has already been raised for the purposes of the new Protestant Episcopal Cathedral at New York.

A Chicago despatch says: Just one ward declared yesterday in favor of boodle and anarchy. Except in Chicago's Sixth Ward the vote throughout the county averaged 3 to 1 against the twin evils.

Mr. W. W. Corcoran, the aged millionaire, of Washington, philanthropist, was suddenly stricken with paralysis in the left arm and left leg yesterday afternoon while at the dining table. His condition is not considered serious.

Flirtations at Sea.

Courtesy to fellow-passengers at sea is imperative. Nevertheless, it is most unwise to form intimacies with ship acquaintances. Adventurers of both sexes abound on the ocean vessels, and unfortunate indeed have been some of the complications I have known to arise from an indiscreet disclosure of family affairs to these persons. Respecting the flirtations which are so prevalent on shipboard, I wish I could "meet the eye" of every decent girl who is about to traverse the ocean, and warn her, as she values her good name, to beware of the many fascinating male foreigners whom business or pleasure calls on shipboard, and who are ever wont to beguile the tedium of the trip by indulging in any amount permitted of flirtation, intrigue, or whatever you choose to call it, with any nice-looking woman who will lend herself to their wiles. I recently made the trip on a vessel with a very respectable family from one of our large western cities, an invalid mother, a grown daughter and some small children. A very handsome young British officer, going out to join his regiment in Canada, was among the passengers, and the girl's infatuation for him was so marked as to be at first ludicrous, then offensive to all the rest of the passengers on the vessel. With difficulty she was prevented from accepting his invitation to join him in his proposed trip to Niagara Falls. The purser of the ship, as honest a soul as ever lived, took the matter in his own hands, and never lost sight of the girl until he had put her on board the far west train and seen her start home with her mother and small sisters and brothers.—Olive Logan.

A Sacrifice to the Devil.

When the writer of this article was a parson in Yorkshire he had in his parish a blacksmith blessed or afflicted—which shall we say?—with seven daughters and not a son. Now the parish was a newly constituted one, and it had a temporary licensed service-room; but in the week before the newly-erected church was to be consecrated the blacksmith's wife presented her husband with a boy—his first boy. Then the blacksmith came to the parson and the following conversation ensued:

Blacksmith—Please, sir, I've got a little lad at last, praised be, and I want to have him baptized on Sunday.

Parson—Why, Joseph, put it off to Thursday, when the new church will be consecrated; then your little man will be the first child christened in the new font in the new church.

Blacksmith (shuffling with his feet, hitching his shoulders, looking down)—Please, sir, folks say that the t' fust child as is baptised i' a new church is bound to dee (die.) The old un (the devil) claims it. I've seven lasses and but one lad. If this were a lass agin 't wouldn't a mattered; but as it's a lad—well, sir, I won't risk it. —Cornhill Magazine.

Deceived by a Crow.

A letter from Tuscola, Ill., says: A few days since, while John Van Dyke, a well-known nurseryman of this city, together with a friend, were riding along in a buggy near Newman, they heard, as they passed Martin Epley's barn, what they took to be the pitiful cry of a child proceeding from that building. "Oh, pa!" "Oh, pa!" the child seemed to say, and Mr. Van Dyke, thinking it in distress, gave the lines to his friend, leaped out of the buggy, and went to its assistance. On opening the barn-door no child was to be seen, but instead a pet crow which the family had confined during their absence. He was still satisfied there was a child around until the crow with a peculiar twist of the head and neck, would bring out the cry, plain and distinct, "Oh, pa," several times. It is said to have learned the words from hearing the children repeat them. It is also asserted that, by splitting a crow's tongue, he can be taught to talk plainer than a parrot.

Just Five Minutes Too Late.

It is related that upon one occasion, when Commodore Judkins was in command of the Scotia, a fussy little gentleman came to him just as the steamer was leaving Liverpool, and asked if he thought the Scotia would arrive in New York upon a certain day in time for him to catch the noon train for Philadelphia. Judkins looked at him a moment in silence, and then, taking out his watch, replied: "I fear, sir, we shall be five minutes too late

FORTUNE-TELLING.

Signs of Necromancy as Old as the Doings of Macbeth's Witches—Mysteries and Superstitions of the Black Art.

'One—two—three."

"What does that mean?"

"You must hold the tea-cup aloft and swirl it three times in order to bring the tea-grounds into a fortune-telling shape."

"Oh, it is a case of 'well shaken before taken.'"

"Is it?"

"Yes. A fortune that only covered the bottom of the tea-cup would be a very uninteresting one."

"But here are 'Alps on Alps' of tea-grounds on the side of my cup."

"'Read me my cup of tea,
Sybil of fate;
Tell what it holds for me
Of love or hate.'"

"This," said the sybil, describing a circle in the bottom of the cup, "is the course of true love, and it runs smooth. This triangle of black specks is a wish. This black square is a letter. This flock of birds means good news. Here are money and a surprise."

"What is that thing on the side of the cup?"

"That is an anchor of tea leaves. It is the symbol of hope."

"Here is a visitor in my cup," cries one.

"Bite it. If it is hard, it is a man; if it is soft, it is a lady."

The long tea-joint is fished out and proves to be soft—so the guest will be a lady. The gifted member of a company who can read the tea-cups finds her hands full. No guest is so dignified that she does not evince some curiosity as to her future. Sometimes the mildest-mannered one finds a gallows in the mystical dregs.

When the leaves have no shape, but are massed in a dark pyramid, it is a "bad fortune." Occasionally the distinct shape of a coffin can be traced. Then an entrancing shudder runs through the entire group. The plot thickens. The interest deepens. The tea-leaves become important factors in the happiness of a household.

Experts in forecasting events find rare things in the geometric lines of tea-grounds, and it has become the fashion at tea gatherings to read aloud each cup in turn, some ladies even declining to leave the table until the cup is read.

It is not as sociable a social custom as palmistry. A man who despises the tattling of a tea cup has no aversion to having his hand held by a pretty girl while the lines are read. But as men are not, as a rule, given to tea-drinking, they will not grope after futurity in tea leaves.

But the tea cup oracle is a very harmless, inexpensive form of destiny. Its present popularity is doubtless owing to that secret craving after the supernatural which marks the age. It gives expression to an almost despairing wish to see the coming to-morrow.

And in response to this demand come the soothsayers, astrologers, seers, clairvoyants, seventh daughters of seventh daughters, and others who predict future events. There are secret sessions where the flower and chivalry of the best society attend, paying a fee that ranges from $1 to $8—just from curiosity, you know!

What to learn?

The secrets of the past, present and future.

There is always some lucky hit—lucky for the fortune-teller.

The most of people who have lived to any age have friends coming from a distance. Many have relatives who die and leave them fortunes. Young people are usually in love with some one of the opposite sex who is either dark or fair; and a journey is imminent in nearly all conditions. Crossing the water may mean going over a ferry or a running brook as well as the ocean.

But the mystic quality lies in the fact that the person telling all these things is an announced seer—born with a caul, like David Copperfield, and having intimate relations with the world of futurity and the powers of mystery.

No matter how ignorant of the civilizing influences of this life the inspired fortune-teller may be, how cheaply gotten up, or with what sordid circumstances environed, professors of all the sciences are willing to kneel at her feet to learn the secrets of the past, present and future from her occult knowledge.

A new mythology would be a boon to society in its present condition, when everybody is looking for a sign.

The crowing of the cock was an omen of ill to Peter. It heralds a visitor in these days as well as a change in the weather.

If you drop the scissors, a fork, or a pen, and the point sticks in the floor, somebody is coming.

If your nose itches you are going to kiss a fool.

If your left hand tickles you will handle a sum of money.

If the right hand, you will shake hands with a friend.

If you first see a visitor in the looking-glass it is a sign of misfortune.

Two spoons signify a wedding; tea-spoons are understood.

But these signs of necromancy are as old as the doings of Macbeth's witches, whose weird incantations are practiced to this day. Indeed, a Shakspeare fortune-telling book would not be a bad enterprise. It would give a higher tone to the soothsayer's art. It might be called "Easy Lessons in the Horation Philosophy," and serve as a text-book in supernatural lore, with a motto by the second witch:

By the pricking of my thumbs
Something wicked this way comes.

What Carried Papa Through.

Here is a little 5-year-old we have heard of who believes that prayers may be answered, and suggests the method. In her evening prayer she said, a few days ago, take care of papa on his journey; and if there is an accident and the cars catch on fire, rain down the rain as hard as you can thunder it."—Augusta New Age.

The One Weak Spot.

The great trouble with American journalism is that the men who know just how a newspaper ought to be run are, unfortunately, engaged in some other business—driving stage, digging postholes, herding sheep or acting as deputy sheriff.—Burnet (Tex.) Hero.

A man in Hillsdale county, Michigan, has offered $5 reward to any parent who will name a child after him.

BRIDES OF THE MAD KING.

Tragic Ending of a Strange Mania Among the Maidens of Bavaria.

A curious feminine mania is called to mind by the recent tragic news from Munich. Two young ladies of that city—Baronesses—have committed suicide by drowning in the Starnberg Lake, at the very spot where the mad King Louis drowned himself last year. The names of these ladies are familiar to all who have been admitted to the best Munich society. They were sisters, aged 23 and 26, and were famed for their beauty. Their family is a very noble and wealthy one. The mania to which they fell victims had its origin fifteen or sixteen years ago. The young King was then at the height of his romantic fame. His ideally handsome likeness was to be seen everywhere, and everywhere you heard talk of his poetic melancholy, his romantic spirit and confirmed celibacy. Naturally he became an object of intense interest to sentimental young ladies. Presently, among the other absurd tales that were told of him, there went abroad the story that he spent most of his time in wandering about his kingdom in disguise. He haunted shady lanes and romantic spots, seeking for some fair maiden who should be his chosen bride. Well, this silly tale was believed and set thousands of hearts to fluttering. Each maiden wondered if she would be his choice if he chanced to meet her under the lime trees. And she hesitated to plight her troth to her village lover until she should have had a chance to meet the King.

So it came to pass that in the village of Bertoldshofen, in the romantic mountain region of Southern Bavaria, the maidens formed themselves into a sort of sisterhood. They pledged themselves to each other not to marry until they were sure the King had passed them by. Each was to wear his likeness constantly next her bosom, and each was to choose for herself a secret bower where at eventide she should await his coming. A more foolish scheme, probably, never was devised by the silly brains of love-sick school girls. But more than a score of Bertoldshofen maidens entered into it with the zeal and devotion of nuns. The fame of this sisterhood spread to other villages, to towns and cities—nay, to Munich itself. Rustic wenches and the petted beauties of princely palaces alike caught the mad disease. Within a year not less than 10,000 young women, all through Bavaria, had taken upon themselves the "vows of Ludwig" and were waiting for their King.

In time many of these girls imagined they had been seen and passed by by the King, and, thus freed from their vows, accepted humbler husbands. Others grew tired of waiting and broke their vows. Still others waited and waited in vain, until all other suitors had passed them by; and they are waiting still and will be waiting all their lives. But as the ranks of the original sisterhoods were thinned new recruits were added and the "brides of Ludwig" were still counted by thousands. It is estimated that there were no less than 7,000 of them at the time of his suicide. When the news of that tragedy became known they forthwith put on mourning and called themselves "the widows of Ludwig." Many of them took solemn vows of life-long celibacy as a token of faithfulness to his memory. Among these latter two of the most devoted were the young Baronesses of Munich to whom we have referred. They constantly wore the deepest mourning, secluded themselves from all social pleasures and drove themselves into confirmed melancholy. Every week they went to Starnberg and threw garlands of flowers into the water at the spot where the King was drowned. Finally they determined to share his fate. They arrayed themselves as brides, even to donning veils and orange blossoms, rowed out into the lake to the spot where he was drowned and threw themselves into the water. Their bodies were found next day clasped in each other's arms and with portraits of the man King next their hearts.—Paris Letter to Chicago Tribune.

Fighting Savages.

Advices from Sierra Leone say that native warriors under three chiefs invaded the British settlement of Sherbro and Sultyus, pillaging and burning villages en route, torturing and killing the native inhabitants and taking 300 prisoners. On entering British territory the marauders divided into two forces and tried to capture the French factory at Salymot and an English factory on the Manoh River, both of which were stocked with valuable merchandise. Mr. Burnett, English Agent, at the head of native laborers and police, desperately resisted the savages, who were compelled to retreat after the third attack, leaving many of their number dead. They besieged the station, however, for three days, when the gunboat Icorious arrived on the scene and landed a force of marines, who quickly put the savages to flight. The attaches of the French factory repulsed the attack made upon them unaided.

After the Honeymoon.

Two young wives are talking of their husbands. "You can't imagine," said one, "what a stupid blockhead Charles is!" "And Henry!" ejaculated the other. "Why, his head must be made of wood, or something harder, for plates and dishes break on it with as little difficulty as the sea upon a rock."—French Fun.

The Sanitarian says that the well-known rain-water taste is due neither to roof-wood nor deposits nor to flying particles of dirt, but to the absorption of aerial gasses. Any water exposed to the open air will acquire the same taste.

Do not meddle with business you know nothing of.

A Highmore (D. T.) man who fears cyclones has anchored his house to the earth with long half-inch iron rods.

Grand Rapids (Mich.) men and boys catch fish by lowering into the water small loops of fine brass wire, with which they lasso heedless perch.

A general gopher hunt by the residents Wadena, Minn., resulted in the killing 2,300 gophers.

Ninety million pounds of soap are manufactured in Buffalo every year, which causes the Milwaukee Wisconsin to reflect that, "No one who has ever visited Buffalo would suspect it."

A VERY ANCIENT COP.

After Two Thousand Years He Still Pulls on to His Flask.

According to the latest advices from Italy a discovery of a most important character has been recently made amid the ruins of the buried city of Pompeii. While workmen, employed by an American speculator, were plying their picks with that subdued accent peculiar to natives of Southern Europe, they by the merest chance knocked the scuttle off the roof of a building which subsequently turned out to be a bake shop. It was a two-story and basement brick edifice. On the top floor, which was plainly but neatly furnished, were found the petrified bodies of the baker's wife and two children, one apparently about 12 and the other about 8 years of age. In the parlor, which had an extension looking out on a small yard, the speculators came across a lyre, something which looked like a baby carriage and a box full of ivory disks, some of which were colored red, others blue and still more white. In the basement, of course, was found the oven. It was about four feet high, two feet in width and six feet in depth, and, according to a calculation made by an eminent antiquarian, may have been capable, when in its prime, of turning out 347 Pompeian loaves an hour. The baker himself, poor wretch, was with face down right near the steps leading into the street. In one hand he had a policy slip and in the other sixteen denads, probably all the money he had taken in that day. One of the gentlemen conducting the search expressed his opinion that if Pompeii ever had boasted of policemen, there must be the ruins of one in that shop. Curious to relate, he was correct in his surmise. After a lot of stone crullers and adamantine pies had been shovelled away, the honest workmen turned up a regular old fashioned "cop." His clothes, which ages ago had lost their elasticity, consisted of a sort of Mother Hubbard tunic, cut slack in the back, a pair of full, regular made straw socks and a brass hat. The gentleman had evidently taken off his sandals, to give them a chance to dry, for they were found near the ash pit of the oven. His club, which had a lot of spikes and a piece of scythe stuck in it, was lying on the counter, as was his belt. Glued fast to the mouth of the deceased was a curious vessel, evidently of tin, and which must have been nearly full of some liquid, when nature stopped the clock and the policeman ceased to swallow. Experts, who have examined the contents of this vessel, say that could they be again reduced to a fluid state they would closely resemble the modern beer of commerce. The remains of the departed officer have been buried, and above them a stone bearing this inscription, "In death they were not parted," has been placed.—Brooklyn Eagle.

Good News from the Prairie.

Mr. Robert Gibson, son of Mr. Andrew Gibson, of Beverly township, and son-in-law of Mr. John Dickie, of Puslinch, writes a very encouraging letter under date of May 11th, from which is extracted the following: "We have had a very fine spring this year, and have just got through seeding. I started to sow on the 2nd of April, and was delayed about a week by snowfalls and frosts at night, but since about the 20th of April we have had most beautiful weather. Have sown 300 acres of wheat and 50 acres of oats, and now (at time of writing) it is almost all up, and looks nice, as we have had several fine showers this spring. We live nine miles south of the town of Virden, Man., one of the most promising places on the line of the C. P. R., which is surrounded by a country well adapted for general agriculture or dairy purposes. Oak Lake, a beautiful sheet of water, lies seven miles to the east of us; it contains an island of about 600 acres, mostly covered with oak timber. On a clear day we can see the water of this lake quite distinctly. Our winters out here appear to be long, but it is because there is no break in them. The ground usually freezes up about the 1st of November and winter sets in in earnest about the 1st of December, generally lasting till the 1st of April. On the whole we are well satisfied with the country and our Western home." Mr. and Mrs. Gibson are colonists of the right cast, possessing a goodly share of both industry and intelligence. The TIMES congratulates them on their enterprise and prosperity in the West, and the many friends of both throughout the townships of Bervely and Puslinch will read with pleasure of their well being and success.

A Wild Editor.

A Rockland newspaper man was wild last week, and when last heard from was hunting with a gun for the typesetter who upset his finest sentence, "the well trained and cultured voices of the choir showed to the best advantage in the anthem 'When morning purples all the sky.'" The choir were horrified on the appearance of the paper to find the title of their star piece to be "When mourning puppies fill the sky."—Bangor (Me.) Commercial.

Supposed Murder in the Northwest.

Robert McLean, a settler at Whitewood, N. W. T., was found dead on the Indian reserve on Thursday. He is believed to have been murdered by Indians. From the indications McLean never made a struggle after falling. His oxen were together in a slough about fifty yards from where he was found dead, and his waggon was partly loaded with poles.

"Lookee here, mister, I ain't complainin', but this 'ere moosic stool you sold to my wife, we've twisted it roun' till we've twisted off un's 'ead, an' not a ha'porth o' toon can we get out of 'un."

ELDER FREDERICK WILLIAM EVANS, the leading spirit of the Shaker community at Mount Lebanon, N. Y., is about to visit England to expound the doctrines of the Millennial Church. It is his intention to sail on June 3rd. He will visit Glasgow, Manchester and several other of the large cities, in the company of Dr. J. M. Peebles. Special interest attaches to the visit to Manchester, as it was in that city Mother Ann, the founder of the sect, was born. It is about a century since she left England for America.

A faith doctor near Richmond, Mo., has secured a large number of patients whom he treats by hanging mink-skins about their necks and telling them to feel sure that he will cure them.

THE QUEEN'S DONKEY.

A Rather Novel Present from the London Costermongers.

The costermongers of London have become imbued with Jubilee enthusiasm and have decided to present Queen Victoria with a gift on the occasion of her coming celebration. "The Jubilee Moke," a symmetrical, vigorous and well-groomed donkey, has been chosen as the patriotic sacrifice. The donkey's pensive, drooping attitude, its thoughtful eye and the traces of nervous strain displayed indicate that the creature is conscious of the sudden greatness thrust upon it. The donkey is in every respect the friend and companion of the London costermonger. He draws the costermonger's cart and carries his burdens. He is usually known to the fraternity as "Jerusalem." The Queen has already received a present of a pair of lions from the Olympia Menagerie and some rare cats from Crystal Palace. When she receives her costermonger "Jerusalem" it will be necessary to make some additions to the royal mews.

In the Spring.

For eight months the best-natured-creature-in-the-world had held undisputed sway in the kitchen and its environs; but toward spring the mistress began to take account of stock.

"Bridget," she asked, "where are the pots and frying-pans?"

"Pots, ma'am? and its good for nothing they are! Every family as I lives with in the winter always gets new pots in the spring."

"Bridget, I can not find the kitchen dishes!"

"Dishes, ma'am? and it's in the ash-cart they are! Every family as I lives with always gets new dishes in the spring."

"Bridget, what have you done with the bed and table linen? "It's positively in rags!"

"Rags, ma'am! What could you be expecting after the cold weather? Every family as I lives with always gets new things in the spring."

"Bridget, when I walked through the kitchen last night there were hundreds of roaches running over the floor and on the tables and shelves. How could you let so many bugs live in the house?"

"Roaches, it is, ma'am? and you haven't any at all! Bugs always comes out in the spring. Every family as I lives with always has as many running in the daytime as there is at nights."

"Well, Bridget, I think you had better get a new home."

"And I'm thinking so myself, ma'am. Every family as I lives with in the winter always get a new girl in the spring."—Puck.

It Might be Worse.

"No, sir," thundered the old gentleman, "I have made up my mind that my daughter shall never marry a man who plays poker."

"She might do a great deal worse, sir."

"Impossible! Poker has proved the ruination of thousands of men, and its victims never recover from the infatuation. She could never do worse."

"Excuse me, sir, but I'm sure she could. She might marry some fellow that thinks he plays poker."

The old man thought it over.—Washington Critic.

It's Always the Way.

"Didn't I tell you so?" said a gentleman to an acquaintance whom he chanced to meet on the street; "it's always the way." "What's always the way?" inquired a mutual friend of the two men who happened along just then. "Why, just this," replied the first speaker; "you see Smith, here, the last time I met him he had one of the worst coughs you ever heard. He complained of a loss of appetite, of night-sweats, of low spirits and other unmistakable premonitory symptoms of consumption. I told him to get a supply of Dr. Pierce's Golden Medical Discovery at once. He did so, and look at him now! Did you ever see a healthier looking man? The 'Discovery' has snatched thousands from consumptives' graves. I knew it would cure Smith. It's always the way."

Seventeen destitute families, comprising 75 persons, arrived at New York from Ireland on the steamer City of Chester. They claim to have received letters from relatives and friends in Massachusetts requesting them to come to this country. These letters, they say, were confiscated by the Secretary of the Killarney Emigration Society, who gave them tickets to their destination. They are now at Ward's Island as paupers awaiting the action of the Emigration Commissioner.

Heat and Cold

is a never-failing cause of disease. At this season of the year neuralgia, toothache, and a host of similar diseases are rampant. The great question, then, is to find the quickest, surest and most economical remedy. Polson's NERVILINE exactly fills these requirements. It is prompt, efficient and most economical, for it exceeds in power every known remedy, and is as cheap as inferior articles. A 10 cent sample bottle will give every person a chance to test it. Large bottle 25 cents.

A workman in a vineyard in Napa Valley, Cal., committed suicide the other day by jumping into a cask of wine and drowning.

We ought not to be too anxious to encourage untried innovations in cases of doubtful improvement. For a quarter of a century Dr. Sage's Catarrh Remedy has been before the public and passed through the severest test and is pronounced the most reliable remedy for that disagreeable malady. Thousands of testimonials of its virtues. 50 cents per bottle. By druggists.

The "infernal machines" received by Inspector Byrens, Capt. Williams and the British Consul at New York on Saturday were fuel cartridges manufactured in Troy, N.Y. The cartridges are filled with mineral cotton and are perfectly harmless. When saturated with kerosene oil they are ignited and used for kindling fires. They were sent as a joke.

I have much pleasure in recommending McCollom's Rheumatic Repellant as a remedy equal to its claims; at least I can so testify from my experience, since I was cured by it of a severe attack of inflammatory rheumatism.—EDWARD IRVING, Smithville, Ont.

She Broke the Engagement

because she saw that he had ceased to love her. Her beauty had faded, her former high spirits had given place to a dull lassitude. What had caused this change? Functional derangement; she was suffering from those ailments peculiar to her sex. And so their two young lives drifted apart. How needless, how cruel! Had she taken Dr. Pierce's Favorite Prescription she might have been restored to health and happiness. If any lady reader of these lines is similarly afflicted, let her lose no time in procuring the "Favorite Prescription." It will give her a new lease of life. Sold by druggists under a positive guarantee from the manufacturers of perfect satisfaction in every case or money refunded. See guarantee on bottle wrapper.

They Don't Wear Pants.

"Mamma," exclaimed a precocious New York boy, "the policemen of Boston don't wear pants."

"Gracious!" exclaimed the scandalized lady, "you don't tell me."

"It's a fact," persisted the boy, "they wear trousers!"—Life.

In the spring a woman's fancy lightly turns the house inside out. When it is all over she goes to the country to get well, or in more extreme cases calls in the doctor.

The treatment of many thousands of cases of those chronic weaknesses and distressing ailments peculiar to females, at the Invalids' Hotel and Surgical Institute, Buffalo, N. Y., has afforded a vast experience in nicely adapting and thoroughly testing remedies for the cure of woman's peculiar maladies.

Dr. Pierce's Favorite Prescription is the outgrowth, or result, of this great and valuable experience. Thousands of testimonials, received from patients and from physicians who have tested it in the more aggravated and obstinate cases which had baffled their skill, prove it to be the most wonderful remedy ever devised for the relief and cure of suffering women. It is not recommended as a "cure-all," but as a most perfect Specific for woman's peculiar ailments.

As a powerful, invigorating tonic, it imparts strength to the whole system, and to the womb and its appendages in particular. For overworked, "worn-out," "run-down," debilitated teachers, milliners, dressmakers, seamstresses, "shop-girls," housekeepers, nursing mothers, and feeble women generally, Dr. Pierce's Favorite Prescription is the greatest earthly boon, being unequaled as an appetizing cordial and restorative tonic.

As a soothing and strengthening nervine, "Favorite Prescription" is unequaled and is invaluable in allaying and subduing nervous excitability, irritability, exhaustion, prostration, hysteria, spasms and other distressing, nervous symptoms commonly attendant upon functional and organic disease of the womb. It induces refreshing sleep and relieves mental anxiety and despondency.

Dr. Pierce's Favorite Prescription is a legitimate medicine, carefully compounded by an experienced and skillful physician, and adapted to woman's delicate organization. It is purely vegetable in its composition and perfectly harmless in its effects in any condition of the system. For morning sickness, or nausea, from whatever cause arising, weak stomach, indigestion, dyspepsia and kindred symptoms, its use, in small doses, will prove very beneficial.

"Favorite Prescription" is a positive cure for the most complicated and obstinate cases of leucorrhea, excessive flowing, painful menstruation, unnatural suppressions, prolapsus, or falling of the womb, weak back, "female weakness," anteversion, retroversion, bearing-down sensations, chronic congestion, inflammation and ulceration of the womb, inflammation, pain and tenderness in ovaries, accompanied with "internal heat."

As a regulator and promoter of functional action, at that critical period of change from girlhood to womanhood, "Favorite Prescription" is a perfectly safe remedial agent, and can produce only good results. It is equally efficacious and valuable in its effects when taken for those disorders and derangements incident to that later and most critical period, known as "The Change of Life."

"Favorite Prescription," when taken in connection with the use of Dr. Pierce's Golden Medical Discovery, and small laxative doses of Dr. Pierce's Purgative Pellets (Little Liver Pills), cures Liver, Kidney and Bladder diseases. Their combined use also removes blood taints, and abolishes cancerous and scrofulous humors from the system.

"Favorite Prescription" is the only medicine for women, sold by druggists, under a positive guarantee, from the manufacturers, that it will give satisfaction in every case, or money will be refunded. This guarantee has been printed on the bottle-wrapper, and faithfully carried out for many years.

Large bottles (100 doses) $1.00, or six bottles for $5.00.

For large, illustrated Treatise on Diseases of Women (160 pages, paper-covered), send ten cents in stamps. Address,

World's Dispensary Medical Association,
663 Main St., BUFFALO, N. Y.

D C N L. 24 87.

I CURE FITS!

When I say cure I do not mean merely to stop them for a time and then have them return again. I mean a radical cure. I have made the disease of FITS, EPILEPSY or FALLING SICKNESS a life-long study. I warrant my remedy to cure the worst cases. Because others have failed is no reason for not now receiving a cure. Send at once for a treatise and a Free Bottle of my infallible remedy. Give Express and Post Office. It costs you nothing for a trial, and I will cure you. Address DR. H. G. ROOT,
Branch Office, 37 Yonge St., Toronto.

DUNN'S BAKING POWDER
THE COOK'S BEST FRIEND

CONSUMPTION.

I have a positive remedy for the above disease; by its use thousands of cases of the worst kind and of long standing have been cured. Indeed, so strong is my faith in its efficacy, that I will send TWO BOTTLES FREE, together with a VALUABLE TREATISE on this disease to any sufferer. Give express and P. O. address.
DR. T. A. SLOCUM,
Branch Office, 37 Yonge St., Toronto

God Save the Queen

Grand Jubilee Celebration in Flesherton.

THE EVENT OF THE YEAR.

GRAND AFTERNOON MEETING AND CONCERT IN THE EVENING.

ON MONDAY NEXT, JUNE 20.

Her Majesty's jubilee will be celebrated by the loyal citizens of Flesherton and surrounding district in a manner that will not soon be forgotten by the large number of true British subjects who will visit our town during the afternoon and evening of Monday next, June 20th. As stated above, it will undoubtedly be the event of the year. The Flesherton Division of Sons of Temperance, under whose auspices this grand double program is to be presented to the public, are sparing no pains to perfect all arrangements in connection therewith. The afternoon meeting is to be held in Mr. Flesher's beautiful grove and will be devoted to the discussion of the live Temperance questions of the day by the gentlemen mentioned in the program given below. The Concert in the evening will be of a more diversified character, embracing beautiful and striking tableaus, solos, duets, glees; also a capitally written Charade, in three acts, and a Temperance anthem—both composed especially for the occasion by a member of the Sons of Temperance, whose abilities as author and poet are of a very high character. The following program (revised) has been placed in our hands for publication :—

AFTERNOON MEETING.

Speeches by M. Richardson, Esq., Squire Armstrong, Rev. W. Ayers, Rev. A. Wilson, Rev. Mr. Ferrier, Rev. T. Watson, and A. R. Fawcett, D. G. W. P. Chair to be taken at 3 o'clock p. m. by John Gordon, Esq., of Fountain Council, Royal Templars of Temperance.

EVENING ENTERTAINMENT.

Mr. W. K. Flesher has kindly consented to occupy the chair.

1.—"Temperance Jubilee Anthem," written for the occasion by a member of the S. of T. Followed by a brief prayer.
2.—Chairman's Address.
3.—Instrumental Duet, Parks Bros.
4.—Recitation, Miss Lizzie Fawcett.
5.—Grand Coronation Tableau.
6.—Song, Miss Ayers
7.—Dialogue, G. W. Lellard and others.
8.—Tableau, "Defeat of the Rival Claimant."
9.—Selection, by the Glee Club.
10.—Short speech, Rev. A. Wilson,
11.—Selection, by the Glee Club.

Seven minutes interval during which lemonade will be served

12.—Duet, Misses Richardson.
13.—Recitation, Mr. A. R. Fawcett.
14.—Charade, in three acts, written specially for the occasion. Act I.
15.—Song, by request, Master R. Smith. Act II of Charade.
16.—Duet, the Misses Nicholson. Act III of Charade.
17.—Song, Miss Leitch.
18.—Short Speech, Rev. Mr. Ferrier.
19.—Tableau, "Sweet Home 100 years ago."
20.—Humorous Reading, Mr. A. R. Fawcett.
21.—Song, Miss Christoe.
22.—Recitation, Miss Hopkins.
23.—Reading, Miss Brown.
24.—National Anthem.

N. B.—Positively no response to encores.

Admission 25 cents; children under 12 years of age, 15 cents. Doors open at 7:30, to commence at 8 o'clock sharp.

P. S.—Parties from a distance will find ample facilities for obtaining meals, etc., at a most reasonable cost.

We are told that $10,000 were raised in less than one hour, at the Guelph Methodist conference recently held at Galt, for college federation purposes. It was stated that this sum was raised by the ministers alone. This is not so; two Flesherton laymen contributed liberally and others were equally generous. There is a disposition on the part of some ministers to gobble up all honors for their own benefit and edification, and forget that there are such things as laymen.

For chronic catarrh, induced by a scrofulous taint, Ayer's Sarsaparilla is the true remedy. It stops catarrhal discharges, removes the sickening odor and never fails to thoroughly eradicate every trace of the disease from the blood. Sold by all dealers in medicine.

BASE BALL MATCH.

Between the Station and South Line Base Ball Clubs.

Saturday afternoon last we had the pleasure of a beautiful and rapid ride, behind Mr. W. H. Johnson's spanking team of three-year-old blood colts, out to the South Line where a base ball match between the clubs above named had been arranged to take place. On our arrival we found Mr. J. G. Russell, of the "Noted Jewelry Store," umpiring the game, which had just commenced.

The first three innings practically decided the match in favor of the South Liners. The latter's pitcher threw a swift curved ball that puzzled the Station team: they could not "get on to it" until the fourth inning, although the first inning was well played all around. In the first three innings the South Liners had a net gain of 27 runs. The second three innings the Station team made a gallant effort to retrieve their fortune and were successful in gaining ground; and throughout the remainder of the game held their own very well. But it was impossible to counteract the South Liners heavy gains in the second and third innings and at the end of the game the score stood as follows:

South Line, 69 runs.
Station, 35 runs.

NOTES.

Capt. Maxwell, the Muir Brothers, and Mr. Burnett, of the Station team, got in some really good work; while Capt. Currie, Mr. Hector McDonald, the pitcher, and one or two others, were the strong end of the South Liners.

Mr. J. H. Campaigne caught one red hot fly at long field in gallant style.

Mr. Hector McDonald, of the South Liners, and Mr. Donald McLeod, of the Stationites, made each a three base hit.

The fair sex was well represented among the large number of spectators present on the occasion. There were a number of visitors from Flesherton.

Now that the Station boys have had their "first smell of powder," we believe they will give a good account of themselves the next time the ball is faced.

NASAL BALM.—The only medicine in the market that will immediately cure Cold in the Head, and permanently cure Catarrh, Hay Fever, etc.

We notice by the Burlington Express that Mr. E. E. Knott has been elected a member of the Chicago Board of Trade. This in itself speaks volumes to the credit of Mr. Knott. The daylight is beginning to dawn upon him, and he will soon be in a position to put his vile Canadian slanderers to shame. Had Mr. Knott remained in Canada he could never have recovered, and by going to the U. S. he showed his excellent judgement, as his present honorable, and profitable position amply proves. Mr. Knott will ere long wipe off every cent he owes. We will in our next issue publish the matter as given in the Express.—Thornbury Standard.

"IMMIGRANT CHILDREN."—Mr. John T. Middlemore, the founder of the Orphan Children's Emigration Charity, London, Ont., left Liverpool on the 10th inst. in the S. S. Lake Ontario, with a party of 50 girls and 100 boys between the ages of 8 and 20 years, who are brought out to this country for adoption or hire, chiefly among farmers. They are expected to arrive at the Guthrie Home, near the city, on or about the 23rd inst. This this will be Mr. Middlemore's 15th annual visit to these shores with juvenile emigrants from Birmingham, England, since 1872. Already many applications accompained with good references have been made for the children expected to arrive, but more are required. Further particulars may be obtained by addressing Mr. H. GIBBENS, Manager of the Guthrie Home, London Ont.

Orange District Meeting.

At a large and influential meeting of the District Orange Lodge of Artemesia, held in the Sons of Temperance Hall, Christoe's block, Flesherton, on Tuesday last, it was decided to celebrate the "glorious twelfth" at Owen Sound—providing proper railway accomodation can be secured. Failing this, the celebration will take place in Flesherton.

Died.

CAMERON.—At Gordon's Mills, Woodside, Aberdeen, Scotland, on the 14th inst., James Cameron, cooper, aged 81 years. [Deceased was a brother-in-law of the late George Mackenzie, of Artemesia.—Ed.]

When you cannot rest from Asthmatic troubles, Southern Asthma Cure will at once relieve. Double treatment in each package.

Flesherton Station.

The Royal Templars entertainment at Flesherton Station on Monday evening was a decided success, the Orange Hall being crowded to the door and many were unable to gain admission. The chair was ably filled by Thos Granger, Esq. The program was lengthy and well sustained by the Quartette Club, solos by Miss Armstrong and Miss VanDusen, duetts by Messrs. Barnhouse and Russell, readings by Miss Hopkins and Mr. A. M. Gibson, recitation by Mr. D. W. Thompson and addresses by the chairman, the Rev. Mr. Watson, Messrs. R. McGill, A. A. Chesley, J. Gordon and others. A large number from Flesherton were present. The Pledge having been passed to the audience 25 signatures were secured and those who signed were entitled to join some of the existing societies. After votes of thanks were passed to the Ladies and gentlemen who furnished the entertainment, to the Orangemen for the use of the Hall and to the Chairman, the meeting closed by singing the National Anthem.

A Brother of Bill Nye's Cat on the serenade.

SLEEPLESS NIGHTS, made miserable by that terrible cough. Shiloh's Cure is the remedy for you. Sold at Medical Hall.

"HACKMETACK," a lasting and fragrant perfume. Price 25 and 50 cents. Sold by Medical Hall.

ADVICE TO MOTHERS.—Are you disturbed at night and broken of your rest by a sick child suffering and crying with pain of Cutting Teeth? If so send at once and get a bottle of "Mrs. Winslow's Soothing Syrup" for Children Teething. Its value is incalculable. It will relieve the poor little sufferer immediately. Depend upon it, mothers; there is no mistake about it. It cures Dysentery and Diarrhœa, regulates the Stomach and Bowels, cures Wind Colic, softens the Gums, reduces Inflammation, and gives tone and energy to the whole system. "Mrs. Winslow's Soothing Syrup" for children teething, is pleasant to the taste and is the prescription of one of the oldest and best female physicians and nurses in the United States, and is for sale by all druggists throughout the world. Price twenty-five cents a bottle. Be sure and ask for "MRS. WINSLOW'S SOOTHING SYRUP," and take no other kind.

FOR DYSPEPSIA and Liver Complaint, you have a printed guarantee on every bottle of Shiloh's Vitalizer. It never fails to cure. Sold at Medical Hall.

SHILOH'S CURE will immediately relieve Croup, Whooping Cough, and Bronchitis. Sold at Medical Hall.

The First Sign

Of failing health, whether in the form of Night Sweats and Nervousness, or in a sense of General Weariness and Loss of Appetite, should suggest the use of Ayer's Sarsaparilla. This preparation is most effective for giving tone and strength to the enfeebled system, promoting the digestion and assimilation of food, restoring the nervous forces to their normal condition, and for purifying, enriching, and vitalizing the blood.

Failing Health.

Ten years ago my health began to fail. I was troubled with a distressing Cough, Night Sweats, Weakness, and Nervousness. I tried various remedies prescribed by different physicians, but became so weak that I could not go up stairs without stopping to rest. My friends recommended me to try Ayer's Sarsaparilla, which I did, and I am now as healthy and strong as ever.—Mrs. E. L. Williams, Alexandria, Minn.

I have used Ayer's Sarsaparilla, in my family, for Scrofula, and know, if it is taken faithfully, that it will thoroughly eradicate this terrible disease. I have also prescribed it as a tonic, as well as an alterative, and must say that I honestly believe it to be the best blood medicine ever compounded.—W. F. Fowler, D. D. S., M. D., Greenville, Tenn.

Dyspepsia Cured.

It would be impossible for me to describe what I suffered from Indigestion and Headache up to the time I began taking Ayer's Sarsaparilla. I was under the care of various physicians and tried a great many kinds of medicines, but never obtained more than temporary relief. After taking Ayer's Sarsaparilla for a short time, my headache disappeared, and my stomach performed its duties more perfectly. To-day my health is completely restored.—Mary Harley, Springfield, Mass.

I have been greatly benefited by the prompt use of Ayer's Sarsaparilla. It tones and invigorates the system, regulates the action of the digestive and assimilative organs, and vitalizes the blood. It is, without doubt, the most reliable blood purifier yet discovered.—H. D. Johnson, 383 Atlantic ave., Brooklyn, N. Y.

Ayer's Sarsaparilla,

Prepared by Dr. J. C. Ayer & Co., Lowell, Mass. Price $1; six bottles, $5.

MAXWELL
CARRIAGE WORKS!
LITTLE & BLAKELY,
MANUFACTURERS OF
Carriages, Democrats, Wagons &c.
Repairing, Painting, Horse-Shoeing, and General Jobbing
Done on Short Notice and at Reasonable Prices.
JOHNSON LITTLE, Blacksmith,
THOS. A. BLAKELY, Wagon-Maker & Painter.
Maxwell, May 20th, 1887.

BOOTS & SHOES!
Having received large auditions to my Stock, I have a good supply on hand of Summer Goods.
LADIES' WEAR.—A fine assortment in Prunella, French Kid, Goat, Polish Calf, Buff and Heavy Boots.
MISSES AND BOYS WEAR.—A large variety of Lace & Button Boots, Shoes and Slippers.
CHILDRENS WEAR.—A very large assortment of all sorts and sizes.
MENS WEAR.—I have Buff, Calf and Enamelled Balmorals, Oxford Ties and Strong Lace Boots.
FOR PRICE AND QUALITY, CANNOT BE SURPASSED.
WM. CLAYTON, - Flesherton.

CHEAP AND DURABLE!
—THE WELL-KNOWN—
SPEIGHT WAGON!
Call and get Prices, &c. from undersigned.
STOVES, TINWARE, &c. for sale as usual
First-class value in every department.
Agent for VICKER'S EXPRESS. All parcels left with him will be promptly and carefully attended to.
STRAIN'S. - FLESHERTON.

FLESHERTON.
MARBLE WORKS:
E. VANZANT,

ALL KINDS OF
Marble and Monumental Works,
Such as Monuments, Tomb Tables, Headstones Counter and Table Tops—in American and Italian Marble and Granite, and made on short notice. Also Mantles in Marble and Marbleized Slate, &c., &c.
Flesherton, Aug. 30, 1883.

HEALTH FOR ALL.
HOLLOWAY'S PILLS & OINTMENT
THE PILLS
Purify the Blood, correct all Disorders of the
Liver, Stomach, Kidn'ys, and Bowels.
They invigorate and restore to health Debilitated Constitutions, and are invaluable in all Complaints incidental to Females of all ages. For Children and the aged they are priceless.
THE OINTMENT
Is an infallible remedy for Bad Legs, Bad Breasts, Old Wounds, Sores and Ulcers. It is famous for Gout and Rheumatism. For disorders of the Chest it has no equal.
For SORE THROAT, BRONCHITIS, COUGHS, COLDS
Glandular Swellings, and all Skin Diseases it has no rival; and for contracted and stiff joints it acts like a charm.
Manufactured only at Professor HOLLOWAY'S Establishment,
78, New Oxford Street (late 533, Oxford Street), London,
and are sold at 1s. 1½d., 2s. 9d., 4s. 6d., 11s., 22s., and 33s. each Box or Pot, and may be had of all Medicine Vendors throughout the World.
☞ Purchasers should look to the Label on the Pots and Boxes. If the address is not 533, Oxford Street, London, they are spurious.

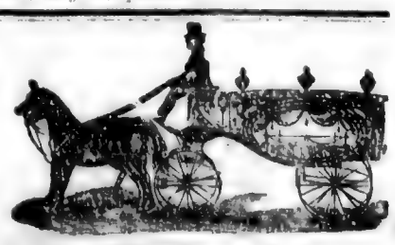
FOR SALE.
The undersigned has White Ash Butter Tubs and Churns for sale.
JOS. McCORMICK,
304-320. Flesherton.

FLAGS AND BANNERS
of superior quality, for Orange and other Societies. Order early.
W. M. TEGART,
Thornbury, Ont.



J. W. BATES,
Furniture Dealer and Undertaker,
FLESHERTON, ONT.

FLESHERTON ADVANCE.

"TRUTH BEFORE FAVOR."—"PRINCIPLES, NOT MEN."

VOL. VII., NO. 314. FLESHERTON, ONTARIO, THURSDAY, JUNE 23, 1887. A. R. FAWCETT, EDITOR & PROPRIETOR.

W. A. BROWN,

—THE—

PEOPLE'S JEWELLER,

Keeps the only First-Class Stock of American Watches, Clocks, Jewellery, Wedding Rings, Spex, etc., between Shelburne and the Sound. Hampden Watches, my own name on, accurately timed, 2 and 3 years warrants, $8.50 to $28.00. Fahys, Waltham or Toronto Cases. 2 to 5 oz. ½ Waltham. P. S. Bartlett's, 3 oz. coin case, $16.50; Ellery's, $14.50, lower grades, $8.00, to $13.00; Elgins if preferred. Ladies' 10 & 14 k. Watches, and Gent's 10 & 14 k. filled cases always in stock. It is safe to buy Watches from me, because I do business for myself, in my own name, and can be held to my warrants. 34 Seth Thomas, New Haven and Ansonia Clocks now in stock, bought close.

They will be sold below the "Terrible Bargains," prices at least 15 per cent.

It is easy to come down when goods are away up. I don't do a catch business.

Straight dealing ensures success.

I shall stay on that line. Small profits, modest prices. I secure patronage through low prices. Assortment Complete. Send for quotations. If I do not save you money I will make other Jewellers take cost. 18 years at the trade.

SPECIALTIES:

Watch Repairing, Fitting Spex.

Address Box 5, MARKDALE, ONT.

SAY, HALLO THERE! ADVERTISING PAYS! Of course it does. Just plant an advertisement in THE ADVANCE and see for yourself. Hundreds have done so and were benefitted. Have you a farm you want to sell or rent? Advertise in THE ADVANCE. Have you anything under the sun you want to sell or trade? An advertisement in THE ADVANCE will bring you customers every time. Do you want to buy anything or hire help? Advertise in THE ADVANCE every time. Address or call on A. R. Fawcett, ADVANCE Office, Flesherton, for terms, &c.

CARD OF THANKS!

In thanking my customers for their liberal patronage in the past, I have much pleasure in being still able to supply them with the following celebrated machines, viz.,

The Toronto Light Binder.
The Toronto Mower.
The Sharp Sulky Rake.
The Massey Harvester.
The Massey Mower.
The Tolten Pea Harvester.
The Fox Pea Harvester.
Hamilton's Combination Plow.
Tolten's Centre Draught Jointer Plow.
Hamilton's Scufflers.
Hamilton's Boss Gang Plow.
Wisner's Spring Tooth Cultivators.
The Chatham Fanning Mill.

A full stock of REPAIRS always on hand.

Parties requiring any of the above will do well to call and inspect Machines, which will be found in Sproule's warehouse.

A. S. VanDUSEN,
FLESHERTON.

PRINTING! YES, OH, YES! IT WILL PAY all manners of persons who read this advt. to get their Printing done at THE ADVANCE Office, Flesherton. Good work at honest prices every time! A dollar saved is a dollar earned—so the proverb goes. Pamphlets, Posters, Circulars, Programs, Dodgers, Streamers, Bill Heads, Note Heads, Receipts, Note Forms, Business Cards, Visiting Cards, Labels, Tags, &c., Plain or Colored. Address or call on A. R. Fawcett, ADVANCE Office, Flesherton, for terms.

ADVERTISE in The ADVANCE

Tit-Bits.

Consisting of Local and Other Interesting Items gathered by The Advance Reporters.

Richardson & Co's cheap Japan Tea is having an extraordinary run.

TO RENT.—Dwelling House opposite Strain's block, Flesherton. Apply on the premises. W. WRIGHT.

You can buy Flour, Bran & Shorts as cheap at Keefer's Flour & Feed store as you can at the mill.

The only place in this country to get your Watch repaired properly is at Russell's, Flesherton. 2t.

Rev. W. Ayers will preach his farewell sermon in the Methodist Church, Flesherton, on Sunday evening next.

For the best and cheapest Lemons go to Keefer's Flour & Feed store, Flesherton.

Parties who wish to secure a lot of this extraordinary cheap Tea should apply at once at Richardson & Co's.

A full report of the proceedings of Artemesia Court of Revision will be published in our next issue, Thursday, July 7th.

The people in this county are so astonished at Russell's prices that they exclaim, "how can they sell so cheap?" The fact is we buy right and only ask small profits. 2t.

TAMARAC ELIXIR.—Is not advertised to cure consumption, but it has made some remarkable cures of persons supposed to be in the first stages of the disease.

Richardson & Co's new cheap Tea pleases everybody. 6 lbs for $1.

A very large audience assembled in the Methodist church here last Sunday evening, when Rev. Mr. Ayers preached a very eloquent sermon.

Another new stock arrived at Russell's Noted Jewelry Store, Flesherton, consisting of ladies and gents Gold Watches, ladies and gents Silver Watches and at terrible low prices. 2t.

The Flesherton ADVANCE entered upon its seventh year of publication last week. It is a good local paper, and has our best wishes for future prosperity.—Thornbury News.

The sale of Tweeds at reduced prices is rapidly cutting down the large stock at Richardson & Co's.

Work is progressing nicely in connection with our new school grounds and schoolhouse. The grounds are now enclosed with a picket fence and the trench for the foundation has been dug.

We have pleasure in recommending the courteous and prompt Markdale Bookseller and Stationer, Mr. Dinsmore, to the public. His promptitude in filling orders by mail is highly commendable.

The Flesherton Advance, recently entered upon its seventh year of publication, is one of the best papers published in Grey. The Economist extends congratulations to friend Fawcett, the editor and proprietor, upon the success he has achieved.—Shelburne Economist

Five lbs. of nice flavored Japan Tea for one dollar at Richardson & Co's.

RUSSELL'S

Noted Jewelery Store,

FLESHERTON,

Has the only First-Class Stock of American Watches, Clocks, Jewelery, Wedding Rings, Spex &c. between Shelburne and the Sound. Hampden, Columbus, Waltham, Elgin, and Swiss Watches, bearing warrants from 2 1-2 to five years from $7.50 to $25.00. Fahys, Waltham or Toronto cases 2 to 5 1-2 oz. We never ask any more than $16.00 for a P. S. Bartlett 3 oz. coin silver case, some dealers have the cheek to ask $17.50. Ellery's $13.25, while other dealers ask $14.50. Lower Grades from $6.90 to 11.50. Ladies & Gents Gold Watches. All kinds of American Clocks at lower prices than elsewhere. The fact is, other dealers cannot begin to compete with us notwithstanding the fact we do not sell at auction or trade on the church. A fine Stock just arrived at lower prices than ever. Always take your Watches, Clocks, & Jewelry to RUSSELL to repair, the only genuine Watchmaker & Jeweler in this section of country. Come right along and secure some bargains. It will pay you to come 20 miles to deal with us. You can save 25 per cent. by dealing at

RUSSELL'S

Noted Jewelry Store, Flesherton.

A mild game of base ball was played on the Agricultural grounds here on Monday afternoon last. There was some really good playing made, even if the scores did run up at a rather alarming rate.

A Plymouth Rock egg was left at our office this week by Mr. Charles Bucke of Artemesia, which measured 7 inches one way around, and 8¼ inches the other way. We measured the egg carefully and can vouch for the correctness of the statement made above. And now the stereotyped question arises, who can beat it?

No Paper Next Week.

In accordance with our usual custom of dropping one issue of our paper every year, THE ADVANCE will not be published next week. The tired compositors and the Agricultural Editor require a rest at least once in the year, and we know that there is not one of our readers who grudge us our brief holiday.

Mr. W. E. Caiger, Advertising Agent for the Toronto News, says:—I was induced to try Nasal Balm for a severe and troublesome Cold in the head. Once using it literally washed out the clogged secretions, and left my head clear as a bell.

Buffalo, N. Y. June 5th, 1887.

To J. G. RUSSELL, ESQ., Ben. Sec. of Fountain Council, No. 146, Flesherton:

Dear Sir & Bro.—I have just received from Bro. J. H. Land, Grand Secretary R. T. of T., the sum of $40 being the amount of my Sick Benefit for my recent illness of eight week's duration, for which allow me to tender my sincere thanks to the officers of Fountain Council, No. 146 for the prompt way they acted towards me a member of their Council. May the God of Heaven bless their efforts to promote the cause of Temperance and beneficence in Flesherton. It was a cause of great comfort to me on a sick bed to think that my wife and little ones had something to fall back on should I have been removed from them. With kind regards to all the members of Fountain Council. I am yours in H., L. & T.,

J. G. BROOKS.

Avoid the use of calomel for bilious complaints. Ayer's Cathartic Pills, entirely vegetable, have been tested forty years, and are acknowledged to be the best remedy for torpidity of the liver, costiveness and indigestion.

Maxwell.

From our own Correspondent.

Our village has been very quiet for some time and very little has occured of late to attract more than ordinary attention.

Farmers crops of all sorts are looking remarkably well and if they continue there will no doubt be an abundant harvest.

Three of our village young men have donned the red coats and helmets and gone into camp at Niagara with the Flesherton Volunteer Company.

Rev. W. Ferrier is attending conference at Toronto. We are pleased to hear that he will remain with us another year.

Our Township Fathers assembled at Feversham on Saturday last. They are reported as doing very little business, but perhaps there is very little to do.

Mr. T. Blakely is doing a rushing business, having turned out quite a number of wagons and buggies.

Mrs. Richard Maxwell has been very ill for some time but is slowly recovering.

Visitors to the Jubilee on Monday next will do well to call at Russell's, Flesherton, and secure one of his famous watches. You can save 25% by buying there. 2t.

A WONDERFUL ORGAN. The largest organ and one that plays a controlling part of the health of the body is the liver. If torpid or inactive the whole system becomes diseased. Dr. Chase's Liver Cure is made specially for Liver and Kidney diseases, and is guaranteed to cure. Receipe book and medicine $1. Sold by all dealers.

Eugenia.

From an occasional correspondent.

FASHIONABLE WEDDING.

Your correspondent has this week to chronicle one of those happy events which usually create quite a flutter among the ladies—God bless 'em—yes, and also among those of the male persuasion. We refer to the marriage of one of Euphrasia's sturdy and manly sons, Mr. J. Dunlop—son of the esteemed and venerable Township Clerk—to one of Artemesia's fairest daughters, Miss Lizzie Latimer. The interesting ceremony was very gracefully performed at the residence of the bride's father, George Latimer, Esq., by the esteemed pastor of the Methodist Church here, Rev. J. S. Corcoran, on Wednesday of last week, June 15th, in the presence of a large number of relatives of the contracting parties. The bride looked charming in her handsome bridal costume, while the groom—well, of course he looked his very best. The presents were numerous, beautiful, valuable and appropriate. The happy couple have the best wishes of all for their future happiness. May their lives be one long honeymoon!

To Parents and Children.

To the Editor of The Advance

Dear Sir,—With many of my brethren I have long looked upon Flesherton as a model place—religiously, morally and politically. But of late I have noticed a change on your streets, and, I am sorry to add, that the change is not a good one. Boys under ten years of age are now to be seen openly smoking cigarettes, cigars and even pipes. This is bad, but it is not all. These lads, and others of a larger growth, are learning to lounge around the corners in the evenings where they soon become adepts in Billingsgate and profanity. One thing leads to another, and so it goes on until something really serious occurs and awakes the neglectful parent to a sense of duty, and he regrets that he did not ask, "Where is my boy to-night?" sooner. TRAVELLER.

Of Interest to Farmers.

From the Shelburne Economist.

A case of interest to farmers and stock-dealers was recently decided at Drumbo. A stock-dealer had bought a number of lambs from a farmer, agreeing to pay $5.12½ per 100 lbs., and $10 was paid upon the purchase. The lambs were delivered and weighed according to agreement. The price of lambs had fallen in the meantime, and the buyer wanted to shirk his bargain and finally he absolutely refused to receive the lambs. The farmer then sold the lambs to another party and brought suit against the stock-dealer to recover the difference between the price first agreed upon and that actually realized, and he gained his case.

FARMERS!

Don't forget there is good work done at the Flesherton

WOOLEN FACTORY

And we are doing all in our power to please. Custom work is coming in large and our prices are low and our dealings with us on account of hard times, I intend to close the manufactured price in nearly every branch, viz., CARDING, ROLLS, SPINNING, WEAVING, &c., &c. Give us a trial and see for yourself.

W. H. FLESHER.

Flesherton, May 20th, 1887.

BRITISH GUIANA.

The Colonial and Indian Exhibition—West Indian Gallery.

(By Thomas C. Watkins.)

The colony of British Guiana lies between Venezuela, Brazil, Dutch Guiana and the Atlantic Ocean, on the northeast coast of South America. It was first settled by the Dutch in 1580, but has belonged to Great Britain since 1803. Its area is computed at 76,000 square miles, but the boundaries between it and Venezuela and Brazil are not determined. For some miles from the sea, which is of a dirty yellow color, the land is low and flat, being a rich alluvial deposit, in which coffee and cotton once grew, and in later years the sugar cane flourishes luxuriantly. Its rivers are wide and have their sources far away in the interior. Large ships ascend these streams for hundreds of miles, but far up in the interior the rivers are crossed by rock formations, over which they plunge and fall; and it is only the Indians light dug-out or corrial that can pass these formidable obstructions. The climate, although warm, is not oppressive. The thermometer ranges from 75° to 90°, but there are refreshing sea breezes which temper the heat. The colony is not so very unhealthy as is usually supposed, for with care and ordinary precaution good health can be maintained. The population is mixed. It numbers about 264,000, composed of Europeans, Aboriginal Indians, West Indians, Africans, Portuguese, Chinese and East Indians, the latter being about 92,000 in 1885. The flora is rich, but only partially explored by botanists yet. It is distinguished for its enormously large and lofty trees, its beautiful palms and the abundance of charming flowering creepers, which cling to the tallest branches. The large forests abound in trees, whose timbers are exceedingly valuable, and in immense variety. The fauna is most interesting, and some of the animals' flesh is considered by epicures to be really delicious. The labba—of which it is remarked, "that he who eats its flesh and drinks creek water will surely return to Guiana"—the agouti and waterhoss are the most prominent animals in the colony; but monkeys and bears, jaguars, pumas, deer, opossums and manatees are plentiful. The feathered tribes are abundant and most beautiful. Numerous varieties of fish

INHABIT THE SEA AND RIVERS.

Alligators, snakes and turtles are quite plentiful, and the ants, mosquitoes, bats and beetles prevent life from becoming too enjoyable in that fair land. Sugar is the principal product, and the colony depends in a large degree on this for their success, nay, for their very existence. There are very few other crops grown. Cotton has almost ceased to be cultivated, owing to the scarcity of labor. For the same reason coffee is not given the attention that it merits, as it requires a reliable supply of labor for successful cultivation and reaping. The Liberian coffee would succeed well if proper attention could be given to its culture. Cacao culture is only in its infancy, so that at present the cane is their sole dependence for prosperity. In 1885 the crop, which was counted a short one, yielded 106,532 hogsheads of sugar; in 1884 it was 139,296 hogsheads. There was a large variety of sugars shown in the exhibition, also of molasses and rum, that ever-present and most productive agent of sin, of sorrow, of broken-hearted wives, of vagabond children, of criminals, lunatics and murderers that the arch-fiend of hell ever launched upon our earth. The proprietors of the sugar plantations spare no trouble or expense in cultivation and machinery to enable them to maintain the foremost rank in the British markets. Lately the struggle has been rendered more arduous by the free admission of the European bounty-supported sugars into the British markets. The ethnological collection in the court is most interesting. There are specimens of Indian war clubs, bows and arrows, canoes and many Indian curiosities. There were four wax figures of the Guiana Indians which attracted particular attention. A party of six Indians in their wigwams busy making baskets, weaving hammocks, etc., as in their own land, was greatly enjoyed and wondered at by Europeans who had never seen the red men of America. Gold mining must at an early day prove a successful business to many, as the specimens shown indicated the probable advent of a gold fever there before many years. There were an enormous number of specimens of timber exhibits, suitable for ship building, house building, cabinet work, agricultural implements and almost anything that timber can be used for. The fibres of British Guiana are almost unknown in the British markets. Cotton, which was once grown largely, has ceased to be cultivated, although the soil is well suited for its successful production. Many of the fibres exhibited may take the place of hemp and bast, and it only requires a demand to bring forward a large supply at low prices. The collection of fibres was enormously large, and the hammocks, etc., exhibited are strong evidences of the good quality of the fibres. The minerals are not numerous, nor of much commercial value, except gold, which exists in considerable quantities. At present, owing to the boundaries of the Colony not being definitely fixed, capitalists are unwilling to embark in mining operations, but with settled boundaries, and protection to the enterprise, gold mining would soon become one of the most profitable industries of the colony. Iron exists in abundance, but no person has yet attempted to work the mines. British Guiana is rich in gums, oils and barks; fine specimens of gum animi, and of ballata were shown, the last in the milk and in rolls and sheets, etc. This gum is in some respects superior to India rubber and gutta percha. The "Gillbacker glue," which is made into isinglass, with a specimen of the fish it is obtained from, were shown. Tonca or Tonquin beans, which grow wild in the colony in large quantities, were exhibited, and also several kinds of oil. The barks were very numerous, and many of them, no doubt, richly laden with valuable chemicals and medicinal properties, which will greatly benefit the world yet. Many of them are useful for training purposes, and others are in cases of illness or accident. The food products comprise the meal and starch of the Casada, which is the daily food of the Indians. Cossareep, which is used largely on account of its antiseptic properties, is also shown; dried plantains and bananas, the former of which is considered to be one of the most nutritious articles of food known, were well represented, as were also the cocoa and coffee of superior quality, shewing that the soil of the colony is well suited for the growth of the chocolate and the coffee trees. Coffee was formerly grown plentifully, and formed one of its chief articles of export in former years, and realized large prices in the British markets. The collections illustrative of the natural history of British Guiana are most interesting, the Indian curiosities relating to their social life and to war are of the deepest interest to the archæologist and to the moralist. Amongst the maps, paintings and drawings in this court was a map of the colony published by the Government. A map of parts of British Guiana and Venezuela, showing grants made to the Manoa Company by the Government of Venezuela which territory is claimed by the Guiana Government. A Proclamation and Articles of Capitulation in 1803. A fac simile of Schombergks' map of the colony. Water color views of the interior of the country. Photographs illustrating the scenery and inhabitants of the colony. Water color sketch of Roramia, and several oil and water color paintings of different objects. Sugar was shown in white crystals, yellow crystals, refining crystals; muscovado sugar. White rum and colored rum, rum shrub, bitters, molasses, vinegar, syrups, models of a sugar manufactory, the facade of a plantation, showing the dwelling-house, sugar works, hospital and cottages for the laborers. Model of a system of tidal drainage of submerged districts. Photographs illustrating cane cultivation and sugar manufacture. The woods are really magnificent; it would take a volume to describe them. There were 127 different kinds of wood shown in planks, boards, logs, immense blocks about three feet high and forty inches across of beautiful timber for cabinet-makers' use, fit for any kind of furniture. The Kurana, or red cedar, is a very handsome and useful timber, averaging 100 feet in height and 38 to 40 inches in diameter. The Hiawar Balli is a beautiful timber, in great request for cabinet work, and is easily worked. The Waeiba, or bow tree, is exceedingly tough, hard and close-grained. The Indians make their bows of it; its average height is about 120 feet and will square thirty inches. The wauri tree grows to a height of 120 feet. It is with it the Indians make their large canoes. The kokatarra tree grows about eighty feet high, it will square twenty-four inches, it is a close grained tough wood used for the stocks of planes. The koorikye tree grows a hundred feet high, two feet across, and is used mostly for roofing, flooring, partitions, and for spars and masts of ships. The fibres shown consisted of cotton, raw and cleaned; showing the process; silk cotton used for filling pillows; silk grass, from a species of agave; plantains, from a species of musa; sweet briar, or akase (Demerara jute), a shrub, with rope made of the same, also the wood of the shrub; wild ochro, with rope made of the same; wild cotton and rope, monkey apple and rope made of it; sour sop with rope made of it; tibiserie, from the young fronds of the Eta palm, with specimens of cord, hammock ropes and the palm fronds; a collection of fibres, etc., illustrating the manufacture of coir, or cocoanut fibre. Altogether there were forty-three kinds of fibres on exhibition in the court of the colony, many of which were very useful and most interesting. Gums, oils, barks, etc., were well represented, there being 127 specimens on exhibition; amongst which were locust gum, or gum anime, found around the roots of the simiri or locust tree; hyawa gum, obtained by making incisions in the hyawa or incence tree; crab oil, made from the seeds of the carapa guyanensis, used in the colony by the natives for dressing their hair; cocoanut oil, showing the mode of manufacturing it at Fortitude Fibre Works; isinglass, or fish glue, made of the gilbacker fish, which was also exhibited; simarioba bark, greenheart bark, used for a tonic and febrifuge; mora, crabwood, soft wallaba and other bark used to cure bilious complaints; aries bark, used to cure ringworm and itch; iturite bark, used to cure toothache, and numerous other barks for the cure of almost every disease to which flesh is heir, and for tanning purposes. In food products seventy-eight specimens were shown, amongst which were cassava bread, which is the "staff of life" of the South American Indians, chocolate, coffee, sweet cassava, bitter cassava, dried plantain flour, cassava starch and meal, bananas, oranges, mammee apples, potatoes, rice, dried sorrel, Brazil nuts, cayenne, pickles and preserves. The ethnology of the colony was represented by an interesting display of Indian manufactures and illustrations of their habits, manners, modes of living, amusements and natural dispositions. Their houses and furniture were shown in great variety, a few of the exhibits in this line were models of an Indian wigwam, several models of their household utensils, fifty Indian hammocks, cotton hammocks used by the squaws to carry their infants, hammocks on frames to show the mode of weaving them, cotton yarn and tibiserie fibre for making hammocks, carved wooden stools used by the Indians; pottery, jars, bottles, earthen pots for cooking, gourds, cassava graters, fire stick for twisting round with such velocity as to generate fire, fishing nets, torches made of fibre and impregnated with hyawa gum so as to burn most brilliantly. Canoes and paddles, dress ornaments, blow pipes, bows, arrows and quivers, war clubs, Indian drums, trumpets made of pottery, rattles, bone flutes, dancing sticks, shields, wacquarrie whips, Indian baskets with and without legs, and many other articles. The zoology of the colony was represented by collections of skins and skulls of various animals, both biped and quadruped. Birds' nests, birds' eggs, snakes of various kinds preserved in spirits, stuffed fish skins, butterflies, wasps' nests, a great variety of insects, moths, beetles, tiger frogs, shells, etc. Of fruits and vegetables there were some beautiful papier mache models of fruits, Avocado pears, bananas, sugar apples, oranges, fat pork, cocoanuts, sweet potatoes, monkey apples, rose apples, tamarinds, pumpkins, monkey pods, monkey cups, fungi, monkeys' ladder, flowers and fruits in wax, corn brooms, straw hats, Creole basket work, a negro shanty, a Guiana cottage and store, red horse eyes, black horse eyes, crab's eyes, swizzle sticks for beating up cocktails, swizzles and other drinks, etc.

EMPLOYED BY THE INDIANS AS MEDICINE

BALL COTTON WITH A SPINNING WHEEL,

The West Indian Gallery.

In order to fully illustrate the history of the colonies whose discovery by Columbus in 1492 led to such amazing results, by subsequently throwing open to civilization the vast continent of America, the Commissioner for the West Indies has gathered together as many objects of interest bearing on the subject as possible; therefore those monarchs of Britain who reigned at the time of this great discovery, and shortly subsequent to it, were represented by their portraits by the celebrated masters of their day, which were placed in the picture gallery of the West Indies round the upper portion of the walls above the other pictures. Henry VIII., by Holbein, stands conspicuous. It was in the younger years of this king's reign that America was discovered. He watched with great interest the heroic achievements of the great Spanish discoverers, and even used his best endeavors to inspire his own people with heroic efforts to emulate them. Queen Elizabeth, by Frederico Zucchero, is next. It was during her reign that Britons first seriously engaged in making discoveries and, inspired by jealousy and hatred of Spain and anxious to curtail the growing power of that nation, several expeditions were sent out to attack the newly-built towns of the Spanish colonists along the coast of South America. Elizabeth, discarding the pretensions of Spain, sent forth such sea lions as Drake, Raleigh, Hawkins, Clifford and many other heroes which that age produced, who attacked the Spanish fleets, conquered them and made prizes of their treasure ships; sacked and burned their towns around their coast line, took possession of nearly all the West Indies and drove the Spaniards therefrom, thus making the name of Britons a terror to every nation of Europe and particularly to Spain. This Queen also sent Sir Humphrey Gilbert as the first Governor to the Bahamas. James I., by Van Somer, was the third royal portrait hung in the gallery. It was during his reign that the earliest British settlement was founded in Barbadoes, the capital of which was named Jamestown in honor of him, but after the fall of the House of Stuart it was changed to Georgetown. The portraits of the headstrong and unfortunate Charles I. and his Queen Henrietta, by Mytens, were next in order. This monarch sent out several of the earliest Governors to many of the West India Islands, which thus obtained a regular form of Government and useful charters for the better regulation of commerce and the suppression of crime. He was likewise instrumental in sending out the first missionaries of the Church of England to those Islands. Charles II. was next on the list, by Sir Peter Lely. He took a practical interest in these colonies, and granted several of them, notably the Bahamas, to a syndicate formed by George Duke of Albermarle, Lord Craven, Sir George Cataret, John Lord Berkeley and Sir Peter Colleton. He also granted charters for the formation of settlements. It was during his reign that the first regular government was established in Jamaica. The next portrait in the gallery was that of James II., by Walker. He continued his brother's policy, and paid great attention to the West Indian colonies. William and Mary, by William Wining, came next in order. They granted many privileges to the West Indies, and sent out several missionaries to preach to the people there, and to slave owners to rule their poor slaves with greater kindness. The West Indian Company was established in this reign. George I. was next, by Godfrey Kneller. During this reign Anquilla and the Virgin Islands were settled and several important Acts were passed for the REGULATION OF THE SLAVE TRADE.

George III., by Gainsburg, was next. During the long reign of this King the West Indies attained a great and unprecedented prosperity. The slave trade was terminated in 1808. During the reigns of George IV. and William IV. the emancipation of the slaves was accomplished. Amongst the collections of engravings the portraits of Henry VII. and his Queen occupied a conspicuous place. It was during their reign that the West Indies were discovered. The portrait of Nelson is there in honor of his successful expedition to Jamaica against San Juandi Nicaragua in 1776. The portrait of the Earl of Balcarras and his sword were hung in the Jamaica section of that magnificent picture gallery, he having been Governor of that island from 1795 to 1798. Under his rule the great "maroon" rebellion was quelled. The portrait of Sir Christopher Hatton, Lord Chancellor of England towards the close of Queen Elizabeth's reign, occupied a prominent position, he having been instrumental in despatching some of those expeditions which wreaked such terrible vengeance on the war and mercantile marine of Spain and on the Spanish towns of the West Indies, and on their South American towns. A fine old portrait of Columbus, by Sir Antonio Moro, is very remarkable and full of deep interest to all. When we think of the great discoverer, and of the still greater discoveries he made, of the vast, the incalculable importance to man, and the unspeakably grand consequences to future generations, to the world, we were led to view his portrait with an intense interest far surpassing that felt in beholding monarchs, or those of the greatest conquerors. The names of Alexander, Cæsar, Charlemagne, Napoleon and Wellington all sink into the most utter insignificance in comparison with his who gave us a new world. Diego Columbus, in his life of Columbus, says: "The Admiral was a man well formed and about the middle height; his head was large, his cheekbones rather high, his cheeks neither fat nor lean, aqueline nose, his eyes small, light blue or gray, with the white parts rather inflamed." Mr. Prescott says: "He had a majestic presence, with much dignity and at the same time affability of manner." This portrait has been frequently engraved, and is inserted as the frontispiece to the second edition of the "Life of Columbus," by Washington Irving, by the special request of that famous author. Time and space would fail to fully describe all the portraits, landscapes, etc., which adorned the four great panels and screens of this magnificent picture gallery, which was the great scene of attraction in the Jamaica Court of the West Indian Exhibition. There were also statues and busts of renowned men and women, and ancient maps of the deepest interest to archæologists. Amongst the former was a statue of Columbus, surrounded by allegorical figures, representing savage and civilized life, and geography and navigation, by Signor Ghidone, of Milan; a collection of antotypes and photographs of letters of Columbus, the originals of which are in the Municipal Palace of Genoa and in the Spanish museums; and extremely curious collection of ancient maps and engravings, representing and his companions, and events and scenes in West Indian history; a collection of old and rare engravings representing the contemporaries of Columbus. The Diego Robero map, loaned by the S. congregation of Propaganda Fide, Rome, by permission of His Holiness Pope Leo XIII., which is of very great archæological value. Down the centre passes a line dividing the newly found half of the world between Spain and Portugal. This map is reported to be the first map of the round world ever drawn. This division between Spain and Portugal was first made by the famous divisional line drawn by Pope Alexander VI. in 1494. Although the map is full of absurd inaccuracies, it is singularly clear for the early period in which it was drawn. The West Indies are shown with great precision; the coast line of the continent of America is shown imperfectly. Africa is made to appear with the Nile flowing down to three lakes, just above what is known now as Cape Colony. As a specimen of the early geographers' scientific knowledge and a record of the first year of American discoveries it is of the deepest interest and of great value. Throughout the West Indies, British Honduras, and, in fact, all over the continent of America, flint and stone weapons of war and implements for household purposes have been found in abundance. They resemble those found in the lakes of Switzerland and in various parts of Europe very much. Some of them, from their size and shape, appear to have been sacrificial knives; others somewhat like chisels, others like old French hatchets, and others so small and delicately shaped as to appear like arrow heads. I have seen a large collection of similar tools and many different ones in a large museum of relics of the stone age at Zurich, taken from the bottom of Lake Zurich when the water was very low, exhibiting mills for grinding grain, made of large, flat stones with deep hollows worn in them, and a round stone to be used as a crusher to crush the grain as it would be put in the hole in the under stone. The magnificent ruins of colossal buildings, the remains of charming frescoes, and the delicate tracery of the sculpture, which have been found in various parts of Central America, prove beyond doubt that the civilization which they typify was one of a high order, and fully justifies Mr. Henry Fowler, who has studied the antiquities of British Honduras so perseveringly and so successfully, when he remarks, "That a people must surely excite our wonder and attention whose knowledge of astronomy enabled them to measure the true length of the year within two minutes and nine seconds, at a time when our own calendar was more than ten days at fault. Their sculpture is worthy to be compared to the most beautiful works of the Augustan age. Their civilization rivalled that of Europe in the Middle Ages, although it was doubtless degraded by human sacrifices, such as have occurred, however, among the most advanced heathen nations. Nor must it be forgotten that their came infinitely nearer to that of the Bible and Chaldean religion than those of any people of the Old World." There was a collection of Carib stone implements found in St. Kitts, Nevis, Antigua, Dominica, St. Lucia and St. Vincent. There were one hundred and twelve Carib chisels cut from coach shells, cut in Barbadoes. In order to fully illustrate the flora of the West Indies—indigenous and acclimated—the accomplished wife of the Governor of the Bahamas has most kindly painted, expressly for the Exhibition, a series of one hundred and four water color drawings, copied from nature. These drawings are nearly all life size; they are very carefully finished, and are generally correct botanical studies and faithful representations of the plants they illustrate, besides being artistically beautiful. In the majority of cases the plants, their fruits and flowers are all shown; and sometimes for a back ground there is a beautiful landscape introduced, and an occasional butterfly, moth or other insect is shown on the flowers. There was a most singular plant among the collection called Bryophyllum calycinum, which is succulent, with unequally-primate leaves; remarkable for its innate power of reproduction from a single leaf, which if pinned against a wall and kept moist, will frequently shoot forth young plants from its edges. The flora of the West Indies and South America is immensely varied and beautiful, and, like the feathered tribes there, displays the most brilliant hues. The ever-present great curse of man—alcohol—that legion of devils in solution, protrudes his foul seven-fold head and innumerable horns in these western dependencies of Britain also. Here in Guiana we have white rum, colored rum, rum shrub, swizzles, cocktails and swizzle sticks for beating up their cocktails and other inventions for maddening their brains, exciting their passions and turning men into demons, and, alas, women also—the noblest, purest, last and best creation of God—into the foulest, lowest, most degraded imps of perdition. It drives its miserable votaries to ruin here, to eternal ruin hereafter. It impels women who yield to its delusive fascinations to worse than death here, and to a dark and hopeless future. It peoples our jails, our penitentiaries, the gallows itself with its victims. It spreads woe, unutterable woe over every land where it is not restrained by the strong arm of the law. Some of our wisest judges tell us that 90 per cent. of all the criminals who come before them trace their downfall to this distilled poison which has not the smallest particle of nourishment in it; it only causes an unhealthy excitement of the brain, but the next morning they feel miserable, weak and exhausted for want of the vital force that alcohol stole from them the night before, to get up excitement. They go and drink more to get up the excitement, and again their vital forces become clogged and exhausted again—they increase their potations more and more, until ere long they become confirmed drunkards. They live miserable lives here. Some trifling disease, which they would have thrown off easily had they lived sober lives, carries them to untimely graves—to an awful eternity—to endless woe.

PORTRAITS OF COLUMBUS

TRADITIONS OF THE DELUGE

THE PRAIRIE PROVINCE.

A Winnipeg despatch says: The great Indian Sun Dance is over. Owing to the action of the Government agent in refusing to issue extra rations to the large number of Indians at the Assiniboine reserve during the Sun Dance, their performance was necessarily cut short this year. They were simply starved out. At the conclusion of the ceremony, which was devoid of all old-time atrocities, Chief Pie-a-pot addressed his braves and aroused the camp with enthusiasm. A newspaper man interviewed the chief through a half-breed interpreter, and found him out of humor. He complained of his camp being hungry. He said that Chief Jack and himself had quarrelled over the question of making braves by torture. Chief Jack said Pie-a-pot had secretly made one brave in this way. Pie-a-pot promises to return to his reserve at once. Excepting on the question of "more grub" all the Indians are contented.

An amended Hudson Bay Railroad Bill has been brought in. By it the Winnipeg & Hudson Bay road is empowered to float ten million dollars of bonds. Of these $4,500,000 will have their interest guaranteed by the Government at the rate of 4 per cent. for twenty-five years, and the remaining $5,500,000 will be ordinary bonds issued by the company. The proceeds of these bonds will be placed in possession of a board of three trustees, one appointed by the Government, one by the company and one by the bondholders, and they will pay out one dollar from the funds raised from the guarantee bonds for every dollar expended from the money obtained from the other bonds. The remaining bonding power of the company, amounting to $6,250,000, will remain in the hands of the Government, as security that the road shall be completed, and will be applied from time to time in aiding the construction of the road. After the completion of the line any other security held by the Government shall be given back to the company.

It is expected that Fant, Chief McRae's assailant, will be extradited, the proceedings so far being favorable.

McLeish's murderers are still at large, though their capture is certain within forty-eight hours.

The report that Chief Pie-a-pot and his band have left their reserve to join the Assiniboines and raise hostilities is without foundation. The Indian Agent granted him and a few families a few day's leave to visit relations on the Assiniboine reserve. All Pie-a-pot's braves are busy putting in crops on the reserve, and the Indians are quiet.

It is expected the Local Legislature will be prorogued this week.

SUED FOR A FURNITURE BILL.

A Novelist and Earl's Daughter in Court.

A London cable says: Yesterday afternoon, at the Westminster County Court, Lady Constance Howard, the daughter of the Earl of Winchelsea and sister of the late Lord Maidstone, appeared to answer a judgment summons at the instance of Mr. Quantrell, furniture dealer, of Wardour street, Oxford street. Judge Bayley asked the defendant if she was married? The defendant replied in the affirmative, but added that her father had stopped her allowance of £200 a year, and she was entirely dependent on her husband, who is the second son of the Earl of Effingham. In reply to the solicitor for the plaintiff, Lady Constance said it was true that she had written the following novels: "Mated with a Clown," "Mollie Darling" and "Only a Village Maiden," but she had only made about £20 out of them. She denied that she had written "Major Toddles." She also denied that she went much in society now, and added that as to novel writing she found it did not pay. Mr. Quantrell called the judge's attention to an action in a superior court, during which the defendant had declared that she had an allowance from her father, the Earl of Winchelsea; whereupon the defendant explained that since then the allowance had been stopped. The judge said that he had no power, to commit a married woman without a separate income, and dismissed the summons.

Divorces in Canada.

An Ottawa despatch says: The Bill for the relief of John Monteith was passed in the Senate to-day. The petitioner, who is a hotel-keeper at Lake Rosseau, Muskoka, was married to Mary Ann Wright in 1870. In 1885, after fifteen years of wedded life, the wife eloped with Wm. G. Norton, and is now living with him in the United States. The divorce is granted on the ground of infidelity.

Fanny Riddell, of Montreal, was examined before the Divorce Committee of the Senate to-day and told a pitiful tale. She was applying for divorce from her husband, Dr. Herchmer, on the ground of adultery and desertion. The evidence went to show that Herchmer had been employed in the Post-office Department at Montreal. He took money from a registered letter and then skipped out. Since that time the applicant for divorce had never seen him. It was also shown that Herchmer is in the Northwest, leading an immoral life.

A Wide Awake Town.

One man knocked down, two others kicked in the stomach, Deputy Sheriff McPhee laid up by a kick in the groin, several big faro games running, also several poker games, at one of which there was over $500 in the pot—a good house at the theatre; all this last Saturday evening in this city would seem to indicate that times are getting livelier.—Halley, Idaho, Times.

Lady Seton has and takes great pride in showing to all her visitors at Durham House probably the earliest autograph letter of Queen Victoria in existence. It is in childish print characters and runs thus, "How do you do, my dear Sir Henry? Your little friend, Victoria." It was addressed Sir Henry Seton.

FLESHERTON ADVANCE.

"TRUTH BEFORE FAVOR."—"PRINCIPLES, NOT MEN."

VOL. II., NO. 316. FLESHERTON, ONTARIO, THURSDAY, JULY 14, 1887. A. R. FAWCETT, EDITOR & PROPRIETOR.

e above fine finished Watches accurate Hampden's—my name on, and the reliable Waltham and Elgin Watches, in Gold, Filled Gold, and Coin Silver Cases, go to

W. A. BROWN'S

FINELY STOCKED

JEWELERY STORE.

I am known as the Reliable Jeweller for 20 miles North, South, East and West. I never have misrepresented purposely any goods sold since being in business here. It is easy to sell a 11 Jewelled Watch for "Full Jewelled." It is much easier to sell 8 k. Gold Watches and call them 12 or 14. I don't have to do it. My own name on all warrants, and you will find I can be held responsible if goods are not right.

342

WATCHES & CLOCKS

Booked in Repair Book since July 1st, 1886.

SQUARE DEALING,

PRICES CLOSE.

SPECIALTIES:—Fine Watch Repairing, Spex Fitting.

W. A. BROWN,

The People's Jeweller, Markdale.

CONSUMPTION IN FLESHERTON.

There being good prospects of a fresh quantity of Flour to be consumed in the village and surrounding country the present season, the undersigned has opened out with a good stock of the following lines :—

ROLLER FLOUR!

Best Brands.

Rolled & Granulated Oat-Meal.

Corn Meal,
Cracked Wheat,
Chop,
Shorts,
Bran and Oats,

At Bottom Prices for Cash.

Special Discounts

According to amount of Purchase.

W. W. TRIMBLE,

Next door to Clayton's Shoe Store.

(312-364)

SAY, HALLO THERE! ADVERTISING PAYS! (Of course it does. Just plant an advertisement in THE ADVANCE and see for yourself. Hundreds have done so and were benefitted. Have you a farm you want to sell or rent? Advertise in THE ADVANCE. Have you anything under the sun you want to sell or trade? An advertisement in THE ADVANCE will bring you customers every time. Do you want to buy anything or hire help? Advertise in THE ADVANCE every time. Address or call on A. R. Fawcett, ADVANCE Office, Flesherton, for terms, &c.

PRINTING! YES, OH, YES! IT WILL PAY all manners of persons who read this advt. to get their Printing done at THE ADVANCE Offices, Flesherton. Good work at honest prices every time! A dollar saved is a dollar earned—so the proverb goes. Pamphlets, Posters, Circulars, Programs, Dodgers, Streamers, Bill Heads, Note Heads, Receipts, Note Forms, Business Cards, Visiting Cards, Labels, Tags, &c., Plain or Colored. Address or call on A. R. Fawcett, ADVANCE Office, Flesherton, for terms.

ADVERTISE in The ADVANCE

Tit-Bits.

Consisting of Local and Other Interesting Items gathered by The Advance Reporters.

Get your Flour at Keefer's.

Do our sidewalks need repairing? Did somebody say "rats!"

Read "Road Notice" advt. in another column re Artemesia Township.

Mrs. Wm. Irwin is visiting friends near Heathcote

J. W. Henderson, Esq., of Toronto, was in town on the 12th.

Large stock of the choicest and best Roller Flour always on hand at Keefer's.

Master Robert Bates, of Sault Ste. Marie, is home on a visit.

Mr. Will Sproule, captain of our junior lacrosse team, returned to town this week.

An immense stock of Pipes from 5c. to $1.00, just arrived at Russell's Noted Jewelry Store, Flesherton.

Miss Ada Sproule has returned home from a pleasant visit to friends in the "lower settlements."

Our old boy, Master George Treadgold, of the Dundalk Herald office, was in town on the 12th.

Call at Keefer's Flour and Feed Store and take home a barrel of choice Roller Flour. Strain's block, Flesherton.

Mrs. Jacob Sloan, of Burk's Falls, in the Parry Sound District, is the guest of James Beecroft, Esq., Flesherton.

200 Pair Fine Specs—Me. to $3.00, at 25 % discount cash. W. A. Brown, Jeweller & Optician, Markdale.

The cattle fair here on [illegible] considerably ahead of the one held in June.

See W. G. Parker's advt. in reference to Durham Bull under the heading of "New Advertisements."

For full 18 k. Wedding Rings and fine Silverware, go to W. A. Brown, Jeweller, Markdale.

White Ash Butter Tubs and Churns for sale by Jos. McCormick, Flesherton. See advt.

"Shadows" is our old friend Deacon Snukes' latest production. It is as good as usual: will appear in next week's ADVANCE.

A handsome Stock of Silverware, Watches, Tie Pins, Rolled Plated Chains &c. just arrived at Russell's, Flesherton, at terribly low prices.

Our Township Council met for the transaction of business a week ago last Monday but owing to the absence of the Editor, a report did not grace our columns. No omissions in future.

As will be seen on right hand corner of this page, Mr. J. G. Anderson, of the Mammoth store, Markdale, advertises a big clearing sale of goods to commence to-morrow. Read it.

Do not be deceived but always take your Watches, Clocks, &c. to Russell's Noted Jewelery Store to repair. It will pay as you will have to take them there in the end.

A Garden Party will be held on the grounds of Mr. S. Damude, Flesherton, to-morrow (Friday) evening, under the auspices of the Presbyterian Ladies' Aid. A cordial invitation is extended to the public.

Our Mathematical Editor offered a prize to the pupil of any public school answering correctly the greatest number of questions asked and published in THE ADVANCE during the month of June, under the heading, "Competition Series." Not one pupil has availed himself (or herself) of the opportunity thus presented to carry off the prize, showing that some scholars are possessed with an incredible amount of apathy or indifference—or both!

For choice Flour go to Keefer's.

An immense stock of Pipes from 5c. to $1.00, just arrived at Russell's Noted Jewelery Store, Flesherton.

Mr. J. Ward is quite confident that he earned the title of "professor" when he undertook the management of the fireworks on Dominion Day and succeeded in "worrying" through with the job. We fully agree with him.

Our enterprising contractor, Mr. Fred. Ryder, has the contract for building the new brick schoolhouse at the Station; he also has the contract for the brick work on the new schoolhouse in Flesherton. Mr. Ryder is a hustler and no mistake.

Do not be deceived but always take your Watches, Clocks, &c, to Russell's Noted Jewelery Store to repair. It will pay as you will have to take them there in the end.

The Agricultural Editor forgot last week to announce that his wife, child, Miss Lizzie Fawcett, and himself arrived home safely on the evening of the 4th inst., having enjoyed their visit to friends near Brampton and Streetsville, in Orangeville and elsewhere very much.

Rev. Mr. Shilton, B. A., is an eloquent and practical preacher. His sermons last Sunday morning and evening were listened to by large congregations with unabated interest from beginning to close of each. He has created a decidedly favorable impression.

It will pay you to buy your Watches, Clocks, Jewelery, Silverware, &c. at Russell's Noted Jewelery Store, Flesherton.

The family of J. W. Henderson, Esq., Inspector of the Bank of Scotland M. Co., Toronto, have again returned to their summer cottage in Flesherton, where they will remain during the hot weather and imbibe the fresh, healthy breezes so prevalent in this fine summer resort.

Call and secure one of those Watches that are to be had at Russell's Noted Jewelery Store, Flesherton, from $6.90 to $60.00, warranted from 2½ to 5 years, warrants cover all breakages.

Orangeville, July 9.—R. Thompson, late traveller for McKesson & Robbins, chemists, New York, was found dead here last Wednesday from some cause unknown. The body was in an advanced stage of decomposition. He must have died at least four days before being found. His relatives all live in Ireland.

Our esteemed friend, Mr. F. Gee, of Flesherton Station, wore a fine silver medal on the 12th, which had been given him for his services to the crown in Central India during the great Indian Mutiny of 1856-7. Mr. Gee fought in some of the most hotly contested battles of that terrible strife, and during which so many brave men were killed.

If you want your Watches to keep "Standard Time," leave them for repairs with W. A. Brown, The People's Jeweller, Markdale.

Sons of Temperance.

At the regular meeting of Flesherton Division, Sons of Temperance, held on Wednesday evening, July 6th, the following officers were elected by the members and installed by Bro. A. R. Fawcett, D. G. W. P.:—

Bro. T. Watson, W. P.
Sister T. Leitch, W. A.
Bro. C. J. Sproule, Rec. Scribe.
Sister E. Fawcett, Asst. Rec. Scribe.
" B. Christoe, Financial Scribe.
Bro. W. Latimer, Treasurer.
" Christoe, Chaplain.
" Nelson Kester, Conductor.
Sister Blakely, Asst. "
Bro. J. W. Field, Sentinel.

The usual Standing Committees were appointed, and after a very profitable business meeting, the Division closed in due form.

Call and secure one of those Watches that are to be had at Russell's Noted Jewelery Store, Flesherton, from $6.90 to $60.00 warranted from 2½ to 5 years, warrants cover all breakages.

The attention of agents and others is specially directed to the advertisement in another column, headed "Agents, Agents!" in which that charming and wonderful new book, published by the "Oxford Publishing Co.," Toronto, and entitled, "Earth, Sea and Sky; or the Marvels of the Universe," is alluded to. This fine new work contains over 300 engravings. Read the advertisement.

Allenford, County Bruce, July 9.—A great sensation was created here yesterday by the cold blooded murder of Carrie McDougall, widow of Archibald McDougall. The murder was committed about 2 p.m. by a man by the name of Samuel Hughes and a neighbor. Two bullets entered her right breast, causing death almost instantly. Hughes shot himself, but not fatally. He is now lodged in Walkerton jail. The verdict of the Coroner's Jury is premeditated murder by Samuel Hughes. Jealousy is alleged to have been the cause of the deed.

Mr. A. Munshaw offers free of all incumbrance a well watered site—right in the heart of our town—to the person or persons who will erect thereon a Roller Flour Mill. So we were told the other day, and on going to Mr. Munshaw and asking that gentleman if the statement was correct, he answered in the affirmative. A number of capitalists were discussing the matter somewhat seriously on Tuesday, but whether it will take any practical turn or not will be better known, it seems, when the result of Mr. Fletcher's meeting last Friday has been seen. Why not introduce Mr. Smith's latest invention?

Messrs. John and James Stafford, sons of Mr. Chas. Stafford, of Artemesia, recently went through their fourth and first year examinations, respectively, at Toronto University, and it is almost unnecessary to say they did so with great credit to themselves, their parents and their native Township. Both young men are remarkable for their unassuming manners and their amiability, and it is against their wishes we publish this item—which, in the ordinary course of things, should have appeared in print some weeks ago. The very best wishes of hundreds of ADVANCE readers will follow the bright and clever Stafford brothers through life.

On Thursday afternoon and evening, July 28th, a Jubilee Garden Party, possessing unusual attractions, will be held on the beautiful grounds of the Methodist Parsonage, Maxwell, commencing at 2 o'clock p. m. The entertainment programme will consists of selections by the Flesherton Brass Band, vocal and instrumental music by the Maxwell [illegible] amusements, &c. In the evening short addresses on very interesting topics (see bill for particulars) will be delivered by Rev. Mr. Vickery, Creemore; Mr. Flint, Ravenna; Rev. Mr. Reid, Honeywood; Rev. Mr. Wetherall, Singhampton; Rev. Mr. D'Argent, Presbyterian minister, Maxwell; and Rev. Mr. Shilton, B. A., Flesherton. Refreshments served, commencing at 5:30 p. m. Admission 25 cents, children 15 cents. Proceeds in aid of Parsonage Repair Fund.

Continual hawking and spitting caused by Catarrh is permanently removed by Nasal Balm.

BE ON YOUR GUARD.—Don't allow a cold in the head to slowly and surely run into Catarrh, when you can be cured for 25c. by using Dr. Chase's Catarrh Cure. A few applications cure incipient catarrh; 1 to 2 boxes cures ordinary catarrh; 2 to 5 boxes is guaranteed to cure chronic catarrh. Try it. Only 25 cents and sure cure. Sold by all dealers.

A NASAL INJECTOR free with each bottle of Shiloh's Catarrh Remedy. Price 50 cents. Sold at Medical Hall.

Great

Clearing Sale!

To commence JULY 15th.

J. G. ANDERSON.

There will be decided bargains in every line. Don't miss it. We want to clear out the present stock in, by the 15th Aug., so as to make room for Fall Purchases. There will be a very choice line of

TEAS

at Special Reduced Prices. DRESS GOODS in great variety; BOOTS & SHOES in Great quantities; STACKS OF READY-MADE CLOTHING; everything will be Cut Away Down in Price.

Come Early before the Rush.

J. G. ANDERSON,

MARKDALE.

The following, which we clip from the Pembina Co. Democrat, shows the high estimation in which our Flesherton boys are held abroad:—"A large crowd of the Ladies' Aid, sunday school scholars and others met at the M. E. parsonage, Monday, to bid farewell to.....Mr. Strain, who has left for Minot, where he will enter into the mercantile business in connection with his brother, who is now located in that place.....Mr. Strain was presented with a fine photograph album. He replied with a few very appropriate remarks which will be long remembered by those present. He has been a worker both in church and Sunday school since his arrival here." It is scarcely necessary to remark, that the Mr. Staain referred to above is a son of our respected citizen, Mr. Wm. Strain.

On and after the 1st of August the Trustees of the Flesherton Cemetery, contemplate advancing prices of Plots. The present rates are only half the prices charged at neighboring cemeteries. Parties wishing to secure plots before the advance can do so by applying to Wm. Clayton, Flesherton.

Birth.

RAMTON.—In Flesherton, on the 13th inst., the wife of Mr. Samuel Ramton, of Glencoe, of a daughter.

FARMERS!

WOOLEN FACTORY

Don't forget there is good work done at the Flesherton

Customers are finding out it is to their advantage to deal with us as our Prices are Low and Our Goods are Reliable, and notwithstanding price being cut so close on account of hard times, I intend to keep in nearly every branch, viz., CARDING, SPINNING, WEAVING, &c., &c. Give us a trial and see for yourself.

W. H. FLESHER.

Flesherton, May 26th, 1887.

A PHENOMENON EXPLAINED.

How a South Carolina Lake was Poisoned by a Hailstorm.

A Columbia, S. C., despatch says: The story of the poisoning of Dawho Lake, Georgetown County, by a hailstorm, as recently described, has been corroborated in every particular by a prominent citizen of Georgetown, who has investigated the matter at the request of Gen. Greely, Chief of the Weather Service. A dense mass of black gum trees surround the lake on all sides. It is well-known that the leaves of these trees are strongly impregnated with tannic acid. It has also been ascertained that the bottom of the lake contains a slight deposit of iron. The poisoning of the water, therefore, is thus explained. The hailstorm filled the lake with bruised leaves and small branches from the trees, the tannic acid emanating from which mingled with the iron and formed tannate of iron, causing the water to turn black as ink and bitter as quinine, and poisoning the fish by thousands. One species of the fish inhabiting this lake survived the singular disaster, and that was the mud fish, which buried itself in the mud at the bottom and thus escaped the effects of the poison. The stench arising from the mass of dead and rotten fish is described as fearful. The thousands of buzzards in taking their departure in the evening for their roosting place after a day's feast are described as making a noise similar to that of an approaching cyclone. On each end of Dawho Lake, about half a mile distant, is a small lake in which numbers of fish abound, but which upon examination show no signs of the hailstorm which swept over Dawho. This confirms the belief that the direct cause of the disaster to the fish is due to the hailstorm.

Frauds, Tragedies and Disease in Cuba.

A Havana despatch says: Three persons have been arrested for connection with the counterfeiting of the ticket that drew the capital prize of the last drawing of the Havana lottery. The fraud was not discovered until fractions of the false ticket to the value of $85,000 had been received and the money paid.

The Holquin papers contain accounts of a horrible tragedy that occurred there recently. A workingman, as a precaution against smallpox, built a coal fire before retiring and placed thereon several leaves of tobacco, the fumes from which he had been told furnished ample safeguard against disease. On the following day the neighbors noticed the absence of any signs of life in the house, and informed the police. The door was forced and an awful discovery made. The workman and his wife and their eight children were all dead. The escaping gas from the coal had suffocated them.

According to the Santiago de Cuba papers there were 388 cases of smallpox in that neighborhood during May. Of these 150 proved fatal. From the 1st to the 9th of June the number of cases was 170 and the deaths 35.

The Green Flag Incident.

A London cable says: The capture of the green flag carried by Mr. Murphy's yacht in Bantry Bay is causing a good deal of comment. The following are the particulars of the occurrence: Captain Blackburne, of H. M. S. Shannon, caught sight of a green flag flying at the masthead of a yacht in Bantry Bay, and at once despatched a boat in pursuit of the treasonable emblem. Lieut. Saul, who was in command of the boat, informed the owner of the yacht, Mr. Murphy, Nationalist M.P., that he was liable to a fine of £500, and in spite of that gentleman's protests that he did not contemplate making war upon the Queen, but merely carried the flag as a distinguishing signal, he confiscated the obnoxious bunting and returned to the Shannon. The editor of St. James' Gazette says: "H. M. S. Shannon should have fired into the craft which flew the rebel flag in Bantry Bay, and should have sunk her or have carried her off as a prize." Mr. Murphy has brought suit against Capt. Blackburne for trespass, laying the damages at £1,000.

King Kalakaua Obtains Funds.

A San Francisco despatch says: There is no doubt now that the Claus Spreckels interest has been fomenting trouble in Hawaii. The main desire was to defeat the English loan. It has come out to-day that the loan had been made and the money delivered. Spreckels had $500,000 of Hawaiian bonds, three-fifths on the islands, all payable here. Those here have been promptly paid. Interest is stopped on the rest and they are to be redeemed on presentation, greatly to the disgust of the house. Two hundred thousand dollars of the floating debt has been paid and $800,000 applied to public improvements. The main trouble on the island is attributed to objections on the part of the missionary party to Prime Minister Gibson, who was formerly a Mormon, and it is charged that he panders to the King's baser tastes. It is thought by those well-informed as to Hawaiian affairs that a change of Ministry will obviate trouble. The missionary party desires to displace Gibson.

Starvation in China.

A Washington despatch says: Mr. J. J. F. Baudinet, United States Vice-Consul at New Chwang, China, sends a harrowing account of a trip made by him through the flooded districts of China. He was distributing food and necessaries of life to the starving people, and relieved 396 persons. He said he found the people generally living on bran, or the chaff of a large grass grown for feeding cattle. Some were reduced to eating chopped grass, either moistened with hot water or baked in cakes, while others fed on the leaves and seeds of weeds gathered in the fields. In some of the villages half of the dwelling places had been washed away and the inhabitants were huddled together in the remaining ones. The deaths from starvation had been very numerous, and the sights he saw in some of the villages were pitiable.

Some time ago a valuable canary of Ithaca lost its voice, and when taken to a local bird dealer, seemed to be choking to death. The dealer found that there was a tumor, as large as a pea, growing at the root of the bird's tongue, and putting the little fellow under the influence of chloroform, he cut it away. The bird soon recovered, and now sings as well as ever.

A ROYAL SCANDAL.

Queen Natalie Returns Her Husband's Letters Unopened.

A Vienna cable says: Scandals seem to be the order of the day, and that at Belgrade seems to be the prettiest one of all. Queen Natalie, who left Belgrade for Russia in consequence of her husband's infidelities, has been staying for some time at the Czar's summer residence of Yalta. The King, in deadly fear of being murdered like his predecessor, or kidnapped like Prince Alexander, has withdrawn to Vienna, where he is staying at the Emperor's palace. Queen Natalie has now signified her intention of returning to Belgrade, whereupon the King telegraphed in all haste to his Prime Minister Ristics, not to allow the Queen to set her foot in the kingdom. M. Ristics, however, who is not only a pronounced Russophile, but has also been guilty of the most flagrant and almost public relations with the Queen during the past three years, has refused to obey his master's orders. Meanwhile Queen Natalie sends back all her husband's letters unopened, and openly advises his removal from the throne in favor of her 12-year-old son, who is with her. Altogether there is as pretty a state of things at Belgrade at the present moment as could well be imagined.

Late Scottish News.

The jubilee of Rev. Dr. Macdonald, North Leith Free Church, was celebrated on June 15th.

The mansion-house of Westerhill, near Annan, Dumfriesshire, the residence of Captain R. Ewart, was destroyed by fire on the 15th inst.

The death is announced, in his 82d year, of Mr. Robert Johnston, of Mayfield, Lochmaben, Dumfriesshire. The deceased was long in the Indian Civil Service, and had seen much of life and sport in the East.

In connection with the unveiling of the monument of King Alexander III. at Kinghorn, Fifeshire, on the 19th of July, the freedom of the burgh is to be conferred upon Lord Elgin and Mr. William Nelson, Edinburgh.

The memorial-stone of the New Barony Parish Church, which is being erected in Townhead, Glasgow, nearly opposite the old building, was laid on the 15th by Colonel Hozier of Mauldslie Castle, in presence of a large concourse.

At a meeting of the Building Committee of the Edinbugh Public Library Committee, Lord Provost Clark presiding, it was arranged that the foundation-stone of the Library should be laid by Mr. Andrew Carnegie on the afternoon of Saturday, 9th July.

A great honor has been conferred on a Dumfriesshire artist, Mr. W. E. Lockhart, R. S. A., he having been commissioned by the Queen to paint the picture of the Jubilee service in Westminster Abbey on the 21st June. Mr. Lockhart is a native of Annan.

A Jubilee cairn has been raised on the top of Ben Ledi by the Highlanders in the district. A message was sent to Her Majesty to the following effect: "Loyal Highlanders by the sides of Loch Lubnaig and Loch Vennacher, and of Glenfinlas, climbed Ben Ledi and erected on the summit of the hill a Jubilee Memorial Cairn, fourteen feet high. It was christened 'The Victoria Jubilee Cairn,' and the health of Her Majesty was enthusiastically pledged."

According to a statement just published, colonial securities and investments are rising rapidly and greatly in favor with British capitalists. Four years ago the capital thus invested was estimated at £600,000,000, while this year the amount is said to exceed £700,000,000. This is not surprising, seeing that colonial securities are not, like foreign ones, subject to capricious fluctuations with every false or silly rumor that is raised.

Rev. James Barclay, of Montreal, besides preaching before Her Majesty in Crathie Church on the 12th ult., had the honor of dining in the evening with the Queen and royal family.

The Queen attended the marriage of a daughter of one of the tenants on the Balmoral estate on the 14th instant. This is the first wedding in a Scottish farm house at which Her Majesty was present.

The small farmers and crofters in the Murkle (Caithness) district have adopted a "Plan of Campaign" for themselves, the principal feature of which is that landlords are to be paid not in money, but in kind, valued at the rates current when the present rents were fixed.

Mr. Sims Reeves will, it is said, shortly appear in Glasgow as Fancis Osbaldistone in a revival of "Rob Roy" at the Royalty. The unrivalled tenor will be supported by Mr. and Mrs. J. B. Howard as Rob and Helen.

A Den of Horrors.

A New York despatch says: A frightful condition of affairs regarding the treatment of pauper insane at Ward's Island Asylum was revealed at the State Board of Charities investigation of the Department of Charities and Correction, instituted at the Mayor's request, and which was begun at the City Hall yesterday. It was shown that in the building, whose capacity was 1,000, 1,400 patients are crowded; that patients are also kept in outside buildings wholly uninhabitable; that wards, the capacity of which is 45, contain nearly twice that number of violently insane persons with only five attendants; and that the food furnished is not sufficient either in quality or quantity. President Simmons, of the Board, admitted these facts, and said they could not be avoided, because the Board of Apportionment refused to give them the necessary funds.

LORD PORCHESTER, eldest son of the Earl of Carnarvon, is of age this week, and comes at once into the enjoyment of the splendid Chesterfield property, which was left by the seventh Earl of Chesterfield to his sister, the late Lady Carnarvon, for her life and then to her children in strict entail. The property now yields more than $200,000 a year. When Lord Porchester inherits his father's estates he will have at least $150,000 a year more. Several thousand match-making mammas in England are thinking how to get his Lordship acquainted with their daughters.

There is an old lady in Georgia who will never send one of her daughters to Vassar College. "What with their coats, an' vests, an' jockey hats," she says, "women is nigh enough like men now, 'thout makin' bachelors of 'em."—Savannah News.

AN UNPARALLELED CASE.

A New York Girl's Attack of Hiccoughs Lasting Six Months.

A Fonda, N. Y., despatch says: The condition of Miss Jennie Sullivan, who has been suffering for the past six months from hiccoughs, is still attracting the attention of the medical fraternity throughout central New York. The case becomes more perplexing every day. Since the first attack of the malady Miss Sullivan has been living entirely on milk, her stomach refusing to retain stronger food. When she is suffering a paroxysm it requires the strength of three or four men to hold the young woman in bed. She is reduced to little more than a skeleton, but if her constitution is sufficiently strong it is said she can wear the hiccoughs out in time. The case is almost unparalleled in medical history.

Some Freaks of Nature.

Mrs. Rosanna Dennis, of Tiffin, O., died of dropsy seventeen years ago, and her body, which was disinterred the other day, was found to be thoroughly petrified, with the exception of the feet. It was so heavy that ten men were required to move it. A piece chipped from the body resembled flinty limestone.

The wife of Mr. Hey, of Americus, Ga., wears a handsome breastpin which was made out of a petrified strawberry which grew on her husband's farm. The berry is beautifully colored, resembling a bright ruby, and is very hard. It weighs about two ounces, and glistens in the light like a ball of fire.

Ara Soule, of Grant, Minn., noticed that one of his favorite hens had ceased laying eggs, but was growing remarkably large. Finally, after attaining an astonishing size the hen died, and Mr. Soule was curious enough to hold a post-mortem examination. He cut the fowl open and was somewhat astonished when four well-developed spring chickens popped out and began strutting around the barnyard. He supposes that some trouble with the hen's organization had stopped the egress of the eggs and that the natural heat of her body incubated the chicken germs.

The petrified body of a human being was found on the farm of Martin Edwards, near Windsor, Ill., in a ditch last week. The body is that of a short fleshy person, and is supposed to be that of an ancient mound-builder. It is very hard, and looks exactly like soapstone. The head is long and narrow, the forehead high and prominent, with high cheek-bones, square chin and a small neck. The body was broken off at the knees, the lower limbs being missing. Its total length, to the knees, is two feet nine inches, and its weight is about 170 pounds.

The Crimes Bill.

A last (Thursday) night's London cable says: In the House of Commons to-night Mr. W. H. Smith moved that if the report on the Crimes Bill be not reached on Monday closure be applied. The Parnellites opposed the motion, which, however, was carried by a vote of 220 to 120. The Speaker then called upon the Parnellites to move the amendments standing opposite their names on the notice paper. The Parnellites who were watching the proceedings from the members' side made no reply. The amendments introduced by Mr. Balfour, Chief Secretary for Ireland were agreed to without debate and the Bill was reported. Mr. Balfour announced that the third reading of the Bill would be moved on Tuesday next.

The Post says that Mr. Gladstone will move the rejection of the Crimes Bill when the measure comes up for its third reading.

How He Fooled the Flies.

A bald-headed St. Louis man, who has been troubled by flies, has devised a scheme to get rid of the troublesome insects. He noticed that a fly always walks upward. Put a fly on a window, and up he goes toward the top; he can't be made to walk downward. Forthwith he made a window screen divided in half. The upper half lapped over the lower, with an inch of space between. As soon as a fly would light on the screen it would proceed to travel upward, and would thus walk straight outdoors. On reaching the top of the lower half he would be outside. Not being able to walk down, he had no way to return to the room.

A Fast of Sixty-eight Days.

A Port Carlin, Muskoka, despatch says: Early yesterday morning Mr. F. Bissonerte, a former resident of Medora township, died here after a fast of 68 days. Some two years ago the deceased had a paralytic stroke, which finally resulted in his being unable to take food, and he continued in this condition for the period named. Up to Friday last he was quite able to sit propped up in bed.

Why It Was Called "She."

When H. Rider Haggard was a child he had a very ancient and battered wooden doll, which had been handed down by a former generation, and was regarded, ugly as it was, with peculiar affection by the girls of the family. The doll, which had lost its eyes in the course of time, was known to all the children as "She." This is the origin of Mr. Haggard's odd title for his celebrated romance.

How He Will Fix Them.

Nebraska Farmer—These railroads are getting entirely too numerous and impudent, but I'll fix 'em.

Railroad Superintendent—Well, what do you propose to do about it?

Nebraska Farmer—Why, you see, they run so blamed slow that I've brought suit for damages against 'em for shadin' the crops.—Omaha World.

She Loved Him "All the Same."

As the Boston Transcript thinks, a genuine feminine inconsistency appears in the following note left by a wife in New York for her husband, from whom she had run away with another man:

DEAR WILL—I am going to better myself, so don't worry. I leave the city. Your wife.

NO MORE.

I love you just the same.

SOME wag started the story in England that the Queen would present six guineas and a silver cradle to every child born on Jubilee day. Already over 400 applications have been made to Her Majesty to fulfil her promise.

TELEGRAPHIC SUMMARY.

The Parthia has arrived at Victoria, B. C., from Yokohama.

Payment of the claims adjusted by the Rebellion Losses Commission will be commenced shortly.

The hearing of the evidence in the Ayer customs case was concluded in the Exchequer Court at Ottawa on Saturday, the Chief Justice fixing September 21st for hearing the argument of counsel.

Rev. P. C. Angier, a gentleman from Central France, who has been appointed Superior of the Oblate Order in Canada, arrived in Ottawa yesterday. He succeeds the Rev. Father Antonie, of Montreal, who goes to Paris.

While Godfrey, a young man from St. Jerome, was engaged in a friendly wrestling bout with a friend at Montreal yesterday morning, the former was thrown violently to the floor. After arising and staggering about for a few minutes he again fell to the ground and almost instantly expired.

Mr. John Shaw, private banker, of Wardsville, has departed for the States, leaving behind him many confiding depositors to mourn his loss. He left letters stating that owing to heavy loans he was unable to meet his obligations, but hoped to do so at a future day. This event has paralyzed business in Wardsville, and is a topic for the quidnuncs to ponder over. His liabilities are reported to be over $10,000.

The Maharajah of Jadhpore has donated £10,000 to the Imperial Institute.

There is a scarcity of water in Belfast in consequence of the drouth and work in the mills is being partly stopped.

Queen Kapiolani of Hawaii is among the passengers on the Servia, which sailed from Queenstown yesterday for New York.

Advices from Afghanistan confirm the reports of two defeats of the Ghilzais recently with heavy losses. The first defeat was on June 13th and second on the 16th.

The Budget Committee of the French Chamber of Deputies have postponed the mobilization of the army until next year on the ground of economy.

The relations between Germany and Russia are becoming very strained, and attention is drawn to the fact of the immense amount of German money that is invested in Russian bonds.

The United Socialist Clubs of London are arranging a big excursion to Epping Forest on July 10th, and will send the proceeds to Chicago to relieve the Anarchists who are under sentence of death.

The North German Gazette says that the policy pursued by France of persecuting foreigners, not excepting Englishmen, is a sufficient justification of the refusal of the Continental countries to take part in the Paris Exposition.

In Valencia, Spain, on Saturday, the houses of the Octroi collectors were attacked and destroyed by a mob of the inhabitants of the town, who protested against the payment of taxes. The disturbed district is now occupied by troops.

A new Russian coercive measure directs Government employees in Poland to forward frequently to St. Petersburg complete lists of resident foreigners. Jews are not allowed to remain in St. Petersburg longer than a week, and are not allowed to enter corporations or academies.

The Belgian Chamber of Deputies has adopted a Bill declaring two-fifths of a workman's pay inalienable, and one-fifth free from liability to be taken even in local process. Clerks' salaries are made free from liability to seizure unless they exceed $240 per annum.

During the Jubilee festivities the Queen entertained over 5,000 guests. The expense of entertaining all the sovereigns and princes from abroad during the past two weeks is borne entirely by the Queen's privy purse and is estimated at $500,000, if not more.

Mgr. Scilla, the Papal Nuncio at Munich, who went to London to represent the Pope at the Queen's Jubilee, departed yesterday for Brussels. The Duke of Norfolk and a number of other distinguished British Catholics accompanied the Nuncio to the railway station and in bidding him farewell they kissed his hand.

Commander Charles Le Strange, of the British despatch boat Surprise, is missing. He was at Marseilles awaiting the arrival of the Duke of Edinburgh, whom the Surprise was to convey to Malta. Last Wednesday Commander Le Strange visited the suburbs of Marseilles, and he has not been seen or heard from since.

The French Chamber of Deputies has agreed that youths of 20, liable under the present laws to military duty, may upon request have the date of their entry postponed a year and possibly two years, if the time is required for the completion of studies, apprenticeship, etc. A third and even fourth year may be allowed university students, students of seminaries, pupils of Catholic colleges and those of certain technical schools.

The Queen on Saturday reviewed the London Volunteers, who turned out to the number of 50,000. Several members of the Canadian Wimbledon team were present and were given a position of honor near the massed bands of the brigade of Guards. The review took place in front of Buckingham Palace. There was a great attendance of spectators. Numerically the review was a great success. The heat became great during the marching, and a number of the men were incapacitated. One of the features of the drill, which was expected to show the troops to great advantage, was a march through the Buckingham Palace gates and reforming in double column. This was so ill-executed, however, that many of the men stumbled and fell and caused much awkward confusion. The Queen manifested much interest in the drill.

Three cases of fatal shooting and assault occurred in Chicago last night.

Heavy earthquakes have taken place at Bavispe in Sonora. Three hundred shocks have occurred since May 3rd.

Jacob Sharp passed a restless night on Saturday and is growing weaker. His family spent much of yesterday with him. At times he fell into a lethargic state.

Nearly 200 people were poisoned on Friday night at Amboy, O., by eating icecream at a church social. None of them are dangerously ill. The physicians are unable to explain the presence of poison in the cream.

The Alva, Mr. William K. Vanderbilt's magnificent steam yacht left New York on Saturday morning for a two years' cruise around the world. Mr. Vanderbilt, his wife and children are on board. The first stop will be at Gibraltar.

Gustave and Leonard Lange, brothers, aged 23 and 20, were drowned while bathing in Buffalo harbor on Saturday afternoon. James Newman, aged 7, was drowned an hour later while bathing in the same place.

A number of convicts attempted to escape from the State Prison at Folsom, Cal., yesterday afternoon. The guard opened fire on the fleeing men with a Gatling gun and one of them was instantly killed. Another received three wounds and will die. Thus ended the emeute.

Dr. James Taylor, of the Board of Contagious Diseases, reports that there is an alarming increase of diphtheria in New York city, and especially in the tenement district. The report for June shows 521 cases and 216 deaths. Children are the greatest sufferers. The Board of Health is called upon to take active measures to stamp out the disease.

Philip Matthews, aged 13, his sister, aged 2, and Catharine Kelly, a servant in the Matthews family, went out in a row boat on Saturday afternoon on the Croton River, at New York. When near a small island young Matthews got out of the boat and waded in the water. He got beyond his depth, and throwing up his hands cried for help. Catharine jumped into the water to save him, but the boy got a tight grip on her dress and both were drowned together. Little Katie managed to row the boat to shore near her home.

"There Were Great Men."

An opinion was current in the last century that our ancestors, at some time in the past, were the equals or superiors in size to the largest men now to be found. M. Henrion presented to the Academie des Inscriptions, in 1718, a memoir on the variations in the size of man from the beginning of the world to the Christian era, in which Adam was given 123 feet 9 inches, and Eve 118 feet 9½ inches. But after the first pair, the human race, in his imagination, suffered a regular decrease, so that Noah was only 100 feet high, while Abraham shrank down to twenty-eight feet, Moses to thirteen feet, the mighty Hercules to ten feet eight and a half inches, and Alexander the Great to a bare six feet and a half. The communication, it is said, was received with enthusiasm, and was regarded, at the time, as a "wonderful discovery" and a "sublime vision." The complaint about the degeneracy of the human race is not new, but dates as far back as the time of Homer, at least; for the men of his day were not like the heroes of whom he sang. It is not confirmed, but is contradicted by all the tangible facts, and these are not a few. Human remains that are exhumed, after having reposed in the grave for many centuries, as in the catacombs of Paris, have nothing gigantic about them. The armor, the cuirasses and the casques of the warriors of the middle ages can be worn by modern soldiers, and many of the knight's suits would be too small for the cuirassiers of the European armies; yet they were worn by the selected men, who were better fed, stronger and more robust than the rest of the population. The bones of the ancient Gauls, which were uncovered in the excavations of tumuli, while they are of large dimensions, are comparable with those of the existing population in many places in France. The Egyptian mummies are the remains of persons of small or medium stature, as are also the Peruvian and Mexican mummies, and the mummies and bones found in the ancient monuments of India and Persia. And even the most ancient relics we possess of individuals of the human species, the bones of men who lived in the tertiary period, an epoch the remote antiquity of which goes back for hundreds of centuries, do not show any important differences in the size of the primitive and of the modern man.—Popular Science Monthly.

Why Boys Should Not be Snubbed.

A most charmingly kind and charitable paper is that little monthly Dumb Animals. And now after kind words for all sorts of birds, beasts and fishes, it bravely speaks a kind word for the boys: Don't snub a boy because he wears shabby clothes. When Edison, the inventor of the telephone, first entered Boston he wore a pair of yellow linen breeches in the depth of winter. Don't snub a boy because his home is plain and unpretending. Abraham Lincoln's home was a log cabin. Don't snub a boy because of a dulness in his lessons. Hogarth, the celebrated painter and engraver, was a stupid boy at his books. Don't snub a boy because of the ignorance of his parents. Shakspeare, the world's poet, was the son of a man who was unable to write his own name. Don't snub a boy because he chooses an humble trade. The author of the "Pilgrim's Progress" was a tinker. Don't snub a boy because of physical disability. Milton was blind. Don't snub a boy because he stutters. Demosthenes, the great orator of Greece, overcome a harsh and stammering voice.

How it is To-day.

Youth—My dear, we could be married now if you would be willing to live in a four-room house.

Practical girl—Let me see. Well, we would have to reserve one room for a parlor, you know.

"I suppose so."

"Yes, and the second room could be kept for a drawing room, just for friends and relatives, because it would ruin the parlor to open it often, you know."

"I suppose so."

"That leaves us two rooms, and one of them would have to be fitted up for a sewing-room, because when people run in in a hurry I would not like to have the drawing-room all littered up. Has the house any closets?"

"No, I believe not."

"Then the fourth room would have to be used for a closet. Such a house wouldn't do, dear. There would be no place to eat or sleep."

One hundred Moors, bearing firearms, attacked the Spahi patrol at Beskati, in Algiers, killing and wounding several. Many Moors were also killed and wounded. The military intervened and stopped the fighting. Thirty of the Moors were arrested. Quiet has been restored.

Midsummer Madness.

"Bring hither, bring hither my red bandbox;
Bring hither my bandbox green,
And my bandbox brown from London town
And my box of silvern sheen.

"And it's oh for my trunk of leather tough
And my trunk of oak-ribbed zinc,
And my trunk so tough, of canvas stuff,
That will bulge, but will not shrink.

"Oh, pile them high with the robes I wear,
Till their lids they overflow;
My lord he will stare, and eke he will swear,
But in they will have to go."

"Oh waly, waly, my ladye fair,
Now whither and will ye flee?"
"To Mount Saint Bushallof-Worri-Ancai
On Conyile—by-the-Sea."

They have seized her boxes, one and all,
In the Tavern Lafitte de Kidd,
And loudly for help the porters call
As they stack them up in entry and hall,
And pile them high against bulkhead and wall,
But wherever they stow them, great and small,
Far out of her reach they are slid.

Her room is a cell a fathom long,
Her bed is a thing of fears,
Where all night long the noiseless song
Of the wingless bird she hears.

And her lord he lies in a hallway lone,
On a sleep-destroying cot,
Where she hears him groan, in a wrathful tone,
"It's—" (Hush!) "It's—" ('sh! Hush!)—"hot!"

And all this time, in their home in town,
A mansion of cool grey stone,
There are peaceful glooms in seventeen rooms,
Where the burglar sleeps alone.

ROBERT J. BURDETTE.

Latest Ladies' Fashion Notes.

Swiss belts of jet are to be much wor with white summer gowns.

Old blue and Charles X. pink a charmingly combined in the new gingham

Little rough straw hats are being imported from France for wear at the seashore, trimmed with Madras handkerchiefs tied in a number of upright loops. These are called la Creole.

Brown and white wool dresses will be much worn this season. The skirt is white, braided with brown. The full drapery is brown, as is the basque, which has a white waistcoat braided with brown. A white hat trimmed with a number of brown sparrows completes the toilet.

For wear with the pretty printed cotton dresses in the country are large sun umbrellas of printed cotton, with pastorals and landscapes upon them. They are pretty and deliciously quaint. The handles are of light-colored wood with big crooks or hoops at the end.

A pretty summer gown is in forget-me-not blue lawn, with tiny red dots. It has a shoulder-cape, with long ends of blue velvet of a darker shade. The hat is a rough white straw, the turned-up brim being lined with China crape. It has a big bunch of forget-me-nots and grasses high up in front.

A singularly charming dress was worn lately by one of the young English princesses, and suited to a slim girlish figure. The skirt was of thick white moire antique, without trimming, and laid in heavy double folds in the back. The bodice was half high, and the fichu of delicate lace was held in place by a cluster of yellow roses. A long sash of white crepe de Chine was knotted about the waist, and the ends were embroidered with buttercups.

A very striking tennis dress has a skirt of striped blue and white cloth, over which was a drapery of ecru netting. The loose waist had full sleeves, which were gathered into deep cuffs, and these, as well as the wide, square collar, were embroidered with tennis insignia. On the edges of the skirt drapery, at the ends of the sashes, and on the hat, for trimming, were woollen pompoms, the color of the tennis balls.

The English yachting gowns are of white or blue serge. A blue one has the jacket revers braided with gold, a gilt-braided girdle and a border of braid on the foot of the skirt. The white blouse-waist is buttoned with gilt buttons at the top, and has surplice drapery crossing on the bust. The blue cap is embroidered in gold, and the dark blue stockings have little yellow anchors worked on them in yellow silk.

A pretty morning gown has the loose front of point d'esprit laid in tiny plaits from the neck. The gown is of cream-colored "sunshiny"—a very good quality of India silk—figured with little red flowers. It has a double Watteau plait, and has several loose plaits at the outer edge where it falls open over the lace; it is tied at the throat and waist with white and scarlet ribbons, and bows of them are upon the loose, half-open sleeves.

Another more fanciful yachting gown has an English pink Eton jacket, short and square cornered, opening over a white serge waistcoat made long, sharp-pointed with small side pockets, and ornamented down the front with silver braid in straight rows, alternating with rows of rings. Small silver buttons in ball shape fasten the white waist, and two or three of these buttons are on the high white collar. The white cap is trimmed with bows of ribbon of the same shade as the coat.

Black cloth habits are the favorites for Park equestriennes, and next these dark blue and invisible green are most popular. Of late, on warm mornings, several gray and dust-colored habits have been seen, and more are in preparation. The English habit is still the most popular, with its postillion bodice, short, scant skirt and trousers. For warm weather the habits are open at the throat, with the rolled notched collar, showing a chemisette and a white pique tie knotted in sailor fashion.

Peace, Perhaps.

Mrs. Langtry is going to settle in San Francisco because she wants a divorce. Mr. Langtry stays at home because he wants—by-the-bye, what does Mr. Langtry want? Nobody seems to have paused to inquire.—Washington Star.

Life's Perils

The train-robberies in Texas seem to make it about as hazardous to travel in that region as it would be for a man to go into the grain trade in Chicago.—Pittsburg Advance.

On Robert's Island, California, one day last week Farmer Gibson shot a dove, which dropped dead in the grass near his house. As he started to pick up the bird he saw something move toward the spot where it had fallen, and thinking it a coon, he fired at the object, which proved to be his 13-year-old son, who was hiding in the grain. The charge entered the lad's breast and he died shortly after.

CURRENT TOPICS.

MR. H. H. HAYTER, the Victorian Government statist, has prepared the following return of the "apparent" population of each of the Australian colonies at the end of 1886. The totals are as follows: Victoria, 1,033,052; New South Wales, 1,030,762; Queensland, 343,768; South Australia, 312,439; Western Australia, 40,084; Trsmania, 137,211; New Zealand, 589,366. Grand total, 3,486,682.

"MR. J. E. MAYALL, who has been a well-known photographer for five-and-forty years," says the London World, "and is, in fact, the doyen of his profession, has taken out a patent for producing photographs in permanent color without the aid of the brush. Princess Christian has given Mr. Mayall a sitting to try the new process, and a great many ladies have visited his studio in Bond str et to obtain a lasting souvenir of their costumes at the State ball grand Jubilee drawing-room."

DR. KAUFFMANN is at present making some experiments for the Russian Government, with the view of finding a process of solidifying the petroleum used as fuel. According to report, his process consists in heating the oil and afterwards adding from 1 to 3 per cent. of soap. The latter dissolves in the oil, and the liquid upon cooling forms a mass having the appearance of cement and the hardness of compact tallow. The product is hard to light, burns slowly and without smoke, but develops much heat and leaves about 2 per cent. of a hard, black residuum.

OF the new magnet cure The Religio-Philosophical Journal speaks as follows: "This new cure consists in the transfer of disease from one person to another, both being in a hypnotized or trance state and a magnet acting as a medium of transfer. In brief, a hysterical patient is thrown into the hysterical state and placed near a magnet; another person is then thrown into the same state. In a few minutes, the operator directing the transfer, the hysterical indications develop in the second person. This is repeated frequently, and each time the hysterical disorder of the patient grows weaker, until at last it disappears."

IT has been discovered that pain is an efficient antidote to opium. To inflict this without subsequent injury it is suggested that winding twine several times tightly around the last phalanx of the finger and tying it will give pain not unlike a felon on each finger. Rouse the patient occasionally to take some water if possible. Keep the strings on until the patient complain of pain in the fingers—find out which one, remove that string and so on until the last one shall be off, and you will have saved a human life. Very few persons need to die from even a very large dose of opium if seen in time to apply the requisite pain to counteract it.

THE London Jewish Chronicle thinks it a curious coincidence that all the Jewish artists of any importance in England have had Solomon as part of their name. "We have had Solomon Hart, the Royal academician, the great Abraham Solomon, and among lesser lights several Solomons, including Simeon Solomon; and now we have the name of Solomon doubly borne by one of the most promising English artists of to-day. By his 'Cassandra' of last year, and by his 'Samson' in this year's Royal Academy, Mr. Solomon J. Solomon has achieved a position in English art but rarely gained by so young a man. He is, too, the son of a 'hard-shell' Jew, to use Mr. Goldwin Smith's strange, but expressive phase."

THE royal guests did not set a good example to the congregation in Westminster Abbey, remarks Mr. Labouchere, M. P., in Truth, for as soon as they were seated in the sacrarium they commenced chatting and laughing as loudly as if they had been in a theatre. But they might be excused if they mistook the Abbey for a theatre, as nobody would have thought it was a church. The Crown Prince of Austria was engaged in a most animated conversation with his mother-in-law, the Queen of the Belgians, which was accompanied by a lifting of arms, shrugging of shoulders, raising of eyebrows and other gesticulations. Considering the very strained nature of his relations with his spouse, the dialogue was not perhaps of an entirely pleasant nature.

THE lemon is a fruit much used in the sick room, and, many times, unwisely. Lemonade being a very refreshing and agreeable drink, is easily taken in excess by persons suffering from fevers, a fact which should not be forgotten. In typhoid fever, for instance, its immoderate use would be attended with danger, inducing, as it might, additional derangement in an already inflamed intestinal mucous membrane. In all inflammatory diseases of the stomach and bowels lemonade should only be given after the attending physician has sanctioned its use. During the past few years lemon juice has become quite popular in the management of diphtheria from the supposed action on the membraneous deposit in the throat. There have also been attributed to the juice marked virtues in the functional derangement of the liver, commonly called "bilious disorders." Some persons so affected have found benefit from its persistent use, the symptoms of others, however, have been aggravated by it.

THE gentlemen who advertise that they "will not be responsible for debts contracted by their wives," the St. James' Gazette says, should digest a case recently tried at Aix. The Count de Chambrun, who had issued such an intimation, was sued by a dressmaker for articles supplied to his wife. He was ordered to pay the full sum owing, and the Judge, in summing up, delivered a homily on the privileges of husbands. One of these is to "render the wife's existence agreeable," and a way to do it is by "embellishing" her. If a man have an "elegant" wife and her toilets be admired, this "benefits the husband in a direct manner." It is not stated whether the learned Judge in this case was a married man himself; but that is immaterial. His judgment shows that a wife adorns herself elegantly merely in order to benefit her husband in a direct manner. Doubtless this is a truism; but it is to the honor of the sex.

BISHOP TAYLOR'S little band of missionaries is making steady progress in its march across Africa. The letters sent home are as full of interesting incidents as Hazzard's story of the search for "King Solomon's Mines." Yet time and distance are for these missionaries shattered by modern science. A telephone is to be placed along the Congo route, and about the same time that this will be put up the little steamer for navigating the Congo River is expected by the Bishop. The steamer will be supplied with apparatus for throwing a stream of water on the belligerent natives. There will also be an electric light on the boat, and in time this also will be introduced into the mission stations of the African wilderness. Thus doubly armed with the Gospel and with the magic of modern scientific invention the missionary hopes to complete a chain of mission stations completely across the heart of the Dark Continent. This hard working Methodist missionary is accomplishing more than the wildest dreams of any romancer ever fancied with his mythical adventurers. He has called for a new band of earnest Christian workers to go out to him in the fall, and farmers, builders, or men with a trade are doubly useful in this new country.

A NEW use for the tobacco plant has been discovered. Its stems and waste, it is claimed, are equal to linen rags in the manufacture of paper. Tobacco waste costs less than £2 a ton, linen rags £11. There is no expense in assorting the former and very little shrinkage, as against a loss of one-third of rags. The yearly tobacco waste is estimated by the British census reports at from 3,000,000 to 4,000,000 pounds.

EVERYBODY will be glad to know just what marriage is. None but a lady could have told us in such glowing words as this from the Current: "Marriage is the blending of two existences into one so completely that all individuality is absorbed, and the idea of personal profit is impossible; the cementing of a union so perfect that every light or shade that falls on one must reflect on the other; the turning of two rivers into a lake, where they must flow on as one forever; the altar on which the light of our purest, holiest self should ever be burning. This is marriage; the marriage ordained by heaven, blessed by Christ and reverenced by our fathers."

AN English scientific journal enumerates the following as among the inventions which are specially needed at the present time: Macaroni machinery, good red lead-pencils, type writers that will work on account books and record books, indelible stamp cancelling ink, a practical car-starter, a good railway car ventilator, better horseshoes, locomotive headlights, an instrument for measuring the velocity of wind currents, apparatus for measuring the depth of the sea without sounding by line, piano-lid hinge which shall be flush on the outside, good fluid India ink for draughtsmen, a good metallic railway tie, an effective cut-off for locomotives, a method of alloying copper and iron, and a moulding material for iron and brass casting capable of giving a mold that can be used over and over again.

Ladies of Lima.

The ladies of Lima are all eyes. They have the reputation of being, as a class, the most beautiful in the world, and meeting them on the way to mass in the morning or shopping later in the day one can see how they obtained it; but knowing them in their homes the opinion changes, and you conclude, after calm reflection, that they are not so pretty as the women of New York. It is the manta which they wear in such a coquettish way that gives them their reputation for beauty, for it conceals every feature except their bewitching eyes and lovely olive complexion. No matter how ugly her mouth or her nose is; no matter how high her cheek bones or large her ears; no matter whether she is as scrawney as a scarecrow or as bald as a bat, a manta will make any woman with pretty eyes look handsome, and, like charity, it covers a multitude of sins. This garment, which is peculiar to Peru and is worn by women of all ages and social positions, from the President's wife to the woman who comes after your linen, is a sort of foster sister to the mantilla of Spain. It is usually a crepe from China, and costs anywhere from $10 to $500, according to its quality.—Buenos Ayres Herald.

How a Ghost Embraced Mary Anderson.

They tell a very strange story of Mary Anderson's last visit to England. She was being entertained at the famous Kenilworth Castle, and the Countess told the beautiful actress a share of the ghostly legends that cluster round the place. Among these stories was one to the effect that a certain chamber of the house was haunted by some dead ancestor of the noble house of Kenilworth. That was enough for the fair actress, and she insisted upon sleeping in that very apartment. The story goes that in the middle of the night her slumbers were cut short by a terrible weight upon her chest which seemed to press life and breath out of her. She was able to make only sound enough to wake her maid, and the two women shivered until morning. All this goes to indicate that the noble lords of Britain are adopting the United States fashion of serving pie to their guests for supper.—Albany Journal.

Generosity of a Withered Heart.

A few years ago an old-fashioned 'squire in a neighboring village was called upon to go to an old farmer's house to perform a marriage ceremony for a very old-fashioned couple, well advanced in years, especially the bridegroom. After travelling on foot over hills and dales in the night time the house was reached and the ceremony performed. The polite old bridegroom asked the 'squire his charge, and after a brief pause, was answered: "Well, I believe the law allows me $2.50." The hand of the now happy bridegroom was quickly put in his pocket and a half dollar brought forth, with the remark, "Here is a half dollar more; with what the law allows you this will make you $3." The young man who accompanied the 'squire was charged not to tell it, but the story was too good to keep.—Uniontown Genius of Liberty.

IN court for hugging his girl! Sounds ridiculous, doesn't it? but the Chicago News tells such a story: "William Cowes took Miss Wiseman to church in the Hith Township Church, near Corydon, Ind. During the sermon he put his arm about the young lady, and the deacons of the church saw him in the act. The deacons, going before the honoroble Court of Common Pleas, have brought suit against William Cowles for hugging his girl in meeting. It was discovered that this State would suffer more if the sheaves were not garnered than it would if William should continue to hug his girl. The honorable court, therefore, postponed this momentous action at law."

THE STAR OF BETHLEHEM.

Prof. Wiggins Says It Is a Myth Fabricated to Catch the Heathen.

Prof. E. Stone Wiggins, writing to the St. Louis Globe-Democrat, says: I am somewhat amused with the letters of Profs. Proctor and Klein on the "Star of Bethlehem." Proctor wields his old war clubs, "ignorance" and "charlatans," while Klein, with his "mirror" and "smoked glass," accuses the great unfixt of possessing an "old foggy mind," which is true, and with being an enemy of the Christian religion. You ask my opinion of this star. I will give it you frankly and without reserve. There never was such a star, either in ancient or modern times. The ancient Egyptian religion was astronomical, and that of the Hebrews was merely an awkward copy of that they left behind them on the banks of the Nile. The ark of the covenant, the cherubim, the sacrifice of the ram and the red heifer—referring to Aries and Taurus—all place this beyond dispute, at least in the mind of those who are not smoked with the fires of the old deities or the frenzy of religious superstition. The square letters of the Hebrews were taken directly from the hieroglyphics. The astronomical Egyptians were ruled and guided by the sun, moon and stars, and the Book of Genesis says they were created "for signs and for seasons and for days and for years." The Hebrew general made short work of his enemies in kindling the religious fury of his army by commanding the sun and moon to stand still, doubtless to assure them that he was like the Egyptian kings in the possession of divine powers. Osiris, the chief deity of the Egyptians, was born on Mount Sinai, and it was here that God descended in lightning and thunder and delivered his laws to Moses.

The New Testament writers display all the religious elements of the Egyptian mythology. A star, which in the old Egyptian hieroglyphics signified God, guided the magi to the place of the Saviour's birth; the sun withdrew his golden flood at His crucifixion, and at His second coming the sun shall be darkened and the moon shall give her light; the stars shall fall from heaven, and the powers of heaven shall be shaken. At the day of judgment, when a righteous soul was brought before Osiris, he ordered it sent into the body of a ram, probably in the belief that it would rise to Aries in the heavens, the Hebrew believing it would ascend thus in the rising smoke of the sacrifice. A wicked soul he ordered into the body of a pig, and Christ, after exercising the wicked spirits, suffered them to enter a herd of swine. Matthew alone gives the story of the star guiding the wise men to the cradle of the Redeemer, and it is sufficient to say that it is a pure fabrication, forged and interpolated by some bishop or monk in the third century, for it is not found in the earliest manuscripts. No wonder the Roman Emperor Hadrian calls the Christians "worshippers of Serapis." Such is my opinion of the Star of Bethlehem. It is of fabulous origin, and was employed in the early eras to catch the heathen, as astrologists at the present day appeal to popular superstition for gain, and that stars are placed on the national standard of the great republic to elicit the awe and patriotism of the American people. Regarding the wandering star of Cassiopeia, I find the following in my "Architecture of the Heavens," published twenty-three years ago, an opinion I have not yet changed:

"Our system is not the only one within the circle of the universe that is furnished with comets. As they are the creative process, we would suppose that comets are travelling in every system. No doubt the different wandering stars that have been observed in nearly all ages of the world are nothing more nor less than the comets of other systems at their aphelion, when of course the tail of the comet would settle round it in the shape of a luminous atmosphere, as there would not be sufficient motion to overcome the attractive power between the nucleus and the tail, and hence it would appear as a star. Hipparchus saw one 120 B.C., and some have been seen in modern times. We have an accurate account of one which was discovered by Cornelius Gemma in 1570 in the chain of Cassiopeia, the brightness of which exceeded that of Sirus and was visible at midday. At first it appeared larger than Jupiter, but its apparent magnitude gradually decayed till at the end of sixteen months it entirely disappeared."

Beautiful woman, from whence came thy bloom,
Thy beaming eye, thy features fair?
What kindly hand on thee was laid—
Endowing thee with beauty rare?
"'Twas not ever thus," the dame replied,
"Once pale this face, these features bold,
The 'Favorite Prescription' of Dr. Pierce
Wrought the wondrous change which you behold.'

Cambridge, the seat of Harvard University, has 3,723 illiterates out of a total population of 47,692.

"Golden at morning, silver at noon and lead at night," is the old saying about eating oranges. But there is something that is rightly named Golden, and can be taken with benefit at any hour of the day. This is Dr. Pierce's Golden Medical Discovery, literally worth its weight in gold to any one suffering with scrofulous affections, impurities of the blood, or diseases of the liver and lungs. It is unfailing. By druggists.

Pompadour striped Bengalines are in favor for dressy summer toilets.

A Good Corn Sheller for 25c.

A marvel of cheapness, of efficacy and promptitude is contained in a bottle of that famous remedy, Putnam's Painless Corn Extractor. It goes right to the root of the trouble, there acts quickly but so painlessly that nothing is known of its operation until the corn is shelled. Beware of substitutes offered for Putnam's Painless Corn Extractor—safe, sure and painless. Sold at druggists'.

Polonaises are especially becoming to stout figures.

I always recommend McCollom's Rheumatic Repellant highly to those I find suffering with rheumatism since it cured me several years ago when almost helpless for some time in spite of best treatment I could get. D. OATMAN, Tilsonburg, P. O.

Woolen costumes are indispensable adjuncts of all summer wardrobes.

$500 Reward.

If you suffer from dull, heavy headache, obstruction of the nasal passages, discharges falling from the head into the throat, sometimes profuse, watery and acrid, at others, thick, tenacious, mucous, purulent, bloody and putrid; if the eyes are weak, watery and inflamed; and there is ringing in the ears, deafness, hacking or coughing to clear the throat, expectoration of offensive matter, together with scabs from ulcers; the voice being changed and having a nasal twang; the breath offensive; smell and taste impaired; experience a sensation of dizziness, with mental depression, a hacking cough and general debility then you are suffering from chronic nasal catarrh. Only a few of the above named symptoms are likely to be present in any one case at one time, or in one stage of the disease. Thousands of cases annually, without manifesting half of the above symptoms, result in consumption and end in the grave. No disease is so common, more deceptive and dangerous, less understood or more unsuccessfully treated by physicians. The manufacturers of Dr. Sage's Catarrh Remedy offer, in good faith, $500 reward for a case of catarrh which they cannot cure. The remedy is sold by druggists at only 50 cents.

Patient (dissatisfied with dietary restrictions)—"Say, Doc, I'm blamed if I'm going to starve to death just for the sake of living a little longer."

WHAT AILS YOU?

Do you feel dull, languid, low-spirited, lifeless, and indescribably miserable, both physically and mentally; experience a sense of fullness or bloating after eating, or of "goneness," or emptiness of stomach in the morning, tongue coated, bitter or bad taste in mouth, irregular appetite, dizziness, frequent headaches, blurred eyesight, "floating specks" before the eyes, nervous prostration or exhaustion, irritability of temper, hot flushes, alternating with chilly sensations, sharp, biting, transient pains here and there, cold feet, drowsiness after meals, wakefulness, or disturbed and unrefreshing sleep, constant, indescribable feeling of dread, or of impending calamity?

If you have all, or any considerable number of these symptoms, you are suffering from that most common of American maladies—Bilious Dyspepsia, or Torpid Liver, associated with Dyspepsia, or Indigestion. The more complicated your disease has become, the greater the number and diversity of symptoms. No matter what stage it has reached, Dr. Pierce's Golden Medical Discovery will subdue it, if taken according to directions for a reasonable length of time. If not cured, complications multiply and Consumption of the Lungs, Skin Diseases, Heart Disease, Rheumatism, Kidney Disease, or other grave maladies are quite liable to set in and, sooner or later, induce a fatal termination.

Dr. Pierce's Golden Medical Discovery acts powerfully upon the Liver, and through that great blood-purifying organ, cleanses the system of all blood-taints and impurities, from whatever cause arising. It is equally efficacious in acting upon the Kidneys, and other excretory organs, cleansing, strengthening, and healing their diseases. As an appetizing, restorative tonic, it promotes digestion and nutrition, thereby building up both flesh and strength. In malarial districts, this wonderful medicine has gained great celebrity in curing Fever and Ague, Chills and Fever, Dumb Ague, and kindred diseases.

Dr. Pierce's Golden Medical Discovery

CURES ALL HUMORS,

from a common Blotch, or Eruption, to the worst Scrofula. Salt-rheum, "Fever-sores," Scaly or Rough Skin, in short, all diseases caused by bad blood are conquered by this powerful, purifying, and invigorating medicine. Great Eating Ulcers rapidly heal under its benign influence. Especially has it manifested its potency in curing Tetter, Eczema, Erysipelas, Boils, Carbuncles, Sore Eyes, Scrofulous Sores and Swellings, Hip-joint Disease, "White Swellings," Goitre, or Thick Neck, and Enlarged Glands. Send ten cents in stamps for a large Treatise, with colored plates, on Skin Diseases, or the same amount for a Treatise on Scrofulous Affections.

"FOR THE BLOOD IS THE LIFE."

Thoroughly cleanse it by using Dr. Pierce's Golden Medical Discovery, and good digestion, a fair skin, buoyant spirits, vital strength and bodily health will be established.

CONSUMPTION,

which is Scrofula of the Lungs, is arrested and cured by this remedy, if taken in the earlier stages of the disease. From its marvelous power over this terribly fatal disease, when first offering this now world-famed remedy to the public, Dr. Pierce thought seriously of calling it his "CONSUMPTION CURE," but abandoned that name as too restrictive for a medicine which, from its wonderful combination of tonic, or strengthening, alterative, or blood-cleansing, anti-bilious, pectoral, and nutritive properties, is unequaled, not only as a remedy for Consumption, but for all Chronic Diseases of the Liver, Blood, and Lungs.

For Weak Lungs, Spitting of Blood, Shortness of Breath, Chronic Nasal Catarrh, Bronchitis, Asthma, Severe Coughs, and kindred affections, it is an efficient remedy.

Sold by Druggists, at $1.00, or Six Bottles for $5.00.

☞ Send ten cents in stamps for Dr. Pierce's book on Consumption. Address,

World's Dispensary Medical Association,
663 Main St., BUFFALO, N. Y.

D C N L. 28 87.

I CURE FITS!

When I say cure I do not mean merely to stop them for a time and then have them return again. I mean a radical cure. I have made the disease of FITS, EPILEPSY or FALLING SICKNESS a life-long study. I warrant my remedy to cure the worst cases. Because others have failed is no reason for not now receiving a cure. Send at once for a treatise and a Free Bottle of my infallible remedy. Give Express and Post Office. It costs you nothing for a trial, and I will cure you. Address DR. H. G. ROOT,

Branch Office, 37 Yonge St., Toronto.

DUNN'S BAKING POWDER

THE COOK'S BEST FRIEND

CONSUMPTION.

I have a positive remedy for the above disease; by its use thousands of cases of the worst kind and of long standing have been cured. Indeed, so strong is my faith in its efficacy, that I will send TWO BOTTLES FREE, together with a VALUABLE TREATISE on this disease to any sufferer. Give express and P. O. address.

DR. T. A. SLOCUM

Branch Office, 37 Yonge St., Toronto

THIS PAPER may be found on file at Geo. P. Rowell & Co's Newspaper Advertising Bureau (10 Spruce St.), where advertising contracts may be made for it IN NEW YORK.

THE ADVANCE.

Is published

Every Thursday,

FROM THE OFFICE,

Collingwood Street, - - Flesherton, Ont.

TERMS OF SUBSCRIPTION:

$1 per annum when paid strictly in advance
$1.50 per annum when not so paid.

A. R. FAWCETT,
Editor and Proprietor.

FLESHERTON:
THURSDAY, JULY 14, 1887.

EDITORIAL NOTES.

We have no disposition to enter into any further discussion of the roller mill question at this juncture. Of this more anon. In the meantime our columns are open to correspondents who may desire to air their views touching this important subject; but we must insist on the strict observation of the two rules we now lay down in connection with such letters, viz., (1) they must be short, and (2) they must be published over the writers' real names. The Editor does not intend to be held responsible for the opinions of anonymous writers, in the discussion of this subject at least.

The Agricultural Editor was somewhat alarmed the other day, when an alleged counterfeit 25 cent piece came into his possession and seemed likely to remain where it was. A test proving it to be genuine, however, he now feels much better, and takes this opportunity to assure those of his subscribers who may chance to be in arrears, that he is prepared to accept any quantity of the same kind of twenty-five cent pieces in payment of subscriptions.

The Twelfth of July will likely be celebrated in Markdale next year, and it will be interesting to notice then whether Flesherton will imitate certain citizens of that classic place in the matter of bringing their own edibles along with them and renting some public hall, for the purpose of feeding the hungry multitude in opposition to the hotels and eating houses. Well, some people in Markdale may "want the whole earth," but, thank God, they can't get it!

Mr. W. G. Pickell has written a letter to the Markdale Standard, in which he condemns the Commercial Union resolutions recently passed by the East Grey Agricultural Society. Mr. P. is after the President's scalp, but it will require a considerable effort on his part to secure it,—the scalp we mean. After all this, "Commercial Union" warfare must resolve itself into a contest between Protectionists and Free Traders; and as the people have three times in succession given their verdict in favor of the former, it does not seem difficult to predict the result unless there is some peculiar virtue in the new name.

Somebody suggested the other day, in our hearing, that it would have been a fine idea had Flesherton been moved out to the railway station when the track was laid between Orangeville and the Sound. It would have saved doing so now, when the town is so much larger and when it will be so much more expensive! This "idea" must have originated at the Station. After all it would shut down on the "its-a-long-distance-to the station" friend which is a very comforting thought. We'll think the matter over, gentlemen.

To most children, the bare suggestion of a dose of castor oil is nauseating. When physic is necessary for the little ones, use Ayer's Cathartic Pills. They are safe and pleasant to take. Try them

SHILOH'S CATARRH REMEDY—a positive cure for Catarrh, Diptheria and Canker Mouth. Sold at Medical Hall.

"HACKMETACK," a lasting and fragrant perfume. Price 25 and 50 cents. Sold by Medical Hall.

Mr. Flesher's Meeting.

The meeting in the Town Hall here last Friday evening to consider the roller mill question drew together a number of townspeople and neighboring farmers. It could scarcely be called a representative gathering, however, as a number of prominent capitalists were absent.

Mr. Flesher introduced the subject, alluding to the practical aspects of the case. His speech went to show that it was a very expensive undertaking, and an experimental one at that. He alluded to the later improvements in milling facilities as outlined in the article copied from the Detroit Free Press and published in last week's ADVANCE, and pointed out the possibility of the roller process being superseded by this latest claimant for popular favor. He alluded to another fact, not generally known, viz., that customers got a larger percentage of flour in return for the grain left at stone gristing mills than at roller mills. He was doubtful, taking all things into consideration, whether it would pay to make the change.

A. R. Fawcett, of THE ADVANCE, next spoke briefly, expressing it as his belief that a roller mill was a necessity and should be considered very seriously by those disposed to aid in bringing the scheme to a successful issue.

Dr. Christoe expressed himself as being strongly in favor of stone flour, from a sanitary standpoint; at the same time frankly acknowledging the great growth of roller flour in popular estimation. The great expense necessary to effect the change, however, seemed to be a serious obstacle to overcome, and he doubted whether a syndicate could be formed here to carry out the contemplated improvements.

Mr. Bradley, lessee of the flouring mills here, was of opinion that a change was necessary.

Mr. R. J Sproule made a practical and pointed speech in connection with the matter and wound up by asking Mr. Flesher if he would sell the mill property providing a joint stock company could be formed or a capitalist could be found willing to invest his money in such an enterprise.

Mr. Flesher said he had not made up his mind to sell, but would do all in his power to help on the scheme, consistent with his own individual interest as well as that of the village generally.

Some further discussion ensued between Messrs. Flesher and Sproule and others, after which the meeting broke up without having come to any definite conclusion in the premises.

[N. B.—On account of lack of proper accomodation we were unable to take as full notes of the meeting as its importance demanded.—ED. ADVANCE.]

An Anonymous Epistle.

The following rather curious epistle was received through Flesherton Post Office by Dr. Christoe—we print it verbatim et literatum:—

Flesherton July th 5 1887
to Dr Christo
if there be among you a poor man of one of thy brethren within any of thy gates in thy land witch the lord thy god giveth the thou shalt not harden thine hert nor shut thine hand from thy poor brother thou shalt surely give him and thine hert shal not be grieved when thou givest unto him because that for this thing the lord thy god shall bless thee in all thy works and in all that thou puttest thine hand unto for the poore shall never cease out of the land therefore i command thee saying thou shalt open thine hand wide unto thy brother i been thinking that D Taylor is the poorest man in the village he is in need of a little help yours truly,
a free thinker

A WONDERFUL ORGAN. The largest organ and one that plays a controlling part of the health of the body is the liver. If torpid or, inactive the whole system becomes diseased, Dr. Chase's Liver Cure is made specially for Liver and Kidney diseases, and is guaranteed to cure. Receipe book and medicine $1. Sold by all dealers.

ADVICE TO MOTHERS.—Are you disturbed at night and broken of your rest by a sick child suffering and crying with pain of Cutting Teeth? If so send at once and get a bottle of "Mrs. Winslow's Soothing Syrup" for Children Teething. Its value is incalculable. It will relieve the poor little sufferer immediately. Depend upon it, mothers; there is no mistake about it. It cures Dysentery and Diarrhœa, regulates the Stomach and Bowels, cures Wind Colic, softens the Gums, reduces Inflammation, and gives tone and energy to the whole system. "Mrs. Winslow's Soothing Syrup" for children teething is pleasant to the taste and is the prescription of one of the oldest and best female physicians and nurses in the United States, and is for sale by all druggists throughout the world. Price twenty-five cents a bottle. Be sure and ask for "MRS. WINSLOW'S SOOTHING SYRUP," and take no other kind.

FOR DYSPEPSIA and Liver Complaint you have a printed guarantee on every bottle of Shiloh's Vitalizer. It never fails to cure. Sold at Medical Hall.

NEW ADVERTISEMENTS.

IN the matter of WILLIAM HOGG, of the Village of Flesherton Station, in the County of Grey, General Storekeeper.

The insolvent has made an assignment of his Estate to the undersigned, in pursuance of an Act respecting Assignments for the benefit of Creditors, 48 Vic., Chap. 26, and the Creditors are notified to meet at No. 26 Wellington Street East, Toronto, on Monday 18th July, 1887, at 4 o'clock, p.m., to receive statements of his affairs, appoint Inspectors, and for the ordering of the affairs of the Estate generally.

And Notice is hereby given, that after 15th August, next, the said Trustee will proceed to distribute the assets of the said Debtor among the parties entitled thereto, having regard only to the claims of which Notice shall have been given, and that he will not be liable for the assets, or any part thereof so distributed to any person or persons of whose debt or claim he shall not then have had notice.

E. R. C. CLARKSON,
Trustee.

26 Wellington St. East, Toronto.
4th July, 1887. 316-317

Agents, Agents!

NOW READY—|—OUR NEW BOOK.

EARTH, SEA AND SKY

—OR—

Marvels of the Universe

Being a full and graphic description of all that is wonderful in every Continent of the Globe, in the world of waters and the starry Heavens. Containing thrilling adventures on land and sea, renowned discoveries of the world's greatest explorers in all ages, and remarkable phenomena in every realm of nature. Embracing the striking physical features of the earth the peculiar characteristics of the human race, of animals, birds, insects, etc., including a vivid description of the Atlantic, Pacific and Indian Oceans and of the Polar Seas, the monsters of the deep, beautiful seashells and plants, singular fishes and dwellers in the world of waters, remarkable ocean currents, etc., together with the amazing phenomena of the solar and starry systems, by Henry Davenport Northrop, D.D., embellished with over 300 fine engravings. Liberal terms to agents. Oxford Publishing Company, 5 Jordan St., Toronto, Ont. 316-368

This Space is Reserved for

W. W. STEPHEN,

DRUGGIST,

MEAFORD.

ROAD NOTICE.

Township of Artemesia.

Notice is hereby given that the Municipality of Artemesia will after one month from the first publication hereof in the FLESHERTON ADVANCE newspaper, the date of which first publication will be on the 7th day of July, 1887, proceed to pass a By-Law establishing the undermentioned Deviation of road in this Township, viz., from a point numbered 41 on a deviation under By-Law 303, made by T. Gilliland, Esq., between Lots 23 and 24 in the 12th Concession, on same bearing to centre of Road, known as Campbell's road, instead of on bearing 42 as mentioned on plan by said Gilliland, which part of said By-Law 303 will be repealed, and also to satisfy the original intention to carry any other part of said road in the Divisional line of Lots as far as practical.

Council will meet on second Monday of Aug., instead of 1st, to pass it.

W. J. BELLAMY, Township Clerk.

One High-Bred Durham Bull,

"KING BILLY,"

The Royal Champion,

Will stand for service for the year 1887, at Lot 103, 1st Range W.T. & S.R., Artemesia, at the small sum of 50cts.

W. C. PARKER.

SALE OF

Valuable Farm Property!

Under and by virtue of a power of sale contained in a mortgage made by Robert Flanigan, default having been made in payment thereof, will be sold by Public Auction at Munshaw's Hotel, Flesherton, on TUESDAY, THE 19th OF JULY, 1887, at 1 o'clock p. m., the following property: Lot No. 11 in the 13th Concession of the Township of Osprey in the County of Grey, containing 80 acres more or less. This is a choice farm, 72 acres clear and in good state of cultivation, and 8 acres of beech and maple. The farm is watered by a never-failing spring.

TERMS.—The purchaser shall pay a deposit of $100 at the time of sale, the balance of one-third of the purchase money in three weeks thereafter; the remaining two-thirds to be paid in cash or secured by a mortgage payable from one to five years at the option of the purchaser.

For further particulars apply to

CRERAR & MUIR,
Vendor's Solicitors, Hamilton.

Hamilton, June 20th, 1887.

THE REV. GEO. H. THAYER, of Bourbon, Ind., says: "Both myself and wife owe our lives to SHILOH'S CONSUMPTION CURE." Sold at Medical Hall.

Farm for Sale!

100 ACRE FARM, 85 acres cleared, in good state of cultivation. Log Barn, Frame Stable and other out-buildings. Good Roughcast House, splendid Cellar, good Well at the door, large Orchard with good bearing Fruit Trees. Lots 148, 149, 150, 3rd Range East, Artemesia. Possession can be had this fall. Title clear.

JAMES BEECROFT,
Proprietor.

314-319.

WHAT IS IT?

IT IS A FACT AND NO CONTROVERSY THAT

JOHNSON'S

TONIC BITTERS

and NERVINE is the best remedy in the market for nervous diseases of any sort. Hysteria, Loss of Appetite, Debility from loss of fluids or overwork, Paleness of Complexion so often seen in young females and all complaints arising from poverty of blood.

It is a fact and no gainsaying that JOHNSON'S TONIC LIVER PILLS are the very best in the market for diseases caused by Torpid Liver and derrangement of the Stomach or Kidneys.

It is a fact and no one will deny it that JOHNSON'S ALL HEALING WHITE OINTMENT is the best in the market for Burns, Scalds, Chilblains, Salt Rheum, Barbers Itch, Pimples and all Skin Disorders arising from scrofulous taint

W. S. CHRISTOE has been appointed Agent for the above and has them on sale at his Medical Hall, Flesherton. Try for yourselves and be satisfied.

DUNDALK

PUMP WORKS!

C. R. PHILLIP'S,

Manufacturer of all kinds of PUMPS.

Cylinder Check Valve &

Cistern Pumps.

Orders Respectfully Solicited and satisfaction guaranteed.

JAMES SULLIVAN,
Tin-Smith, AGENT,
FLESHERTON.

J. B. SLOAN

Has any quantity of Shingles, &c., on hand at Eugenia.

Cheap for Cash.

James Sullivan,

The Tinsmith, - Flesherton

Repairing, Ravetroughing, and in fact everything in the business will receive my prompt and careful attention at reasonable prices.

THE MARKETS.

FLESHERTON.

Carefully Corrected Each Week.

Flour	$4 00 to 4 20
Fall Wheat	$0 75 to 0 75
Spring Wheat	0 75	0 75
Barley	0 30	0 45
Oats	0 26	0 26
Peas	0 47	0 48
Butter	0 11½	0 12½
Eggs, fresh	0 18	0 13
Potatoes bush	0 50	0 50
Pork	5 60	5 60
Hay, per ton	10 00	10 00
Hides	6 00	7 00
Wool	20	22
Sheepskins	0 40	0 56
Geese	0 05	0 05
Turkeys	0 8	0 8
Chickens per pair	0 25	0 30
Ducks per pair	0 40	0 50

AT GORDON'S

HARNESS SHOP

FLESHERTON,

You will find an assortment of

Heavy and Light Harness,

Whips, Brushes, Curry Combs, Sweat Pads, and the celebrated "Harness Oil."

COLLARS A SPECIALTY.

Cheap for Cash. Call and Examine.

R. J. SPROUL,

Flesherton. Conveyancer, Appraiser, Valuator and Money lender. Deeds, Mortgages, leases and Wills drawn up and Valuations made on shortest notice. Charges very low. Apply to R. J. SPROULE. Postmaster, Flesherton.

CLAYTON'S

HARNESS SHOP!

FLESHERTON,

Is the place to get your Harness Collars, &c, made up in good style.

Shop in W. Clayton's Boot & Shoe Store, Flesherton.

HARNESS HARNESS.

If you want Harness, Single or Double, or Horse Blankets, Trunks, Bells, Valises, Curry Combs, Brushes or the celebrated Harness Oil, call & examine before purchasing elsewhere.

R. J. WATSON,
PRICEVILLE.

PHOTOGRAPHY.

MRS. BULMER,

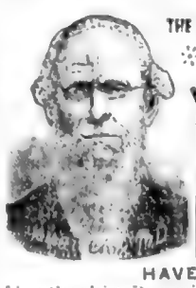
Photographer,

Flesherton - Ont.

Having spent some time in the studio of the famous Toronto Photographer, Mr. S. J. Dixot where I acquired valuable knowledge in Retouching, I feel assured I can give good general satisfaction. A call respectfully solicited.

MRS. BULMER.

Flesherton, Sept. 17th, 1885.



THE CELEBRATED DR CHASES MANDRAKE DANDELION LIVER CURE

HAVE YOU

Liver Complaint, Dyspepsia, Indigestion, Biliousness, Jaundice, Headache, Dizziness, Pain in the Back, Costiveness, or any disease arising from a deranged liver, DR. CHASE'S LIVER CURE will be found a sure and certain remedy.

NATURE'S REMEDY

The unparalleled success of Dr. Chase's Liver Cure Liver Cure, and in connection with the fact that it contains the most well known liver regulators, MANDRAKE and DANDELION, combined with many other invaluable roots, barks and herbs, having a powerful effect on the Kidneys, Stomach, Bowels and Blood. 500,000 SOLD

Over one-half million of Dr. Chase's Recipe Books were sold in Canada alone. We want every man, woman and child who is troubled with Liver Complaint to try this excellent remedy.

SOMETHING NEW. GIVEN AWAY FREE

Wrapped around every bottle of Dr. Chase's Liver Cure is a valuable Household Medical Guide and Recipe Book (84 pages), containing over 200 useful recipes, pronounced by medical men and druggists as invaluable, and worth ten times the price of the medicine.

TRY CHASE'S CATARRH CURE. A safe and positive remedy. Price, 25 cents.

TRY CHASE'S KIDNEY AND LIVER PILLS. 25 cts. per box.

SOLD BY ALL DEALERS

T. EDMANSON & CO., Sole Agents, Bradford

Flesherton Meat Market.

S. SPIRIT, - - PROPRIETOR.

Cash paid for fat Cattle and Sheep.

Fresh Meats constantly on hand for Cash. Orders promptly filled.

—EUGENIA—

Real Estate Agency

MONEY TO LOAN at lowest rates of interest and on terms of repayment to suit borrower.

FARMS bought and sold.

CONVEYANCES of all kinds properly executed.

COMMISSIONER for taking affidavits in H.C.J., Agent for the Norwich Fire Insurance Society. All business promptly, carefully and confidentially attended to.

Office, Corner of Inkerman and Napoleon Streets.

HENRY MELDRUM,
AGENT.

LIVE NEWS ITEMS.

Carefully and Judiciously Clipped from the columns of our Local Exchanges.

Andrew McNary of Markdale was fined $2 and costs by the Magistrate on Saturday, for being drunk and disorderly and using profane language at the railway station.—Dundalk Herald.

The number of births, marriages, and deaths, registered with Mr. James Cavanagh, Clerk Township of Proton, for the half year ending June 30, 1887, is as follows: Births, 45; marriages, 7; deaths, 17.—Dundalk Herald.

Frank Jones, a young lad about seven years of age narrowly escaped drowning in the Saugeen on Monday, and on Tuesday he fell out of a waggon and nearly broke his head.—Hanover Post.

Constable Bernie ran across a couple of disorderly characters on Main St. last Friday night. He captured one of them and made a grab for the other who, however, wrenched himself away and escaped leaving his collar in the constable's hands. The collar is not worth much but Mr. Bernie says he will give the owner a dollar if he will come and claim it.—Hanover Post.

Last week four lambs belonging to Mr. Hugh Wilson, Deputy-Reeve of Brant, were killed by dogs, and three others badly worried.—Walkerton Herald.

Orangeville is a windy place, so are some of its citizens—particularly that "committee on sports and games." On Sunday last the steeple of the English Church was blown off and considerable damage done to the building. No one was in the church at the time.—Shelburne Economist.

Last Tuesday afternoon as Frankie, son of Mr. Wm. Knapp, was standing on a scaffold at a house his father is building he was struck in the face by a falling board, the blow causing him to fall from the scaffold to the ground, a distance of some twelve or thirteen feet. When picked up by his father he was insensible and had to be carried home, but after a time he regained consciousness and, although suffering from a severe bruise in the face where he was struck by the board, it is thought he is not seriously injured.—Shelburne Economist.

A teamster named John Thomas was instantly killed on Friday at Elora by his wagon loaded with lime passing over him.

While assisting at a barn raising on Mr. Pretzel's farm Normanby, last Saturday one of the hands, Mr. Robt. Clark, of Glenedeu, had the first and second toe cut off from one of his feet by a rafter falling endways and striking his foot.

On Tuesday week a distressing accident befel Mr. John Williams and daughter, resident on the 12th Con. Brant. While driving alone the road something apparently went wrong with the harness and the horse became unmanageable, throwing Mr. W. and his daughter out of the buggy. The young lady had a leg broken just below the knee and the knee cap misplaced, while Mr. Williams had several of his ribs broken.—Mt. Forest Confederate.

During the past week this section has been visited with several thunder storms. On Friday evening the house of Mr. Main, near Holstein, was struck by lightening, which entered the chimney, throwing the bricks down and blockading the door. It broke the stove and then went down the cellar. None of the inmates were injured, although considerably frightened. On Tuesday there was another storm, with heavy rain. We have not learned if any damage was done.—Mt. Forest Confederate.

The junior foot-ball club of Markdale challenged the Juniors of this place to play a match on Dominion Day, and instructed our boys to have dinner ready for them on their arrival here. Our boys had everything ready to give the Markdale juniors a good reception, but they didn't show up. This was rather small on the part of the Markdale boys, and it isn't likely that our boys will pay much attention to any further challenges the Markdale juniors may see fit to send them.—Chatsworth News.

On Monday of last week a young man named Dennis Calagan and another named George Walker, of Glenelg, near Markdale, got into a dispute, while doing statute labor, about the drawing powers of Walker's horses. After the dispute while young Walker was unhitching his horses from the wagon, Calaghan struck Walker on the head with a shovel, knocking him senseless. Calaghan was taken to jail last Monday, to await the result of Walker's injuries, and by last accounts Walker's recovery is doubtful, and should he dig Calaghan's life will likely be despaired of by his friends until the result of the trial is known.—Chatsworth News.

Inspector Campbell, in his report, respecting the Durham school, certainly uses very choice and good language, but if he had said the place wanted a good scrubbing ont and white washing it would fill the bill, nothing like using plain English when you want to be understood.—Grey Review.

During the thunder storm on Tuesday afternoon last the lightning struck and killed two young cattle belonging to Mr. Thos. Scarf, about two miles north of Durham. The cattle we understand were some distance from any buildings at the time, and pasturing in a field belonging to Mr. Jas. Edge, beside the Garafraxa road, along with about twenty others. Mr. Scarf had some insurance on the cattle.—Grey Review.

On Thursday of last week as Mr. Edward Porteous was driving down the 5th con. Derby, with a load of gravel, an eight-year-old son of Mr. Donald Curry, unobserved, attempted to climb into the moving wagon, and by some means was thrown before the hind wheel, which passed over his head and neck causing almost instant death.—Grey Review.

On Sunday afternoon last about 2 o'clock, the wife of Mr. Donald McMillan, of Sydenham, near Balaclava, died very suddenly. She had just finished eating a hearty dinner, and was going across the room to get a cup of tea, when she fell. She was carried to a lounge, but expired almost immediately. We understand that she had a paralytic stroke last spring, from the effects of which she had not fully recovered, yet was strong enough to move about. Mrs. McMillan was about 67 years of age, and leaves three married daughters, who, with her husband, have the sincere sympathy of neighbors and friends in their sudden bereavement.—O. S. Times.

Fortify the system, by the use of Ayer's Sarsaparilla, against the diseases peculiar to hot weather. This medicine induces a healthy action of the stomach liver and kidneys, causing them to prevent the accumulation of the poisons which produce disease.

AN INTERESTING LETTER!

From the Pen of our old Friend, Mr. F. T. Carr.

Dear Editor,—Since last addressing myself to you, time has passed muchly, (you ask me where and what I've been) well not dead nor yet all the time sleeping.

SPRING NOTES.

On the 15th of Apail I saw ploughs at work in Artemesia and many doing lively work before the 20th of said month, on the latter date I came to York Tp., and saw only 3 ploughs at work, from Orangeville eastward along the C. P. R. track, and across the country along to near Young St., opposite Clineburg, on the C.P.R. Now who says Artemesia is behind in season. However, I took note of one very conspicuous fact. Nearly all the plowing is done in the fall in the townships eastward of Orangeville. I was impressed with the idea that Artemesia yoemen might profit greatly by doing more fall ploughing. And I am informed by go-a-head farmers here that spring plowing means half crop,—at least in their experience in these towships. Cattle in Artemesia were out on..... grass about the first weeks in April. But here cattle were not let out on grass until 2 or 3 weeks in May. Fall wheat was in many places much winter killed, but what escaped is now a good crop. High, heavy and lots laid down.

All kinds of grain bid fare to be abundant and rich. Hay is an excellent crop and now for a week past the sound of mowing machines can be heard on all sides as you pedest. along the Queen's highway.

Your humble corr was invited by telegraph to put in an appearance in York township, York co., to assist in the erection of a 30,000 feet per day sawmill, and take charge of the fileing of the saws department at remunerative figures, hence his sojourn here. Well, I heard some one say, can it be possible their is so much timber 9 miles from the city of Toronto, that it would be profitable to build a mill to cut it. Well, sir, it is so. By next year this time, cutting at the rate mentioned per day, what is within easy reach of the mill will scarce be all manufactured into lumber. Beautiful pine, basswood and oak to supply in fact the great metropolis of Ont., Toronto with building material. It seems no use to say, oh woodman spare the trees. They fall with ruthless, relentless hands. Just so the people must have homes. 2½ miles west towards the setting sun was the place where your cor. was raised in boyhoods sunny days. A flying visit once a while and old time recolections flit through the mind, old time acquaintances, school mates where are they? Oh happy time of boyhood. I can well say my sentiments are in sympathy with one who has wrote in lyric rhyme.

I've wandered in the village, Tom,
I've sat beneath the tree
Upon the schoolhouse playing ground,
That sheltered you and me,
But none where there to greet me, Tom,
And few were left to know,
That played with us upon the green,
Twenty-five years ago.

But the great long talked of great national day of Jubilee has come. We haste away to the great city to see those great processions, and as the 10,000 loyal jubiliants march to the sound of jubilee music, from almost all kinds of instruments. What a grand, glorious Jubilee! No wonder the multitudes of citizens and spectators enthused and jubileed. Your cor. is well known for a voice that can be heard a mile on ordinary occasions, if he lifts it up and gives it line room. But he could only smile a royal approval, and let the people enthuse on such an extraordinary, extempranous ocacsion, and after cooling drinks and filling meats were partaken of at the exhibition grounds.—after such a long, loyal, patriotic march under a burning 1st July sun walking was not enough to tire or exhaust the enthuse oratory. Artistic, vigorous, sensible, nonsensible, humorous, sober, loyal, patriotic, jubilant, &c., &c., was indulged in by a number of the bon tons. And the populace enthusee and again and again jubilized, and your humble cor. could only wink and smile a jubilant approval. Why yes! why not! Such a jubilee only comes once in 50 years! Alas! a life time! How fast time glides away.

One more feature and that, ah! me! to mar such a jubilee. Look. Why those unmanly, unjubilant, unsteady steps of so many otherwise noble men. Let me ask, one, just one, what's the matter? The sun burned and we took a little Limejuce to cool us you know, it it it's jubilee. Ah, friend, dont you khow that alcohol or any other poison in a human stomach burns, whether it is adulterated with limejuce or anything else? Burns worse than the sun Hic, hic, y-yes but you know ju-ju-jubilee.—F. T. C.

A Common Cold

Is often the beginning of serious affections of the Throat, Bronchial Tubes, and Lungs. Therefore, the importance of early and effective treatment cannot be overestimated. Ayer's Cherry Pectoral may always be relied upon for the speedy cure of a Cold or Cough.

Last January I was attacked with a severe Cold, which, by neglect and frequent exposures, became worse, finally settling on my lungs. A terrible cough soon followed, accompanied by pains in the chest, from which I suffered intensely. After trying various remedies, without obtaining relief, I commenced taking Ayer's Cherry Pectoral, and was

Speedily Cured.

I am satisfied that this remedy saved my life.—Jno. Webster, Pawtucket, R. I.

I contracted a severe cold, which suddenly developed into Pneumonia, presenting dangerous and obstinate symptoms. My physician at once ordered the use of Ayer's Cherry Pectoral. His instructions were followed, and the result was a rapid and permanent cure.—H. E. Simpson, Rogers Prairie, Texas.

Two years ago I suffered from a severe Cold which settled on my Lungs. I consulted various physicians, and took the medicines they prescribed, but received only temporary relief. A friend induced me to try Ayer's Cherry Pectoral. After taking two bottles of this medicine I was cured. Since then I have given the Pectoral to my children, and consider it for Colds, Coughs, and all Throat and Lung diseases, ever used in my family.—Robert Vanderpool, Meadville, Pa.

The Best Remedy

Some time ago I took a slight Cold, which, being neglected, grew worse, and settled on my lungs. I had a hacking cough, and was very weak. Those who knew me best considered my life to be in great danger. I continued to suffer until I commenced using Ayer's Cherry Pectoral. Less than one bottle of this valuable medicine cured me, and I feel that I owe the preservation of my life to its curative powers.—Mrs. Ann Lockwood, Akron, New York.

Ayer's Cherry Pectoral is considered, here, the one great remedy for all diseases of the throat and lungs, and is more in demand than any other medicine of its class.—J. F. Roberts, Magnolia, Ark.

Ayer's Cherry Pectoral,

Prepared by Dr. J. C. Ayer & Co., Lowell, Mass. Sold by Druggists. Price $1, six bottles, $5.

STRAYED,

CAME to the premises of the undersigned, Lot 3, Con. 4, Artemesia, on 8th June, 1 steer. Owner can have the same by proving property and paying expenses. WM. FLETCHER.

STRAYED

FROM the premises of the undersigned, Lot 145, 2nd Range West, Back Line, 1 red, yearling steer. Any person giving information will be suitably rewarded.

JEREMIAH PIPER.

Publisher's Announcement!

In the matter of

FINE JOB

Printing!

It is generally conceded that the

Flesherton Advance

TAKES THE

BISCUIT!

EVERY TIME!

Posters! Posters!

From an Eighth Sheet to a mammoth Three-Sheeter—plain or in colors—at prices that will arrest your attention and surprise you.

Auction Sale Bills

WHILE YOU WAIT.

PAMPHLETS!

Big, Little, Great and Small.

TAMARAC ELIXIR

NATURE'S REMEDY.

FOR COUGHS, COLDS, HOARSENESS, THROAT & LUNG COMPLAINTS.

INSTANT RELIEF. POSITIVE CURE.

SOUTHERN ASTHMA CURE

DOUBLE TREATMENT IN EACH PACKAGE

INSTANT RELIEF FOR

ASTHMA AND BRONCHITIS

BY MAIL ON RECEIPT OF PRICE

SAMPLES, 25c.; REGULAR SIZE, $1.00

ADDRESS FULFORD & CO., BROCKVILLE, ONT.

The well-bred Durham Bull

"DAUNTLESS!"

(Reg. Pedigree

WILL be for the service of Cows [illegible] 1887 at his own place, Lot [illegible] 1st Range West, T. & S.R., Artemesia.

TERMS:—$1.00 per cow, payable on or before Jan 1st, 1888. Cows not returned regularly to bull will be charged whether in calf or not.

DONALD McKENZIE.

TIMBER AND LAND SALE.

CERTAIN lots and the timber thereon situate in the Townships of Allan, Assiginack, Billwell, Billings, Carnarvon, Campbell, Howland, Sheguiandah, Tehkummah and Mills on the Manitoulin Island, in the District of Algoma, in the Province of Ontario, will be offered for Sale at Public Auction in blocks of 200 acres, more or less on the first day of September next, at 10 o'clock A.M. at the Indian Land Office in the Village of Manitowaning.

Terms of sale:—Bonus for timber payable in cash, price of land payable in cash, a license fee also payable in cash and dues to be paid accordingly to Tariff upon the timber when cut.

The land on which the timber grows to be sold with the timber without conditions of settlement.

At the same time and place the Merchantable Timber of not less than nine inches in diameter at the butt on the Spanish River Reserve and French River lower Reserve will be offered for sale for a cash bonus and annual ground rent of $1.00 per square mile, and dues to be paid on the timber as cut, according to Tariff of this Department.

For full particulars please apply to Jas. C. Phipps, Esq., Indian Supt. Manitowaning, or to the undersigned.

No other paper to insert this advertisement without authority through the Queen's Printer

L. VANKOUGHNET,
Deputy of the Supt. Gen'l of Indian Affairs.

Department of Indian Affairs,
Ottawa, 2nd June, 1887.

NOTICE.

GRAY CHAMPION!

A THOROUGH-BRED DURHAM BULL, with good pedigree, will stand for service at Lot 142 West T. & S.R., Artemesia. TERMS, $1 if paid on or before Jan. 1st, 1888; otherwise, $1.25.

Also thorough bred BERKSHIRE BOAR at same place. JACOB A. LEVER.

Medical.

DR. CARTER,
M.C.P. & S., ONT.
PHYSICIAN, SURGEON, &c.
FLESHERTON.

Office, Strain's block. Residence, Wm. Wright's

Dentistry.

DENTISTRY.

Thomas Henderson, L.D.S.
SURGEON DENTIST.

Gold Medalist and Honor Graduate of the R.C.D.S.,

WILL visit FLESHERTON, (Munshaw's Hotel) 1 and 2 of each month. Teeth extracted, inserted and filled in the highest styles of the art, at moderate rates.

HEAD OFFICE, 761 YONGE ST., TOR.

Legal.

J. W. FROST, LL.B.,
Barrister, Solicitor, Conveyancer.

Office,—Strain's Building, FLESHERTON.

A. A. CHESLEY, Solicitor and Conveyancer, Kemble Manager.

MR. FROST will be found at the Office on Thursdays as heretofore.

P. McCULLOUGH,
Barrister, Solicitor, &c.
Office, over McFarland's Store, Markdale. Money to Loan.

MASSON & MASSON,

BARRISTERS, SOLICITORS, &c.
OFFICES—Owen Sound, in Vicker's block Poulett St.; Branch office in Markdale, over McFarland's store, on Friday and Saturday every week.

J. MASSON, Q.C. S. MASSON. W. MASSON

N.B.—Private & Company's funds to invest at from Six to Eight per cent.

Business Cards.

John W. Armstrong,
FLESHERTON, CO. GREY.

DIVISION COURT CLERK, COMMISSIONER in B. R., Conveyancer, &c. Agent for purchased sale of lands. Appraiser for C. L. C. Com and F. P. B. & S. Society. Money to Loan on the most reasonable terms. Issues MARRIAGE LICENSES. NOTARY PUBLIC.

MONEY TO LOAN.
At 6 Per Cent.
On Town or Farm Property.
S. DANIELL.

W. J. BELLAMY,
TWP. CLERK ARTEMESIA.
CONVEYANCER, COMMISSIONER, INSURANCE AGT, &c.

DEEDS, MORTGAGES, LEASES, &c., prepared. [illegible] in first class companies. Money to lend at lowest rates.

GET YOUR MEAT
—:FROM:—
Petch & Mitchell,
GENERAL BUTCHERS,
FLESHERTON!
Cash paid for fat cattle, &c., &c.

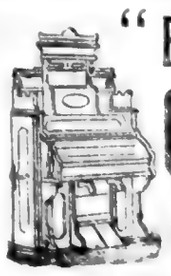
NEW LIVERY!

THE undersigned begs to announce that he has started a first-class Livery in the stand opposite Munshaw's Hotel, Flesherton, where the travelling public can be accommodated with good rigs and horses at most reasonable prices. Try me and be convinced.

Respectfully yours,
W. H. JOHNSTON.

Flesherton, Nov. 19th, 1886.

Picture Framing,
Neatly, Cheaply & Quickly Done, by
J. E. MOORE,
Durham St., Opposite Clayton's Harness Shop



"BELL" ORGANS

Unapproached for Tone and Quality.

CATALOGUES FREE.

BELL & CO., Guelph, Ont.

New Words to Auld Lang Syne.

Come, bring the soul filled breaker now,
We'll drink to other years,
To friendships hallowed by "lang syne,"
And loves embalmed in tears.
To loves embalmed in tears, my friend.
Where only smiles once shone,
We'll drink the loves of other days
And call them "still our own."

We'll think upon the grass hid mounds
The silent, sacred spots
Where o'er the heads of cherished ones
Bloom blue "for-get-me-nots."
We'll drink to the dead and absent ones
To friends we used to know;
To many a hand that clasped our own
Beloved of long ago.

We know not which shall fall asleep
The first, whose call the first shall be,
Whether my tears for you shall fall,
Or you bend over me.
We only know that each can say
Here sleeps a heart truth called its own,
God keep it pure and happy still,
In sight of His white throne.

—Lizzie Petit Cutler in Home Journal.

SIR HUGH'S LOVES.

Somehow Nea went home not quite so happily that day; a dim consciousness that things were different, that it never rested paps to play with her, oppressed her childish brain; and that evening Nea moped in her splendid nursery, and would not be consoled by her toys or even her birds and kitten. Presently it came out with floods of tears that Nea wanted her father—wanted him very badly indeed.

"You must not be naughty, Miss Nea," returned nurse, severly, for she was rather out of patience with the child's pettishness; "Mr. Huntingdon has a lot of grand people to dine with him to-night. The carriages will be driving up by and by, and if you are good you shall go into one of the best bedrooms and look at them." But Nea was not to be pacified by this; the tears ended in a fit of perverse sulking that lasted until bedtime. Nea would neither look at the carriages nor the people; the ice and fruit that had been provided as a treat were pushed angrily away; Nea would not look at the dainties, she turned her flushed face aside and buried it in her pillow. "I want papa," she sobbed, as nurse pulled down the blind and left her.

That night, as Mr. Huntingdon crossed the corridor that led to his bedroom, he was startled by seeing what looked like a mass of blue and white draperies flung across his door, but as he lowered his candlestick he saw it was Nea lying fast asleep, with her head pillowed on her arms, and her dark hair half hiding her face.

"Good heavens! what can nurse be about!" he exclaimed in a shocked voice, as he lifted the child, and carried her back to her bed. Nea stirred drowsily as he moved her, and said, "Dear papa," and one warm arm crept about his neck, but she was soon fast asleep again. Somehow that childish caress haunted Mr. Huntingdon, and he thought once or twice how pretty she had looked. Nurse had assured him that the child must have crept out of bed in her sleep, but Mr. Huntingdon did not feel satisfied, and the next morning, as he was eating his breakfast, he sent for Nea.

She came to him willingly enough, and stood beside him.

"What were you doing, my dear, last night?" he asked kindly as he kissed her. "Did nurse tell you that I found you lying by my bedroom door, and that I carried you back to bed?"

"Yes, papa; but why did you not wake me? I tried not to go to sleep until you came, but I suppose I could not help it."

"But what were you doing?" he asked, in a puzzled tone; "don't you know, Nea, that it was very wrong for a little girl to be out of her bed at that time of night?" But as Mr. Huntingdon spoke he remembered again how sweet the childish face had looked, pillowed on the round dimpled arm.

"I was waiting to see you, papa," replied Nea with perfect frankness; "you are always too busy or too tired to come and see me, you know, and nurse is so cross, and so is Miss Sanderson; they will never let me come and find you; so when nurse came to take away the lamp I pretended to be asleep, and then I crept out of bed, and went to your door and tried to keep awake."

"Why did you want to see me, Nea?" asked her father, more and more puzzled; it never entered his head that his only child wanted him and longed for him.

"Oh," she said, looking up at him with innocent eyes that reminded him of her mother, "I always want you, papa, though not so badly as yesterday; Colonel Hambleton was playing with Nora and Janie, and Nora said her papa was never too busy to play with them, and that made me cry a little, for you never play with me, do you, papa? and you never look up when I am waving from the balcony, and nurse says you don't want to be worried with me, but that is not true, is it, papa?"

"No, no!" but his conscience pricked him as he patted her head and picked out a crimson peach for her. "There, run away, Nea, for I am really in a hurry; if you are a good girl you shall come down and sit with me while I have dinner, for I shall be alone to-night;" and Nea tripped away happily.

From that day people noticed a change in Mr. Huntingdon; he began to take interest in his child, without being demonstrative, for to his cold nature demonstration was impossible; he soon evinced a decided partiality for his daughter's society; and no wonder, as people said, for she was a most engaging little creature.

By and by she grew absolutely necessary to him, and they were never long apart. Strangers would pause to admire the pretty child on her cream-colored pony cantering beside the dark, handsome man. Nea always presided now at the breakfast-table; the dimpled hands would carry the cup of coffee round to her father's chair, and lay flowers beside his plate. When he was alone she sat beside him as he ate his dinner, and heard about the ships that were coming across the ocean laden with goodly freights. Nea grew into a beautiful girl presently, and then a new ambition awoke in Mr. Huntingdon's breast. Nea was his only child—with such beauty, talents and wealth, she would be a match for an earl's son; his heart swelled with pride as he looked at her; he began to cherish dreams of her future that would have amazed Nea. A certain young nobleman had lately made their acquaintance, a handsome simple young fellow, with a very moderate allowance of brains; indeed, in his heart Mr. Huntingdon knew that Lord Bertie Gower was merely a feather-brained boy with a weak, vacillating will that had already brought him into trouble.

Mr. Huntingdon was thinking about Lord Bertie Gower as he rode away that spring morning, while Nea waved to him from the balcony; he had looked up at her and smiled, but as he turned away his thoughts were very busy. Yes, Lord Bertie was a fool, he knew that—perhaps he would not own as much to any one else, certainly not if Lord Bertie became his son-in-law—but he was well-bred and had plenty of good-nature, and——. Well, young men were all alike, they would have their fling, and he was hardly the man to cast a stone at them. Then he was a good-looking fellow, and girls liked him; and if Nea laughed at him, and said that he was stupid, he could soon convince her that there was no need for her husband to be clever—she was clever enough for both; he would like to see the man, with the exception of himself, who could bend Nea's will. The girl took after him in that she had not inherited her mother's soft yielding nature—poor Susan, who had loved him so well.

Lord Bertie needed a strong hand; as his son-in-law, Mr. Huntingdon thought that he could keep him in order. The boy was certainly in love with Nea. He must come to an understanding with him. True, he was only a second son; but his brother, Lord Leveson, was still a bachelor, and rather shaky in his health. The family were not as a rule long-lived; they were constitutionally and morally weak; and the old Earl had already had a touch of paralysis. Yes, Mr. Huntingdon thought it would do; and there was Groombridge Hall for sale, he thought he would buy that; it should be his wedding gift—part of the rich dowry that she would bring to her husband.

Mr. Huntingdon planned it all as he rode down to the city that morning, and it never entered his mind what Nea would say to his choice. His child belonged to him. She was part of himself. Hitherto his will had been hers. True, he had denied her nothing; he had never demanded even a trifling sacrifice from her; there was no fear that she would cross his will if he told her seriously that he had set his heart on this marriage; and he felt no pity for the motherless young creature, who in her beauty and innocence appealed so strongly to his protection. In his strange nature love was only another form of pride; his egotism made him incapable of unselfish tenderness

Nea little knew of the thoughts that filled her father's mind as she watched him fondly until both horse and rider had disappeared.

It was one of those days in the early year when the spring seems to rush upon the world as though suddenly new born, when there is all at once a delicious whisper and rustle of leaves, and the sunshine permeates everything; when the earth wakes up fresh, green, and laden with dews; and soft breezes, fragrant with the promise of summer, come stealing into the open windows. Nea looked like the embodiment of spring as she stood there in her white gown. Below her was the cool green garden of the square where she had played as a child, with the long morning shadows lying on the grass; around her were the twitterings of the house-martins and the cheeping of sparrows under the eaves; from the distance came the perfumy breath of violets.

Such days make the blood course tumultuously through the veins of youth, when with the birds and all the live young things that sport in the sunshine, they feel that mere existence is a joy and a source of endless gratitude.

"Who so happy as I?" thought Nea, as she tripped through the great empty rooms of Belgrave House, with her hands full of golden primroses; "how delicious it is only to be alive on such a morning."

Alas for that happy spring-tide, for the joyousness and glory of her youth. Little did Nea guess as she flitted, like a white butterfly, from one flower vase to another, that her spring-tide was already over, and that the cloud that was to obscure her life was dawning slowly in the east.

CHAPTER VIII.

MAURICE TRAFFORD.

I have no reason than a woman's reason;
I think him so, because I think him so.
Shakspeare.

Before noon there was terror and confusion in Belgrave House. Nea, flitting like a humming-bird from flower to flower, was suddenly startled by the sound of heavy jolting foot-steps on the stairs, and, coming out on the corridor, she saw strange men carrying the insensible figure of her father to his room. She uttered a shrill cry and sprang towards them, but a gentleman who was following them put her gently aside, and telling her that he was a doctor, and that he would come to her presently, quietly closed the door.

Nea, sitting on the stairs and weeping passionately, heard from a sympathising bystander the little there was to tell.

Mr. Huntingdon had met with an accident in one of the crowded city lanes. His horse had shied at some passing object and had thrown him—here Nea uttered a low cry—but that was not all.

His horse had flung him at the feet of a very Juggernaut, a mighty waggon piled with wool bales nearly as high as a house. One of the leaders had backed on his haunches at the unexpected obstacle; but the other, a foolish young horse, reared, and in another moment would certainly have trodden out the brains of the insensible man, had not a youth—a mere boy—suddenly rushed from the crowded footpath and threw himself full against the terrified animal, so for one brief instant retarding the movement of the huge waggon while Mr. Huntingdon was dragged aside.

It had all happened in a moment; the next moment the horses were plunging and rearing, with the driver swearing at them, and the young man had sunk on a truck white as death, and faint from the pain of his sprained arm and shoulder.

"Who is he?" cried Nea, impetuously, "what have they done with him?"

He was in the library, the butler informed her. The doctor had promised to dress his shoulder after he had attended to Mr. Huntingdon. No, his mistress need not go down, Wilson went on; it was only Mr. Trafford, one of the junior clerks. Only a junior clerk! Nea flashed an indignant look as Wilson spoke. What if he were the city-messenger; her father should make his fortune, and she would go and thank him. But there was no time for this, for the same grave-looking doctor who had closed her father's door against her was now standing on the threshold; and Nea forgot everything in her gratitude and joy as he told her that, though severely injured, Mr. Huntingdon was in no danger, and with quiet and rest, and good nursing, he would soon be himself again. It would all depend on her, he added, looking at the agitated girl in a fatherly manner; and he bade her dry her eyes and look as cheerful as she could, that she might not disturb Mr. Huntingdon. Nea obeyed him; she choked down her sobs resolutely, and with a strange paleness on her young face, stole into the darkened room and stood beside him.

"Well, Nea," observed her father, huskily, as she took his hand and kissed it; "I have had a narrow escape; another instant and it would have been all over with me. Is Wilson there?"

"Yes, papa," answered Nea, still holding his hand to her cheek, as she knelt beside him; and the gray-haired butler stepped up to the bed.

"Wilson, let Stephenson know that he is to get rid of Gypsy at once. She has been a bad bargain to me, and this trick of hers might have cost me my life."

"You are not going to sell Gypsy, papa," exclaimed the girl, forgetting the doctor's injunctions in her dismay; "not your own beautiful Gypsy?"

"I never allow people or animals to offend me twice, Nea. It is not the first time Gypsy has played this trick on me. Let Stephenson see to it at once. I will not keep her. Tell him to let Uxbridge see her, he admired her last week; he likes spirit and will not mind a high figure, and he knows her pedigree."

"Yes, sir," replied Wilson.

"By the by," continued Mr. Huntingdon, feebly, "some one told me just now about a youth who had done me a good turn in the matter. Did you hear his name, Wilson?"

"Yes, papa," interrupted Nea, eagerly; "it was Mr. Trafford, one of the junior clerks, and he is downstairs in the library, waiting for the doctor to dress his shoulder."

Nea would have said more, for her heart was full of gratitude to the heroic young stranger; but her father held up his hand deprecatingly, and she noticed that his face was very pale.

"That will do, my dear. You speak too fast, and my poor head is still painful and confused;" and as Nea looked distressed at her thoughtlessness, he continued, kindly, "Never mind, Dr. Ainslie says I shall be all right soon—he is going to send me a nurse. Trafford, you say; that must be Maurice Trafford, a mere junior. Let me see, what did Dobson say about him?" and Mr. Huntingdon lay and pondered with that hard set face of his, until he had mastered the facts that had escaped his memory.

"Ah, yes, the youngest clerk but one in the office; a curate's son from Birmingham, an orphan—no mother—and drawing a salary of seventy pounds a year. Dobson told me about him; a nice, gentlemanly lad; works well—he seems to have taken a fancy to him. He is an old fool is Dobson, and full of vagaries, but a thoroughly good man of business. He said Trafford was a fellow to be trusted, and would make a good clerk by and by. Humph, a rise will not hurt him. One cannot give a diamond ring to a boy like that. I will tell Dobson to-morrow to raise Trafford's salary to a hundred a year."

"Papa," burst from Nea's lips as she overheard this muttered soliloquy, but, as she remembered the doctor's advice, she prudently remained quiet; but if any one could have read her thoughts at that moment, could have known the oppression of gratitude in the heart of the agitated girl toward the stranger who had just saved her father from a horrible death, and whose presence of mind and self-forgetfulness were to be repaid by the paltry sum of thirty pounds a year! "Papa," she exclaimed, and then in her forbearance kept quiet.

"Ah, Nea, are you there still?" observed her father in some surprise; "I do not want to keep you a prisoner, my child. Wilson can sit by me while I sleep, for I must not be disturbed after I have taken the composing draught Dr. Ainslie ordered. Go out for a drive and amuse yourself; and, wait a moment, Nea, perhaps you had better say a civil word or two to young Trafford, and see if Mrs. Thorpe has attended to him. He shall hear from me officially to-morrow; yes," muttered Mr. Huntingdon as his daughter left the room, "a hundred a year is an ample allowance for a junior, more than that would be ill-advised and lead to presumption."

Maurice Trafford was in the library trying to forget the pain of his injured arm, which was beginning to revenge itself for that moment's terrible strain.

The afternoon's shadows lay on the garden of the square, the children were playing under the acacia trees, the house-martins still circled and wavered in the sunlight.

Through the open window came the soft spring breezes and the distant hum of young voices; within was warmth, silence, and the perfume of violets.

Maurice closed his drowsy eyes with a delicious sense of luxurious forgetfulness, and then opened them with a start; for some one had gently called him by his name, and for a moment he thought it was still his dream, for standing at the foot of the couch was a girl as beautiful as any vision, who held out her hand to him, and said in the sweetest voice he had ever heard:

"Mr. Trafford, you have saved my father's life. I shall be grateful to you all my life."

Maurice was almost dizzy as he stood up and looked at the girl's earnest face and eyes brimming over with tears, and the sunlight and the violets and the children's voices seemed all confused; and as he took her offered hand a strange shyness kept him silent.

"I have heard all about it," she went on. "I know, while others stood by too terrified to move, you risked your own life to protect my father—that you stood between him and death while they dragged him out from the horses' feet. It was noble—heroic;" and here Nea clasped her hands, and the tears ran down her cheeks.

Poor impetuous child; these were hardly the cold words of civility that her pompous father had dictated, and were to supplement the thirty pounds per annum, "officially delivered." Surely, as she looked at the young man in his shabby coat, she must have remembered that it was only Maurice Trafford, the junior clerk—the drudge of a mercantile house.

Nea owned afterwards that she had forgotten everything; in after years she confessed that Maurice's grave young face came upon her like a revelation.

She had admirers by the score—the handsome weak-minded Lord Bertie among them—but never had she seen such a face as Maurice Trafford's, the poor curate's son.

Maurice's pale face flushed up under the girl's enthusiastic praise, but he answered very quietly:

"I did very little, Miss Huntingdon; any one could have done as much. How could I stand by and see your father's danger, and not go to his help?" and then, as the intolerable pain in his arm brought back the faintness, he asked her permission to reseat himself. "He would go home," he said, wearily, "and then he need trouble no one."

Nea's heart was full of pity for him. She could not bear the thought of his going back to his lonely lodgings, with no one to take care of him, but there was no help for it. So Mrs. Thorpe was summoned with her remedies, and the carriage was ordered. When it came round Maurice looked up in his young hostess's face with his honest grey eyes and frank smile and said good-bye. And the smile and the grey eyes, and the touch of the thin boyish hand, were never to pass out of Nea's memory from that day.

* * * * * *

The shadows grew longer and longer in the gardens of the square, the house-martins twitted merrily about their nests, the flower girls sat on the area steps with their baskets of roses and jonquils, when Mr. Huntingdon laid aside his invalid habits and took up his old life again, far too soon, as the doctors said who attended him. His system had received a severer shock than they had first imagined, and they recommended Baden-Baden and perfect rest for some months.

But as well might they have spoken to the summer leaves that were swirling down the garden paths, as move Mr. Huntingdon from his usual routine. He only smiled incredulously, said that he felt perfectly well, and rode off every morning eastward on the new grey mare that had replaced Gypsy.

And Nea flitted about the room among her birds and flowers, and wondered sometimes if she should ever see Maurice Trafford again. While Maurice, on his side, drudged patiently on, very happy and satisfied with his sudden rise, and dreaming foolish youthful dreams, and both of them were ignorant, poor children, that the wheel of destiny was revolving a second time to bring them nearer together.

(To be continued.)

Heavy Damages for Slander.

A peculiar slander case has just been tried at Pictou, N.S. The plaintiff, Mrs. Jas. Brown, of New Glasgow, claimed $10,000 damages from R. S. McCurdy, of the same town, for words imputing to her looseness of character, spoken by the defendant under the following circumstances: One Leindberg, an artist, some months ago requested permission of the defendant to place a picture of Mrs. Brown on exhibition in his store window. Shortly after a fellow-citizen, Fraser, informed the defendant that the picture was that of a woman of sullied reputation. McCurdy at once removed the picture and when the artist called for an explanation expressed his opinion of the plaintiff's character in vigorous terms. For using this language the action was brought. The plaintiff is a decidedly pretty blonde, and her manner and appearance as she detailed the history of her happy married life were calculated to make a favorable impression on the jury. She related the insults to which she had been subjected after the reports got abroad through the newspapers. Pointed at and laughed at on the streets of New Glasgow, made the victim of unsought and offensive attentions on the train and the recipient of tickets to the theatres from unknown admirers, it was evident she had suffered in consequence. The defence was denial, and that the communication was made in good faith and privileged. After being out a short time the jury brought in a verdict giving the plaintiff $4,000 damages.

The Reporters' Revenge.

The public do not know how much public speeches are "touched up" by the reporters. Even the most accomplished speaker, through excitement or want of words, or because of interruptions, occasionally loses the sequence of his argument, and repeats himself or breaks off before his sentence is completed. When the reporter writes out his report he is expected to "make sense" of it. One of our local aldermen got out of favor with the reporters by complaining that he had never said the things placed to his credit or discredit. We had no right, he maintained, to comment on his speeches when we only gave garbled instead of verbatim reports of them. So the reporters, who had put themselves to some trouble to translate his disjointed remarks into intelligible English, agreed to report him verbatim next time. He never wanted another verbatim report, and it cannot be pleasant to him to know that many of his friends preserve that one.—St. James' Gazette.

A Man Shoots His Wife.

David Robb, of No. 63 Pearl street, Toronto, was drinking hard on Saturday, and being jealously inclined began to abuse his wife. He picked up a 32-calibre revolver and threatened to shoot, and his wife fled through the back door to the woodshed. He kept his word and took a flying shot at her, sending a bullet crashing through her right forearm. He then sought the refining influences of a saloon close by to drown his murderous passions in the flowing bowl. Dr. Cook was called and extracted the bullet from Mrs. Robb's arm. The would-be murderer was arrested.

Some of Tiffin's sweetest girls were taking a tour through the new Court House, with Celia Forbing, a Kenton belle, in tow. Just like one of those daring Kenton girls, Celia stepped up to the marriage record and bluffed any young man present to take out the papers and make her his'n. Ed. Homan walked up and accepted the challenge. Notice of it was published in the papers, and it is said the young couple drove over to Fostoria to get spliced in the evening.—Marion (O.) Mirror.

Shad have nearly forsaken the Connecticut River.

FARM AND GARDEN.

Seasonable Hints for Readers in the Country.

It is now conceded that ensilage is the cheapest cattle food that can be produced on the farm.

Fruit growers say that raspberries grown for evaporating can be much more easily gathered by knocking the fruit off.

A great many weeds can be used, when just coming up, as greens, such as poke, lamb's quarter and dandelion; but it is better to grow mustard and kale instead, and plough under all weeds.

Experiments in the west show that one of the best crosses of horses is the Percheron stallion and thoroughbred mare, the produce combining the large size of the sire with the activity and endurance of the dam.

If the fruit coming to market were first assorted in some manner the prices obtained would be larger. It is better not to pick the small fruit than to mix the berries. Quantity does not pay as well as quality and attractive appearance.

Pick out your breeders, says the Farm Journal, the pigs with long bodies, broad backs and deep, round hams. Select a breed which has hair on it. A good coat of hair counts on a hog as well as any animal. It is a protection in summer and in winter.

In twenty days the eggs of one hen would exceed the weight of her body. So of any bird. Yet the whole of that mass of albumen is drawn directly from her blood. If stinted in food, of course, it would limit the number as well as the size of the eggs.

Good butter cows will make a pound of butter to every 14 to 18 pounds of milk. "General purpose cows" want from 22 to 31 pounds, and some cows would require 50 pounds of milk to make a pound of butter. Average dairies require somewhere about 25 pounds of milk to make a pound of butter.

After shearing ticks will emigrate from the shorn sheep to the lamb; then is the time to drive the ticks out of the flocks. Watch the lambs, says Farm and Home, and when the ticks have colonized them dip in tobacco water. Twelve to fifteen pounds refuse tobacco boiled in a gallon or two of water, then diluted to make one barrel, will do for 100 lambs.

Josiah Hooper thinks that if farmers were aware of the value of the cutting back process on their newly set trees we should hear of fewer failures and see better-shaped specimens. Peach trees a year from the bud should have the side branches headed back to short spurs and the leader severely shortened; there would then be a fine growth of young wood, and also a good root development.

If we wish to form in our cow the habits of quantity and continuity in milking we must between the first and second calvings exercise the utmost care to see that she is not only provided with the food to give the largest flow of best milk but that the milking tendency is at this period fostered and encouraged by every reasonably available means. At this time in the life of the cow is this tendency fixed.—Rural Canadian.

To cure diarrhœa in fowls, take new milk, say half a cup for each fowl, heat an iron poker, or any suitable piece of iron, red hot and scorch the milk with it; give as warm as the fowl can stand it. It is a sure cure for looseness in calves, colts or humans, and will check looseness in fowls. Give it to fowls with a spoon; let it run down the roof of the mouth, so that it will not get in the windpipe.

It is stated by the North British Agriculturist that in a gallon of skim milk there is nearly a pound of solid food, almost chemically similar to the lean of meat. This is the flesh of the milk, and there is no reason why it should not be eaten as a food, just as meat is eaten, with the addition of any kind of pure foreign fat; but, being mingled with a liquid, the people are unable to appreciate it, and rarely perceive the fact that it is a food at all.

Give the breed sows the run of a clover field all through the summer if possible. It is less stimulating than any dry winter food, and will keep them in health with far less fever than any other food we have ever tried. The pigs, moreover, will soon learn to pick at it and eventually make it their staple food, giving them growth, health, frame and size, and fit them for the purposes of life, be that breeding or fattening, better than anything else.—Rural World

If the field be heavily covered with tall weeds, and there be no other crop growing thereon, broadcast ten bushels of lime over the weeds and plow them under, before they seed, as a green manurial crop. Allow them to remain a month, then harrow in two bushels of rye per acre, and plow the rye under when it is three feet high, turning it down with a chain, and next spring the land will be excellent for corn.

In their native hills it is said that the Cheviot sheep are excelled by none. They are as large as the Cotswolds, while the mutton is considered better and the fleece finer and closer. On good pasture the fleece grows finer and sells for a higher price than when the animals are fed on coarse grass. Of course the mutton is affected to a considerable extent by the quality of the food, but if they can get the same sort of feed as in their native home their meat will be equally excellent.

A writer in the American Rural Home thus describes how he avoided potato bugs: "In planting potatoes I dropped a handful of unleached ashes upon each hill after spatting the ground with the hoe, believing it would be disagreeable to the bugs when they made their first appearance, which is the best time to fight them, as the first ones that come do not feed upon the vines, the slugs from the eggs being the real depredators. As a result I have found and killed five beetles, when before I numbered thousands upon the same ground."

M. Mouly has submitted to official investigation his system of heating buildings, by which he is enabled to transport heat, with hardly any loss, to distances up to 300 or 400 yards. The inventor completely isolates his pipes by means of air jackets. The pipes can be laid underground or overhead. At the entrance of the central pipe a jet of steam is placed, which, acting as an injector, forces in air, and heats the latter at the same time. The air drawn in is obtained from the first jacket, and thus is elevated in temperature before it comes in contact with the steam. By this means great economy in fuel is obtained.

My Little Bo Peep.

My little Bo Peep is fast asleep,
  And her head on my heart is lying,
I gently rock, and the old hall clock
  Strikes a knell of the day that's dying;
But what care I how the hours go by,
  Whether swiftly they go or creeping?
Not an hour could be but dear to me,
  When my babe on my arm is sleeping.

Her little bare feet, with dimples sweet,
  From the folds of her gown are peeping,
And each wee toe like a daisy in blow,
  I caress as she lies a-sleeping;
Her golden hair falls over the chair,
  Its treasures of beauty unfolding,
I press my lips to her finger tips
  That my hands are so tightly holding.

Tick, tock, tick, tock; you may wait, old clock,
  It was foolish what I was saying;
Let your seconds stay, your minutes play,
  And bid your days go all a Maying.
O, Time! stand still—let me drink my fill
  Of content while my babe is sleeping;
As I smooth her hair, my life looks fair,
  And to-morrow—I may be weeping.

That Hateful Man.

I hated Henry Carling from the first time he took his seat in front of me at table d'hote in the Sea Beach Hotel and looked at me so much it interfered with my appetite. When I went out rowing and the boat upset he was on hand to fish me out. I suppose I ought to have been grateful for that, but I wasn't. I'm sure he knew my boat was cranky and followed me on purpose; besides the waves were not running very high.

He was an artist and could spend hours looking at a sunset. Did you ever know anything good of a man who could act in that incomprehensible manner?

I was out walking about a week after I allowed the young man to save me from drowning.

I walked, and walked, and walked. Presently I came to a cottage, outside of which a beautiful little child, with long hair, was playing. The pretty little thing ran after me laughing.

I held out my hand to him.

We walked on toward a clump of wild flowers that hung over the road in a graceful way that I am too stupid to describe or draw, though Henry Carling can do both. I suppose that, though I may dislike a person, I'm able to do that person some sort of justice.

We—the child and I—were seated together on the little rock I had chosen as a resting-place, when suddenly there came in sight an object I shall never forget—no, not to my dying hour.

It was a dog; mad, it was too easy to see. It ran on, hanging its head, but with wild eyes and foaming at the mouth' hideous and furious. It flew at the little child.

I only remember one thing. As it flew at the child I caught its throat. I held it with the strength of the madness of that terror, for the little creature's sake, that had come upon me, and there I stood. I did not tremble.

The horrible saliva ran from the dog's mouth. It did not touch my hands. Fortunately, too, I had doeskin gloves to keep my hands from freckling and tanning.

I stood so—and ages seemed to pass—when Henry Carling came up. With him were three men.

How they mastered the dog I do not remember. After that I fainted.

When I revived I had been carried, I found, into the cottage of the little child's mother. She was kneeling beside me and saying all manner of things to me about "saving her boy's life."

As for Henry Carling, he was crying.

The idea of crying like a baby, a grown man!

And all because a girl held a mad dog! I suppose he would have had me think of nobody but myself and run off! I hate such people!

Two days afterward his sister came to see me. I had to keep my bed. I was overcome by something or other—fright, I suppose, for when it was over I could not but admit that I did feel strangely.

When I finally came down-stairs there was that provoking man, as large as life.

He looked pale and had tears in his eyes, and when he tried to speak to me he seemed to choke and could not do it.

Then what do you think, of all things, that he did say?

He said he loved me.

To-day week we are to be married. Papa made a little fuss at first, but Aunt Julia, who had taken a mother's place to me ever since my poor mamma died, advised him not to thwart me.

"What is the use of being rich, my dear Charles," said she, "if you cannot let your child follow her own inclinations? Carling is a fine artist and a gentleman."

There that horrid man calling now. He is in papa's library. He wants—a kiss! He says it is three weeks since he had one. Does he suppose for a moment that I am going to him to give him one? I am in the sitting-room writing all this. I presume that if he must have such an indulgence he is big enough, and old enough, and ugly enough to come for it himself.

Watch the Insects.

Injurious insects demand attention throughout the summer months. Look for the borers near the base of young fruit trees; if saw-dust is seen from a hole in the bark, or if a portion of the bark is seen to be depressed, cut out the borer. If the leaves of currant and gooseberries are eaten by "the worm," apply white hellebore at once. Stir a teaspoonful of the powder in a pailful of water, and apply with a syringe. Repeat this after a few days. If later broods appear, continue the remedy, which is a very certain one. The greenish sling slug, which appears upon the leaves of cherry, pear and other trees, may be destroyed by applying air-slacked lime or wood ashes. This may be dusted upon the leaves by means of a bag of coarse fabric, attached to a pole. The insects attacking the grape vines this month are mainly large caterpillars, which are most readily picked by hand, and the so-called "thrips," which is properly the "grapevine leaf hopper," and not related to the true thrips. It is a little whitish insect which often rises in clouds when the vines are disturbed. The best treatment is to go among the vines with torches, gently beating them to disturb the insects, which will at once fly towards the light. The first appearance of grayish spots on the undersides of the vine indicates mildew, and flowers of sulphur should be applied with a bellows made for the purpose.

Dom Pedro, Emperor, of Brazil, sailed from Rio de Janeiro yesterday for Europe on the steamer Gironde.

THINGS GOOD TO EAT,

And How to Get Them Up with Satisfactory Flavor.

Chocolate Cookies.—One cup of butter, two cups of sugar, three cups of flour, four eggs, one cup of grated chocolate, one-half teaspoonful of cream of tartar. Roll thin and bake in a quick oven.

Lemon Jelly.—The yolks of two eggs, one cup of sugar, one cup of water, one tablespoonful of corn-starch and the juice and grated rind of one lemon; cook till thick. This is nice for layer cake.

Yankee Muffins.—To one quart of milk add one gill of yeast, one teaspoonful of salt, with four or five eggs beaten; add flour sufficient to make a thick batter: bake in muffin rings. Serve with butter.

Lemon Soda Cake.—One cup of sugar, one tablespoonful of butter, two eggs, one-half cup of sweet milk, one teaspoon of soda, two teaspoons of cream tartar, one pint of flour, measured after sifting.

Puff Pudding.—One pint of boiling milk and nine tablespoonfuls of flour; mix first with a little cold milk. When cold add a little salt and flour, three well-beaten eggs, and bake in a buttered dish. Serve at once.

Excellent Cake.—Take one cupful of sugar, three cupfuls of flour, one and a half cupfuls of milk, half a cupful of butter and eggs; mix thoroughly, adding two teaspoonfuls of baking powder. Bake in a hot oven.

Eggless Cake.—Two-thirds of a cup of sugar, two-thirds of a cup of sweet milk, one-third of a cup of butter, two cups of flour and two teaspoonfuls of baking powder. Flavor to taste, and before putting in the oven grate sugar over it.

Tea Cakes.—Rub together four teaspoonfuls of butter and one cup of sugar, add one well-beaten egg, one tablespoonful of cream and two cups of flour, into which has been sifted two teaspoonfuls of baking powder. Bake in small pans and eat while fresh.

Beef Fritters.—Chop pieces of steak or cold roast beef very fine; make a batter of milk, flour and an egg; mix the meat with it. Put a lump of butter in a saucepan, let it melt, then drop the batter into it from a large spoon. Fry until brown, season with pepper and salt and a little parsley.

Cream Cake.—One half-cup butter or one cup sweet cream, one and a half cups sugar, four eggs (one beaten separately), one half-cup sweet milk, two teaspoonfuls cream of tartar and one teaspoonful soda. Bake in a long pan. When done, cut open and spread between one pint whipped cream and one cup sugar. Flavor with lemon.

Bread Griddle Cakes.—Soak a small bowl of bread over night in milk. In the morning mix a half a cupful of flour, into which is put one and a half teaspoonfuls of baking-powder, with one quart of milk, three well-beaten eggs and a little salt. Beat up the bread with this batter until it is very light and fry a delicate brown. The batter should be thick.

Ice Cream.—Three quarts of milk, nine eggs, four tablespoonfuls of arrowroot and three cups of white sugar. Set the dish containing the milk in a kettle of water, and when hot add the arrowroot, previously wet in milk, the sugar and the eggs. Cook a few minutes and flavor when cold. This will fill a gallon freezer. Less eggs may be used, but your cream will not be so nice.

Water Pound Cake.—One pound of butter, one pound of powdered sugar, four eggs, one cupful of boiling water, one pound of prepared flour, flavor with lemon. Beat butter, sugar and the yolks of the eggs to a cream, then add the boiling water and stir gently till cold, then the pound of flour with the whites of the eggs beaten to a stiff froth, the lemon last; bake one hour. This cake cannot be told from real pound cake, and it will keep two weeks.

In making beef pot pie, cut in small pieces two pounds lean beef and one half-pound fat salt pork. Place in kettle, with one fine-chopped onion, one carrot, one-half turnip and water to cover well. Stew until tender, then add salt and pepper to season and place over stew the following crust: Two teacupfuls flour, in which have been thoroughly mixed two teaspoonfuls baking powder; rub well through flour one tablespoonful salt, and wet with cold water or sweet milk and mix to a stiff dough; roll into a sheet to cover stew; make two or three perforations in crust. Keep kettle closely covered, and stew twenty minutes to half an hour after adding crust. When no dough adheres to straw when thrust into the middle, the pot pie is done.

He Won Her by the Book.

An exchange relates that a young gentleman happening to sit at church in a pew adjoining one in which sat a young lady, for whom he conceived a sudden and violent passion, was desirous of entering into a courtship on the spot, but the place not suiting a formal declaration, the exigency of the case suggested the following plan: He politely handed his fair neighbor a Bible (open) with a pin stuck in the following text, II. St. John, 5: "And now I beseech thee, lady, not as though I wrote a new commandment unto thee, but that which we had from the beginning, that we love another." She returned it, pointing to Ruth ii. 10: "Then she fell on her face, and bowed herself to the ground, and said unto him, Why have I found grace in thine eyes, that thou shouldst take knowledge of me, seeing I am a stranger?" He returned the book, pointing to III. John, 13: "I had many things to write. I will not with pen and ink write unto thee, but I trust I shall shortly see thee, and we shall speak face to face." From the above interview a marriage took place the ensuing week.

Awaiting the Result.

The popular Major Priest, of the New York Central road, very much resembles Dr. Burton, of Fultonville. The other day a lady entered a car in which the Major sat, and, stepping up to him, said: "Doctor, my husband is not so well to-day." The Major understood the situation at once, and inquired: "What seems to be the difficulty?" "Well," said the lady, "he seems to be more nervous than he was." "Oh," said the Major, "that's all right; give him three more pills." "I will," said the lady, and with that the Major departed. What the result of this prescription will be remains to be seen.—Albany Journal.

There are more than 65,000 widows in Massachusetts, about half of them being less than 40 years of age.

A ROMANTIC CAREER.

A Young Man Steals $50,000 and Skips to a South Pacific Island, Where He Becomes a King.

That wickedness sometimes prospers is evidenced, says the New York World, by the rather romantic career within the last few months of Charles W. Banks, formerly of Albany, this State, later of San Francisco, Cal., and now elevated by the power of love to the throne of King of Cook's Island, in the South Pacific Ocean. A history of Mr. Bank's life in Albany would add so little interest to his later life that it is unnecessary to refer to it now, except to state that in that rolling town he married a very interesting young lady, for whom, according to his latest letter to his friends in this city, he still entertains the most touching affection. It is also hardly necessary to say that the lady in question, Mrs. Fanny A. Banks, who is now in this city, places so little faith in these assurances of unbounded love that she has begun a divorce suit, and charges his kingship with desertion and infidelity.

Soon after the marriage of the couple they journeyed to San Francisco, where Mr. Banks, being intelligent and bright, as well as a handsome young man, obtained employment in the express office of Wells, Fargo & Co. There he prospered, prospered too well for his personal good; for having obtained a position of trust, and gained the entire confidence of his employers, he suddenly disappeared six months ago, carrying with him over $50,000 belonging to the company. His many friends at the Golden gate mourned his departure, for he was a good fellow, reckless with his money, an interesting talker, and a good story-teller, while his little suppers at home and at his club were the talk of society for days after each event. Mrs. Banks, too, mourned his loss, but her reasons were widely different, and she came to this city after gathering enough evidence in San Francisco to prove to her that her husband had not been all that she had expected. Consulting the law firm of Messrs Johnes, Benner & Willcox here, the papers for a divorce were properly drawn up, but pending information as to the whereabouts of her recreant husband, she withheld proceedings.

Meanwhile Wells, Fargo & Co. had sent detectives after the defaulter, who tracked him to Tahiti, Sandwich Islands, but the wily young man fled in a schooner a few hours before the sleuth-hounds of the law reached there. From this point the gay defaulter's movements much resemble those of Billy Kid, the illustrious hero whom Rosini Vokes sings about in her clever song, "His 'Art was true to Poll."

Like Billy Kid, Mr. Banks
Landed on a strange shore and looked out for an inn,
When a noble savage lady, of a color rather shady,
  Came along and accosted him.

"Oh! stay with me and the king you'll be,
  And in a palace loll,
Or I'll eat you like a filet;" so he gave his hand, did Billy,
  But his art was true to Poll.

Mr. Banks was certainly in luck. He had sailed away from Tahiti for a point anywhere out of the grasp of the law, and favoring gales had directed his craft to the shores of Rarelonga, Cook's Island, in the South Pacific, where the beautiful but dusky Queen Ulakea (Ulakea in English, but something else in her own picturesque language) reigned quietly and kindly over her loving tribe. She is a widow, but ceased abruptly to grieve for her departed lord when the handsome face and manly bearing and figure of Mr. Banks loomed up before her in her quiet, luxurious home. He was a wanderer, weary and forlorn, and she a widow, sad and lonely, but with lots of this world's goods and a large heart, which she unhesitatingly threw at his feet. Her kindness won him, coupled with his own Yankee ingenuity, which told him that he had struck it rich, to use an Americanism, and he availed himself of the fortunate opportunity equally as unhesitatingly as it had been opened to him. There at Raretonga, safe from the law's strong grasp, where the climate is glorious and warm all the year round, Banks is now living, duly domesticated and acknowledged as king, and receiving the homage of the people, who adore him because their beloved Queen has set them the example. The detectives who found him there say he expresses no desire to return to his native country, but seems satisfied to continue his life of idleness and power. Mrs. Banks has heard of her husband's fortune and has decided to begin divorce proceedings at once. Her counsel, Edward R. Jones, appeared before Judge Lawrence in the Supreme Court chambers recently and obtained an order for the publication of a summons in the suit, a copy of which will be mailed to King Banks I. at his palace at Raretonga. Although Mrs. Banks has sufficient evidence to secure a divorce without reference to her husband's present position, the detectives who have traced Mr. Banks and discovered his new mode of life will make affidavits which will be used in the suit in order to show the man's utter unworthiness. Wells, Fargo & Co. have not given up hope of bringing Banks to justice, or of obtaining from him the money he embezzled. Banks' flight at the time of the discovery of the theft created a sensation. The publication of his subsequent movements will probably prove a greater surprise to the many society people of both San Francisco and this city who know him and his wife.

He Changed His Mind.

A well-known New York homœopathic physician says that he was once rung up in the middle of the night, and requested by a man to call immediately upon his wife.

"Very well," said the doctor.

"How much will it cost?" asked the caller.

"Ten dollars—to go that distance."

"How much will it be if you call in the morning?"

"Two dollars."

"Well, call in the morning," said the husband.

A man at Geneseo, Ill., took sick the other night and sent his nephew out for some pills. The young man, finding the drug stores all closed and one solitary grocery open, entered and procured a handful of small white beans. When he got home he filled a pill box in his room with beans and took them to his uncle. The beans were taken and proved quite efficacious, as the man recovered the following day.

HAS THE GIFT OF HEALING.

An Old Ohio Farmer who Banishes Pain by a Mere Touch.

"Do you see that white-haired, countrified-looking chap sitting in front of the Red Lion Hotel?" asked a business man of a friend whom he met on the opposite side of the street.

"Well, what of him?" answered the other.

"He is one of the most peculiar old chaps I ever met," said the first speaker. "He claims to be possessed of the 'healing power,' and his touch is something wonderful. It makes your nerves fairly tingle. For my part I don't understand it."

This conversation was what led a Dispatch reporter to look up the man with the healing in his hands. He was found sitting outside the door smoking a regulation tobie and quietly watching the passing throng. His hair and beard are snowy white and worn short after the country style, while his dress is more substantial and comfortable than rich and fashionable. Taking a seat beside him, the reporter asked:

"Are you the doctor?"

"No, sir," he answered rather innocently.

"Ain't you the faith cure doctor that is stopping here?"

"No, sir; I ain't no faith cure doctor, but I can knock a pain out of you in a jiffy if I set my hands on you," he replied with a good deal of animation.

The interviewer was at a loss to know how to take the old gentleman's answer—whether he meant that he would knock the life out of him for his impertinence, or that he would kindly relieve his physical sufferings. As he did not take a threatening hold on the big dogwood cane that he carries, the interviewer proceeded to explain:

"I was told that you were a faith cure or pow-wow doctor.

"I'm nothing of the kind. My name is Josiah Stonebraker, and I live down in Belmont county, O., near Demos post-office, and I don't have to pow-wow for a living. I am a farmer, and I do most of the undertaking business in that section. I used to make my own coffins, but I don't do it any more. You fellows up here make 'em cheaper than I can. No, I'm not up here after coffins; I just came up to see some old friends and look around. I was here about twelve years ago, but it doesn't look like the same place. Then it was so smoky and dark that I thought I would have to get a lantern to see my way on the streets.

"Yes, there has been a great change. But I would like to know something about this pain cure."

"Well, young man, all that I know is that when a person comes to me and says: 'Si, I've a pain, so and so,' and I put my hands on the place, the pain goes away, or if I rub a wart or corn they go away, and I've known cancers to disappear after I've rubbed them that way. You needn't laugh, young feller," says he solemnly as he laid his hand on the doubting Thomas' thigh.

It may have been imagination, but his hand seemed as hot as fire and sent thrills to the ends of the toes.

"No, never laugh at such things, for you don't know what might happen. I have saved life, and while I do not travel on it, still I feel that whenever I can relieve suffering I ought to do it. As I said before, I don't have to, and am up here just to look around. Do I believe in faith cures? Of course I do. Every Christian must believe in them. In the early days of the Church all cures were effected by means of the laying on of hands, anointing with oil and offering up prayer. Why may it not be just as good now? I don't know anything about magnetism, galvanism nor none of your isms. I only know that if you have a rheumatic pain there in your knee, a tightness in your chest, or a pain in your head, I can drive it out. Now, you can call it whatever ism you please."

"Do you believe the power is from God, or is it your own?"

"Every good and perfect gift is from God; besides, we have no power of our own. In olden times the people possessed divers gifts; some the gift of prophecy, some the gift of healing and others the gift of teaching. I reckon mine is the gift of healing."

"Did you always have this power?"

"Yes; but I didn't know it until a gifted healer told me so. He said that I had a great deal of power, and he showed me how to use it. My wife, who had been an invalid for twenty years, and had been in bed four years, and weighed only about 50 pounds, now weighs 150, and is able to do her own housework. Why, sir, the blamed doctor bills just kept me poor, and she got worse right straight along until I struck this. Then she quit taking medicine, and hasn't taken a drop since, and is now well and hearty."—Pittsburg Despatch.

Origin of Hand-Shaking.

In the early and barbarous times, when every savage or semi-savage was his own law-giver, judge, soldier and policeman, and had to watch over his own safety, in default of all other protection, when two friends or acquaintances, or two strangers desiring to be friends or acquaintances, when they chanced to meet, offered each to the other the right hand alike of offence and defence, the hand that wields the sword, the dagger, the club, the tomahawk, or other weapon of war. Each did this to show that the hand was empty, and that neither war nor treachery was intended. A man cannot well stab another while he is engaged in the act of shaking hands with him, unless he is a double-dyed traitor and villain, and tries to aim a cowardly blow with the left while giving the right, and pretending to be on good terms with him. —Rochester Post-Express.

All Colors are Welcomed.

A European ball-room is full of surprises to an American. In the first place, he is astonished to find that, in general, leaving out the very high society people, every one dances with every one else, without introduction. Another thing in a large ball at any of the various European resorts, you will see men of all colors, from a jet black down to a pale yellow, waltzing with the young ladies, chatting and flirting with them; in fact, quite as well received as any one else.—New York Sun.

—In the charge against Wm. Lahey, of Dundas, for assaulting, striking and knocking down Michael Laden, an old man, the Police Magistrate Saturday found Lahey guilty and fined him $5 and costs—$12.35 in all.

BYGONE BONNETS REVIVED.

Coffee-Colored Blonde Lace—Grass-Green and Rose-Pink—Notes.

A correspondent writes: "One of the chief features of the new fashions seems to be a revival of the colors and forms of the past. I saw a bonnet the other day, fresh from Paris, that recalled the 'Jane Clark" of bygone times. It was of pale coffee-colored blonde lace, and on one side 'the cap,' as it used to be called, was a wreath of blush roses. On the top of this headgear was a knot of grass-green ribbon and the strings were of the same hue. Grass-green and rose-pink! What would the æsthetics have said to it? But it was a very pretty bonnet, all the same. Another—still prettier—was composed entirely of unripe corn (green), over which was drawn a veil of green tulle. The front was formed by a wreath of poppies, and on the left side was an aigrette of poppies—three, placed one above the other, to mount it up high—with the stalks showing, and the top poppy the smallest of the three. The sleeves of a different material or color to the dress show another return to an old and a very pretty fashion; but great care must be taken, or the toilette will look patchy. Dun-color and dark brown, stone-color and pale blue, grey (pure and simple) and violets, or dark green, go well together; but the sleeves should always be of the more telling color and the richer material. The present has one great advantage over the past. The inexpensive stuffs of to-day are prettier than any seen of yore, more especially the striped ones. I have just seen a material composed of alternate stripes of white poplin and white Valenciennes lace, which would make a lovely wedding dress for a bride in her teens. Another material was composed of alternate stripes of tussore silk and lace of the same shade. A frock of that stuff might be worn with almost any color, and at the smartest day festivities, and would outlast two or three of the white cambrics trimmed with broiderie Anglaise, that threaten to become the rage, and need to be so very fresh and clean.—London Lady.

He Wasn't Qualified.

"Did you hire that young man who applied for your school?" was asked of a Dakota school district officer.

"Well, I should rather say we didn't."

"Why not?

"His edication didn't come up to the scratch."

"What in"

"Gram'er.

"How did you find it out?"

"Why, he got in my wagon to ride from the field to the house an', says I, 'Did ye ever drive much?' 'Of late years,' says he, 'I have driven very little.' 'Drove very little, ye mean, says I. 'I beg your par don,' says he, 'but I mean driven.' 'Drove is right,' says I. 'No, sir,' says he, 'driven is the most gramaticalist.' 'Oh, well, mebby ye know,' says I sorter sarcastic. 'I reckon I do,' says he. 'I'm jes' comin' out here to learn you folks something.' 'Do you see that road?' says I. 'I does,' says he. 'Well,' says I, 'it goes to town, an' you want to git right out an' humpen yerself down it mighty fasten, 'cause I'm goin to begin to kicken ye in about a minute by the clock.' He saw I knowed more bout gram'er than he did and he got out o' that wagon an' scooted down the road. You bet we're goin' to have a teacher that understands gram'er or none at all."—Dakota Bell.

Moses was a Gentleman.

Some amusing stories are told of the wit and wisdom of London school children. A class of boys in a boarding school was being examined orally in scripture. The history of Moses had for some time been a special study and one of the examiners asked:

"What would you say of the general character of Moses?"

"He was meek," said one boy.

"Brave," said another.

"Learned," added a third boy.

"Please, sir," piped a pale-faced, neatly dressed lad, "he was a gentleman."

"A gentleman?" asked the examiner, "how do you make that out?

The boy promptly replied in the same thin, nervous voice:

"Please, sir, when the daughters of Jethro went to the well to draw water the shepherds came and drove them away, and Moses helped the daughters of Jethro, and said to the shepherds: 'Ladies first, please, gentlemen.'"—Christian World.

"Seed 'Em a Doing It."

It is almost impossible for country people to recognize the dense ignorance as to all matters agricultural and rural from which the children of the London poor suffer. A day or two ago the parson of a London parish asked one of the children who had been boarded out under the new poor law regulations how he enjoyed the change of air and scenery. "Please, sir," said the urchin, "I don't like it at all; instead of giving me milk out of a nice clean tin they squeezes it out of a nasty cow—I seed 'em a doing it!"—Pall Mall Gazette.

Some Etiquette.

In calling on a lady who is away from home leave your card. If the visit is intended for two or three ladies at the house leave two or three cards, but do not turn down one corner of the card, as that custom is now exploded, except in three card monte circles, and even then it is regarded with suspicion.—Bill Nye.

Economy.

Pater—"Tom, Tom!—this 'll never do. Past 11 o'clock!—and you've been in bed fifteen hours out o' the twenty-four." Tom—"But it's cheap, Gov'nor—'costs nothing. Wh'n'as directly a fellow's up and dressed, expenses begin!"—Punch.

A Truism.

I don't know that I ever coined a maxim worth repeating, but if I ever have it is this: "I owe my success to printer's ink."—P. T. Barnum.

The Vossiche Zeitung says the Porte has ordered the Germania Company, of Kiel, to despatch to Turkey a vessel with two torpedo catchers, also nine torpedo boats. The vessels are required to be powerful and speedy.

Shelley—Life may change, but it may fly not; Hope may vanish, but can die not; Truth be veiled, but still it burneth; Love repulsed—but it returneth.

THE GLORIOUS TWELFTH!

One Hundred and Ninety-Seventh Anniversary of the Battle of the Boyne.

Artemesia District (eight lodges) together with one from Berkeley, honored Flesherton with their presence on Tuesday last, and truly a gayer sight has not been seen on our streets for many a day. The village presented a gala appearance. From almost every housetop floated that brave old flag which Erastus Wiman and his disciples want to see hauled down. The stores and business places were liberally decked with bunting, and there were evergreens galore. Vendors of ice cream and lemonade were in large force. Three arches spanned the principle streets, viz., one on the corner of Durham and Sydenham streets, one on the corner of Collingwood and Toronto streets, and one on Collingwood street near Milburn's carriage works. The latter was the most neatly constructed one in the lot, and was erected by Messrs. Legate, Smith, Sullivan, Milburne and others. The whole village, in fact—things animate and inanimate—seemed unanimous in extending a hearty welcome to the hundreds of sturdy Britons who visited our town during that day, which will ever be held memorable in the annals of history.

The morning passed off quietly. Not until nearly noon, indeed, did the distant sounds of fifes and drums proclaim the approach of the Orangemen. First to march through—with flags flying and drums beating—were the Station and town lodges. These proceeded up Toronto street untill they met grand old 244, when they returned to the square. Passing down Collingwood street, amidst the deafening thunders created by the drummers of the combined forces, the brethren soon met Eugenia and McKee Loyal Orange Lodges. Re-forming the ranks, the whole marched with almost military precision into town, followed by a vast concourse of people in vehicles. In one of the carriages rode the genial District Master, Rev. Mr. Corcoran, and that staunch Orangemen, Mr. Jas. Brodie—a gentleman who, for 11 years or more filled the honorable position of District Master with credit and distinction. It is needless to add, that he has a worthy and energetic successor in Rev. Mr. Corcoran.

About 11:40 a. m. Kell', the Valley, Berkeley, and the Royal Scarlet Chapter Lodge, of Markdale, came into town via Sydenham street, to the inspiring strains of music by Markdale Brass Band, Berkeley Fife and Drum Band, &c.

Shortly after dinner the members of every lodge in Artemesia District, as well as the Berdeley lodge of Holland, formed a magnificent living circle on the square, backed up by an immense crowd of enthusiastic spectators. Suddenly the shrill strains of a dozen fifes and the terrific booming of as many drums told that the celebration had commenced in earnest. Then the lodges formed in procession and marched in an orderly manner to Mr. Flesher's grove, where they arranged themselves around the platform erected for the speaking. Here a vast crowd had already assembled. The speech were interspersed by music by the Markdale Band. On the platform were Rev. Mr. Corcoran, District Master, Mr. Jas. Brodie, Mr. Thos. Kells, President of the East Grey Agricultural Society, Rev. Mr. Johnson, Presbyterian minister, of Berkeley, Rev. A. Wilson, Presbyterian minister, of Markdale, Rev. Thos. Watson, Baptist minister, of Flesherton, Rev Mr. Shilton, B. A., Methodist minister, of Flesherton, and last but by no means least, the worthy Reeve of Artemesia, Dr. Christoe.

Rev. Mr. Johnson, of Berkeley, was the first speaker. He said he was a native of Holland—that country wherein the great Prince of Orange first saw the light. He was proud of that fact. Though dead nearly two hundred years, William, Prince of Orange, lived in the hearts of thousands of people all over the world to-day. We should strive to imitate the character of that illustrious king, who fought so bravely for the civil and religious liberty of our forefathers, and whose deeds we are assembled to day to commemorate. The Prince of Orange was the last of that great House to which the celebrated William the Silent belonged. The latter was probably one of the greatest men who has ever lived. Single-handed and alone almost, he fought against the myrmidions of the tyrant Phillip II. He spent the whole of his vast fortunes almost in driving the inquisition out of the Netherlands and securing to his beloved people civil and religious liberty. He fought, bled, and finally died by the hand of a paid assassin in defence of those liberties. He was proud to be the countryman of such a noble, such a truly great prince as that. (Loud applause.) He observed a text from Scripture on one of the banners. It was "fear God, Honor all Men, and Love the Brotherhood." From that he took it an Orangeman should be a Christian. But, alas! some of them were far from being such. When I see a man, who fears God, I see a Daniel, a Moses, a Joseph, and a David. After some excellent hints as to what should constitute a true Orangeman, the Rev. gentlemar took his seat amid rounds of enthusiastic applause. The Rev. Mr. Johnson does not use gloves. His speech was truly eloquent and delighted all who heard it.

Rev. Thos. Watson said we were not far to-day from the banks of a stream called the Boyne. (laughter and cheers.) The great conflict of the Boyne was still raging—in Europe, America and parts of Asia. The battle was being fought over and over again. But while the Prince of Orange fought with carnal weapons, we must fight with spiritual ones. The character of the Papacy has not changed—it is as designing, dark and treacherous as it was two hundred years ago. Even in our beloved Dominion its encroachments upon our liberties as freeborn citizens was marked. Every good cause has a great many enemies. It is so with Protestanism. We must present a united front, as we have an aggressive and determined enemy to contend with. We must not sell our national birthrigut for Roman Catholic influence, which is as insidious as it is destructive to the common weal. (cheers and applause.) Rev. Mr. Watson's speech was eloquent throughout.

Rev. Mr. Wilson, of Markdale, delivered a stirring speech. He spoke highly of the Orange society, of which he was proud to be a member. He said Romanism was undeniably strengthening itself—even within the borders of our fair Dominion. Jesuitism was incorporated and true to its dark past was spreading its dangerous network in all directions. A Jesuit cannot reason, cannot call his soul his own—is a corpse in so far as implicit obedience to his superiors is concerned. He must obey without questioning, without murmur, the dictates of his Superior—not matter whether he outrages his own conscience in carrying out his instructions or not. It was a dangerous society in the past, it is equally so now, the difference being, that opportunities for dark deeds are not so numerous now as they were. Romanism is, and always was, an aggressive body, which means peril to our rights and liberties. The Papacy has had a long reign, but what has it done to enlighten or instruct mankind in spiritual matters. There would be no Twelfth of July celebration if Romanism had her way. He didn't want to see Protestantism driven into a corner. But, said the speaker, in a burst of eloquence, there is an element in the church of Rome that will yet shatter it to fragments! (loud cheers and applause.)

Rev. Mr. Shilton, B. A., of Flesherton did not come prepared to give a speech; nevertheless, what he did say was practical and sensible. He paid a graceful tribute to the Orangemen present. He also made an excellent suggestion when he said that Orangemen should not tie their hands politically. If they followed this advice strictly they could get just what they wanted. He thought, in view of the encroachments of Romanism and the tremendous efforts it was making on every hand to increase its strength numerically and otherwise, Protestantism was too inert and not sufficiently wide awake to the dangers by which it is surrounded. William of Orange was raised up by God for a purpose; God can raise up another deliverer if need be. Truth and righteousness is on the side of Protestantism and it must prevail. Rev. Mr. Shilton thanked the people—most of whom were strangers to him—for their patient hearing and sat down amid much applause.

Dr. Christoe having been called out to attend a patient did not speak—a fact which many deplored—especially those who listened to his strikingly original and eloquent speech at Eugenia last year.

The brethren—after the usual loyal cheers—left for home at an early hour in the evening. It is estimated that there were over two thousand Orangemen and visitors present.

TAMARAC.—Is an Elixir carefully prepared by an experienced chemist, with the well-known Tamarac as the fundamental principle, and all the other ingredients in its compositon are of the purest, and best calculated to relieve all cases of Coughs, Colds and Lung troubles.

W.C.T.U.

ABOUT ITS WORK.

There are few societies so broadly philanthropic, so well managed, so perfectly equipped in every department, so essentially Christ-like, therefore its work and influence have been greater than that of any other society. In an address to the members, Frances Willard says:

'We are set for the coming of Christ in the earth," and truly that seemed to be the motto of every Union and every individual member of it. Set for His coming in the heart and homes of men and women everywhere on the broad earth what ever their color, nationality or creed. Set for His coming, all their every day concerts, their institutions of learning, set for his coming into society, for the benign influence of the white ribbon innocent pleasures and loftier occupations are driving out the dance and the card table, healthful, beautiful dress is putting to shame fashionable semi-nudity, helpful, loving conversation is taking the place of the punctillions phrases of a bygone etiquette and of the still more objectionable gossip as our women are becoming too affectionately concerned about the welfare of others to study their faults through a microscope, and lastly it is set for the coming of Christ in Governments and even here its influence is already strongly felt.

Every year the work is growing stronger and tho' originally there were only three departments, the number is increased to eleven. As a new need presents itself a new department is formed to supply it. And so the work is enlarged, may it continue to prosper and grow till all the kingdoms of this world are become the kingdoms of our God and His Christ.

W.C.T.U. BULLETIN.

The Illinois W.C.T.U., are the prime movers in the establishment of a woman's ten and fifteen cent lodging house in Chicago.

There is a Home for intemperate women in Boston, which has 71 inmates.

Arrangements are being perfected for the erection in Chicago of a $500,000 W. C.T.U. building. It will be used as the headquarters of the national officers and also of the womens temperance publication association.

A law has been passed in Switzerland making the sale of liquors a State monopoly. One-tenth of the profits of all sales are to be devoted to the Temperance cause.

ARE YOU MADE miserable by Indigestion, Constipation, Dizziness, Loss of appetite, Yellow Skin? Shiloh's Vitalizer is a positive cure. Sold at Medical Hall.

SLEEPLESS NIGHTS, made miserable by that terrible cough. Shiloh's Cure is the remedy for you. Sold at Medical Hall.

SHILOH'S CURE will immediately relieve Croup, Whooping Cough, and Bronchitis. Sold at Medical Hall.

The First Sign

Of failing health, whether in the form of Night Sweats and Nervousness, or in a sense of General Weariness and Loss of Appetite, should suggest the use of Ayer's Sarsaparilla. This preparation is most effective for giving tone and strength to the enfeebled system, promoting the digestion and assimilation of food, restoring the nervous forces to their normal condition, and for purifying, enriching, and vitalizing the blood.

Failing Health.

Ten years ago my health began to fail. I was troubled with a distressing Cough, Night Sweats, Weakness, and Nervousness. I tried various remedies prescribed by different physicians, but became so weak that I could not go up stairs without stopping to rest. My friends recommended me to try Ayer's Sarsaparilla, which I did, and I am now as healthy and strong as ever.—Mrs. E. L. Williams, Alexandria, Minn.

I have used Ayer's Sarsaparilla, in my family, for Scrofula, and know, if it is taken faithfully, that it will thoroughly eradicate this terrible disease. I have also prescribed it as a tonic, as well as an alterative, and must say that I honestly believe it to be the best blood medicine ever compounded.—W. F. Fowler, D. D. S., M. D., Greenville, Tenn.

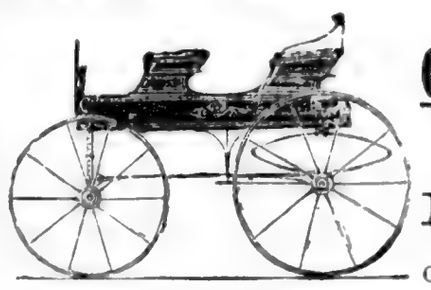
Dyspepsia Cured.

It would be impossible for me to describe what I suffered from Indigestion and Headache up to the time I began taking Ayer's Sarsaparilla. I was under the care of various physicians and tried a great many kinds of medicines, but never obtained more than temporary relief. After taking Ayer's Sarsaparilla for a short time, my headache disappeared, and my stomach performed its duties more perfectly. To-day my health is completely restored.—Mary Harley, Springfield, Mass.

I have been greatly benefited by the prompt use of Ayer's Sarsaparilla. It tones and invigorates the system, regulates the action of the digestive and assimilative organs, and vitalizes the blood. It is, without doubt, the most reliable blood purifier yet discovered.—H. D. Johnson, 383 Atlantic ave., Brooklyn, N. Y.

Ayer's Sarsaparilla,

Prepared by Dr. J. C. Ayer & Co., Lowell, Mass.
Price $1; six bottles, $5.



MAXWEL
CARRIAGE WORKS!

LITTLE & BLAKELY,
MANUFACTURERS OF
Carriages, Democrats, Wagons &c.

Repairing, Painting, Horse-Shoeing, and General Jobbing
Done on Short Notice and at Reasonable Prices.

JOHNSON LITTLE. Blacksmith,
THOS. A. BLAKELY, Wagon-Maker & Painter.

Maxwell, May 26th, 1887.

BOOTS & SHOES!

Having received large auditions to my Stock, I have a good supply on hand of Summer Goods.

LADIES' WEAR.—A fine assortment in Prunella, French Kid, Goat, Polish Calf, Buff and Heavy Boots.

MISSES AND BOYS WEAR.—A large variety of Lace & Button Boots, Shoes and Slippers.

CHILDRENS WEAR.—A very large assortment of all sorts and sizes.

MENS WEAR.—I have Buff, Calf and Enamelled Balmorals, Oxford Ties and Strong Lace Boots.

FOR PRICE AND QUALITY, CANNOT BE SURPASSED.

WM. CLAYTON, Flesherton.

CHEAP ❋ AND ❋ DURABLE!

—THE WELL-KNOWN—

SPEIGHT WAGON!

Call and get Prices, &c. from undersigned.

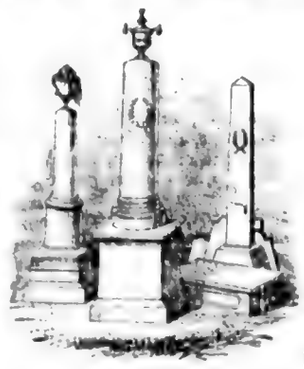
STOVES, TINWARE, &c. for sale as usual

First-class value in every department.

Agent for VICKER'S EXPRESS. All parcels left with him will be promptly and carefully attended to.

STRAIN'S. - FLESHERTON.

FLESHERTON.
MARBLE WORKS:
E. VANZANT,



ALL KINDS OF
Marble and Monumental Works,

Such as Monuments, Tomb Tables, Headstones Counter and Table Tops—in American and Italian Marble and Granite, and made on short notice. Also Mantles in Marble and Marbleized Slate, &c., &c.

Flesherton, Aug. 30, 1883.

HEALTH FOR ALL.

HOLLOWAY'S PILLS & OINTMENT

THE PILLS

Purify the Blood, correct all Disorders of the
Liver, Stomach, Kidn'ys, and Bowels.
They invigorate and restore to health Debilitated Constitutions, and are invaluable in all Complaints incidental to Females of all ages. For Children and the aged they are priceless.

THE OINTMENT

Is an infallible remedy for Bad Legs, Bad Breasts, Old Wounds, Sores and Ulcers. It is famous for Gout and Rheumatism. For disorders of the Chest it has no equal.

For SORE THROAT, BRONCHITIS, COUGHS, COLDS

Glandular Swellings, and all Skin Diseases it has no rival; and for contracted and stiff Joints it acts like a charm.

Manufactured only at Professor HOLLOWAY'S Establishment,
78, New Oxford Street (late 533, Oxford Street), London.
and are sold at 1s. 1½d., 2s. 9d., 4s. 6d., 11s., 22s., and 33s. each Box or Pot, and may be had of all Medicine Vendors throughout the World.

☞ Purchasers should look to the Label on the Pots and Boxes. If the address is not 533, Oxford Street, London, they are spurious.

FOR SALE.

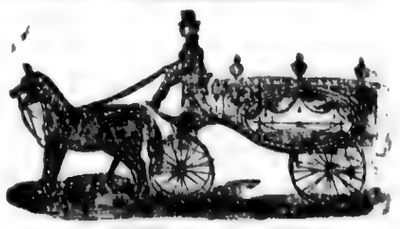
The undersigned has White Ash Butter Tubs and Churns for sale.

JOS. McCORMICK,
Flesherton.

FLAGS AND BANNERS

of superior quality, for Orange and other Societies. Order early.

W M. TEGART,
Thornbury, Ont.



J. W. BATES,

Furniture Dealer and Undertaker.

FLESHERTON, ONT.

FLESHERTON ADVANCE.

"TRUTH BEFORE FAVOR."—"PRINCIPLES, NOT MEN."

VOL. VII., NO. 317. FLESHERTON, ONTARIO, THURSDAY, JULY 21, 1887. A. R. FAWCETT, EDITOR & PROPRIETOR

For above fine finished Watches, accurate Hampden's—my name on, and the reliable Waltham and Elgin Watches, in Gold, Filled Gold, and Coin Silver Cases, go to

W. A. BROWN'S

FINELY STOCKED

JEWELERY STORE.

I am known as the Reliable Jeweller for 20 miles North, South, East and West. I never have misrepresented purposely any goods sold since being in business here. It is easy to sell a 11 Jewelled Watch for "Full Jewelled." It is much easier to sell 8 k. Gold Watches and call them 12 or 14. I don't have to do it. My own name on all warrants, and you will find I can be held responsible if goods are not right.

—1—|342|—1—

WATCHES & CLOCKS

Booked in Repair Book since July 1st, 1886.

SQUARE DEALING,

PRICES CLOSE

SPECIALTIES:—Fine Watch Repairing, Spex Fitting.

W. A. BROWN,

The People's Jeweller, Markdale.

CONSUMPTION IN FLESHERTON.

There being good prospects of a fresh quantity of Flour to be consumed in the village and surrounding country the present season, the undersigned has opened out with a good stock of the following lines:—

ROLLER FLOUR!

Best Brands.

Rolled & Granulated Oat-Meal.

Corn Meal,
Cracked Wheat,
Chop,
Shorts,
Bran and Oats,

At Bottom Prices for Cash.

Special Discounts

According to amount of Purchase.

W. W. TRIMBLE,

Next door to Clayton's Shoe Store.

(312-364)

SAY, HALLO THERE! ADVERTISING PAYS! Of course it does. Just plant an advertisement in THE ADVANCE and see for yourself. Hundreds have done so and were benefitted. Have you a farm you want to sell or rent? Advertise in THE ADVANCE. Have you anything under the sun you want to sell or trade? An advertisement in THE ADVANCE will bring you customers every time. Do you want to buy anything or hire help? Advertise in THE ADVANCE every time. Address or call on A. R. Fawcett, ADVANCE Office, Flesherton, for terms, &c.

PRINTING! YES, OH, YES! IT WILL PAY all manners of persons who read this advt. to get their Printing done at THE ADVANCE Office, Flesherton. Good work at honest prices every time! A dollar saved is a dollar earned—so the proverb goes. Pamphlets, Posters, Circulars, Programs, Dodgers, Streamers, Bill Heads, Note Heads, Receipts, Note Forms, Business Cards, Visiting Cards, Labels, Tags, &c. Plain, or Colored. Address or call on A. R. Fawcett, ADVANCE Office, Flesherton, for terms.

ADVERTISE in The ADVANCE

Tit-Bits.

Consisting of Local and Other Interesting Items gathered by The Advance Reporters.

For Graham Flour go to Keefer's.

Miss Bates, of Toronto, is home on a visit.

THE ADVANCE is highly appreciated by readers in London, England.

Another car load of Salt. 300 lb. barrels at Richardson & Co's.

Read the Medical Hall's important announcement in another column.

Balance of Millinery stock at Richardson's selling out at half prices.

PAINTS, OILS, &c., &c., AT WM. RICHARDSON'S, FLESHERTON.

Master E. K. Richardson, who has been attending High School at Owen Sound, came home for the summer holidays last Saturday.

The sidewalks are positively dangerous in some places. Somebody will be getting hurt one of these days. In such case, wonder who would have to foot the bill?

GIRL WANTED.—A good smart tidy girl wanted at once; small family, light work. Apply at THE ADVANCE office, Flesherton, or to Wm. T. Paul, Lady Bank, Osprey Township.

W. W. Stephen & Co., the well-known Meaford Druggists, have something of interest to say to our readers on the editorial page of this week's ADVANCE. Read it.

M. Richardson & Co., are are offering balance of the Tea Stock at prices to clear before the arrival of their direct importation from Japan. Teas can be bought lower how than ever while the stock lasts.

Mr. J. G. Keefer, of the Forest Free Press, came home for his summer holidays on Tuesday evening last. He looks as though the climate (or something else?) in Forest agreed well with his health.

JUST RECEIVED LARGE AND FRESH SUPPLY OF DRUGS AND PATENT MEDICINE. STOCK WELL ASSORTED IN ALL LINES. WM. RICHARDSON, FLESHERTON.

Mr. W. T. Jackman will shortly take a good position in a well known Toronto printing office. In company with a genial Meaford gentleman, Mr. J. called at our office last Monday. We wish friend Jackman all manner of success.

We regret to observe that Mr. Wm. Hogg, of Flesherton Station, has made an assignment of his estate to Mr. E. R. C. Clarkson for the benefit of his creditors. An advertisement rolating thereto appears in THE ADVANCE.

JUST RECEIVED, A LARGE ASSORTMENT OF PAINTERS BRUSHES, &c. CALL AND SEE STOCK, WM. RICHARDSON.

Mr. James Beecroft, of this town, offers his fertile and well cultivated farm—about two miles from Flesherton—for sale. See his advertisement in another column. This is a rare chance for a wide-awake purchaser.

The wooden arm in Mr. Varty's brick-making machine—to which the horses are hitched—broke on Monday last, and caused a short delay until it could be replaced. This was soon done, and work resumed its usual sway about 5 o'clock p. m. Mr. Varty is manufacturing a lot of fine bricks this season.

Wanted.—Butter, Eggs, Wool, or any other farm produce at Richardson & Co's.

Married.

ROSE—MCINTYRE.—On the 22nd ult., at the residence of the late Rev. R. McIntyre, Priceville, by the Rev. T. Watson, Mr. James Rose, of Bruce tp., to M. E. McIntyre, of Priceville.

A printer struck our office on Monday last.

Raspberries are coming to town in great quantities.

The East Grey prize list is being printed at this office.

Farmers are beginning to cut fall wheat in this vicinity.

Upwards of 6000 people were in Thornbury on the 12th of July.

Miss Lizzie Fawcett is visiting friends in Thornbury and neighborhood.

We don't hear anything about base ball or lacrosse matches around here just now.

What's the matter with our correspondents? All our readers like to read their spicy items.

The plank bridge near the tannery is rapidly sinking, there being only about ten feet wide of surface above water.

Mr. Parks, the Maxwell and Feversham mail carrier, was thrown out of his buggy on Monday last and injured somewhat.

"Mrs. Smith, of Flesherton, and her youngest daughter, are visiting their numerous friends in this vicinity."—Brampton Times.

Master George Treadgold has retired from the printing business and is now studying the art of cheese-making in the Flesherton factory.

Mr. A. Grier, of Thornbury, Inspector of Public Schools for East Grey, made an assignment of his estate for the benefit of creditors a short time ago.

The Presbyterian garden party, held on the grounds of Mr. Damude last Friday evening, was largely attended. The presence of our Band helped to enliven the proceedings considerably.

The hot weather can safely be discussed these times without any danger of one being subjected to base insinuations or dark suspicions. 98 degrees in the shade makes one long to be a duck or an Esquimaux.

The heaviest thunder-storm that has visited this neighborhood for the last ten years struck here on Saturday night last. The lightning was unusually vivid and continuous. A heavy wind and rain storm accompanied.

R. J. Sproule, Flesherton, has a lot of first class grain Cradles, which he is selling about half price. They must be sold this harvest for whatever they will bring. Those requiring such, are respectfully invited to call.

A farmer successfully tried a remedy for potatoes as follows He procured a number of boards and placed them here and there among the potatoes, and on the boards were placed raw potatoes sliced. At noon on the day of the experiment he found every piece of the potato covered with bugs. He killed this crop and at night another was killed, though not so large, and in a week not a bug could be seen, and his trouble with bugs after this was comparatively small. Some lazy men suggest that it would be a good plan to dip the piece of potatoe in Paris Green as it would save the work of killing the bugs.

Ink Drops.

—Hot

—Weather

—Is the rage now!

—Who is "Free Thinker?"

—Subscribe for THE ADVANCE

—And be happy forever after!

—Miss Katie Bellamy is home again.

—Mrs. Bulmer is improving her premises.

—There are quite a few summer visitors in Flesherton this season.

—Mrs. George Brownlee, of Flesherton, who is over fourscore years old, is very ill.

—Considerable improvements going on in connection with Squire Armstrong's residence here.

Get a sample of 20 cent Tea at Richardson & Co's, it is Going, Going and will soon be gone.

The Priceville Sons of Temperance hold on their way bravely, and deserve credit for their continued efforts to do good.

Mr. John Stafford, B. A., is home again. He bears his University honors with that modesty which is characteristic of a true gentleman.

Prospects are bright for a fine new Presbyterian church building at no distant date in Priceville. The Ladies' Aid are working diligently for that object.

Mr. James Stafford has just returned from a brief sojourn in Manitoba. He visited Mr. Dale in the neighborhood of Winnipeg, and highly enjoyed the excursion.

I have the largest and best stock of Candies, Confectionery, Cracked Wheat, Rolled, Standard and Corn Oatmeals, Flour, Bran and Shorts that can be obtained, also cheapest Lemons. R. KEEFER.

Mr. J. Cornfield, of Artemesia, was severely gored by a young heifer, belonging to him, one day last week. Dr. Christoe is attending him. The strangest thing in connection with the affair, is that, while Mr. Cornfield was seriously injured internally, there are no outward marks of violence, such as flesh wounds.

Balance of Summer Prints, Muslins, and Dress Goods at prices to clear at Richardson & Co's.

A year ago last winter a man promised to bring us in some wood on a "leetle" account. The winter passed and balmy spring was ushered in, but neither man nor wood put in an appearance. Early last winter we reminded the man of his promise, when he very emphatically intimated that he would bring the said wood to our office before spring, "if" said he after profoundly considering the question from every standpoint, "if I am living!" It is to be presumed that he is dead, as he did not bring in the wood after all. Life seems full of disappointments!

A kicking horse made several daring attempts to break the tongue of a double vehicle on Tuesday last. The event occurred on the hotel "square" here and attracted quite a crowd. After bending the aforesaid tongue in the shape of a half circle in the vain attempt to accomplish its end, the horse adopted fresh tactics; and after many plunges and a variety of wild kicks in the direction of the sky, the tongue actually was broken, when the horse quietly lay down beside it, and placidly viewed the scene, as much as to say—"I knew I could do it!" Both horses were extricated from the confused mass of harness in which they had become entangled, after which the crowd dispersed "to their several homes."

Concerning that anonymous epistle, a reader says: "We can well understand the first word in the signiture as he is evidently "free" in many things, e. g. he is free from Biblical knowledge, or he would never misapply Scripture as he does. He is free from education as evidenced by his orthography. Free from common sense else he would mind his own business. Free from courage or manliness else he would have gone to the Dr. himself and not have perverted the mail into a sewer to convey his anonymous dirt. Free from honor or he would have signed his name like a sensible person." But why he styles himself "thinker" for we cannot tell. Christian Churches have no monopoly of the hypocrites as his case clearly proves—a man styling himself "thinker" and yet lacking the manifest rudiments of thinking power. If he were to leave the h out he might be nearer the truth. But then Bunyan might rise from the dead to protest against his profession being used in that way."

Great

Clearing Sale!

To commence JULY 15th,

J. G. ANDERSON.

There will be decided bargains in every line. Don't miss it. We want to clear out the present stock in, by the 15th Aug., so as to make room for Fall Purchases. There will be a very choice line of

TEAS

at Special Reduced Prices. DRESS GOODS in great variety; BOOTS & SHOES in Great quantities; STACKS OF READY-MADE CLOTHING: everything will be Cut Away Down in Price.

Come Early before the Rush.

J. G. ANDERSON,

MARKDALE.

Masonic.

The following are the Officers installed of Prince Arthur Lodge No. 333, A.F. & A. Masons, Flesherton, for current year.

Bro. Jos. Blackburn, W.M
" W. J. Bellamy, S.W.
" A. S. VanDusen, J.W.
" W. H. Flesher, S.D.
" Dr. Carter, J.D.
Wor. Bro. R. J. Sproule, Sec.-Treas.
" Rev. W. E. D'Argent, Chap.
Bro. Jas. Sullivan, I.G.
" J. J. Field, Tyler.
" Jas. Sullivan, } Stewarts.
" A. Hislop, }

Harvest Tools, Building Hardware, Fence Wire, Felt Sheeting, Nails, Glass, &c., &c., at Richardson & Co's.

BE ON YOUR GUARD.—Don't allow a cold in the head to slowly and surely run into Catarrh, when you can be cured for 25c. by using Dr. Chase's Catarrh Cure. A few applications cure insipient catarrh; 1 to 2 boxes cures ordinary catarrh; 2 to 5 boxes is guaranteed to cure chronic catarrh. Try it. Only 25 cents and sure cure. Sold by all dealers.

A NASAL INJECTOR free with each bottle of Shiloh's Catarrh Remedy. Price 50 cents. Sold at Medical Hall.

A WONDERFUL ORGAN. The largest organ and one that plays a controlling part of the health of the body is the liver. If torpid or inactive the whole system becomes diseased. Dr. Chase's Liver Cure is made specially for Liver and Kidney diseases, and is guaranteed to cure. Receipe book and medicine $1. Sold by all dealers.

FARMERS!

Don't forget there is good work done at the Flesherton

WOOLEN FACTORY

And we are doing all in our power to please. Customers are finding out it is to their advantage to deal with us as our Prices are low and Our Goods are Reliable, and notwithstanding the hard times, I intend to reduce the amount of carrying power by using every legitimate, etc., ON YOU. ROLL CARDING, SPINNING, WEAVING, &c., &c. Give us a trial and see for yourself.

W. H. FLESHER.

Wait a Bit.

(The Century.)

When Johnny came a-courting
I thought him overbold,
For I was but a young thing
And he not very old.
And though I liked him well enough
I sent him on his way,
With "Wait a bit, bide a bit,
Wait a week and a day!"

When Johnny passed me in the lane.
And pleaded for a kiss,
And vowed he'd love me evermore
For granting of the bliss,
Although I'd liked it overwell,
I ran from him away,
With "Wait a bit, bide a bit,
Wait a week and a day!"

When Johnny fell a-ranting,
With "Jenny, be my wife?"
And vowed I never should regret,
However long my life;
Although I liked it best o' all,
I turned from him away,
With "Wait a bit, bide a bit,
Wait a week and a day!"

Oh, Johnny was a ninny;
He took me at my word!
And he was courting another
The next thing that I heard.
Oh, what a ninny was Johnny,
To mind me when I'd say,
"Wait a bit, bide a bit,
Wait a week and a day!

Heigh-ho, I've met my Johnny,
I gin him a blink o' my eye,
And then he fell a-raving,
For want o' my love he'd die!
I ne'er could be so cruel,
So I set the wedding day,
With "Haste a bit, nor waste a bit,
There's danger in delay."

SIR HUGH'S LOVES.

For when November came with its short days, its yellow fogs, its heavy damp atmosphere, a terrible thing happened in Mr. Huntingdon's office.

A young clerk, the one above Maurice—a weak, dissipated fellow, who had lately given great dissatisfaction by his unpunctuality and carelessness—absconded one day with five thousand pounds belonging to his employer. Mr. Huntingdon had just given authority to the manager to dismiss him when the facts of his disappearance and the missing sum were brought to their ears. The deed was a cool one, and so cleverly executed that more than one believed that an older hand was concerned in it; but in the midst of the consternation and confusion, while the manager stood rubbing his hands nervously together, and Mr. Huntingdon, in his cold, hard voice, was giving instructions to the detective, Maurice Trafford quietly asked to speak to him a moment, and offered to accompany the detective officer.

He knew George Anderson's haunts, he said, and from a chance word accidentally overheard, he thought he had a clue, and might succeed in finding him.

There was something so modest and self-reliant in the young man's manner as he spoke, that, after a searching glance at him, Mr Huntingdon agreed to leave the matter in his hands, only bidding him not to let the young villain escape, as he certainly meant to punish him

Many were the incidents that befell Maurice and his companion in this his first and last detective case; but at last, thanks to his sagacity and the unerring instinct of the officer, they were soon on the right track, and before night had very far advanced were hanging about a low public house in Liverpool, lurking round corners and talking to stray sailors.

And the next morning they boarded the Washington, bound for New York, that was to loose anchor at the turn of the tide; and while Staunton, the detective, was making inquiries of the captain about the steerage passengers, Maurice's sharp eyes had caught sight of a young sailor with a patch over his eye, apparently busy with a coil of ropes, and he walked up to him carelessly; but as he loitered at his side a moment his manner changed.

"Don't look round, George," he whispered; "for heaven's sake keep to the ropes or you are lost. Slip the pocket-book in my hand, and I will try and get the detective out of the boat."

"Would it be penal servitude, Maurice?" muttered the lad, and his face turned a ghastly hue at the thought of the human bloodhound behind him.

"Five or ten years at least," returned Maurice. "Were you mad, George? Give it to me—quick—quick! and I will put him on the wrong scent. That's right," as the shaking hand pushed a heavy brown pocket-book towards him. "Good-by, George; say your prayers to-night, and thank God that you are saved."

"Staunton," he said aloud, as the detective approached him, "we are wrong; he is in the bow of the Brown Bess, and he sails in the Prairie Flower;" and as he uttered the first lie that he had ever told in his guileless young life, Maurice looked full in the detective's face and led him quietly away.

But a couple of hours later—when Staunton was loosing his temper over their want of success, and the Washington was steaming out of the dock—Maurice suddenly produced the pocket-book, and proposed that they should take the next train back for London. "For I am very tired," finished Maurice, with provoking good-humor; "and Mr. Huntingdon will sleep better to-night if we give him back his five thousand pounds."

"You'll let the rogue go!" exclaimed Staunton, and he swore savagely. "You have cheated justice, and connived at his escape."

"Yes," answered Maurice calmly. "Don't put yourself out, my good fellow. I will take all the blame. He sailed in the Washington, and there she goes like a bird. You are out of temper because I was too sharp for you. Evil communications corrupt good manners, Staunton. I have taken a leaf out of your book—don't you think I should make a splendid detective?" continued Maurice, rattling on in pure boyish fun. "I got up the little fiction about the Brown Bess and the Prairie Flower when I saw him dressed like a sailor, with a patch over his eye, hauling in the ropes."

Then, as Staunton uttered another oath:

"Why, did you expect me to bring back my old chum, when I know they would give him five or ten years of penal servitude? Do you think I am flesh and blood and could do it? No! I have kept my promise, and brought back the five thousand pounds, and not a farthing of it would he or you have seen but for me."

Perhaps Staunton was not as hard-hearted as he seemed, for he ceased blustering and shook Maurice's hand very heartily; nay, more, when they told their story, and Mr. Huntingdon frowned angrily on hearing Maurice had connived at the criminal's escape, he spoke up for Maurice. "You did not expect the young gentleman, sir, to put the handcuffs on his old pal; it is against human nature, you see."

"Perhaps so," returned Mr. Huntingdon, coldly; "but I should have thought better of you, Trafford, if you had sacrificed feeling in the matter. Well, it may rest now. I have struck off George Anderson's name as defaulter out of my book and memory, and I will tell Dobson to add his salary to yours. No thanks," he continued in rather a chilling manner, as Maurice's eyes sparkled, and he attempted to speak; "it is a fair recompense for your sagacity. Go on as well as you have begun, and your future will be assured. To-morrow I shall expect you to dine with me at Belgrave House. Dobson is coming, too," and with a slight nod Mr. Huntingdon dismissed him.

That night Maurice laid his head upon his pillow and dreamed happy dreams of a golden future. To-morrow he should see the dark-eyed girl who had spoken so sweetly to him; and as he remembered her words and glances of gratitude, and the touch of her soft white hands, Maurice's heart gave quick throbs that were almost pain.

He should see that lovely face again was his first waking thought; but when the evening was over Maurice Trafford went back to his lodgings a sadder and a wiser man.

He was dazzled and bewildered when he saw her again—the young girl in the white gown was changed into a radiant princess. Nea was dressed for a ball; she came across the great lighted room to greet Maurice in a cloud of gauzy draperies. Diamonds gleamed on her neck and arms; her eyes were shining; she looked so bewilderingly beautiful that Maurice grew embarrassed, all the more that Mr. Huntingdon's cold eyes were upon him.

Maurice never recalled that evening without pain. A great gulf seemed to open between him and his master's daughter; what was there in common between them? Nea talked gaily to him as well as to her other guests, but he could hardly bring himself to answer her.

His reserve disappointed Nea. She had been longing to see him again, but the handsome young clerk seemed to have so little to say to her. He was perfectly gentlemanly and well bred, but he appeared somewhat depressed.

Nea's vanity was piqued at last, and when Lord Bertie joined them in the evening she gave him all her attention. Things had not progressed according to Mr. Huntingdon's wishes. Nea could not be induced to look favorably on Lord Bertie's suit; she pouted and behaved like a spoilt child when her father spoke seriously to her on the subject. The death of one of Lord Bertie's sisters had put a stop to the wooing for the present; but it was understood that he would speak to Nea very shortly, and after a long and angry argument with her father, she was induced to promise that she would listen to him.

Nea was beginning to feel the wright of her father's inflexible will. In spite of her gaiety and merry speeches, she was hardly happy that evening. Lord Bertie's heavy speeches and meaningless jokes oppressed her—how terribly weary she would get of him if he were her husband, she thought. She was tired of him already—of his commonplace handsome face—of his confidential whispers and delicately-implied compliments—and then she looked up and met Maurice's thoughtful grey eyes fixed on her. Nea never knew why she blushed, or a strange restless feeling came over her that moment; but she answered Lord Bertie pettishly. It was almost a relief when the carriage was announced, and she was to leave her guests. Maurice, who was going, stood at the door while Lord Bertie put her in the carriage—a little gloved hand waved to him out of the darkness—and then the evening was over.

Mr. Huntingdon had not seemed like himself that night; he had complained of headache and feverishness, and had confided to Dobson that perhaps after all Dr. Ainslie was right, and he ought to have taken more rest.

Somehow he was not the man he had been before his accident; nevertheless he ridiculed the idea that much was amiss, and talked vaguely of running down to the sea for a few days.

But not even that determined will of his could shake off the illness that was creeping over him, and one night when Nea r turned from a brilliant reunion she found Belgrave House a second time in confusion. Mr. Huntingdon had been taken suddenly ill, and Dr. Ainslie was in attendance.

By and by a nurse arrived—a certain bright-eyed little Sister Teresa—and took charge of the sick man. After the first few days of absolute danger, during which he had been tolerably submissive, Mr. Huntingdon had desired that he should be kept informed of all matters connected with an important law suit of his at present pending; and during the tedious weeks of convalescence Maurice Trafford carried the daily report to Belgrave House. It seemed as though fate was conspiring against him; every day he saw Nea, and every day her presence grew more perilously sweet to him.

She had a thousand innocent pretexts for detaining him, little girlish coquetries which she did not employ in vain. She would ask him about her father, or beg him to tell her about the tiresome law-suit, or show him her birds and flowers, anything, in fact, that her caprice could devise to keep him beside her for a moment: very often they met in her father's room, or Mr. Huntingdon would give orders that Mr. Trafford should stay to luncheon.

Nea, in her blindness, thought she was only amusing herself with an idle fancy, a girl's foolish partiality for a face that seemed almost perfect in her eyes; she little thought that she was playing a dangerous game, that the time was fast approaching when she would find her fancy a sorrowful reality.

Day by day those stolen moments became more perilous in their sweetness; and one morning Nea woke up to the conviction that Maurice Trafford loved her, that he was everything to her, and that she would rather die than live without him.

It was one afternoon, and they were together in the drawing-room. Maurice had come late that day, and a violent storm had set in, and Mr. Huntingdon had sent down word that Mr. Trafford had better wait until it was over. To do Mr. Huntingdon justice, he had no idea his daughter was in the house; she had gone out to luncheon, and he had not heard of her return.

The heavy velvet curtains had been drawn to shut out the dreary scene, and only the firelight lit up the room; Nea, sitting in her favorite low chair, with her feet on the white rug, was looking up at Maurice, who stood leaning against the mantlepiece talking to her.

He was telling her about his father's early death, and of the sweet-faced mother who had not long survived him; of his own struggles and poverty, of his lonely life, his efforts to follow his parents' example. Nea listened to him in silence; but once he paused, and the words seemed to die on his lips. He had never seen her look like that before; she was trembling, her face was pale, and her eyes were wet with tears; and then, how it happened neither of them could tell, but Maurice knew that he loved her—knew that Nea loved him—and was holding her to his heart as though he could never let her go.

CHAPTER IX.

THE AWAKENING.

That thrilling, solemn, proud, pathetic voice,
He stretched his arms out towards that thrilling voice,
As if to draw it on to his embrace.
I take her as God made her, and as men
Must fail to unmake her, for my honor'd wife.
E. B Browning.

Paradise itself could hardly hold an hour of purer and more perfect bliss than when those two young creatures stood holding each other's hands and confessing their mutual love.

To Nea it was happiness, the happiness for which she had secretly longed. To Maurice it was a dazzling dream, a madness, an unreality, from which he must wake up to doubt his own sanity—to tremble and disbelieve.

And that awakening came all too soon.

Through the long hours of the night he lay and pondered, till with the silence and darkness a thousand uneasy thoughts arose that cooled the fever in his veins and made him chill with the foreboding of evil.

What had he done? Was he mad? Had it been all his fault that he had betrayed his love? had he not been sorely tempted? and yet, would not a more honorable man have left her without saying a word?

How could he go to Mr. Huntingdon and acknowledge what he had done? that he, a mere clerk, a poor curate's son, had dared to aspire to his daughter, to become the rival of Lord Bertie Gower—for Nea had confided to him her father's ambition. Would he not think him mad? groaned Maurice, or would he turn with that hard dark look on his face that he knew so well, and give him a curt dismissal?

Maurice remembered George Anderson and trembled, as well he might; and then as the whole hopelessness of the case rushed upon him, he thought that he would tell his darling that he had been mad—dishonorable, but that he would give her up; that he loved her better than himself, and that for her own sweet sake he must give her up.

And so through the long dark hours Maurice lay and fought out his fierce battle of life, and morning found him the victor.

The victor, but not for long; for at the first hint, the first whispered word that he must tell her father, or that he must leave her for ever, Nea clung to him in a perfect passion of tears.

The self-willed, undisciplined child had grown into the wayward undisciplined girl. No one but her father had ever thwarted Nea, and now even his will had ceased to govern her; she could not and would not give up the only man whom she loved; nothing on earth should induce her now to marry Lord Bertie—she would rather die first; if he left her she should break her heart, but he loved her too well to leave her.

Poor Maurice! An honorable man would have nerved himself to bear her loving reproaches; would have turned sadly and firmly from her confused girlish sophistries, and reproved them with a word. He would have told her that he loved her, but that he loved honor more; that he would neither sin himself nor suffer her to tempt him from his sense of right. But Maurice did none of these things; he was young and weak; the temptation was too powerful; he stayed, listened, and was lost. Ah! the angels must have wept that day over Maurice's fall, and Nea's victory.

She told him what he knew already, that Mr. Huntingdon would turn him out of his office; that he would oppress her cruelly; that he would probably take her abroad, or condemn her to solitude, until she had promised to give him up and marry Lord Bertie.

Could he leave her to her father's tender mercies, or abandon her to that other lover? and she wept so passionately as she said this that a stronger man than Maurice must have felt his strength waver.

And so Nea had the victory, and the days flew by on golden wings, and the stolen moments became sweeter and more precious to the young lovers until the end came.

Mr. Huntingdon was better—he could leave his room and walk up and down the corridor leaning on Sister Teresa's arm.

There was less pain and fewer relapses; and when Dr. Ainslie proposed that his patient should spend the rest of the spring in the south of France, Mr. Huntingdon consented without demur.

They were to be away some months, Mr. Huntingdon informed Nea, and extend their tour to Switzerland and the Italian Tyrol. Lord Bertie had promised to join them at Pau in a month or so, and here her father looked at her with a smile. They could get the trousseau in Paris. Nea must make up her mind to accept him before they started; there must be no more delay or shilly-shallying; the thing had already hung fire too long. Lord Bertie had been complaining that he was not fairly treated, and more to the same purpose.

Nea listened in perfect silence, but it was well that her father could not see her face. Presently she rose and said that he was tired and must talk no more, for Mr. Trafford would be here directly; and then she made some pretext for leaving the room.

Maurice found her waiting for him when he came downstairs. As he took her in his arms, and asked her why she looked so pale and strange, she clung to him almost convulsively, and implored him to save her. Maurice was as pale as she long before she had finished; the crisis had come, and he must either lose her or tempt his fate.

Again he tried to reason with her, to be true to himself and her; but Nea would not give him up or let him tell her father. She would marry Maurice at once if he wished it; yes, perhaps that would be the wisest plan. Her father would never give his consent, but when it was too late to prevent it he might be induced to forgive their marriage. It was very wrong, she knew, but it would be the only way to free her from Lord Bertie. Her father would be terribly angry, but his anger would not last; she was his only child, and he had never denied her anything.

Poor Nea! there was something pathetic in her blindness and perfect faith in her father; even Maurice felt his misgiving silenced as he listened to her innocent talk; and again the angels wept over Maurice's deeper fall, and Nea's unholy victory.

They had planned it all; in three weeks time they were to be married. Mr. Huntingdon could not leave before then. On the day before that fixed for the journey, the bond was to be sealed and signed between them, so that no power of man could part them. Mr. Huntingdon might storm ever so loudly, his anger would break against an adamantine fate. "Those whom God has joined together no man can put asunder"—words of sacred terror and responsibility.

The next three weeks were very troubled ones to Maurice; his brief interviews with Nea were followed by hours of bitter misgiving. But Nea was childishly excited and happy; every day her love for Maurice increased and deepened. The shadow of his moral weakness could not hide his many virtues. She gloried in the thought of being his wife. Oh, yes, her father would be good to them, perhaps after all they would go to Pau, but Maurice and not Lord Bertie would be with them.

Nea never hesitated, never repented, though Maurice's face grew thin and haggard with anxiety as the days went by.

They were to be married in one of the old city churches; and afterwards Maurice was to take her to his lodging in Ampton street; and they were to write a letter to Mr. Huntingdon. Maurice must help her write it, Nea said. Of course her father would be angry—fearfully angry—but after a few hours he would calm down, and then he would send the carriage for her; and there would be a scene of penitence and reconciliation. Nea painted it all in glowing colors, but Maurice shook his head with a sad smile, and begged her not to deceive herself. Mr. Huntingdon might not forgive them for a long time, for he remembered George Anderson, and the inexorable will that would have condemned the young criminal to penal servitude.

And so one morning as Mr. Huntingdon was sitting by the open window watching the children play in the May sunshine, and wondering why his daughter had not been to wish him good morning, Nea had stolen out of her father's house, and was hurrying through the sunny square and green deserted park until she found Maurice waiting for her, who silently took her hand, and put her into the carriage.

Nea said afterwards that it was that silent greeting of Maurice's, and his cold touch, that first brought a doubt to her mind; during the long drive he spoke little to her—only held her hand tightly, and when at last they stood together in the dark old church with its gloomy altar and white gleaming monuments, the poor child gave a shiver that was almost fear, and suddenly burst into tears. It had come upon her all at once what she was doing, and why she was there; but already it was too late, for while she was clinging to Maurice with low frightened sobs, the curate had hurried from the vestry and had entered within the rails, and the pew opener was beckoning them to take their places.

Too late! too late! Ten minutes more and the knot was tied that no hand could loosen, and Nea Huntingdon had become Nea Trafford.

* * * * * *

But when they had left the gloomy old church in the distance, and were driving through the crowded streets with their babel of voices, Nea's courage and spirits revived; and presently she was tripping about Maurice's shabby rooms, rearranging the bowls of jonquils and lilac, with which the landlady had made some show of festivity, unlooping the stiff folds of the muslin curtains, and peeping into the corner cupboards with the gleeful curiosity of a child, until, at her young husband's gentle remonstrance, her seriousness returned, and she sat down to write the formidable letter.

And how formidable it was Nea never imagined, until she had tried and failed, and then tried again till she sighed for very weariness; and then Maurice came to her aid with a few forcible sentences; and so it got itself written—the saddest, most penitent little letter that a daughter's hand could frame.

But when she had laid down the burthen of her secret, and the special messenger had been despatched to Belgrave House, Nea put off thought for a while, and she sat by the window and chatted to Maurice about the gay doings they would have at Pau, and Maurice listened to her; but always there was that sad incredulous smile on his face.

And so the day wore on, but when they had finished their simple dinner and the afternoon had waned into evening, Nea grew strangely quiet and Maurice's face grew graver and graver as they sat with clasped hands in the twilight, with a barrier of silence growing up between them.

And when the dusk became darkness, and the lamp was brought in, Nea looked at Maurice with wide anxious eyes and asked what it meant.

Were they not going to send the carriage for them after all? she wondered; must she go home on foot and brave her father's anger? he must be so very, very angry, she thought, to keep them so long in suspense.

"Hush!" exclaimed Maurice, and then they heard the rumbling of wheels that stopped suddenly before the door, and the loud pealing of a bell through the house.

"The carriage! the carriage!" cried Nea, and the flush rose to her face as she started to her feet, but Maurice did not answer; he was grasping the table to support himself, and felt as though another moment's suspense would be intolerable.

"A letter for Mrs. Trafford," observed the landlady in solemn awe-struck tones, "and a man in livery and the cabman are bringing in some boxes."

"What boxes?" exclaimed Nea, but as she tore open the letter and glanced over the contents a low cry escaped her.

"Maurice! Maurice!" cried the poor child, and Maurice taking it from her, read it once, twice, thrice, growing whiter and whiter with each perusal, and then sank on a chair, hiding his face in his hands, with a groan. "Oh! my darling," he gasped, "I have ruined you; my darling, for whom I would willingly have died, I have ruined you and brought you to beggary."

They had sinned, and beyond doubt their sin was a heavy one; but what father, if he had any humanity, could have looked at those two desolate creatures, so young, and loving each other so tenderly, and would not have had pity on them?

(To be continued.)

Food That Gives Muscle.

The lumbermen in the Maine forests work intensely in the cold snows of winter, and in the icy water in the spring. To endure the severe labor and cold, they must have food to yield a great deal of heat and strength. Beans and fat pork are staple articles of diet with them, and are used in very large quantities. The beans supply protein to make up for the wear and tear of muscle, and they, and more especially the pork, are very rich in energy to be used for warmth and work.

I cannot vouch for the following, which has just struck my eye in a daily paper, but, if it is true, the workmen were sound in their physiology:

"A lot of woodchoppers who worked for Mr. S—— in H—— stopped work the other day, and sent a spokesman to their employer, who said that the men were satisfied with their wages and most other things, but didn't like 'your fresh meat; that's too fancy, and hain't got strength into it.' Mr. S—— gave them salt pork three times a day, and peace at once resumed its sway."

The use of oily and fatty foods in arctic regions is explained by the great potential energy of fat, a pound of which is equal to over two pounds of protein or starch. I have been greatly surprised to see, on looking into the matter, how commonly and largely the fatter kinds of meat are used by men engaged in very hard labor. Men in training for athletic contests, as oarsmen and football teams, eat large quantities of meat. I have often queried why so much fat beef is used, and especially why mutton is often recommended in preference to beef for training diet. Both the beef and the mutton are rich in protein, which makes muscle. Mutton has the advantage of containing more fat along with the protein, and hence more potential energy. Perhaps this is another case in which experience has led to practice, the real grounds for which have later been explained by scientific research.—Prof. Atwater in the Century.

Bridesmaids in Germany.

In Germany the duties of the bridesmaids have just a tinge of superstition about them. It is one of their duties on the morning of the marriage day to carry to the bride a myrtle wreath, for which they had subscribed on the previous evening. This they place on her head, and at night remove it, when it is placed in the bride's hand, she being at the time blindfolded. The bridesmaids then dance around her, while she endeavors to place the wreath on one of their heads. Whoever is fortunate enough to be thus decorated will, it is believed, be herself a wife before another year has passed away.

In removing the bridal wreath and veil, the bridesmaids are careful to throw away every pin, or the bride will be overtaken by misfortunes; while any unwary bridesmaid who retains one of these useful little articles will materially lessen her chances of "getting off."

Like many other German superstitions, this has found its way into England, though it has not yet become a general belief.

Chinese Money-Raising Methods.

The Christian Union reports that the heathen in China have a practice that, if introduced into this country, would soon abolish church fairs, raffles, pound parties and the other questionable means of raising money to run the church. Dr. Corbett, a returned missionary, says: "The heathen never go to their temples to worship without carrying an offering of some kind as a proof of their sincerity. When they become Christians this conviction is not rooted out, but rather it is heightened in proportion as Christianity is regarded as superior to heathenism. I have seen them give to such an extent that I have felt it a duty to remonstrate and remind them that they owed duties to their homes which must not be forgotten."

Were it not for the danger attending the knowledge of our church methods it would be wise to have a few Chinese sent to this country as missionaries in this particular department of church work. The Chinese are so imitative that, on the whole, it is best for our people to confine the knowledge of their methods of raising money to our own shores.—Christian Advocate.

The First Speech of the Young Man.

"Mr. Chairman and gentlemen—The poet has beautifully said, in those words so familiar to you all, but which, unfortunately, have escaped me at this moment, he has said—in the words of the poet—the poet—has said—now, gentlemen, I did not expect to be called upon to speak at this banquet to-night, hence—though I could probably speak better hence than I can here—hence I feel—I mean I find myself—that is to say, you find me—and—and—realizing as I do—happiest moment in my life. Now, I didn't come here to make a speech—"

"We see you didn't," interrupted the Chairman, and the young man sat down amid thunders of applause.—Texas Siftings.

Work on the short line railway from Montreal to the sea is progressing satisfactorily. All the contracts in the State of Maine have been awarded, and the sections under contract are expected to be completed in November.

A Skye terrier belonging to a London gentleman, says the Field, is caring for eight little chickens. They occupy a basket and the chickens nestle in the dog's long hair and seem comfortable. They follow the dog about and the brute strives to give them all the personal care possible.

TAMPERING WITH DEATH.

The Pernicious Practice of Poison Eating and What it Must Lead To.

It is not generally known to what an alarming extent poison eating is practised in this country as well as in Europe, according to the Boston Herald. In some of the districts of lower Austria, and in Styria, especially in the mountainous parts, there prevails the habit of eating arsenic. The peasantry are particularly given to it. They obtain it under the name of hedri, from travelling hucksters and gatherers of herbs, who, on their part, procure it from the glassblowers or from the low doctors or mountebanks. The arsenic eater has a two-fold aim in the dangerous enjoyment, one of which is the desire to obtain a fresh, healthy appearance and acquire a certain degree of embonpoint, and on this account lads and lassies in the European countries employ the agent that they may become more attractive to each other, and their endeavors are attended with astonishing results, for the poison eaters are, generally speaking, distinguished by a fresh complexion, and have the appearance of exuberant health. Not long since a farm servant, who was thin and pale, but well and healthy, wished to make herself more attractive to her lover, and in order to obtain a more pleasing exterior, swallowed every week several doses of arsenic. The desired result was obtained. In a few months she was quite according to her lover's taste. In order to increase the effect she increased the dose of arsenic and fell a victim to her vanity. She was poisoned and died a distressing death. The number of deaths in consequence of the immoderate enjoyment of arsenic is not inconsiderable, especially among the young. Whether it arises from fear of the law, which forbids the unauthorized possession of arsenic, or whether it be that an inner voice proclaims to him his sin, the arsenic eater always conceals, as much as possible, the use of it. The European peasants say they eat it to make themselves "better winded"—that is, to make the respiration easier when ascending the mountains. Whenever they have far to go, and to mount a considerable height, they take a minute morsel of arsenic and allow it to gradually dissolve in the mouth. They say the effect is surprising, and they ascend with ease heights which otherwise they could climb only with distress to the chest. The dose with which the poison eaters begin consists of rather less than half a grain, and then the quantity is increased according to the effect produced. I recently learned of a man of 70 years who at present takes at every dose a piece about the weight of four grains. For forty years he has practised the habit, which he inherited from his father, and he, in all probability, will bequeath the same to his children. It is stated that neither in these nor in other poison eaters is there the least trace of an arsenic cachexy discernible, and that the symptoms of a chronic arsenical poisoning never show themselves in individuals who adapt the dose to their constitution, even though that dose should be considerable, but when from inability to obtain the acid or other cause the perilous indulgence is stopped, there appear symptoms of illness which have the closest resemblence to those produced by arsenic poisoning. Those symptoms consist principally in a feeling of general discomfort, attended by a perfect indifference to all surrounding persons and things, great personal anxiety, and various distressing sensations arising from the digestive organs, lack of appetite, a constant feeling that the stomach is overloaded in the morning, a burning from the pylorus to the throat, pains in the stomach and particularly great difficulty in breathing. For all these symptoms there is but one remedy—a return to the use of arsenic. Poison eating among the inhabitants of lower Austria has not grown into a passion, as is the case with the opium eaters in the East, the chewers of the betel nut in India and Polynesia, and of the cocoa leaves among the natives of Peru. When once commenced, however, it becomes a necessity. In some districts sublimate of quicksilver is used in the same way. An authenticated case is mentioned by Dr. Von Tschudi of a great opium-eater at Brussa who daily consumed the enormous quantity of 40 grains of corrosive sublimate, and the practice in Bolivia, where the poison is openly sold in the market to the Indians, is still greater.

In Vienna the use of arsenic is of everyday occurrence among horse dealers and especially with the coachmen of the nobility. They either shake it in a pulverized state among the corn or they tie a bit the size of a pea in a piece of linen and then fasten it to the curb when the horse is harnessed, and the saliva of the animal soon dissolves it. The sleek, round, shining appearance of the carriage horses, and especially the much admired foaming at the mouth, is the result of this arsenic feeding. It is a common practice with farm servants in the mountainous parts to strew a pinch of arsenic on the last feed of hay before going up a steep road. This is done for years without the least unfavorable result, but should the horse fall into the hands of another owner who withholds the arsenic he loses flesh immediately, is no longer lively, and even with the best feeding there is no possibility of restoring him to his former sleek appearance. Poisons that are swallowed for the sake of the agreeable sensations they occasion owe this effectto their action upon the nervous system, and the practice must be kept up by a constantly increasing dose until the constitution is irremediably injured. In the case of arsenic, so long as the excitement is undiminished all is apparently well, but the point is at length reached when to turn back or to proceed are alike death. The moment the dose is diminished or withdrawn entirely, then the victim perishes because he has shrunk from killing himself. Arsenic is said by Dr. Pearson to be as harmless as a glass of wine in the quantity of one-sixteenth part of a grain, and in the case of agues it is so certain in its effects that the French directory once issued an edict ordering the surgeons of the Italian army, under pain of military punishment, to banish that complaint at two or three days' notice from among the vast numbers of soldiers who were languishing under it in the marshes of Lombardy. It seems that no poison taken in small and diluted doses is immediately hurtful, and the same thing may be said of other agents.

—It is better to rise with the lark than with the bent pin.

WHERE NO WOMAN ENTERS.

Why Queen Victoria Had to Obtain a Brief from the Pope.

Queen Victoria had to obtain a special brief from the Pope before she could apply for entrance to the Grande Chartreuse Monastery. The only women not provided with a brief from His Holiness permitted to cross the threshold of the monastery are Princesses of the reigning house of France; but so strict are the fathers, even in this exception, that when the Count of Paris, the present legitimate heir and pretender to the Bourbon crown of France, went up there some time ago with the Countess of Paris, the latter was refused admission. The Abbot was profuse in his expressions of regret, adding, with the true instinct of the courtier, that he hoped the day was not far distant when she would be able to claim admittance as a right. It is needless to add that the Pope very seldom accords a brief to a woman, and then it is only to a crowned or royal personage. However, once inside, the monks are courteous enough, and Queen Victoria was shown all over the monastery and treated to a collation. None of the women of her suite were allowed to enter.

A French actress during the Empire once, for a wager, succeeded in gaining admittance to the monastery. She disguised herself as a man and, together with two male companions, not only went all over the monastery but spent the night there. On passing through the great gate in the morning the actress tore off her wig and mustache and disappeared from the horrified view of the monks with shrieks of laughter. The Abbot ordered the whole establishment to be purified—that is, fumigated. The chair the actress sat upon, the couch she used and everything she could possibly have touched were burned to ashes, and for months every place where her footsteps could have fallen was drenched with holy water. Remorse eventually came to the actress, for after her impious escapade she suffered from bad luck almost as severely as the Jackdaw of Rheims. It cost her several thousand francs and many weary penances before she obtained absolution from the Archbishop of Paris, and in a special epistle from the Abbot, whose feelings she had so outraged. The Church having forgiven her, however, her stage good fortune returned; so there is some moral to the episode.

Another Great Trick by Hermann.

A correspondent of the London Standard writes: The prettiest trick I ever saw was done by Hermann while at lunch with a brother conjurer in the hotel at Monte Video. Five people were seated at the table (not his own, be it observed), and there was apparently an entire absence of any possible preparation. Taking a pear from the dish, he told us to mark it. One left four punctures from his fork in it. Another dropped a spot of ink on the rind; I pushed an American three-cent piece into the soft substance of the fruit until it was buried; next a large slice was cut out and eaten. Hermann then took it and tossed it towards the lofty ceiling. "Catch it yourselves," he cried, as the pear was whirling in mid-air. It fell into my outstretched hand, prong-marked, ink-spotted, and with the three-cent bit still bedded in its tissue—but whole

This is Fame.

Last week, at about the same hour and on the same day, an editor and a horse died. In the papers of his own State the editor was dismissed with nine or ten lines. A minimum space of a half column was devoted to the horse. The editors told his age, the names of his mother, grandfather and grandmother; told what they did; what the horse himself did; told what he was worth; how he came to be worth so much, and one man spoke of him as "the deceased;" and all the writers agreed that in the death of this horse the country had suffered a great loss. That is fame, my boy. If you are at all ambitious you will some day be mighty sorry that you weren't born a "hoss" instead of an editor. Still, if you go with the right kind of people, you may yet grow to be an "ass." That won't help much, though.—Burdette, in the Brooklyn Eagle.

Too Much Enthusiasm.

"Teaching, to me," said an enthusiastic young schoolma'am, "is a holy calling. To sow in the young mind the seeds of future knowledge and watch them as they grow and develop is a pleasure greater than I can tell. I never weary of my work. I think only of—"

"I am very sorry," interrupted the young man to whom she was talking, "that you are so devoted to your profession, Miss Clara. I had hoped that some day I might ask you—in fact, I called to-night to—but I hardly dare go on, in the light of what you—"

"You may go on, Mr. Smith," said the young lady softly. "I'm a little too enthusiastic at times, perhaps."

A Good Joke on the Mayor.

On Thursday last the mayor procured a supply of Crawford's best champagne and treated the aldermen in his office. Some ten bottles, which were untouched, were locked in the cupboard, so that they could be returned at the earliest convenience. Last evening some persons burglarized the cupboard, and drank all the champagne and placed the empty bottles back in the basket, consequently the Mayor will be out $25 at the least.—Kingston Whig.

No Change in Him.

A very good story is being told. An Irish member coming out of the British House of Commons in a hurry ran into the arms of a most malignant Tory. "You're a confounded fool," said the Irish member. "You're drunk," said the malignant Tory. "I know I'm drunk," said the Irish member (and, indeed he was), and to-morrow I'll be sober; but to morrow you'll be a confounded fool still."

"One cause of baldness," says a physician, "is great intellectuality." Possibly baldness is for the purpose of allowing the intellectuality to shine.

The honorary degree of LL.D. has been conferred upon Rev. George H. Cornish, pastor of the Methodist Church, Drayton, Ont., by Rutherford College, North Carolina.

—Memphis Avalanche: Watermelons are dear, but doctors are dearer.

CHINOOKS AHEAD.

An Astro-Meteorologist Sees a Mighty Heat on Its Way From the Stars.

Mr. Walter H. Smith, of Montreal, writes calling attention to the following extracts from his "Summer Forecast," published in the May number of his journal, Astronomy and Meteorology, issued last April: "The summer will soon be upon us, and all are concerned in asking: What are the probabilities? In two words, heat and drought. * * * May will be fine, more like June than May, and although June will have its sudden cool storms and changes, July will give us some persistent dry weather, which, under burning skies and with parching 'chinooks,' will wither the tender crops, burn the grass, bake the soil, dry up many of thore 'perennial springs,' in which some of my friends place so much confidence, and turn the tinder-like forests into an easy prey to the fires which will make them but smoke and ashes. * * * The heat at times will be extreme. There will be not only hot waves, but seas, oceans of heat, until humanity will suffer severely. Days in July and August in the west and south promise temperatures over 100° in the shade. Very heavy storms, cloud bursts and tornadoes will break at intervals, when precipitation will be abnormal. Cool terms will follow, but in their wake will come the dry, hot winds and sultry periods again, parching everything before them. * * * Those who have heard their parents talk of the drought of 1819, who themselves remember those of 1854, 1868, 1876 and 1881 will, before next October, have added 1887 to their catalogue of dry, hot summers. * * * The ice-dealer who has a full supply; the dry goods man with a heavy line of summer goods; the seaside and summer resort people; in fact, all who want to see an abnormal summer for heat are likely to have their hearts made glad." So far Mr. Smith scores.

Will Russia and England Fight?

Russia seems determined to force the issue with England regarding the Afghanistan boundary line, and appears to be in a position to have it all her own way in that corner of the world when the war begins. Indirect information, by way of India, is to the effect that the Russian railway lines have been rapidly as well as stealthily extended, and now reach a point within 125 miles of the border of Afghanistan, and it was rumored that fifty miles of the intervening space were or would soon be covered. The Russian soldiers are in advance of the construction party, and are reported to have been encamped on the banks of the classic Oxus, only separated by the waters of that stream from the troops of the Ameer. That dignitary seems doomed to defeat. His one chance of success lies in victory in the inevitable battle with the rebel Ghilzais, and his chances of winning are materially reduced by the fact that his foes have secured possession of the passes to the otherwise inaccessible mountain retreats where the Ameer's ally, Shere Jan, the leader of the faithful Terakhi clan, is encamped.

Meanwhile there is a general armistice. The Indians and Afghans are alike devout Mohammedans, and during the holy month of Ramadan, which this year will expire on the 23rd of June, the good Mussulman abstains, from the rising to the setting of the sun, from food and drink, from all nourishment that can restore his strength and from all pleasure that can gratify his senses. Next week, however, or during the week following the decisive struggle must come.

Should the Ameer's forces be routed and he himself forced to abdicate or be slain, England may feel justified in taking possession of the country of her fallen ally. This will enable her to secure the advantage of position in case of war with Russia. Otherwise the Russian forces would have great advantage at the outset, for with their superior means for transporting troops they could occupy all the strongholds of what they propose to make their frontier before the British army could have penetrated the intervening mountains.

England, however, with the aid of Austria and Germany, may be able to coerce Russia into keeping the peace. Unscrupulously ambitious of and constantly intriguing for power in the Balkan provinces, Russia cannot but be the object of Austria's most jealous care, and Germany may see in such a triple alliance so many advantages in case of a conflict between that government and France that she may be induced to join it. The Austrian and German ambassadors were closeted with Lord Salisbury on Tuesday afternoon, for exactly what purpose is not known, but it is generally supposed that some such plan of bringing Russia to terms as we have indicated was the subject of discussion.

A Dog to be Proud of.

The fidelity of a dog to his master was well illustrated last evening at Seventeenth street and Portland avenue. Christopher Hart, well known in police circles, became intoxicated, and his small yellow cur Dandy took in the necessities of the case at once. Dandy left his master's side and hunted down a policeman. The dog finally found Officer George Cornell and led the way to Hart, who was lying in the gutter. Hart was arrested and taken to Seventeenth street police station. Dandy would not rest content until admitted to Hart's cell. The dog slept on the rough bench beside his master, and became furious with rage when any one approached or attempted to interfere with Hart's peace.—Louisville Courier-Journal.

One Thing More Laid to the Sparrows.

The burning of the Paterson iron works is attributed to the English sparrow. The sparrows have been noticed carrying straw and other inflammable stuff and building their nests among the girders, and it is believed that the sparks lodging in these nests caused the fire.—Philadelphia Record.

—The thermometer will soon celebrate its centennial.

Pine leaves are coming to furnish a fibre which is used as a substitute for jute, flax, etc., in carpet manufacture, and the production of it is becoming a considerable industry.

Rev. Abbe Joseph Auguste Singer, of the Seminary of St. Sulpice, Montreal, died last night.

THE ART OF KEEPING COOL.

Bits of Advice Prompted by Old-fashioned Common Sense.

(Boston Post.)

The art of keeping cool these days is only second in wide human interest to the art of money-making. Yet the chief factor in both is a little old-fashioned common sense within the comprehension of everybody. The body is, after all, only a tool of the will. If with the first approach of warm weather we surrender to the heat, without any effort to overcome the changed climatic conditions, we are largely to blame for our sufferings. A little philosophy and experimenting will show the dullest that he suffers most who dwells most—in thought and speech—upon the weather. The first principle of keeping cool is to keep the mind fixed on anything and everything but the height of the mercury. The greatest trouble is the eating and drinking. Here people are the slaves of appetite or ignorance. They blindly continue to take into the system the most heat-producing foods, supplemented by frequent potations of iced drinks in myriad forms. No wonder they are hot! The food is enough to keep their blood at a boiling point, and this is aggravated by the ice water and other arctic drinks, which retard digestion and hinder the system from throwing off the waste. The inside of the body is ministered to at the expense of the outside. Instead of pouring gallons of drink down the throat, the faucet should be turned on the wrists and the mouth frequently rinsed as the jockey "sponges" his horse.

Bathing should become a religion instead of a lost art. There should be a saving at the bar to spend at the laundry. Finally, there should be some work to do. No mistake is more common than to suppose that work is incompatible with keeping cool. On the contrary, the man who makes a business of keeping cool suffers vastly more than he whose mind and body are moderately occupied. If great labor is necessary, it should be judiciously arranged. As much as possible should be done in the morning and evening hours to avoid the exhaustion of the midday heat. If the art of keeping cool, like that of money-making, thus appears to depend upon trifles, it must be remembered that "trifles make up perfection, and perfection is no trifle."

Cured by a Miracle.

Thomas Bedow, an Allegheny City blacksmith, lost the use of his legs two years ago, and his physician told him that he was afflicted with an incurable case of paralysis. He tried every known kind of treatment in vain and then resigned himself to his fate. Last week Mr. Bedow read an account of a remarkable cure wrought by faith, and when he went to bed that night he prayed long and earnestly that he might recover. The moment he awoke in the morning he felt that he was cured. He sprang from bed, danced about the floor, jumped into his clothing and ran downstairs, shouting all the time like a madman. Before ending his antics he ran about the yard several times to test his new-found strength. Mr. Bedow says he hasn't been so well for twenty years as he is now.

Up to the last week Mrs. B. F. Howe, of Huntington, Ind., had for more than three years been a bedridden invalid. She suffered from nervous prostration, was partially paralyzed and was even too sick to feed herself. Her physicians told her that death was rapidly approaching. On the afternoon of Saturday, June 18th, a few friends came over from the prayer meeting at the church and prayed for her recovery. After they had gone Mrs. Howe felt better, and in the evening she got out of bed of her own accord and walked around the room unassisted. In the morning she felt like a new woman, and went to church to give thanks for her remarkable recovery. She grew stronger and heartier every day, and seems to be entirely well.

Mrs. Walter Meade, the wife of an Adrian (Mich.) drayman, had been confined to her bed for several years with chronic diseases. A short time ago an internal abscess began to sap her remaining strength, and her case was abandoned as hopeless. At last the physician told her that at the utmost she could live only two day. Mrs. Meade prayed earnestly that night to be restored to health, and awoke refreshed. New life seemed to course through her veins, and she grew stronger every hour. The abscess dried up and disappeared, the other ailments departed and Mrs. Meade is now well. Besides that, her husband, a long scoffer at religion, is now a devout church-goer.

Medical circles in Erie are much amazed at the miraculous recovery from paralysis of Isaac Bally, a Lancaster soldier, who has been a patient at the Erie Soldiers' Home for a long time past. He had suffered almost entire paralysis from a gunshot wound, and during his stay at the Hom had been as helpless as a child. A few mornings ago he astonished his attendants by dressing himself unaided and walking about the premises as if nothing ailed him. He now seems to be entirely well. Mr. Bally is not a praying man.

Mrs. Ruby Mantel, of Keeler, Mich., had been lying ill in bed for eighteen months until the other day, when she suddenly rose and dressed herself without assistance. She now feels perfectly well, whereas previously she had not been able to drage herself around the house. Mrs. Mantel says that she prayed for recovery from the time she was taken ill, and that her prayers just before her restoration to health were no more earnest than they had been.

A Chicago woman who has had some success in the Christian science faith cure made an astonishing cure last week in the case of M. F. Potter, an Iowa man, who injured his spine ten months ago, and came to look on his condition as hopeless. Nine doctors treated him for six months and then gave him up to die. The Chicago woman cured him in two weeks without administering a drop of medicine, and he is now so well that he can walk a mile at a brisk gait without the slightest inconvenience.

Dr. Holmes says that when he was in England he insisted upon measuring some large elms to compare them with Boston elms. About sixteen feet around the trunk is the measurement of a Boston common elm, and from 20 to 23 feet is the ordinary maximum of the largest trees. He found an elm in the grounds of Magdalen College which measured 25 feet and 6 inches.

UPSET ON LAKE ONTARIO.

Terrible Experience of a Dunkirk Yachting Party Returning from Port Colborne.

The Dunkirk (N.Y.) correspondent of the Buffalo Courier writes: "Experiences as horrible as were ever related in fiction befell the crew of the Mary B. Bucher, a small sloop yacht of this place, which made a voyage to Canada and was wrecked on Monday night on its return. She had on board Fred. Bucher, her owner, and two friends, Stanley Gibson, a married man, a pattern maker in the Brooks shop, and Homer B. Adams, of Rushford, the shipping clerk at Barber, Scully & Co.'s planing mill here.

"The Mary B., with a sloop belonging to Frederic Fromm, which carried six people, sailed hence on Saturday night, reaching Port Colborne before the day. They started to return on Monday afternoon. In the calm and succeeding squalls they became separated, Bucher sailing further westward than Fromm. At 11 o'clock at night Bucher was within sight of the Dunkirk light and the harbor-beacon above them. Fromm was out of sight. They struck the third heavy squall, and at a quarter past 11 were lying in a great calm, which was probably the centre of the storm. Her jib was down and her mainsail doubly reefed. Suddenly a heavy squall struck her sail flat from the direction of the shore, in the pitchy darkness, and she was capsized. She thus floated, with a little of one side out of water, until 6 o'clock the next day, or nineteen hours.

"It was blackness itself, a howling wind was raging and a tremendous sea was up. The waves would strike them from their hold on the boat and they would get back with the greatest difficulty, even with the help of life lines which Bucher rigged. The labor of holding on, the knocks of the waves and the chill exhausted them and they grew weaker. Bucher, the strongest of the three and the only one accustomed to the water, was the only survivor.

"Adams was the first victim. Toward dawn he began to act strangely and became restless. He talked disconnectedly and soon showed that he had gone crazy. Just before daybreak he threw himself away from the boat and resisted three efforts to bring him back. A life-preserver about his neck kept his head up, but he got into the breaking waves, and rolled and revolved about and was continually beaten under, and so was slowly drowned at a distance of a few feet from the boat, in the sight of his companions. The corpse, buoyed up by the float, kept along close by the boat, which drifted on. Gibson complained of it, and finally fainted soon after sunrise. Bucher held him up, and the three, one dead, one insensible and one conscious, floated on. Bucher was picked up at 6 o'clock in the evening off his water-logged and sinking craft, only a few miles off Port Colborne, whither she had come again. The Robbie, Mr. McCaig, owner, of Silver Creek, picked them up, the corpse first, then Bucher and his insensible comrade. The Robbie set sail for Silver Creek and reached there at 5.30 o'clock this morning. Gibson recovered consciousness at 4, sank back again and died at 9 o'clock. Coroner Blood brought both bodies up from Silver Creek. Bucher is very ill from his long exposure, but will recover."

Best Little Girl in London.

Speaking of the small girl chosen to receive a memorial jubilee cup from the Queen, the London News says, whimsically: "The double-first is Miss Frances Dunn, aged 12, of St. Mary's, Westminster, national schools, whose supreme distinction is that, since the year 1880, she has never missed a single attendance. Others, perhaps, have sometimes been late, or have now and then been kept at home to mind the baby. On such an occasion as this it would be unkind to suggest that they have, perhaps, occasionally played truant. Frances has done none of these things, but with unfailing regularity has presented herself day by day, for seven years, at St. Mary's, Westminster, to receive nourishment at the fount of learning in a continuous flow. The after life of Frances will be interesting, and her career ought to be watched. Will it be a life of isolation? Can any child, after that memorial mug, invite her to join in a game of hop-scotch or skipping rope? She will be too 'high-strung,' and will probably suspect herself of depravity of taste in the rare moments in which she ventures to turn from Pinnock's catechism to the history of the giant-killer."

The Persian Idea of Christians.

After the usual programme of questions, they suggest:

"Being an Englishman, you are, of course, a Christian," by which they mean that I am not a Mussulman.

"Certainly," I reply; whereupon they lug me into one of their wine-shops and tender me a glass of raki (a corruption of "arrack," raw, fiery spirits of the kind known among the English soldiers in India by the suggestive pseudonym of "fixed bayonets"). Smelling the raki, I make a wry face and shove it away; they look surprised and order the waiter to bring cognac; to save the waiter trouble I make another wry face, indicative of disapproval, and suggest that he bring vishner-su.

"Vishner-su!" two or three of them sing out in a chorus of blank amazement. "Ingilis? Christi-an? vishner-su!" they exclaim, as though such a preposterous and unaccountable thing as a Christian partaking of a non-intoxicating beverage like vishner-su is altogether beyond their comprehension.—Around the World on a Bicycle.

It Wasn't.

He sat on the curb stone in front of the City Hall, in the full glare of the noonday sun, with the thermometer seeming to mark 400 degrees. A pedestrian who carried an umbrella in one hand and a handkerchief in the other, thought to joke him a little, and called out:

"Well, is this hot enough for you?"

"No, sir," was the prompt reply.

"Good lands! why not?"

"Because I've got the Canady ager, and this is just the time for my chill. Say, is there any hotter place than this in Detroit?"—Detroit Free Press.

"Do you rectify mistakes here?" asked a gentleman, as he stepped into a drug store. "Yes, sir, we do, if the patient is still alive," replied the urbane clerk.

THIS PAPER may be found on file at Geo. P. Rowell & Co's Newspaper Advertising Bureau (10 Spruce St.), where advertising contracts may be made for it IN NEW YORK.

THE ADVANCE.

Is published

Every Thursday,

FROM THE OFFICE,

Hollingwood Street, - - Flesherton, Ont.

TERMS OF SUBSCRIPTION:

$1 per annum when paid strictly in advance
$1.50 per annum when not so paid.

A. R. FAWCETT,
Editor and Proprietor.

FLESHERTON:
THURSDAY, JULY 21, 1887.

PROHIBITION PROHIBITS.

"In all our exchanges, reports are to the effect that Independence day was celebrated in grand style. Never before in the history of Kansas have celebrations been so largely attended, and not a serious accident reported that occurred during the day. What is the reason? We think the reason obvious: Prohibition prohibits. In the gathering at Cedarville, the number of persons in attendance was variously estimated to be from three to five thousand, yet not a drunk man was seen during the entire day and not an accident, nor a harsh word spoken to mar the pleasure of anyone.

There is no doubt, however, but what there are some who will smuggle the stuff into Kansas towns, and that there are some old topers who will use every effort to obtain liquor. Yet the liquor traffic has become so unpopular and the law governing it so stringent that those who will and must have it, keep it so quiet that it is seldom seen; therefore we say, prohibition prohibits.

The above is clipped from the Cedarville (Kansas, U. S.) Globe, of which Mr. Barron—son-in-law of Mr. J. Cornfield, of Artemesia—is the senior editor and proprietor. Now, the Globe is not a Temperance organ, and cannot, therefore, be said to have its judgement warped in any particular direction. It simply speaks of the effect of prohibttion in Kansas as an undeniable fact. It is no second-hand opinion, either, but the result of careful observation by a resident of Kansas. This gentleman, an eye-witness, as it were, of the result of prohibition in that State, gives it as his unhesitating and unasked for opinion, that prohibition really and truly does pro-Libit—in Kansas at anyrate.

What are we to gather from this? Simply this fact, viz., that the liquor question can be successfully dealt with by act of parliament, when the proper machinery for its enforcement is put in operation and when the mass of the people give it their moral support. Without the latter it would be a hopeless task; and without the second, the first would be almost unnecessary.

We cannot refrain from adding another thought or two. We are of the opinion that prohibition only prohibits under certain circumstances. A local option law is passed, for instance, in some county by a narrow majority. As there are hundreds of people who do not vote at all, it is just possible the sentiment of that county is not fairly represented wher the result of the counting of the ballots is known. As an outcome, every obstacle is placed in the way to prevent the enforcement of the new law. The majority are against it and violations of the law in this respect are of frequent occurrence. Illicit stills spring up in every direction, and low grog-houses abound everywhere. Perjury becomes common; neighbor is set against neighbor, friend against friend, brother against brother, and, perhaps, father against son. The reason for all this is not hard to find. The prohibitionists were too precipitate and got ahead of enlightened public opinion. They rushed at things—earnestly, perhaps, but thoughtlessly. Result: failure.

The unenlightened savage resents any attempts to make him amenable to the laws of civilized countries; educate him properly and he soon becomes a law-abiding creature. The "enlightened" citizen also resents attempts to make him comply with the demands of what to him are obnoxious laws: he requires enlightenment quite as much as the uncivilized barbarian—in this one respect at least. It will require time—yes, and patience; but let it be remembered that great and good laws are not secured at a bound: neither are they obtained by the liberal expenditure of disgusting froth and gush sentiment.

Unless carried by a very large majority, the proper enforcement of local option laws, regulating the traffic, is an impossibility. There should be at the least a three-fourth vote of the State or County in its favor to ensure that success all earnest Temperance people desire. Otherwise it is better—far better—to wait until Temperance principles so strongly predominate as to render failure impossible. Besides, many of those who now vote for such laws are among the first to break them. They drink themselves but don't want their children to follow in their footsteps. Hence their peculiar inconsistency. But that very inconsistency is a source of weakness to the Temperance element which must be met. In fact "Temperance education" has much to accomplish before we can have prohibition.

The Way to Say It.

"Which am de properest way to suppress ones self! Does yer say, "We eated at the table' or 'we has dun ate at de table?'" asked one Texas darkey of another, they being engaged in a grammatical discussion. As they could not agree the question was referred to Uncle Mose for his decision, which was:

"In de case ob you two niggahs none ob yos am right."

"What am de proper way to say: 'We eated at de table,' Uncle Mose?"

"De properest way for sich cattle as you two am: "We fed at de troft.'"

"HACKMETACK," a lasting and fragrant perfume. Price 25 and 50 cents. Sold by Medical Hall.

ADVICE TO MOTHERS.—Are you disturbed at night and broken of your rest by a sick child suffering and crying with pain of Cutting Teeth? If so send at once and get a bottle of "Mrs. Winslow's Soothing Syrup" for Children Teething. Its value is incalculable. It will relieve the poor little sufferer immediately. Depend upon it, mothers; there is no mistake about it. It cures Dysentery and Diarrhœa, regulates the Stomach and Bowels, cures Wind Colic, softens the Gums, reduces Inflammation, and gives tone and energy to the whole system. "Mrs. Winslow's Soothing Syrup" for children teething is pleasant to the taste and is the prescription of one of the oldest and best female physicians and nurses in the United States, and is for sale by all druggists throughout the world. Price twenty five cents a bottle. Be sure and ask for "Mrs. WINSLOW'S SOOTHING SYRUP," and take no other kind

FOR DYSPEPSIA and Liver Complaint, you have a printed guarantee on every bottle of Shiloh's Vitalizer. It never fails to cure. Sold at Medical Hall.

SCROFULA

Humors,

I do not believe that Ayer's Sarsaparilla has an equal as a remedy for Scrofulous Humors. It is pleasant to take, gives strength and vigor to the body, and produces a more permanent, lasting, result than any medicine I ever used.—E. Haines, No. Lindale, O.

Erysipelas,

I have used Ayer's Sarsaparilla, in my family, for Scrofula, and know, if it is taken faithfully, it will thoroughly eradicate this terrible disease.—W. E. Fowler, M. D., Greenville, Tenn.

Canker, and

For forty years I have suffered with Erysipelas. I have tried all sorts of remedies for my complaint, but found no relief until I commenced using Ayer's Sarsaparilla. After taking ten bottles of this medicine I am completely cured.—Mary C. Amesbury, Rockport, Me.

Catarrh,

I have suffered, for years, from Catarrh, which was so severe that it destroyed my appetite and weakened my system. After trying other remedies, and getting no relief, I began to take Ayer's Sarsaparilla, and, in a few months, was cured.—Susan L. Cook, 900 Albany st., Boston Highlands, Mass.

Can be cured by purifying the blood with

Ayer's Sarsaparilla is superior to any blood purifier that I have ever tried. I have taken it for Scrofula, Canker, and Salt-Rheum, and received much benefit from it. It is good, also, for a weak stomach.—Millie Jane Peirce, South Bradford, Mass.

Ayer's Sarsaparilla,

Prepared by Dr. J. C. Ayer & Co., Lowell, Mass.
Price $1; six bottles, $5.

The

CHILDRENS HEALTH.

One of Natures Kindest Gifts is a Healthy Constitution. Guard it against disease by using

Siamese Worm Powders.

Worms are the fruitful cause of many disorders in Children. SIAMESE WORM POWDERS will expel Worms in every case where they exist, will regulate the Stomach and Bowels at the same time. Use them, you won't regret it.

Peck's Pleasant Pills!

Should always be used for Sick Headache. Their operation is mild and pleasant. They strike home each time when used for a Disordered Liver. Ask for them. Get them. Don't forget the name, Peck's Pleasant Pills.

If your druggist has not the above preparation in Stock, W. W. STEPHEN & CO., of Meaford, will send them to you prepaid on receipt of 25c. for either, 5 of each, or assorted for $1.00.

W. W. STEPHEN & CO.

Druggists, Wholesale & Retail,

MEAFORD.

IN the matter of WILLIAM HOGG, of the Village of Flesherton Station, in the County of Grey, General Storekeeper

The Insolvent has made an assignment of his Estate to the undersigned, in pursuance of an Act respecting Assignments for the benefit of Creditors, 42 Vic., Chap. 26, and the Creditors are notified to meet at No. 26 Wellington Street East, Toronto, on Monday 18th July, 1887, at 4 o'clock, p.m., to receive statements of his affairs, appoint Inspectors, and for the ordering of the affairs of the Estate generally.

And Notice is hereby given, that after 15th August, next, the said Trustee will proceed to distribute the assets of the said Debtor among the parties entitled thereto, having regard only to the claims of which Notice shall have been given, and that he will not be liable for the assets, or any part thereof so distributed to any person or persons of whose debt or claim he shall not then have had notice.

E. R. C. CLARKSON,
Trustee.

26 Wellington St. East, Toronto.
4th July, 1887. 316-317

Agents, Agents!

NOW READY— —OUR NEW BOOK

EARTH, SEA AND SKY

OR

Marvels of the Universe

Being a full and graphic description of all that is wonderful in every Continent of the Globe, in the world of waters and the starry Heavens. Containing thrilling adventures on land and sea, renowned discoveries of the world's greatest explorers in all ages, and remarkable phenomena in every realm of nature. Embracing the striking physical features of the earth the peculiar characteristics of the human race, of animals, birds, insects, etc., including a vivid description of the Atlantic, Pacific and Indian Oceans and of the Polar Seas, the monsters of the deep, beautiful seashells and plants, singular fishes and dwellers in the world of waters remarkable ocean currents, etc., together with the amazing phenomena of the solar and starry systems, by Henry Davenport Northrop, D.D., embellished with over 300 fine engravings. Liberal terms to agents. Oxford Publishing Company, 5 Jordan St. Toronto, Ont. 316-368

ROAD NOTICE.

Township of Artemesia.

Notice is hereby given that the Municipality of Artemesia will after one month from the first publication hereof in the FLESHERTON ADVANCE news paper, the date of which first publication will be on the 7th day of July, 1887, proceed to pass a By Law establishing the undermentioned Deviation of Road in this Township, viz., from a point numbered 41 on a deviation under By-Law 303, made by T. Gilliland, Esq., between Lots 21 and 21 in the 12th Concession, on a line bearing to centre of Road, known as Champ's road, instead of on bearing 42 as mentioned on plan by said Gilliland, which part of said By Law 303 will be repealed, and also to satisfy the original intention to carry any other part of said road in the Divisional line of Lots as far as practical.

Council will meet on second Monday of Aug., instead of 1st, to pass it.

W. J. BELLAMY, Township Clerk

One High-Bred Durham Bull,

"KING BILLY,"

The Royal Champion,

Will stand for service for the year 1887, at Lot 162, 1st Range, W.T. & S.R., Artemesia, at the small sum of $2.00.

W. C. PARKER

TAMARAC ELIXIR
NATURE'S REMEDY
FOR COUGHS, COLDS, HOARSENESS, THROAT & LUNG COMPLAINTS
INSTANT RELIEF, POSITIVE CURE

SOUTHERN ASTHMA CURE
DOUBLE TREATMENT IN EACH PACKAGE
INSTANT RELIEF FOR
ASTHMA AND BRONCHITIS
BY MAIL ON RECEIPT OF PRICE
SAMPLES, 25c.; REGULAR SIZE, $1.00
ADDRESS FULFORD & CO., BROCKVILLE, ONT.

NOTICE.

GRAY CHAMPION!

A THOROUGH-BRED DURHAM BULL, with good pedigree, will stand for service at Lot 149 West T. & S.R., Artemesia. TERMS, $1 if paid on or before Jan. 1st, 1888; otherwise, $1.25.

Also thorough-bred BERKSHIRE BOAR at same place. JACOB A. LEVER.

Farm for Sale!

100 ACRE FARM, 85 acres cleared, in good state of cultivation, Log Barn, Frame Stable and other out-buildings. Good Roughcast House, splendid Cellar, good Well at the door, large Orchard with good bearing Fruit Trees. Lots 148, 149, 150, 3rd Range East, Artemesia. Possession can be had this fall. Title clear. JAMES BEECROFT,
314-319. Proprietor.

WHAT IS IT?

IT IS A FACT AND NO CONTROVERSY THAT

JOHNSON'S

TONIC BITTERS

and NERVINE is the best remedy in the market for nervous diseases of any sort. Hysteria, Loss of Appetite, Debility from loss of fluids or overwork, Paleness of Complexion so often seen in young females and all complaints arising from poverty of blood.

It is a fact and no gainsaying that JOHNSON'S TONIC LIVER PILLS are the very best in the market for diseases caused by Torpid Liver and derrangement of the Stomach or Kidneys.

It is a fact and no one will deny it that JOHNSON'S ALL HEALING WHITE OINTMENT is the best in the market for Burns, Scalds, Chilblains, Salt Rheum, Barbers Itch, Pimples and all Skin Disorders arising from scrofulous taint

W. S. CHRISTOE has been appointed Agent for the above and has them on sale at his Medical Hall, Flesherton. Try for yourselves and be satisfied.

DUNDALK

PUMP WORKS!

C. R. PHILLIP'S,

Manufacturer of all kinds of PUMPS.

Cylinder Check Valve & Cistern Pumps.

Orders Respectfully Solicited and satisfaction guaranteed.

JAMES SULLIVAN,
Tin-Smith's AGENT,
FLESHERTON.

J. B. SLOAN

Has any quantity of Shingles, &c., on hand at Eugenia.

Cheap for Cash.

James Sullivan,

The Tinsmith, - Flesherton

Repairing, Eavetroughing, and in fact everything in the business will receive my prompt and careful attention at reasonable prices.

THE MARKETS.

FLESHERTON.

Carefully Corrected Each Week.

Flour	$4 00 to 4 20
Fall Wheat	$0 75 to 0 75
Spring Wheat	0 75	0 75
Barley	0 30	0 45
Oats	0 26	0 26
Peas	0 47	0 48
Butter	0 11½	0 12½
Eggs, fresh	0 13	0 13
Potatoes bush	0 50	0 50
Pork	5 60	5 60
Hay, per ton	10 00	10 00
Hides	6 00	7 00
Wool	20	22
Sheepskins	0 40	0 50
Geese	0 05	0 05
Turkeys	0 8	0 8
Chickens per pair	0 25	0 30
Ducks per pair	0 40	0 50

AT GORDON'S HARNESS SHOP

FLESHERTON,

You will find an assortment of

Heavy and Light Harness,

Whips, Brushes, Curry Combs, Sweat Pads, and the celebrated "Harness Oil."

COLLARS A SPECIALTY.

Cheap for Cash. Call and Examine.

R. J. SPROUL,

Flesherton. Conveyancer, Appraiser, Valuator and Money lender. Deeds, Mortgages, leases and Wills drawn up and Valuations made on shortest notice. Charges very low. Apply to R. J. SPROULE, Postmaster, Flesherton.

CLAYTON'S HARNESS SHOP!

FLESHERTON,

Is the place to get your Harness Collars, &c., made up in good style.

Shop in W. Clayton's Boot & Shoe Store, Flesherton.

HARNESS HARNESS.

...If you want Harness, Single or Double, or Horse Blankets, Trunks, Bells, Valises, Curry Combs, Brushes or the celebrated Harness Oil, call & examine before purchasing elsewhere.

R. J. WATSON,
PRICEVILLE

PHOTOGRAPHY.

MRS. BULMER,

Photographer,

Flesherton - Ont.

Having spent some time in the studio of the famous Toronto Photographer, Mr. S. J. Dixon where I acquired valuable knowledge in Retouching, I feel assured I can give good general satisfaction. A call respectfully solicited.

MRS. BULMER.

Flesherton, Sept. 17th, 1885.

THE CELEBRATED DR CHASE'S MANDRAKE DANDELION LIVER CURE

HAVE YOU

Liver Complaint, Dyspepsia, Indigestion, Biliousness, Jaundice, Headache, Dizziness, Pain in the Back, Costiveness, or any disease arising from a deranged liver, Dr. CHASE'S LIVER CURE will be found a sure and certain remedy

NATURE'S REMEDY

The unqualified success of Dr. Chase's Liver Cure in Liver Complaint rests solely with the fact that it is compounded from nature's well-known liver regulators, MANDRAKE AND DANDELION, combined with many other invaluable roots, barks and herbs, having a powerful effect on the Kidneys, Stomach, Bowels and Blood.

500,000 SOLD

Over one half million of Dr. Chase's Recipe Books were sold in Canada alone. We want every man, woman and child who is troubled with Liver Complaint to try this excellent remedy.

SOMETHING NEW. GIVEN AWAY FREE

Wrapped around every bottle of Dr. Chase's Liver Cure is a valuable Household Medical Guide and Recipe Book (84 pages), containing over 200 useful recipes, pronounced by medical men and druggists as invaluable, and worth ten times the price of the medicine.

TRY CHASE'S CATARRH CURE. A safe and positive remedy. Price, 25 cents.

TRY CHASE'S KIDNEY AND LIVER PILLS. 25 cts. per box.

SOLD BY ALL DEALERS

T. EDMANSON & CO., Sole Agents, Bradford

Flesherton Meat Market.

S. SPIRIT, - - - PROPRIETOR.

Cash paid for fat Cattle and Sheep.

Fresh Meats constantly on hand for Cash. Orders promptly filled.

—EUGENIA—

Real Estate Agency

MONEY TO LOAN at lowest rates of interest and on terms of repayment to suit borrower.

FARMS bought and sold.

CONVEYANCES of all kinds properly executed.

COMMISSIONER for taking affidavits in H.C.J., Agent for the Norwich Fire Insurance Society. All business promptly, carefully and confidentially attended to.

Office, Corner of Inkerman and Napoleon Streets.

HENRY MELDRUM,
AGENT.

Medical Hall,

FLESHERTON,

Is the place to obtain Mixed

Paints

A Great Variety and Cheap.

Linseed Oil.

White and Red

LEAD!

Venetian Red,
Yellow Ocre,
Varnish.

Medicines

Of Large Variety, and constantly adding new ones.

White Wine Vinegar.

MEDICINAL STIMULANTS

Of Best Quality.

CONFECTIONERIES.

BISCUITS by best Makers.

Beef, Iron & Wine.

PLASTER OF PARIS,
DIAMOND DYES,
TRIANGLE DYES,
MAGNETIC DYES.

LYTLES
"SHEEP DIP."

Don't let your Cattle or Sheep suffer from vermin, with an effectual so near you. Only $1 for a pint, enough to make 40 gallons of wash.

"GOLD OIL!"

Unparrelled for Rheumatism.

THIS
ESTABLISHMENT

Pays cash for everything, receives discount and therefore can sell cheap.

COMMERCIAL UNION IN NORTH AMERICA.

From the Insurance & Finance Chronicle.

We have before us a phamphlet,—or rather some letters and speeches in pamphlet form—with the above title published by Mr. Erastus Wiman in New York; and we take a certain amount of pride in saying that we have read that pamphlet through, because if patience be a virtue, we certainly lay claim to having been virtuous so far as performing that act of perusal goes; a very large amount of patience being required to enable us to read some thirty to thirty-five pages of the most illogical arguments used to prove the most impossible proposition ever laid before the public. Our readers are well aware of our views upon the question of Commercial Union between Canada and the United States, and those views have been strengthened instead of altered by the utterances of Mr. Wiman and his friends. Had those utterances been given in favor either of the principle of Free Trade, or of the advisibility of Canada becoming annexed to the United States, they might have been worth some consideration; but as illustrating the advantages to be gained by Canada from a commercial union with the States, the two remaining separate nations, there appears to us to be an irreconcilable dream or romance only calculated to cause a smile in the mind of any thoughtful statesman.

That Canada is still a part of the British Empire seems to be completely ignored in Mr. Wiman's "plan of campaign," if we may use the expression, or only briefly alluded to as though the fact was of no consequence whatever regarding the question in point, whereas to our mind it is the very keystone upon which all negociations relating to commercial intercourse with foreign countries must rest. It is perfectly true that the Mother country has given us the right to arrange our own tariffs always with the proviso that we do not discriminate against Great Britain; but the very moment we do that, we make a declaration of Independance, and if persisted in, cease to remain a colony or to have any part in the Empire. And the Hon. Mr. Longley's remarks in his letter of the 28th March, that he does not believe "that Great Britain will interpose any obstacle to a Commercial Union between the United States and Canada, if the Canadian people give unmistakable evidence of a desire for it," simply mean that the Mother country would offer no obstacle to Canada's independence if we decided to ask it.

If commercial union does not mean in the first place, Canadian Independence, and secondly annexation to our powerful neighbor, we fail to see what it does mean; and England under those circumstances, might as well be expected to consider Canada as belonging to her, and guarantee her protection in the event of difficulties, as to render the same service to the United States themselves. How Mr. Wiman can argue that by such an alliance Canada could still remain a British colony, is quite beyond our comprehension. To suppose that a colony can admit the products or manufactures of a foreign country free, while it impose a duty upon similar merchandise from the Mother country, is to suppose an anomaly which would be only preposterous folly. The whole tenor of the correspondence, so far as we have been able to judge, endeavors to prove that Canada and the United States should no longer be considered as being foreign countries one to the other; but that the former should still continue to regard the Mother country, so far as commerce is concerned, as a foreigner, and yet claim to remain a colony full of loyalty is an hypothesis both startling and ridiculous.

Let us next consider the question from the international point of view, as between Canada and the United States, supposing for the sake of argument the former to be an independent country. The pleas in favor of Commercial Union, when boiled down, are merely in favor of the theory of Free Trade and against that of Protection, for the proposed untrammelled interchange of the commodities of both countries is a most complete acknowledgment that fresh markets for each are mutually necessary, which markets under the present system are unavailable, and can only be secured by Free Trade! We are neither disputing nor admitting this line of argument, but that it should be used by those who on either side uphold a Protection policy is, we submit, somewhat extraordinary.

Finally, looking at the subject from a purely Canadian point of view, and allowing—what seems to us an impossibility—that the two nations (Canada and the States) could long remain distinct, the inevitable results which would follow commercial union would certainly be the complete extinction of the Dominion Fisheries and the just as sure ruin of her cotton manufactories; for as the Gloucester Fishermen would freely enter Canada's waters, and carry her fish to their own markets without purchase, so we could never be expected to compete in cotton fabrics with a country which has the raw material, coal and iron at its very doors. Further, as the St. Louis Board of Trade puts it, with "uniform laws to be passed by both countries for the imposition of duties on imports" (from outside nations) it is manifest that those laws and duties would be regulated by the majority, and we leave it to our readers to decide in that case whether such laws and duties would be formulated at Washington, the capital of a population of 60,000,000, or at Ottawa, the capital of a population under 5,000,000.

Let us say in conclusion, that with Canada's annexation to the States, commercial union would follow as a matter of course, and be absolutley necessary; but without that annexation, and Canada remaining either as a colony of Great Britain, or even in her present stage of developement becoming independent, such Commercial Union is the most delusive chimera, or will-o'-the-wisp, ever flaunted before the public mind.

Whether from swampy land or stagnant pool, or from the deadly gases of city sewers, malarial poisons are the same. Ayer's Ague Cure, taken according to directions, is a warranted specific for malarial disorders.

It Might Have Been Worse.

A Detroiter who was the father of very cross twins, was enjoying a brief rest about midnight, when he was aroused by a vigorous pounding upon the door, and the jangling of the bell.

"What's the matter?" he yelled, as he stuck his head out of the window and saw a policeman.

"Your house is on fire," was the reply.

"O, is that all? I thought from the noise you have been making that both babies had the colic again."

ARE YOU MADE miserable by Indigestion, Constipation, Dizziness, Loss of appetite, Yellow Skin? Shiloh's Vitalizer is a positive cure. Sold at Medical Hall.

SLEEPLESS NIGHTS, made miserable by that terrible cough. Shiloh's Cure is the remedy for you. Sold at Medical Hall.

SHILOH'S CURE will immediately relieve Croup, Whooping Cough, and Bronchitis. Sold at Medical Hall.

THE REV. GEO. H. THAYER, of Bourbon, Ind., says: "Both myself and wife owe our lives to SHILOH'S CONSUMPTION CURE." Sold at Medical Hall.

NEW ADVERTISEMENTS.

STRAYED.

CAME to the premises of the undersigned Lot 3, Con 4, Artemesia, on 4th June, 1 steer. Owner can have the same by proving property and paying expenses. WM. FLETCHER

STRAYED

FROM the premises of the undersigned, Lot 145, 2nd Range West, Back Line, 1 red, yearling steer. Any person giving information will be suitably rewarded JEREMIAH PIPER.

The well-bred Durham Bull,

"DAUNTLESS!"

Reg[illegible] edigree)

WILL be for the service of Cows the season of 1887 at his own place, Lot 152, 3rd Range West, T. & S.R., Artemesia.

TERMS: —$1.00 per cow, payable on or before Jan. 1st, 1888. Cows not returned regularly to bull will be charged whether in calf or not.

DONALD McKENZIE,
(313-317) Proprietor.

TIMBER AND LAND SALE.

CERTAIN lots and the timber thereon situate in the Townships of Allan, Assiginack, Bidwell, Billings, Carnarvon, Campbell, Howland, Shoguiandah, Tehkummah and Mills on the Manitoulin Island, in the District of Algoma, in the Province of Ontario, will be offered for Sale at Public Auction in blocks of 200 acres, more or less, on the first day of September next, at 10 o'clock, A.M. at the Indian Land Office in the Village of Manitowaning.

Terms of Sale:—Bonus for timber payable in cash, price of land payable in cash, a license fee also payable in cash and dues to be paid accordingly to Tariff upon the timber when cut.

The land on which the timber grows to be sold with the timber without conditions of settlement.

At the same time and place the Merchantable Timber of not less than nine inches in diameter at the butt, on the Spanish River Reserve and French River lower Reserve will be offered for sale for a cash bonus and annual ground rent of $1.00 per square mile, and dues to be paid on the timber as cut, according to Tariff of this Department.

For full particulars please apply to Jas. C. Phipps, Esq., Indian Supt. Manitowaning, or to the undersigned.

No other paper to insert this advertisement without authority through the Queen's Printer

L. VANKOUGHNET,
Deputy of the Supt. Gen'l. of Indian Affairs.

Department of Indian Affairs,
Ottawa, 2nd June, 1887.

Publisher's Announcement!

In the matter of

FINE JOB

Printing!

It is generally conceded that the

Flesherton Advance

TAKES THE

BISCUIT!

EVERY TIME!

Posters! Posters!

From an Eighth Sheet to a mammoth Three-Sheeter—plain or in colors—at prices that will arrest your attention and surprise you.

Auction Sale Bills

WHILE YOU WAIT.

PAMPHLETS!

Big, Little, Great and Small.

Circulars, Bill Heads,
Note Heads, Streamers,
Flyers, Dodgers,
Business Cards,
Visiting Cards,
Shipping Tags,
Labels, etc. etc.

DRUGGISTS' LABELS

As cheap and as good as can be obtained in the city.

New Material

Is added to our stock every Spring and Fall.

NOTICE!

THE ADVANCE will be sent to any address in Canada or the United States for $1 per year; and to England, Ireland, or Scotland for $1.50

THE ADVANCE unquestionably has no superior as a live Local and Family newspaper in Simcoe, Grey, or Bruce.

A. R. FAWCETT,

Editor and Proprietor,

FLESHERTON, ONT.

Medical.

DR. CARTER,
M.C.P. & S., ONT.
PHYSICIAN, SURGEON, &c.
FLESHERTON.

Office, Strain's block. Residence, Wm. Wright's

Dentistry.

DENTISTRY.

Thomas Henderson, L.D.S.

SURGEON DENTIST

Gold Medalist and Honor Graduate of the R.C.D.S.,

Will visit FLESHERTON, (Munshaw's Hotel) 1 and 2 of each month. Teeth extracted, inserted and filled in the highest styles of the art, at moderate rates.

HEAD OFFICE, 761 YONGE ST., TORONTO

Legal.

J. W. FROST, LL.B.,
Barrister, Solicitor, Conveyancer.

Office,—Strain's Building, FLESHERTON.
A. A. CHESLEY, Solicitor and Conveyancer Resident Manager.
MR. FROST will be found at the Office on Thursdays as heretofore.

P. McCULLOUGH,
Barrister, Solicitor, &c.
Office, over McFarland's Store, Markdale. Money to Loan.

MASSON & MASSON,

BARRISTERS, SOLICITORS, &c.
OFFICES:—Owen Sound, in Vicker's Block Poulett St., Branch office in Markdale, over McFarland's store, on Friday and Saturday every week.
J. MASSON, Q.C. S. MASSON. W. MASSON
N.B.—Private & Company's funds to invest at from Six to Eight per cent.

Business Cards.

John W. Armstrong,
FLESHERTON, Co. GREY

DIVISION COURT CLERK, COMMISSIONER, &c. Conveyancer, &c. Agent for purchased sale of lands. Appraiser for C.L.C. and F.P.B. & S. Society. Money to loan in the most reasonable terms. ISSUER OF MARRIAGE LICENSES. NOTARY PUBLIC.

MONEY TO LOAN.
At 6 Per Cent.
On Town or Farm Property.
S. DAMUDE,
Flesherton.

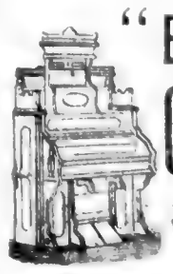
W. J. BELLAMY.
TWP. CLERK ARTEMESIA
CONVEYANCER, COMMISSIONER, INSURANCE AGT, &C.
DEEDS, MORTGAGES, LEASES, &c. carefully and properly executed. Insurance effected in first-class companies. Money to lend at lowest rates.

GET YOUR MEAT
—FROM—
Petch & Mitchell,
GENERAL BUTCHERS,
FLESHERTON!
Cash paid for fat cattle, &c., &c.

NEW LIVERY!

THE undersigned begs to announce that he has started a first-class Livery in the stand opposite Munshaw's Hotel, Flesherton, where the travelling public can be accommodated with good rigs and horses at most reasonable prices. Try me and be convinced.
Respectfully yours,
W. H. JOHNSTON.
Flesherton, Nov. 19th, 1886

Picture Framing,
Neatly, Cheaply & Quickly Done, by
J. E. MOORE,
Durham St., Opposite Clayton's Harness Shop



"BELL" ORGANS
Unapproached for Tone and Quality.
CATALOGUES FREE.
BELL & CO., Guelph, Ont.

WHAT THE LADIES WORE.

Marvellous Toilets Displayed at the Queen's Garden Party.

A London cablegram says: The Royal garden party at Buckingham Palace this week, being favored by fine weather, was the most brilliant event of the season. There was a greater display of odd and picturesque toilets than at any social event in London this year. Black and white combinations were very popular. The Duchess of Roxburgh wore black and white. Her dress was of white moire covered lightly with black lace spriped ribbon-wise, while lines of black silk moire gleamed through the meshes of the lace with its own peculiar effect of small rivulets of running water. The bodice and drapery at the back were composed entirely of striped lace. The small bonnet was white, veiled with fine black lace and trimmed with white plumes. The sunshade matched the bonnet. The Countess Brownlow's dress consisted of exquisitely tinted shot satin, named after Sir Peter Lely. The satin was enriched by the shining through of deep yellow silken threads at the back. These gave depth to the surface gray, which in turn was counteracted by the pale tones of the greenish-blue with which the gray was shot. According as the folds caught the light one tint of the other predominated with the ever-changing effect of hues seen on a dove's neck. The front of the dress was in ivory silk, covered with Turkish embroidery of somewhat similar style to that worn by the Crown Princess in the Jubilee procession. This, however, was worked on silk muslin of very soft texture, in gold, silver and white silk, and instead of being laid flat on the silk it was carried up to the neck and arranged in most graceful of folds down the whole length of the skirt, the glimmer of the gold and silver harmonizing most admirably with the pale gray and deep yellow in the brocade. The bonnet was small in size, and consisted of a skilfully-arranged mixture of white lace, pink rosebuds and white tulle.

The Countess of Hopetoun's dress was composed of white lace, embroidered in silk and fine wool and draped over with pink Bengaline. The bonnet was of pink tulle, rising in tier upon tier of miniature puffings, and trimmed with roses in shades of cream color and pink.

The new style of dress called the "Marguerite" was worn by the Countess of Lovelace. It was of blue and yellow foulard, the folds being drawn at the right side through the bands of a pocket in dark velvet. A rich trimming ran round the skirt and trimmed the bodice.

Lady Dorchester's dress was of foulard mauve worn over a front richly ornamented in straw. The bodice was in full folds caught across diagonally at the waist with bands of straw embroidery. The collar and cuffs were also embroidery.

In the dress which was worn by the Hon. Mrs. Egerton the whole of the front was in stripes of alternate cream-colored lace and gold embroidery, through both of which a lining of pink satin shone, contrasting harmoniously with the gold, as pink only can. The back was of water-cress green moire, as well as the bodice, which was made with a vest of gold embroidery and lace stripes. The collar was a strip of gold finished with a high and picturesque frill of soft pink lisse. The vest, which was caught at the waist with three gold buckles, which held in its fulness, was of moss-green tulle, covered with gold tinsel and edged with sparkling galloons in gold and green, the latter being shaded like a peacock's neck feathers and gemmed here and there with large square stones in imitation of emeralds, and cut with a skill that has brought a fortune to the inventor. A crescent similar in character to the galloons stood upright above the brow among cloudy folds of green tulle.

A lovely dress slightly akin to the above was in bronze moire, the whole of the front being draped with tan colored crepe de Chine. The fastenings were large metal buttons of a rococo design. The bonnet was made of twigs and trimmed with pink roses.

Lady Dudley was dressed in black silk, striped with lace, and opening in front over long soft folds of white silk muslin, the silk being so arranged as to fall over the muslin, floating away from it with every motion of the wearer. The bonnet was also black, relieved with white.

The Marchioness of Downshire was also in black and white, the dress being of satin and striped ribbonwise with silk. The front was of white silk, covered with lace.

The Countess of Onslow was in a dress of soft and rich pink silk, covered with Valenciennes lace. The effect of the very becoming bonnet of pink crepe and tulle, trimmed with rosebuds, was still further enhanced by a sunshade of pink crepe, with drapery of white silk muslin.

Lady Bantry's toilet presented an exquisite contrast of color. The dress itself was of rich brown silk, turned up with satin of a golden fawn tone. The bonnet matched the dress.

Another excellent contrast of color was seen in Hon. Mrs. Hugh Elliot's mignonette-colored silk dress, worn over a front all softly draped with pink crepe de Chine. Lace in light design and of a cream-colored tone was introduced wherever the pink met the mignonette color, so as to soften the effect of the junction. The bonnet was of mignonette-color and of pink roses.

Bonnets and hats, especially the latter, were a study, for which the retirement of the sun and the closing of sunshades offered special facilities. One hat of a quaint and indescribable shape was thatched with twigs. A large loop of gold gauze was placed in front, and in this some birds, presumably swallows, were disporting themselves. A very tall, broad-brimmed, brown straw hat had clusters of unripe currants falling down. The brim was caught up at one side with Chartreuse green and brown ribbons. Several hats were made of a perfectly transparent substance like fibre, which was embroidered with straw in some fanciful design. These were of various shapes, but as they showed the hair and shape of head, they were in no case unbecoming. The prettiest was black, with embroidery of straw color and a branch of roses lain across the top, in which thorns were displayed. A directoire straw bonnet was lined with moss green velvet, with no trimmings on the outside save a few dozen of cherries. Small bonnets, made up of satin, studded and jetted net to match the brown in color, were much worn. These had borders of graduated balls made of tiny sequins, and spangles matching the net of which they were made. They were worked in gold, silver, blue, heliotrope, fawn and grey, according to the prevailing color of the gown. With few exceptions very high-crowned hats were not worn.

AT SEA IN A BALLOON.

Perilous Adventure of an Aeronaut and His Friends.

A Portland (Me.) despatch says: Mr. C. H. Grimley will not forget his aeronautic excursion of yesterday if he lives to be as old as Methuselah. He took to his bed after the active philanthropists on board the yacht Mermaid picked him up, with a companion, out of the wind-stirred waters of Casco Bay. The comment he made to his preservers was:

"Thank the Lord, I can live a while longer!"

The balloon Columbus started from Lincoln Park in the presence of an immense crowd at 5 o'clock yesterday afternoon. The wind was strong, and there was some delay in getting the inflated bag of oiled and varnished cotton away from terra firma. Finally Mr. Grimley soared on high, and the gaping spectators stretched their necks gazing as the air ship sailed away across Casco Bay.

When the balloon attained a considerable altitude an adverse current turned the course from the land toward the sea. The æronaut took in the peril of his situation at a glance. The air current might carry the balloon far out over the heaving ocean, and night was approaching. The valve cord was pulled and the outflowing gas soon caused a descent to be made. Off Clapboard Island more gas was let out and the rocky surface was approached near enough to permit a line to be cast to a party of picnickers. After much difficulty the shore end of the rope was fastened around a large bowlder. The fettered balloon waltzed about in the fresh breeze, and before the æronaut and his companion could disembark a sharp puff caused the rope to part.

Away went balloon, car and adventurers up in the air again. A current diverted the course and down plunged the balloon into the sea. Then commenced a dash through blue water of a unique kind. The partially collapsed gas bag went ahead, dragging the car and the luckless passengers along and keeping them thoroughly drenched.

Perhaps the trip might have been prolonged untill the coast of Europe was attained, but just as the æronaut began to think his time was approaching the yacht Mermaid was discerned heading for the novel racer. Coming up into the wind just in front a line was cast from on board and was secured to the car, and the frisky Columbus became a captive balloon. Mr. Grimley maintained his presence of mind throughout the adventure.

DESTROYING A BABY'S BIRTHMARK

The Judge Calls It "Contempt of Court" and Punishes the Culprits.

A Chicago despatch says: Mme. de Benkalear and Dr. Birt were each fined $500 and sentenced to thirty days in the county jail by Judge Tuthill to-day for destroying the birthmark on the person of Baby Andrews, concerning the possession of whom a struggle has been in progress in the courts for several days. Contempt of court was the offence for which this punishment was administered. It consisted in tampering with evidence, and the evidence was the birthmark, by means of which the child was identified. Mme. de Benkalear acknowledging having ordered the flesh cut away from the child, and Dr. Birt admitted having performed the operation.

Judge Tuthill, with extreme severity, declared that no excuses or any statement that he had heard could excuse the barbarity which caused the mutilation of the child, and thereupon passed sentence upon the culprits. An appeal was taken.

Struck by a Wild Engine.

A Bessemer (Mich.) despatch says: The regular passenger train to Milwaukee was crowded with people Monday night, and the conductor found it necessary to stop the train in order to collect the fares. While the train was at a standstill a wild engine and caboose ran into the rear sleeper, setting fire to it and throwing several coaches from the track. The wildest excitement prevailed. There was a general rush of passengers for the doors, but they were all found to be locked, and it was necessary to force them open before anybody could escape. There were nearly 300 people on board, including a large number of women. A number of the latter fainted during the excitement. Some of the passengers and trainmen succeeded in extinguishing the fire in the sleeper. Several passengers and trainmen were hurt by the collision. Their names are: O. Wild, of Eagle River, passenger; Dan Tangway, of Wausau, passenger; G. Ruiter, conductor on sleeper; Louis Curtis, Wisconsin, central yard-master at Bessemer; John Natha, wiper on freight engine.

Nova Scotia's New Bishop.

A Halifax despatch says: The Episcopal Synod of Nova Scotia at the meeting last evening for the election of bishop of the diocese, vacant by the death of Bishop Hibbert Binny, came to a decision on the first ballot. The only candidates nominated were Bishop Sullivan, of Algoma, and Rev. E. G. Edgehill, Chaplain-General of British army, in London. The vote stood: Edgehill—Clerical delegates, 70; lay delegates, 56; total, 126. Sullivan—Clerical delegates, 20; lay delegates, 48s total, 68. The election was then made unanimous by a standing vote. Mr. Edgerhill was garrison chaplain in Halifax eleven years ago, and was then considered of strong High Church tendencies.

A girl employed in a corset shop in New Haven leaned over a four-foot rail at the elevator door some days ago, when the elevator came down and pinned her by the neck to the top of the gate. The elevator is very nicely balanced, and stopped without cutting her head off, but held her fast. Then for some reason it could not be started up, and men tore the gate away to get the girl out. She was unconscious, but soon recovered, unharmed.

THE "PINAFORE" WEDDING.

Costumes Worn at the Great London Wedding Yesterday.

PRESENTS BY NOBLEMEN AND OTHERS.

A London correspondent cables: London has a William Henry Smith who concerns himself with newspapers, who conducts a great press agency, who is practically the publisher of the London Times, and who can make or mar any new gazette or book. He also concerns himself with the Privy Council, the Secretaryship of War, the leadership of the House of Commons and with Strand politics. Yesterday his daughter was married.

The first scene occurred in the Paddington Railway Station, London, where the guests assembled to take a train to his country seat, at Henley-on-the-Thames. On the platform were his Cabinet brethren, headed by Lord and Lady Salisbury, accompanied by a big deputation of London swells.

The second scene showed the wedding guests at the ancient, ivy embowered church. In scene third the bride, bearing the prosaic name Emily Ann Smith, was met at the altar by Walter Acland, captain in that navy which Gilbert and Sullivan satirized in "Pinafore." When Smith pere (who, it will be remembered, was the original of Sir Joseph Porter when he was Secretary of the Admiralty under Lord Beaconsfield) gave his child away to Capt. Acland—a war secretary's daughter wedded to a prospective naval hero—she partially and traditionally hid her lovely, beaming face under the meshes of a rich lace veil, and wore an ivory satin dress, its train fragrant with freshly gathered buds. At her throat was a necklace of diamond marguerites, the gift of her father.

BRIDESMAIDS AND THEIR DRESSES.

Two of her sisters, two nieces and two cousins—one of whom had the poetic name of Gwendoline—formed her bridesmaids, daintily gowned in white nainsook, lace trimmed and emphasized with blue and white ribbons and tiny bows. Also muslin and lace hats to match with the dresses. They carried naiad baskets filled with alternating water lilies and forget-me-nots.

The bridegroom wore his gorgeous uniform, which was well set off by the picturesque costume of the Turkish Ambassador. In a chancel pew near the latter a group of vicars and deans gave a Church blessing.

Scene fourth was the dejeuner in a large marquee on the elegant grounds of the Smith estate, called Greenland-beside-the Thames. Here the bride's health was proposed by the bridegroom's father, a K. C. B. and an honorary physician to the Prince of Wales, with no end of medical alphabets to his knightly name of Sir Henry Wentworth Acland.

THE WEDDING PRESENTS

in the house were arranged as if they were a museum collection of rich gems, bric-a-brac, rare porcelains and antiquities in silver.

A pair of gold bangles, edged with diamond sprays, were the gift of Premier Salisbury.

Silver salt cellars enough for a great dinner party were from Chancellor of the Exchequer Goschen. All the presents were admired and were also especially watched by a cynical looking detective from Scotland Yard.

The much abused Home Secretary, Mr. Matthews, was not in evidence except by his gift, a resplendant fan.

When the rice in the final scene was thrown after the bride it bounded from a going-away bridal dress of white poplin, relieved with green velvet, or from a white straw hat, trimmed with white and green tulle to match the dress, while huzzas of good luck were chorused at the gateway by the original Sir Joseph Porter and "his sisters and his cousins and his aunts."

DR. McGLYNN'S CASE.

He Will Take the Bull of Excommunication by the Horns.

A New York despatch says: An evening paper to-day says: Dr. McGlynn's case has taken a new turn. From announcements in Henry George's paper and from intimations by Dr. McGlynn himself it appears that the doctor is quietly awaiting the publication of the bulls of excommunication, and that when they are published he will not pass out of the Church, as has been generally expected, but will make a fight against the ecclesiastical legality of the excommunication and will demand an ecclesiastical trial. Dr. McGlynn claims that according to the decrees of the Baltimore Plenary Council two years ago he cannot be suspended, much less excommunicated, without being tried by a council of the clergy. In this claim he is supported not only by his followers, but, he claims, by many eminent divines.

Rev. Dr. McGlynn returned to the city from the west this evening. He would neither affirm or deny that he had received his notice of excommunication. He said his case was like that of the Irish prisoner who was told to plead and replied: "How can I tell whether I am guilty or innocent until I have heard the evidence." The doctor said he might have something to say later, but just now intended to take a sort of vacation, speaking only on Sundays.

A Man With a Marble Leg.

A Mount Sterling, Ky., despatch says: Mr. Howard Williamson, a well-known farmer of this county, is just now an object of much attention and the subject of no little sympathy. Some six months ago Mr. Williamson noticed that the fleshy part of his left leg seemed harder than that of his right. Since that time this hardness has grown more and more perceptible, and though the patient has had the attention of excellent medical skill the limb has increased in hardness until it resembles a piece of sculptured marble. Mr. Williamson suffers no pain, but as his hip is stone from the hip down he finds locomotion difficult, the more so on account of the toes of the left foot, which are so spread apart that he is in constant dread of breaking them off.

Cardinal Manning objects to a carriage and walks whenever his health permits. He says that when cardinals went about in fine carriages they generally went to the evil.

THE POLICE AND COURTESANS.

How the Arrest of the Cass Girl Shook Salisbury's Government—Home Secretary Matthews in a Tight Box.

A last (Friday) night's London cable says: The Lord Chancellor has commenced an inquiry into the conduct of Magistrate Newton in the matter of the arrest of Miss Cass.

The Cass case is resulting in public agitation against the bullying and blackmailing of courtesans by the police. The Pall Mall Gazette leads the movement by reviving old stories of the infamy of the police towards outcast women. The agitation has reached Parliament. Mr. Pickersgill has given notice of a motion that it is necessary that an inquiry be made into the administration of the London police, and in the House of Lords Lord Mi ltown will question the right of the police to arbitrarily arrest courtesans.

A defeat of the Government on a side issue like the Cass incident involves nothing more serious than discredit and some ridicule. Mr. W. H. Smith's refusal of an inquiry into Miss Cass' arrest was one of those blunders which no good leader of the House would have made. The feeling that the police and the Police Magistrate had made a mistake was general. Mr. Newton has long been known as an arbitrary and domineering judge. He accepted the testimony of a single policeman against a girl apparently innocent and drove out of court the girl's employer, who tried to certify to her good character. The British public has a well founded suspicion of the testimony of the police in such cases. The belief is general, moreover, that blackmailing prevails among the force. Professionally immoral women are allowed to promenade Regent street unmolested, while the casual wayfarer is pounced upon. This case has roused indignation among people who have no sympathy whatever with the stereotyped agitation perserved in by one notorious journal. But just as the police stick to each other and the magistrate stands by the police, so the Home Secretary supports the magistrate and the Ministers bolster up their colleague. The result is they all come tumbling down together. Mr. Smith on Wednesday had to unsay everything he had said on Tuesday, promise an inquiry into the case and promise that Mr. Newton should be overhauled by the Lord Chancellor.

Mr. Matthews came out of the business so badly that people supposed he would resign. I believe he did actually offer to resign, but Lord Salisbury thought he had better remain for the present. Mr. Matthews has been much attacked lately. He was Lord Randolph Churchill's nominee, but Lord Randolph Churchill threw him over during this debate with what looked like alacrity, and called him a pedant, meaning that he took a purely lawyer-like view of a matter which involved things more important than legal particularities. He is an able man who came too late into politics.

Forty-nine Conservative members have signed a letter to Lord Salisbury asking him to accept Mr. Matthews' resignation at once.

THE CROWN PRINCE'S THROAT.

What Eminent Doctors Think of the Trouble.

A New York despatch says: Dr. Morrell Mackenzie, of London, has sent a cablegram to the Medical Record detailing the results of his third operation upon the throat of the Crown Prince of Germany. The entire growth has been removed by the laryngeal forceps and the parts beneath are in an apparently healthy condition. Dr. Mackenzie says: "Prof. Virchow has examined the specimen microscopically and reports that its tissue shows nowhere any alveolar structure or evidence of the immigration of epithelial masses. The structure consists of slender connective tissue, which contains only on its surface enlarged cell elements, partly undergoing proliferation, but assuming nowhere the character of independent focal formation." Dr. Sherady says: "So far as the microscopical examination is concerned, the disease appears to be essentially of a non-malignant character. The disposition towards limitation cell proliferation may be caused by active inflammatory processes in tissues peculiarly exposed to limitation, but from any other point of view the outlook is not as promising as it might be. Everything new in the way of prognosis must depend upon the fact whether or not there is to be any recurrence of the growth. If the latter obtains, with an increased disposition towards cell multiplication, chances for ultimate recovery will be on the wrong side. At present we have reason to hope for the best."

Insane Asylum Atrocities.

A New York despatch says: In consequence of the shocking revelations of cruelty to patients in the Ward's Island Insane Asylum, elicited during the inquiry into that institution, the Grand Jury has indicted attendants McHugh and Cleary for manslaughter. The particular case selected is that of George Farrish, whose death the attendants are accused of causing by beating him. The accused pleaded not guilty and were committed to the Tombs.

The mother of John Froelich, who died under suspicious circumstances in March, 1886, testified before the coroner yesterday that she believed her son was killed. A month before he died he seemed to be strong and well. Two weeks later when she called at the hospital his head was cut in several places and his body was bruised. He was thin and pale and complained of pains in his sides. He said he had been beaten. Three days later she was notified of his death. When his body was brought over it showed two large bruised spots on his forehead, as if he had been struck with a club, and the back of his neck was terribly swollen and bruised.

Had to Cut Off His Wife's Hand.

A Galena, Ill., despatch says: Mrs. Bautsch got her hand caught in a horse-power feed machine at Sand Prairie. Her husband stopped the machine, but could not extricate the hand, and so cut it off at he wrist.

The Secretary of the United States Treasury has sent a silver medal to Miss Edith Clark, of San Francisco, for saving a schoolmate from drowning on August 31st, 1886.

TWO MONTHS OF EARTHQUAKES.

Shocks Still of Daily Occurrence in Mexico—Building a New Town.

An El Paso, Tex., despatch says: Two months ago to-day occurred the first recorded earthquake in the southern part of the United States and the northern part of Mexico, and shocks have been felt at intervals ever since. Rumors and descriptions more or less accurate have been received from time to time from Bavispe, a town in the Mexican State of Sonora, 250 miles southwest from El Paso, showing that the disturbance thereabouts was perhaps the most serious of any. But no detailed statement from an eye-witness has been received here till the arrival to-day of J. J. Deaver, one of the owners of the only mine which is being worked in this region. Mr. Deaver says:

"From May 3rd to June 25th, when I left Bavispe, there were at least three hundred shocks. I arrived at Bavispe May 4th, and have since explored all points of the country south and east of Bavispe for sixty miles. I have failed to find any traces of the reported volcano. I found signs of very heavy shocks twenty-five miles south of the town of Huachinera, which is thirty miles southeast of Bavispe. A small mountain about 700 feet high was split clean in two and one side thrown down, while the other remains standing. Fissures a foot or so wide and hundreds of feet long were opened up in great numbers all through this region.

"The greatest disturbance seems to have been along the great mineral belt about six miles west of Huachinera. The mountains west of Bavispe have undergone a great change. It has been facetiously observed that the mountains had a quadrille and changed partners. When the great upheaval occurred the mountains moved up and down like great billows upon the sea. One range would drop down behind another and then rise up again. During the first shock flames shot up from the mountain and set all vegetation on fire, but the fiery outburst soon gave place to mud and water. Many new springs broke forth, and in general the amount of water has been increased one-half.

"The town of Bavispe may be said to have been totally destroyed. It was the first shock ever known there. Of the 800 inhabitants, thirty-eight were killed outright, four died soon afterwards and about 160 were more or less seriously injured, making a total of 200 persons, or one-fourth of the population, killed or injured. Previous to the earthquake nearly every building in the town was constructed of adobes or Mexican unburned bricks. Since the shocks began, however, the people have moved from the old town site and are building a new town on a little table-land not far from the old site, and they build nothing but brush and picket houses, being afraid to live in dwellings constructed of heavy material.

"The shocks continue almost daily. On June 25th, the day I left there, two shocks occurred, one heavy enough to crack walls and knock down plaster. But the people show no intention of moving away."

JOHN CHINAMAN

Marries a New Haven Heiress.

A New Haven, Conn., despatch says: Yan Phon Lee, of Fragrant Hills, China, who graduated with high honors at Yale's last commencement, was on Wednesday united in marriage to Miss Elizabeth Maud Jerome, a New Haven heiress. The ceremony was quietly performed at the residence of the bride's mother. Yan Phon Lee first came to America in 1873, and resided for five years at Springfield, Mass., after which he came to New Haven and spent four years in the Hopkins Grammar School, entering Yale in the class of '84. After his freshman year he was ordered back to China by the Government, which had sent him and other sons of prominent Chinese residents to America for an education. Before returning to his native land Miss Jerome had fallen in love with him and the couple were engaged. The Chinaman became tired of home and surroundings and at the first opportunity he ran away and finally reached New Haven and his sweetheart. He again entered Yale in the class of '87, and greatly distinguished himself throughout his college course. This wedding is the first one on record in New Haven where a Yankee girl has married a Chinaman, and the event excites considerable comment. After a wedding trip at Narragansett Pier, Mr. and Mrs. Yan Phon Lee will reside in New Haven, the groom intending to enter the journalistic field.

A DOUBLE DROWNING.

Mr. Wm. Hargraft, ex-M.P.P., of Cobourg, and Daughter Drowned at the Seaside.

A Cobourg despatch says: A despatch was received here yesterday announcing the death by drowning of Mr. William Hargraft, of this place, and his youngest daughter, at Scarboro', on the coast of Maine, for which point they, with Mrs. Hargraft, left Cobourg a few days ago. Mr. Hargraft, who was the father-in-law of Mr. W. G. Gooderham, of Toronto, was for over fifty years a resident of this place, and had filled every position of honor in the gift of his fellow-townsmen. He was for very many years a member of the Council and also Mayor of the town and a commissioner of the town trust. At the general elections of 1875 he was elected member of the Legislature for West Northumberland in the Liberal interest, defeating Captain Gifford. He was most highly respected, and the sad deaths of himself and his daughter, a young lady of about 18 years of age, have cast a gloom over the town. He leaves a widow and several children to mourn his loss. Arrangements will be made immediately to bring the bodies home for interment.

The admirers of ex-Mayor Boswell presented him, in the Council Chamber of the City Hall, Toronto, yesterday afternoon, with a life-size oil portrait of himself, which he immediately handed over to the city to be hung up in the chamber.

Although much is written every year in favor of raising Jerusalem artichokes and chufas for hogs, their production appears to be diminishing. A farmer who wants to plant an acre to either of them generally finds great difficulty in obtaining seed. Though it is said to be easy to raise nine hundred bushels of artichokes on an acre of land seed cannot ordinarily be obtained for less than $2 per bushel.

Don't Propose.

Only don't propose to me! I really like you so;
We suit each other charmingly, at ball or feast, you know.
We can brighten for each other best the revel's careless hours;
We can gather from each other still the moment's passing flowers;
We ever best can gladden life's river as it flows
Through sunny beds and quiet—but I hope you won't propose.

No voice suits mine as well as yours in gay duet or song.
No other arm can guide me safe through the polka's whirling throng.
No other laugh re-echoes half so merrily to mine.
No other hand so tastefully my bouquet's flowers can twine;
None save me half so cleverly from bores--my deadliest foes;
I cannot do without you—oh! I hope you won't propose.

Why will you talk of sentiment? You never used to talk
Of aught but fun or nonsense, in long quadrille or walk.
Why will you sigh? I really like your ringing laugh the best.
Why frown at me for lingering with another joyous guest?
Why will you talk of hopes and fears? Why hint at friendship's close?
You never used to tease me so—oh! I hope you won't propose.

For you know I would refuse you—I must love before I wed;
What should we do together when the summer sun had fled?
And then we must be strangers—must pass each other by
With flushing cheek and distant bow and cold averted eye.
Why doom our gay companionship to so dolorous a close?
We like each other much too well—I hope you won't propose.

Let us still be smiling when we part, and happy when we meet;
Let us together pluck the bloom of the flowers at our feet.
Let us leave the deeper things alone, and laugh, and sing, and dance;
And flirt a little now and then, to speed the hour, perchance.
Oh! there's a deal of pleasure in sunny links like these;
Don't break the rosy ties just yet—dear Charley, don't propose!

LOVE TAUGHT HER.

John Ramsay was working on his farm, his careless, loose dress displaying to advantage his tall, muscular figure. A broad straw hat shaded his handsome face. The hands that guided the plow were strong hands, but whiter and more delicate than such pursuits usually allow.

Daisy Hale sat watching him. Her dress was print, but made with flounces on the skirt and ruffles on the waist. She wore a jaunty hat, covered with puffs of white muslin and bows of blue ribbon to match the spots upon her dress.

The face under Daisy's hat was gloomy, not to say cross. A very pretty face, but not pleasant, having a petted, spoiled-child frown, and a brooding discontent in the large blue eyes.

Presently the farmer drew near her, and taking off his hat fanned himself with it, stopped his horses while he leaned indolently against the plow.

"You look deliciously cool under this great tree," he said. "And—hem!—very much dressed for 9 o'clock in the morning!"

"In a 5 penny calico!" she said, contemptuously. "It is too absurd for you to be plowing and hoeing and milking cows and doing the work of a laboring man. I thought when you came home from college you would do something besides work on a farm."

"And let the farm go to ruin? That would be a poor way to pay my debts."

"Your debts!" she said, looking astonished. "Do you owe debts?"

"Certainly! You and I are both very heavily in debt, Daisy. I think when Aunt Mary took us in, poor little orphans, I her nephew, you her third cousin, all the money she saved in a life of hard work was spent upon our education. Do you know that she has nothing now but the farm, and that to take her away from it would probably shorten her life!"

"But you could send her money if you were in the city in some gentlemanly occupation."

"Perhaps so, ten or twelve years from now! To-day I propose to work this farm and see how many bushels of corn I can raise on it."

He took hold of the plough-handles as he spoke, started the horses, and left her, her eyes full of angry tears.

"He might as well have said what he meant," springing down and starting for the house. "He thinks I ought to cook and make butter and work like a servant girl, when I have studied so hard and tried to make myself a lady, that he might not be ashamed of me."

As she drew near the house the sting of John's words penetrated more and more through the crust she had drawn over her heart, until a fresh stab met her at the door. Looking in at the open door she saw a white head bowed in weeping, a slight figure shaken by sobs.

Quickly through all the selfishness self-reproach struck at the girl's heart, and in a moment she was on her knees beside the low chair, her arms around the weeping woman.

"Oh, Aunt Mary, what is it? Oh, please don't cry so! Oh, what has happened?"

"Why, Daisy, dear"—through sobs that would not be checked at a moment's notice—"don't mind me. I'm only tired, dearie; only tired."

Could she have struck deeper? Tired! At 70 housework does become a weariness! At 70 it may seem as if one ought to rest, while young hands and active feet take up the burden. She was very tired, this patient old woman who had given her life's work for others, first for her parents, then for an invalid brother, lastly for the orphan children, with such innumerable acts of neighborly kindness as only the recording angel of good deeds knows.

Well might she be tired! It was new to her to be caressed, to have tender hands lead her to her room and loosen her dress, a tender voice coax her to lie down.

"Now I will darken the window," Daisy said, "and you are to rest. Sleep, if you can, until dinner time."

"But, Daisy, you cannot make the dinner."

"I will try," was the quick reply, and Aunt Mary submitted.

Washing the potatoes, shelling peas, frying ham, making coffee, all allowed thought to be busy, and Daisy sighingly put away some of her day dreams over her homely tasks.

"I cannot be a lady," she thought, "and John won't be a gentleman, but I will try to pay my share of the debts."

She had taken off her flounces and hat and put on a plain dress and large check apron before she began to work, and she was rather astonished as her kitchen duties progressed to find herself happier than she had been since she returned home.

When John came to dinner he was astonished to find Aunt Mary "quite dressed up," as she blushingly said, in a clean print dress and white apron, her dear old face showing no sign of heat or weariness, while Daisy, with added bloom and bare white arms, was carrying in the dinner.

"The new girl at your service," she said, saucily, as she pulled down her sleeves. "Dinner is ready, sir."

But her lips quivered as he bent over her and whispered, "God bless you, dear! Forgive me if I was too hasty this morning."

John said but little as the days wore on, and still found Daisy at her post. It was not in the nature of things for Aunt Mary to sit with folded hands, but it became Daisy's task to inaugurate daily naps, to see that only the light work came to the older hands, to make daily work less of a toil and more pleasure.

And the young girl herself was surprised to find how much she enjoyed the life that had seemed to her a mere drudgery.

John, bringing to his task the same will and brains that had carried him through college, was inaugurating a new order of affairs on the farm, and made the work pay well.

Once more came a June day, when Daisy sat in the fields and John stood leaning against the fence beside her.

Four years of earnest, loving work had left traces upon both young faces, ennobling them, and yet leaving to them all the glad content that rewards well-doing.

Many hours of self-denial both had met bravely; many deprivations both had borne well. Daisy wore a black dress, and upon the hat in John's hand was a band of crape, but through a sadness of their voices there yet rang a tone of happiness.

"You love me, Daisy?" John had said to her.

"When have I not loved you?" she answered.

"And you will be my wife? Darling, I have long loved you, but after Aunt Mary was stricken down with paralysis I would not ask you to take up new duties. Now she needs you no longer, and you shall leave the farm whenever you wish."

"Leave the farm! Oh, John, must we leave it? I thought it was yours now."

"So it is."

"And you have made it so beautiful, as well as profitable! Oh, John, why must we leave it?"

"Only because I thought it was your wish."

"It would break my heart to go away. I love my home."

And John, taking the little figure into a close embrace, wondered if any city could produce a sweeter, daintier little lady than he held in his arms.

Late Scotch News.

Admiral John Elphinstone Erskine, late M.P. for Stirlingshire, died in London on the 23rd ult.

A marble bust of the late Professor W. E. Aytoun has been presented to the University of Edinburgh by his sisters.

On the 13th ult. Widow Aitken died at Ecclesmachan, aged 80 years. For long she had been in receipt of parochial relief, and after her death a box containing £36 in notes was found in her coal cellar.

There were special services in the East U. P. Church, Haddington, on the 19th ult. in celebration of the centenary of the death of John Brown, the author of the "Self-interpreting Bible."

In celebration of the Queen's Jubilee the Victoria Institute at Renton, Dumbartonshire, was opened on the 18th ult. by Mr. Alexander Wylie, of Cordale, amid much rejoicing on the part of the inhabitants.

At Aberdeen Circuit Court, on the 24th ult., Alexander Finlayson, writer, was sentenced to fifteen months' imprisonment for forging a bill of exchange and a letter. In the Huntly wife-murder case, Alex. Stewart, tinker, pleaded guilty of culpable homicide and was sentenced to twenty years' hard labor.

The strongest volunteer regiment in Britain is the Queen's Edinburgh Rifle Brigade, 2,340 enrolled; next is 2nd Glamorgan (Wales), 1,996 strong; next 1st Lanark, 1,579; then about half a dozen of equal strength—4th Manchester, 1,255; 2nd Somerset, 1,253; 3rd East Lancashire, 1,251; 1st Warwick, 1,219; and 1st Dumbarton, 1,213.

On the 18th ult. the monument erected in Muirkirk Cemetery by Mr. Howatson, of Glenbuck, to the memory of the Covenanting martyrs of 1680-85, was formally handed over to the authorities of the parish. In the course of the ceremony Mr. Howatson also made a gift of a fund which will provide a bursary of £27 a year to aid talented young men belonging to the parish in obtaining a University education.

A correspondent writes that Her Majesty had a narrow escape the other day. She was sketching in the grounds at Balmoral, when a rival queen, hotly followed by her subjects, settled on the royal bonnet. The Queen, with much presence of mind, quickly removed the too attractive millinery and threw it from her. A gardener quickly intervened with a beehive, and succeeded in inveigling the audacious insects into it. The correspondent always understood that Her Majesty's royal grandfather had a bee in his bonnet, but it was evidently reserved for Queen Victoria to out-do George the Third by having a whole swarm of bees outside her's.

He Accepted His Mother's Version.

"Mamma," said a young hopeful on Clinton avenue yesterday, "what is a gone sucker?"

"A gone sucker, my child," responded the fond mother, rather puzzled, "is a very bad boy."

That night, when the clothing of the little fellow had been removed and he was engaged in his usual supplication to the Throne he said:

"And oh, Lord, bless papa, mamma and me, for you know, Lord, I'm a gone sucker."—Brooklyn Standard.

Eminent Scientist—"The planetary indications give assurance that there will be no rain for the next three days." Man with a bunion (smiling with lofty superiority)—"There will be rain, sir, in less than twelve hours." And there was.—Boston Beacon.

FEMININE ECCENTRICITIES.

Women who Wear Trousers and Smoke Tobacco—How Mrs. Cleveland Gets Up Her Muscle.

THE BEAUTIFUL WOMEN OF TONGA.

Sydney (Australia) News.

The women are beautiful in the extreme and as graceful as fawns, just dark enough to be more picturesque than white women. They have a coquettish, fascinating manner which would do credit to a Parisian belle. And yet they are chaste by inclination and enactment. No white stranger is allowed to sleep on shore. The men are marvels of symmetry, though they eat little animal food. They are, however, insolent, overbearing and in other ways objectionable. Tonga-taboo means the tabooed or sacred land, and "Ko Tonga hau" ("I am a Tongese") is as proud a boast as "Civis Romanum" of old. To sprinkle a dirty sulu with patchouli and swell himself out in the mission-house is the joy of the Tongese masher. The country is so fertile that they need work but little, and the hardest labor imposed on them is to pay the taxes of the King and the contributions to the missionaries, by whom they are or were ridden, in copra, oil, tortoise shell or coin. They ofttimes put their horses and crops "in the plate," generally in remembrance of some dead grandmother.

WOMEN WHO PLAY WITH THE WEED.

The French housekeeper delights in her afternoon cigarette. The senora of Barcelona loves in the evening to wrap her black crepe around her head, and while gently puffing her long tobacco cigarette cast heart-thrilling glances from her balcony above the walks at the wights below. While the German frau is fond of her cigarette, or even cigar, and the Russian wife is not far behind her in her enjoyment of the weed, and even the Japanese, Chinese, Tartar, Dutch and Soudanese wives all like to let tobacco smoke curl from their pretty mouths toward the sky, the Italian signora is, perhaps, the most passionately fond of the long, thin cigar of the country called the "Virginia." It is no uncommon sight of a summer evening to see a party of ladies sitting in some cool terrace overlooking the sea on the Campagna, while the music of their velvety language keeps tune to the soft splashing of the sea against the rocky shore, and send rings of smoke from their fragrant cheroots.

MRS. CLEVELAND USES THE DUMB-BELLS.

(Albany Journal.

It has been remarked that Mrs. Cleveland possesses exceptionally strong wrists, and is consequently able to endure the prolonged handshaking of public receptions without over-fatigue. Her strength of muscle is attributed to her persistent use of dumb-bells. She is said to be quite a gymnast, and owes much of her graceful carriage to the thorough command of her body given by calisthenic exercises.

TRUSERS ON WOMEN IN TEXAS.

El Paso, Tex., Inter Republica.)

Married women at Kaufman are said to frequently take in the sights in male attire. A young girl at Dallas was sent home by the police while masquerading in male attire. A Waco girl was photographed in her brother's spring suit for fun, and the picture has raised a pretty scandal. Marion Biggs, a Cass county farm boy, has turned out to be a farm girl. She wore trousers for a year before discovery.

WHERE EVERYBODY CARRIES A BABY OR SO.

(Tokio letter in Buffalo Times.)

Like China, the principal produce of Japan is children—a very great variety indeed it does produce, too. They are of all patterns, very numerous and almost always very small. It really seems to a foreigner that every boy and girl in Japan that is big enough to carry a baby has one of them strapped on her or his back. It is often hard to say which of the two is the younger baby, the one being carried or the one carrying, they are so small. But the carrying of these babies is not limited to the older children entirely. Fully one-half, if not more, of all the women seen about the streets or houses are also carrying babies on their backs. They carry them thus in the street, in the temples, in the stores. Everywhere you are confronted with a cheerful pair of faces, one behind the other, loitering about for the amusement of both—often at work, too often visiting friends. But this ever-present baby is like its parents, very quiet and contented, now and anon cooing and dozing.

Mamie's Cablegram.

A Hartford man whose wife was going abroad, asked her to telegraph him a word or two letting him know of her safe arrival in New York. In a few hours he received the following message, "collect":

"DEAR GEORGE,—Arrived here safely at fifteen minutes after 6. The train was due at 6, but we were delayed fifteen minutes while en route. Had a perfectly lovely trip. Don't worry about me, I'll get along all right. And take good care of yourself. Be so careful about taking cold this damp weather. Remember that you are to keep on your flannels until the 15th of June. Be sure and have the house open and aired as often as once a week. Remember what I told you about your socks and shirts. Don't forget to keep the basement door locked. Write every day. I'm sure I'll have a lovely time. So good in you to let me go. You must come over after me in August. Forever and ever yours. MAMIE.

An hour later Mamie was pained to receive the following to her "word or two":

"Don't cable anything from Liverpool. I'm a ruined man if you do. GEORGE."

Senator Boyd's Cat.

Senator Boyd caught a Tartar yesterday in the person of little Miss Clarke, a maiden of 7 years or thereabouts, in Miss Adam's department of the Victoria School. Some black-board drawings of animals were being examined, and the Senator, turning to this little Miss, challenged her to draw a cat and make it cry. She accepted the banter on the spot, and in a few seconds produced a fine cat with green eyes, a ribbon on its neck, a scroll from its mouth with "mew" inscribed, and underneath written "Mr. Boyd's cat."—St. John, N. B., Sun.

According to a statement issued by the Deputy Minister of Finance, the net debt of the Dominion at June 30th was $225,026,762. The total revenue for the past fiscal year was $33,830,148, leaving a surplus over expenditure of $2,456,435.

A DESPERATE CRIMINAL.

A Description of Blinky Morgan, the Hulligan Murderer.

"Blinky" Morgan, one of the four men arrested for the murder of Detective Hulligan near Cleveland, who was supposed to be in the woods near Frankfort, was sentenced at Toronto to serve five years in the Kingston Penitentiary for shooting at a policeman. He made a boast that no person could hold him, and the boast was not an idle one, because he escaped after serving a year with the avowed purpose of killing the policeman in question. After the murder at Cleveland, it was heard that Morgan was at the house of a rich friend named Williams. The officers then surrounded the Williams residence, and as Sheriff Lynch quietly ascended the steps Morgan was seen through the screen door reclining in an easy chair. Little children were in the room and he was examining bouquets that they carried in their hands. Rushing upon him without a moment's warning, Sheriff Lynch tried to pinion his arms, but quick as a flash Morgan slipped one hand into his pocket, and without removing it fired three shots before his hand could be caught by the others, who were upon them. He struggled desperately, and but for the quickness of James Connor, a perfect Hercules, who assisted the sheriff, undoubtedly there would have been more than one death before he was shackled. Two self-cocking revolvers, of 44 calibre, were taken from his pocket, one smoking. Sheriff Lynch was shot in the fleshy part of the thigh, the bullet passing through and making a very painful and serious wound. The other bullets grazed the hand of Connor, one of them drawing the blood. That some one wasn't killed by them is a pure piece of good luck. It is altogether probable that Morgan and his pals will dance with ropes around their necks before they are much older.

One of Herrmann's Tricks.

Of the elder Herrmann, the conjurer, who died recently, the London Times says: "Tall and thin, with a mustache and chin tuft, like Napoleon III., Herrmann could by a contraction of his facial muscles so alter his features as to be unrecognizable. But his most surprising performances were with legerdemain, and his fondness for practical joking made him delight to exhibit his prowess in public places where he was not known. In a restaurant he would ask the waiter for bread, and when the waiter arrived with a plateful of rolls Herrmann would mildly reprove him for absentmindedness in having brought a plateful of walnuts. How the rolls had been transformed into walnuts was the conjurer's secret."

Jubilee Jugs.

The Prince of Wales originated the idea of the Jubilee jugs, which, to the number of 85,000, were distributed to the children in Hyde Park last week. His Royal Highness was much struck by the distribution of rough brown cups bearing the Imperial cipher in relief, with which the Czar commemorated the marriage of the Czarovitch; and the productions of Messrs. Daulton, which cost near sixpence each, are great improvements on the original. The ground is of polished cream-colored earthenware, and the two portraits of the Queen (1837 to 1887) are artistically executed in neutral tints.

To dream of a ponderous whale,
Erect on the tip of his tail,
Is the sign of a storm
(If the weather is warm),
Unless it should happen to fail.

Dreams don't amount to much, anyhow. Some signs, however, are infallible. If you are constipated, with no appetite, tortured with sick headache and bilious symptoms, these signs indicate that you need Dr. Pierce's Pleasant Purgative Pellets. They will cure you. All druggists.

Mr. Chapleau expects to leave for Paris on the 23rd inst. to undergo another operation similar to that performed two years ago. He states that no decision has been made yet regarding the Quebec gubernatorial chair.

Everybody Ho! Ho!

Read this carefully. If you or any friend are suffering from any kind of pain, internal, local, or external, try Polson's Nerviline, the sure pop pain cure. Nerviline is one of the most elegant combinations ever offered to the public for the relief of pain. Pleasant to take, powerful in effect, sure in results, and cheap because the strongest, purest, and most certain pain remedy in the world. You can test this great remedy by going to a drug store and buying a 10 cent sample bottle. Try it at once.

"Isn't there anything you would rather have than a dish of ice cream?" he asked, as they emerged from the theatre. "Yes, George; two dishes of ice cream," she murmured softly.—Washington Critic.

When all so-called remedies fail, Dr. Sage's Catarrh Remedy cures.

The Liberal Association of New Brunswick has passed a resolution cordially sympathizing with Mr. Gladstone "in his efforts to bind together in closer union the subjects of Her Majesty."

In this age of imitations the public want something real on which they can depend. Numbers of people offer to make affidavit that they were positively cured of rheumatism by taking McCollom's Rheumatic Repellant.

Two more miraculous cures are reported from St. Anne, Que. A young woman named Monse was completely cured of a paralyzed leg. The other was a young girl named Gauthier, 13 years of age, whose sight was almost gone; she is now completely cured.

The Post-office Department at Ottawa have suggested to the United States Post-office that advantage should be taken of the Sunday train service between Montreal and New York for the despatch of European mails arriving on Saturday evening and Sunday.

Blood Will Tell.

There is no question about it—blood will tell—especially if it be an impure blood. Blotches, eruptions, pimples and boils are all symptoms of an impure blood, due to the improper action of the liver. When this important organ fails to properly perform its function of purifying and cleansing the blood, impurities are carried to all parts of the system, and the symptoms above referred to are merely evidences of the struggle of Nature to throw off the poisonous germs. Unless her warning be heeded in time serious results are certain to follow, culminating in liver or kidney disorders, or even in consumption. Dr. Pierce's Golden Medical Discovery will prevent and cure these diseases by restoring the liver to a healthy condition.

Mr. Girouard, M. P., is likely to be the Judge of the Court of Claims, and Judge Clark elevated to the Supreme Court.

Dr. Pierce's Pleasant Purgative LITTLE LIVER Pellets PILLS. The Original SIZE OF PELLETS

BEWARE OF IMITATIONS. ALWAYS ASK FOR DR. PIERCE'S PELLETS, OR LITTLE SUGAR-COATED PILLS.

Being entirely vegetable, they operate without disturbance to the system, diet, or occupation. Put up in glass vials, hermetically sealed. Always fresh and reliable. As a laxative, alterative, or purgative, these little Pellets give the most perfect satisfaction.

SICK HEADACHE,

Bilious Headache, Dizziness, Constipation, Indigestion, Bilious Attacks, and all derangements of the stomach and bowels, are promptly relieved and permanently cured by the use of Dr. Pierce's Pleasant Purgative Pellets. In explanation of the remedial power of these Pellets over so great a variety of diseases it may truthfully be said that their action upon the system is universal, not a gland or tissue escaping their sanative influence. Sold by druggists, 25 cents a vial. Manufactured at the Chemical Laboratory of WORLD'S DISPENSARY MEDICAL ASSOCIATION, Buffalo, N. Y.

$500 REWARD

is offered by the manufacturers of Dr. Sage's Catarrh Remedy, for a case of Chronic Nasal Catarrh which they cannot cure.

SYMPTOMS OF CATARRH.—Dull, heavy headache, obstruction of the nasal passages, discharges falling from the head into the throat, sometimes profuse, watery, and acrid, at others, thick, tenacious, mucous, purulent, bloody and putrid; the eyes are weak, watery, and inflamed; there is ringing in the ears, deafness, hacking or coughing to clear the throat, expectoration of offensive matter, together with scabs from ulcers; the voice is changed and has a nasal twang; the breath is offensive; smell and taste are impaired; there is a sensation of dizziness, with mental depression, a hacking cough and general debility. Only a few of the above-named symptoms are likely to be present in any one case. Thousands of cases annually, without manifesting half of the above symptoms, result in consumption, and end in the grave. No disease is so common, more deceptive and dangerous, or less understood by physicians.

By its mild, soothing, and healing properties, Dr. Sage's Catarrh Remedy cures the worst cases of Catarrh, "cold in the head," Coryza, and Catarrhal Headache.

Sold by druggists everywhere; 50 cents.

"Untold Agony from Catarrh."

Prof. W. HAUSNER, the famous mesmerist, of Ithaca, N. Y., writes: "Some ten years ago I suffered untold agony from chronic nasal catarrh. My family physician gave me up as incurable, and said I must die. My case was such a bad one, that every day, towards sunset, my voice would become so hoarse I could barely speak above a whisper. In the morning my coughing and clearing of my throat would almost strangle me. By the use of Dr. Sage's Catarrh Remedy, in three months, I was a well man, and the cure has been permanent."

"Constantly Hawking and Spitting."

THOMAS J. RUSHING, Esq., 2902 Pine Street, St. Louis, Mo., writes: "I was a great sufferer from catarrh for three years. At times I could hardly breathe, and was constantly hawking and spitting, and for the last eight months could not breathe through the nostrils. I thought nothing could be done for me. Luckily, I was advised to try Dr. Sage's Catarrh Remedy, and I am now a well man. I believe it to be the only sure remedy for catarrh now manufactured, and one has only to give it a fair trial to experience astounding results and a permanent cure."

Three Bottles Cure Catarrh.

ELI ROBBINS, Runyan P. O., Columbia Co., Pa., says: "My daughter had catarrh when she was five years old, very badly. I saw Dr. Sage's Catarrh Remedy advertised, and procured a bottle for her, and soon saw that it helped her; a third bottle effected a permanent cure. She is now eighteen years old and sound and hearty."

D C N L. 39 87.

300 CASES OF CONSUMPTION CURED WITHOUT A FAILURE
Address W. L. MILLER, M. D., 18 East 11th St N. Y. City.

CONSUMPTION.

I have a positive remedy for the above disease; by its use thousands of cases of the worst kind and of long standing have been cured. Indeed, so strong is my faith in its efficacy, that I will send TWO BOTTLES FREE, together with a VALUABLE TREATISE on this disease to any sufferer. Give express and P. O. address.
DR. A. SLOCUM,
Branch Office, 37 Yonge St., Toronto

DUNN'S BAKING POWDER
THE COOK'S BEST FRIEND

I CURE FITS!

When I say cure I do not mean merely to stop them for a time and then have them return again. I mean a radical cure. I have made the disease of FITS, EPILEPSY or FALLING SICKNESS a life-long study. I warrant my remedy to cure the worst cases. Because others have failed is no reason for not now receiving a cure. Send at once for a treatise and a Free Bottle of my infallible remedy. Give Express and Post Office. It costs you nothing for a trial, and I will cure you. Address DR. H. G. ROOT,
Branch Office, 37 Yonge St., Toronto.

BEST IN THE WORLD!

MARLIN Magazine Rifle.

For large or small game, all shot. The strongest shooting rifle made. Perfect accuracy guaranteed, and the only absolutely safe rifle on the market
BALLARD GALLERY, SPORTING AND TARGET RIFLES, world renowned. Send for Illustrated Catalogue. MARLIN FIRE ARMS CO., New Haven, Conn.

What Our Country Needs.

God give us men! a time like this demands
Strong minds, great hearts, true faith and ready hands;
Men whom the lust of office does not kill;
Men whom the spoils of office cannot buy,
Men who possess opinions and a will;
Men who have honor, men who will not lie;
Men who can stand before a demagogue,
And damn his treacherous flatteries without winking.
Tall men, sun-crowned, who live above the fog,
In public duty, and in private thinking;
For, while the rabble, with their thumb-worn creeds,
Their large professions and their deeds,
Mingle in selfish strife, lo! Freedom weeps,
Wrong rules the land and waiting justice sleeps.

Dr. J. G. Holland.

In a thrilling Missionary Speech, Rev. A. Grant recently said:—"The power that now rolls, beats and throbs in every Christian community. What is it? The Spirit of Missions" which sentence suggested the following:

MISSION MARCH.

Roll, Roll, Roll!
Thou swelling mission sea,
Till all the Church
Shall gladly search
For full response to Thee.

Beat, Beat, Beat!
Thou throbbing heart of life;
Till every mind,
Some way shall find,
To join the glorious strife.

Wave, wave, wave!
The Gospel banner high,
Glad tidings tell
To those who dwell
Where souls in darkness lie.

Work, work, work!
Great your Master's call,
Till Satin's strength
Shall yield at length,
And Christ be all in all.

Preach, preach, preach!
Proclaim the Gracious Word,
The world surround
The foe confound
Triumph in Christ the Lord.

Flesherton, July 16th, 1887. —T. W.

Bodily health and vigor may be maintained as easily in the heat of summer, as in the winter months, if the blood is purified and vitalized with Ayer's Sarsaparilla. Every person who has used this remedy has been greatly benefited. Take it this month.

For The Advance.

SHADOWS.

BY DEACON SNUKES.

The Bells ring out their merry, merry peal. The sun shines brightly on the venerable pile, beneath whose roof, two human souls are joined as one. Ring out your happy peal, ye old, old bells, while the breeze bears on its bosom, to the distant hills and vales, the joyous tones. Ring out your gladening notes, that hearts grown cold and worn with old age, may beat again beneath thy magic spell; that scenes long buried, resurrect once more from memories dear. Ring out your tones; yet mark the falling tear, that trickles down the wrinkled visage of the old, old man. Alone, he sits beneath the cottage porch, lifes duties done. His palsied frame is trembling in the scale, and quietly waits until the silver cord be broken. All quiet within, the measured stroke of solemn time, marks off the moments as they fly apace. Alone, yet as he hears the old familiar tone ring out the joyous peal, the musty shadows of the faded past, in silence mute, once more surround him. They are but shadows, yet to him how dear. Fond memory cloths them all again with life, yet ere he grasps the hand that lived to bless—tis gone, once more the shadows fly. Ring out your joyous peal, for while echo rings among the hills, another union, made with service strange, is passing twixt the earth and the unseen. The old man hears above the bells of earth, a far off sound of music sweeter far. He leans his weary head upon his breast, yet nearer, sweeter, stronger grows the tones, his eyelids close to earths vain fleeting show he bows in solemn worship as he feel a strange mysterious hand support him through the deepening shade. A moment's space. 'tis done. 'Twas but the valley of the shadow, now light, full bright and glorious, bursts upon his gaze. The Bells of Earth ring on; he heeds them not, forever here the shadows are unknown.

* * * * *

The sacred spot, where falls misterious light. The vaulted roof, dim with the dust of ages, adorned with banners, trophies from the wars. The organ, swelling with majestic tones, in melody unlike the sounds of fitful earth, seem to transport one to another sphere. "All hail the Power" from the surpliced choir, swells deep and glorious, earth and Heaven conjoined, reverberates through the vast expanse, the "Amen." The silent dust, the majesty of kings, fair woman's queenly grace, the mighty statesman's voice, the poet's mystic charm, the noble warrior's power, the hand that stooped to bless the starving poor, the voice that cheered the dying soldier's bed, the martyrs ashes, burned for sacred truth, the glorious Bard, that Avon's beauties sang, the sightless eyes of Paradise regained, the stalwart christian, who on burning sands, laid down his life, earth's tawny sons to bless, the busy brain, whose "Household Words," charm all humanity, the mitred Bishop, and the Stoless clerk, all shades, graduations, pomp and show, lie mingled in one common clay, dissolved as shadows pass away.

Breaths there a soul upon whose path, the shadows never fall?
Whose whole career, glides like a silvery stream without a ripple,
Upon whose placid bosom gleams perpetual light,
Undimmed by any cloud upon its fair horizon?
Where! Oh my soul, where is that blest relief
That shelter from the storm, the ills and woes of life?
Where is that shore, where tempest tossed and riven
The weary spirit, free from mortal care, rests in perpetual peace?
Tis not of earth; this is but shadow land
As faded flowers, we fall and pass away.
Earths brightest vision, dashed by unseen hand
Then vanish all that's mortal and decay.
There is a land where shadows never fall.
Eternal sunshine bathes it's broad expanse,
A land where pain and sorrow are unknown,
Where tears ne'er dim the eye, and parting never come.
A land where peace, like streams on parched ground
Flows everlasting, through the rapturous soul.
There the abiding home, God's Paradise of love,
His faithful children rests, when from the Earth removed.

July 11th, 1887. D. S.

TAMARAC.—Is an Elixir carefully prepared by an experienced chemist' with the well-known Tamarac as the fundamental principle, and all the other ingredients in its composition are of the purest, and best calculated to relieve all cases of Coughs, Colds and Lung troubles.

TERRIBLE COLLISION.

An Excursion Train Collides with a Freight Train at St. Thomas — Cars Laden with Oil Take Fire.

St. Thomas, Ont., July 15.—A terrible accident occurred at the crossing of the Grand Trunk and Michigan Central railways in this city about 7 o'clock this evening. An excursion train on the Grand Trunk railway from Port Stanley ran into a passing freight on the Michigan Central railway with a number of cars loaded with oil. The engine crashed into one of these cars, when the oil instantly took fire and burned with great fierceness, communicating to the cars on both trains and extending to Griffin's warehouse, coal and lime sheds adjoining the track on the west, and John Campbell's dwelling on the East, all of which were burned to the ground, with the contents. Engineer Donnelly, of the excursion train was burned in the wreck. The fireman jumped and escaped with slight injuries. The forward car of the excursion train was filled with passengers, who made frantic efforts to escape from the burning car, but notwithstanding that hundreds of brave and willing hands were immediately at work to assist in their rescue, it is feared a number have lost their lives and will be burned beyond recognition before their bodies can be got out of the wreck. At 8 o'clock, when thousands of people were crowding around the burning pile, one of the oil tanks on the cars suddenly exploded, throwing hundreds, to the ground with great force and scattering fire in all directions, and severely perhaps fatally, injuring many. At 8.30 p. m. nine bodies were burned to a crisp.

St. Thomas, July 16.—It is now ascertained that the victims of the railway accident of yesterday number twelve, as follows:

THE KILLED.

Mrs. K. Smithers and child.
Mrs. S. Frayne and child.
S. C. Zealand and child.
Mrs. J. Boyle and three children.

Engineer Donnelly and Herman Ponsford, who died this morning from his injuries.

Mrs. S. C. Zealand is probably fatally injured.

CAUSE OF THE DISASTER.

The coroner's jury viewed the charred remains of the victims and adjourned till Monday evening when the evidence will be taken.

An investigation will be held in regard to the cause of the accident. It is reported that the engineer had been drinking, but it is claimed the main cause of the disaster was the failure of the air-brakes to work. The track is now clear, and the wires will be in working order in a few days.

THE FIREMAN'S STORY.

George Angles, the fireman of the wrecked train, is a resident of this city. In speaking of the disaster he said: "Just as we came in plain sight of the semaphone at the Michigan Central Railway crossing we saw that it was up and a Michigan Central Railway freight train was running slowly across the Port Stanley track. We were running smartly. Donnelly reversed his engine and put on the air brakes. He was calculating, I thought, stop just inside the semaphore. Apparently the brakes did not work, and the next minute we struck between a couple of cars, but not before I asked Donnelly to jump, which he refused to do. He told me to jump, which I did. As soon as our engine struck the oil tank a big blaze went up and the baggage car was immediately wrapped in flames. The end of the first passenger car tipped up and caught also, and was soon ablaze. Then the second oil tank caught and exploded with a terrific crash, the flames raised fully 100 hundred feet high, catching the freight sheds on the south side of the track. I saw Donnelly taken out. He was badly burned and disfigured. I also saw several childen taken and a couple of grown persons."

The Passing Summer.

To the Editor of The Advance

Sir.—At this season we are approaching a period when a very important operation in forestry is easily performed, that is the planting out of evergreens. It is now generally foreseen that, in a short time, this country will be, so far as the remains of the older forests are concerned, quite destitute of shelter, and people are getting well aware from observing what has happened in other countries, that the land will not produce nearly as well. In some townships I have lately visited I find all the more intelligent farmers either planting, or preparing to plant lines of cedar, norway spruce or pine along the exposed sides of their farms and in a few years they will obtain great benefit thereby. There is no more difficulty with these than with diciduous trees, if the roots are kept moist and covered from sun and air till planted, while the winter shelter they give renders them far superior to maple or elms. The first week in June is a good time to plant, but if that be missed, the first week in August will do. Yours etc.,

B. W. PHIPPS.

Toronto, July 15th, 1887.

STOP IT.—Continual hawking and spitting caused by Catarrh is permanently removed by Nasal Balm.

A Brave Man Shrinks.

"How's this, John? You said you intended to propose to Miss Gushington this evening, and here you are back before nine o'clock. She surely didn't refuse you?"

"No-o I didn't propose. I concluded to postpone the question."

"Now, see here, John, if you don't get that girl it's your own fault. The idea of being such a coward. You, who have bravely walked up to the cannon's mouth."

"Y-e-s, but the cannon hadn't been eating onions."

SHILOH'S CATARRH REMEDY—a positive cure for Catarrh, Diptheria and Canker Mouth. Sold at Medical Hall.

AYER'S PILLS. Sugar-Coated Cathartic

If the Liver becomes torpid, if the bowels are constipated, or if the stomach fails to perform its functions properly, use Ayer's Pills. They are invaluable.

For some years I was a victim to Liver Complaint, in consequence of which I suffered from General Debility and Indigestion. A few boxes of Ayer's Pills restored me to perfect health.—W. T. Brightney, Henderson, W. Va.

For years I have relied more upon Ayer's Pills than anything else, to my bowels. These Pills are mild in action, and do their work thoroughly. I have used them with good effect, in cases of Rheumatism, Kidney Trouble, and Dyspepsia. —G. F. Miller, Attleborough, Mass.

Regulate

Ayer's Pills cured me of Stomach and Liver troubles, from which I had suffered for years. I consider them the best pills made, and would not be without them.—Morris Gates, Downsville, N. Y.

I was attacked with Bilious Fever, which was followed by Jaundice, and was so dangerously ill that my friends despaired of my recovery. I commenced taking Ayer's Pills, and soon regained my customary strength and vigor.—John C. Pattison, Lowell, Nebraska.

Last spring I suffered greatly from a troublesome humor on my side. In spite of every effort to cure this eruption, it increased until the flesh became entirely raw. I was troubled, at the same time, with Indigestion, and distressing pains in

The Bowels.

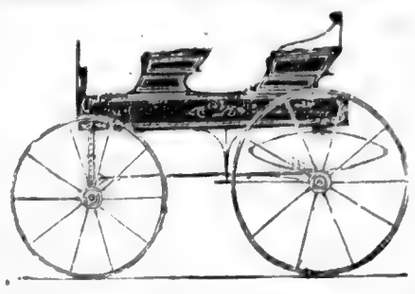
By the advice of a friend I began taking Ayer's Pills. In a short time I was free from pain, my food digested properly, the sores on my body commenced healing, and, in less than one month, I was cured. —Samuel D. White, Atlanta, Ga.

I have long used Ayer's Pills, in my family, and believe them to be the best pills made.—S. C. Darden, Darden, Miss.

My wife and little girl were taken with Dysentery a few days ago, and I at once began giving them small doses of Ayer's Pills, thinking I would call a doctor if the disease became any worse. In a short time the bloody discharges stopped, all pain went away, and health was restored. —Theodore Esling, Richmond, Va.

Ayer's Pills,

Prepared by Dr. J. C. Ayer & Co., Lowell, Mass.
Sold by all Dealers in Medicine.



MAXWEL CARRIAGE WORKS!

LITTLE & BLAKELY,

MANUFACTURERS OF

Carriages, Democrats, Wagons &c

Repairing, Painting, Horse-Shoeing, and General Jobbing

Done on Short Notice and at Reasonable Prices.

JOHNSON LITTLE. Blacksmith. THOS. A. BLAKELY, Wagon-Maker & Painter.

Maxwell, May 26th, 1887.

BOOTS & SHOES!

Having received large auditions to my Stock, I have a good supply on hand of Summer Goods.

LADIES' WEAR.—A fine assortment in Prunella, French Kid, Goat, Polish Calf, Buff and Heavy Boots.

MISSES AND BOYS WEAR.—A large variety of Lace & Button Boots, Shoes and Slippers.

CHILDRENS WEAR.—A very large assortment of all sorts and sizes.

MENS WEAR.—I have Buff, Calf and Enamelled Balmorals, Oxford Ties and Strong Lace Boots.

FOR PRICE AND QUALITY, CANNOT BE SURPASSED.

WM. CLAYTON, Flesherton.

CHEAP ❋ AND ❋ DURABLE!

—THE WELL-KNOWN—

SPEIGHT WAGON!

Call and get Prices, &c. from undersigned.

STOVES, TINWARE, &c. for sale as usual

First-class value in every department.

Agent for VICKER'S EXPRESS. All parcels left with him will be promptly and carefully attended to.

STRAIN'S. - FLESHERTON.

FLESHERTON.

MARBLE WORKS:

E. VANZANT,

ALL KINDS OF

Marble and Monumental Works,

Such as Monuments, Tomb Tables, Headstones Counter and Table Tops—in American and Italian Marble and Granite, and made on short notice. Also Mantles in Marble and Marbleized Slate, &c., &c.

Flesherton, Aug. 30, 1883.

HEALTH FOR ALL.

HOLLOWAY'S PILLS & OINTMENT

THE PILLS

Purify the Blood, correct all Disorders of the

Liver, Stomach, Kidn'ys, and Bowels.

They invigorate and restore to health Debilitated Constitutions, and are invaluable in all Complaints incidental to Females of all ages. For Children and the aged they are priceless.

THE OINTMENT

Is an infallible remedy for Bad Legs, Bad Breasts, Old Wounds, Sores and Ulcers. It is famous for Gout and Rheumatism. For disorders of the Chest it has no equal.

For SORE THROAT, BRONCHITIS, COUGHS, COLDS

Glandular Swellings, and all Skin Diseases it has no rival; and for contracted and stiff joints it acts like a charm.

Manufactured only at Professor HOLLOWAY'S Establishment,

78, New Oxford Street (late 533, Oxford Street), London,

and are sold at 1s. 1½d., 2s. 9d., 4s. 6d., 11s., 22s., and 33s. each Box or Pot, and may be had of all Medicine Vendors throughout the World.

Purchasers should look to the Label on the Pots and Boxes. If the address is not 533, Oxford Street, London, they are spurious.

FOR SALE.

The undersigned has White Ash Butter Tubs and Churns for sale.

JOS. McCORMICK,
364-326, Flesherton.

FLAGS AND BANNERS

of superior quality, for Orange and other Societies. Order early.

W M. TEGART,
Thornbury, Ont.

J. W. BATES,

Furniture Dealer and Undertaker,

FLESHERTON, ONT

FLESHERTON ADVANCE.

"TRUTH BEFORE FAVOR."—"PRINCIPLES, NOT MEN."

VOL. VII., NO. 318. FLESHERTON, ONTARIO, THURSDAY, JULY 28, 1887. A. R. FAWCETT,

For above fine finished Watches, accurate Hampden's—my name on, and the reliable Waltham and Elgin Watches, in Gold, Filled Gold, and Coin Silver Cases, go to

W. A. BROWN'S

FINELY STOCKED

JEWELERY STORE.

I am known as the Reliable Jeweller for 20 miles North, South, East and West. I never have misrepresented purposely any goods sold since being in business here. It is easy to sell an 11 Jewelled Watch for "Full Jewelled." It is much easier to sell 8 k. Gold Watches and call them 12 or 14. I don't have to do it. My own name on all movements, and you will find I can be held responsible if goods are not right.

—|—342—|—

WATCHES & CLOCKS

Booked in Repair Book since July 1st, 1886.

SQUARE DEALING.

PRICES CLOSE.

SPECIALTIES:—Fine Watch Repairing, Spex Fitting.

W. A. BROWN,

The People's Jeweller, Markdale.

CONSUMPTION IN FLESHERTON.

There being good prospects of a fresh quantity of Flour to be consumed in the village and surrounding country the present season, the undersigned has opened out with a good stock of the following lines:—

ROLLER FLOUR!

Best Brands.

Rolled & Granulated Oat-Meal.

Corn Meal,
Cracked Wheat,
Chop,
Shorts,
Bran and Oats,

At Bottom Prices for Cash.

Special Discounts

According to amount of Purchase.

W. W. TRIMBLE,

Next door to Clayton's Shoe Store.

(312-364)

SAY, HALLO THERE! ADVERTISING PAYS! Of course it does. Just plant an advertisement in THE ADVANCE and see for yourself. Hundreds have done so and were benefitted. Have you a farm you want to sell or rent? Advertise in THE ADVANCE. Have you anything under the sun you want to sell or trade? An advertisement in THE ADVANCE will bring you customers every time. Do you want to buy anything or hire help? Advertise in THE ADVANCE every time. Address or call on A. R. Fawcett, ADVANCE Office, Flesherton, for terms, &c.

PRINTING! YES, OH, YES! IT WILL PAY all manners of persons who read this advt. to get their Printing done at THE ADVANCE Office, Flesherton. Good work at honest prices every time! A dollar saved is a dollar earned—so the proverb goes. Pamphlets, Posters, Circulars, Programs, Dodgers, Streamers, Bill Heads, Note Heads, Receipts, Note Forms, Business Cards, Visiting Cards, Labels, Tags, &c. Plain or Colored. Address or call on A. R. Fawcett, ADVANCE Office, Flesherton, for terms.

ADVERTISE in The ADVANCE

Tit-Bits.

Consisting of Local and Other Interesting Items gathered by The Advance Reporters.

Go to Keefer's for GRAHAM FLOUR.

Master Robt. Bates has returned to Sault Ste. Marie.

Miss Maggie Campbell returned home on Saturday last.

100,000 lbs. Raspberries wanted at Brander's, Priceville.

Miss Mary Glass, of Owen Sound, is visiting friends here.

Miss Cruickshank, of Heathcote, is visiting Mrs. Fred. Ryder here.

Mrs. J. D. Clark, of Hamilton, is the guest of her father, Squire Armstrong.

Just in at Brander's a large consignment of new season's Cod-fish.

Mrs. C. J. Leitch, who has been visiting in Owen Sound for some time, has returned home.

Mr. Thos. Clayton was in town on Tuesday. He returned to Toronto yesterday.

Russell's "Noted Jewelry Store" is to the front this week in our advertising columns. Read the announcement.

Several Flesherton young men intend camping out in the vicinity of Bell's lake.

Mrs. George Beecroft is visiting her parents, Mr. and Mrs. McKechnie, at Priceville.

Just opened at Brander's to-day, the latest novelties in Dress Goods, Trimmings, &c.

A number of young people from this place went on a picnicking expedition to Bell's lake on Tuesday last.

Miss Alice Leitch returned home from Owen Sound last week and will spend the holidays with her parents here.

Miss May Damude went to Gorrie last week, and will be the guest of Rev. W. Ayers during her stay there.

Just in at Brander's another large supply of that 5c. Sugar, 22 lbs. for one dollar cash.

Quarterly meeting services will be held in the Methodist church, Flesherton, a week from Sunday morning next, commencing at the usual hour.

Notwithstanding the great rise in sugar, as we buy for cash in large quantities we are still selling 22 lbs. for one dollar cash at James Brander's.

WANTED.—2 Servant Girls—one for kitchen and one for dining room and chamber work. Wages seven and eight dollars per month. Apply to REVERE HOTEL, Markdale.

Mr. S. Damude, D. G. Master of the A. O. U. W., visited the Meaford and Thornbury lodges last week, officially. He proposes visiting every lodge in the district before the end of this year.

Mr. James H. Lever, of Artemesia, has purchased a fine steam threshing machine and is now prepared to take any amount of contracts for fall and winter work.

Mr. S. Damude, of Flesherton, D. G. M. of the A. O. U. W., consisting of Grey, Bruce and a part of Dufferin, was here on Monday and Tuesday last inspecting the lodge.—Thornbury Standard.

Mr. J. Brander, the well-known Priceville merchant, has faith in the judicious use of printer's ink. Read his adv. in another column, also note the great bargains in sugars, etc. in the Tit-Bits columns.

Birth.

CARSTAIRS.—On Saturday, July 16th, at Flesherton, the wife of H. C. Carstairs, of Detroit, of a daughter.

Immense value in Teas from 19 cents up, at Brander's

Get your Flour at Keefer's.

Highest price in cash paid for Tub Butter, Eggs, Wool, &c., &c. at Brander's.

The Wiarton Echo gave its esteemed contemporaries—as well as its readers—an agreeable surprise last week, by coming out in an enlarged form. The Echo is a healthy eight-year-old, well edited and made up, and very neatly printed. Long may it echo!

Mr. Geo. Keefer has returned home from Washington, U.S. Having shaved off his chin whisker since he went away from here last spring, we had some difficulty in recognizing our old friend. He says the heat down there is something terrible.

Bring along your Butter, Eggs, Berries, Wool, &c. You always get the best value at Brander's, Priceville. If you cannot come yourself, send the little folk—your little boy or girl will get as good a bargain as yourself. We have but one price to all.

W. J. Benson was summoned to appear before Geo. Price, Esq., J. P., at Owen Sound, on Tuesday last, for using abusive language in Mrs. Caswell's presence.—Markdale cor. Grey Review. Great Cæsar's ghost! didn't Mrs. Caswell get in a word herself?

EGGS wanted at R. Keefer's.

Mr. H. McNiel recently paid a visit to his parents, who reside in Priceville, and during his stay—while out driving—he lost from his pocket the sum of $40. The money, however, was found by some Sabbath School children in the neighborhood of Hanover and safely returned to its owner.

Brander's $2 White Granite Tea Setts—44 pieces, all A 1 goods—are going like hot cakes at a school picnic. Everybody should see them.

The Stayner junior Lacrosse team has challenged the Flesherton juniors to play them a match on or about the 1st of August—first match to be played on the grounds of the former. The distance and inconvenience in travelling to Stayner may prevent our boys accepting the challenge, however willing they might be under other circumstances.

Get your LEMONS at Keefer's.

Messrs. M. Richardson & Co., of this town, received a letter from Yokahama, Japan, this week, announcing a large shipment of Tea (this year's pickings) direct to them. The letter was mailed at Yokahama on the 2nd of this month. Talk of enterprise,—"Shure, thin, ahow us the aqual av this in a town the size av Flesherton!"

If the repairing of our sidewalks is put off much longer it will scarcely be necessary to commence operations before next spring, as they will shortly go into winter quarters, when pedestrians can take the middle of the road as usual. If the said pedestrians value their necks they will walk on the middle of the road now as well!

The ADVANCE man has purchased from W. K. Flesher, Esq., a lot on Sydenham street—opposite the residence of Squire Armstrong—and will build a private residence thereon in due time. He has every confidence in Flesherton, and unhesitatingly predicts for it a bright and prosperous future—cranks, croakers and lunatics to the contrary notwithstanding. Everything is tending at this moment towards a continuous wave of prosperity.

We beg to extend our hearty congratulations to our highly esteemed townsman, Mr. Joseph Blackburne, on the distinguished honor recently conferred upon him, in his elevation to the highest office in the gift of the Masonic lodge here. Outside the "mystic circle" Mr. Blackburne is equally popular and respected. He is a citizen of whom Flesherton may well feel proud. Shake, friend Blackburne—shake!

Full stock of Diamond Dyes in all shades, Diamond Paints, Butter Color, &c. at Brander's.

Victor Kester had a narrow escape from drowning while bathing with some other boys in Flesher's pond, last Saturday evening. It seems he was swimming "dog-fashion," when he came violently in contact with the top of a stump, which was within a few inches of the surface of the water. He had gone under twice, when Allan Gibson heroically swam out to him, and, after some difficulty, effected his rescue. Well done, Master Gibson!

On Wednesday evening a highly interesting entertainment was given in Priceville in connection with the Presbyterian church, by Mr. D. W. Campbell, an educated gentleman, who has travelled through most of the world for the benefit of his health. The entertainment consisted of effect pictures and dissolving views, representing London, its great sights and its illustrious persons. Owing to the entertainment being given a day earlier than it had been announced for, the audience was not large, but those who were there were highly profited by the beautiful views and the interesting descriptions given. Mr. Campbell hopes to visit Priceville again in the fall, when many will be glad to attend.

If you wish to restore the bloom to your wasted cheek, and so improve your health that plumpness and strength will succeed emacination and debility, purify your blood with Ayer's Sarsaparilla. This remedy will benefit you more surely and speedily than any other.

"Professor" Ward disappeared on Tuesday of last week and has not since been heard of. This fact was ascertained on Saturday last, when Mr. Robert Park went out to the cottage occupied by Ward and applied for a month's overdue rent. Mrs. Ward told him her husband had gone away on Tuesday and she had not seen or heard from him since. She did not know where he had gone, as he had not told her. She also stated, that had it not been for the kindness of some neighbors, the condition of herself and child would have been akin to starvation. Ward is evidently a lazy, shiftless ne'er-do-well, as he was offered all the work he could do while in this neighborhood—some he did, but most of it he shirked. It is said that Joseph is in Owen Sound waiting for "something to turn up."

A Fraternal Visit.

Mr. S. Damude, of Flesherton, District Deputy-Grand Master A. O. U. W. visited Meaford Lodge 152 on Tuesday last and assisted at the initiation of two new members. Mr. Damude is a gentleman of very pleasing and affable manners and very well fitted for the honorable position he occupies in the Order. He is now making a tour of the lodges in this district. The instruction and interest he imparts will greatly assist the cause, more especially with weak lodges which have to compete with a paid agency in connection with both assessment and stock insurance companies. Every brother in the United Workmen is an agent and is expected to do his best to extend the usefulness and success of the Order, and that without fee or reward, other than what every man should consider a ample recompense, namely doing all the good he can.

The Meaford lodge has about trebled in the last two years and we believe has a useful career ahead of it. The meeting on Tuesday evening was well attended, and in addition to the initiations above mentioned, two new applications for membership were submitted. We heartily commend our worthy District-Deputy, Mr. Damude, to the lodges and individual friends of the A. O. U. W. wherever his duties may call him. Any information in regard to the Order will be cheerfully given by calling on the editor.—Meaford Monitor.

Great

Clearing Sale!

To commence JULY 15th,

J. G. ANDERSON.

There will be decided bargains every line. Don't miss it. We want to clear out the present stock in, by the 15th Aug., so as to make room for Fall Purchases. There will be a very choice line of

TEAS

at Special Reduced Prices. DRESS GOODS in great variety; BOOTS & SHOES in Great quantities; STACKS OF READY-MADE CLOTHING; everything will be Cut Away Down in Price.

Come Early before the Rush.

J. G. ANDERSON,

MARKDALE

A Back Yard Boom.

"What are you doing, Tommy?" asked a Detroit lady of her young son, who was sticking up stakes around the back yard.

"Plat'in' a addition," replied the young hopeful, whose father is a real estate agent.

"How are sales?"

"Bully, ma! Stubby Jones takes that corner there by the gate for a peanut and lemonade stand, Bill Smith and Dutchy take a block by the barn for their circus, an' Hen Jones is talkin' 'bout takin' two lots by the apply tree for to tie up his dog on so's his dad can't shoot it. Say ma, I'll let ye on ground floor in that lot by the corner o' the house there, to stand yer flower-pots on—take it fer 5 cents an a handful o' rais'ns, seein it's you!"

UNEQUALLED.—P. B. MacNamara, dry goods merchant, Brockville, Ont., says—As an instant relief for cold in the head and catarrh, Nasal Balm is unequalled. The effect is noticed as soon as used.

A NASAL INJECTOR free with each bottle of Shiloh's Catarrh Remedy. Price 50 cents. Sold at Medical Hall.

A WONDERFUL ORGAN. The largest organ and one that plays a controlling part of the health of the body is the liver. If torpid or inactive the whole system becomes diseased. Dr. Chase's Liver Cure is made specially for Liver and Kidney diseases, and is guaranteed to cure. Receipt book and medicine $1. Sold by all dealers.

FARMERS!

Don't forget there is spot work done at the Flesherton

WOOLEN FACTORY

And we are doing all in our power to please. Customers are finding out it is to their advantage to deal with us as our Prices are Low and Our Goods are Reliable, and notwithstanding the price being cut on account of hard times, I intend to keep up the quality of my goods, and in nearly every branch, viz., CARDING, SPINNING, WEAVING, &c., &c. Give us a trial and see for yourself.

W. H. FLESHER.

Flesherton, May 3rd, 1887.

GOVERNING IRELAND.

Lord Churchill Adversely Criticises the Land Bill — Goschen Defends It — Speeches by Gladstone and Parnell—Crime in Kerry—Juries that Won't Convict.

A last (Thursday) night's London cable says: In the House of Commons this evening, Lord Randolph Churchill, resuming the debate on the Land Bill, objected to Mr. Bannerman's amendment, that the Bill be rejected only, as raising a false issue. There was a general agreement, he said, on the point that a Bill was absolutely necessary to afford relief to the Irish tenantry. It was a great mistake to impute a want of good faith to the Government in the proposals of the Bill. The Government had been forced to offer a temporary land measure before the session closed, for no more odious duty could devolve upon the Irish Government than to administer the Crimes Act unaccompanied by a measure which would satisfy the tenantry. (Cries of hear, hear.) Proceeding to examine the clauses of the Bill, he supported Mr. Dillon's criticisms on the restrictions of the lease-holders' clause, which he hoped the Government would amend. He did not see that the tenantry would derive any benefit from the clause dealing with evictions. (Parnellite cheers.) He would fear to entrust Irish agents, the advisers of the landlords, with the powers conferred upon them by that clause. (Cries of "Oh" from the Conservative benches and cheers.) What would have been the state of Ireland if this clause had been in operation last winter? He did not doubt that from one-quarter to one-half of the tenantry would have been in a state of tumult and disorder appalling to contemplate. It was not within the limit of physical possibilities to deal with the clause this session. The Bill must be lightened by throwing it over. The bankruptcy clauses were equally objectionable, inasmuch as they would tend to lower the moral tone of the tenantry besides producing an immeasurable mass of litigation. The Government, in view of the large number of tenants who it was expected would be forced into bankruptcy, seemed to be trying to build up a system of national credit on a widespread foundation of national insolvency. If the Government, with the Irish members, would agree to deal with arrears and a revision of the judicial rents instead of the bankruptcy clauses, the Bill would be deprived of its worst features and would become acceptable to the country. (Cheers.)

Sir William Harcourt congratulated Lord Randolph on his clear exposition of the defects of the Bill. If Lord Randolph's speech led to a new development of the Bill, the House would have no difficulty in passing it. Lord Randolph had performed a capital operation under chloroform upon the measure, transforming its nature and leaving the mere skeleton of the Bill. If the Government assented, the House would now try to put some decent clothing on the skeleton. Let the Government throw overboard the clauses that both Tories and Liberals opposed, and the Bill going without delay into committee would find an easy passage.

Mr. Goschen, speaking in behalf of the Government, said that while they would not attempt to disguise the difficulty of their task, they must refuse to buy a single vote by making any concession against their convictions. Dwelling upon the temporary character of the Bill, he said the Government would do their best to meet the views of the gentlemen on the other side with regard to the leaseholders' clause. He boldly defended the eviction clause. He defended the bankruptcy clauses, and denied Lord Churchill's assertion that the Government was trying to found a system of national credit. He opposed the plan for a revision of rents advised by the Cowper Commission as fatal to the coming land purchase measure.

Mr. Parnell said he thought Mr. Goschen was looking rather to the enhanced value of his property under his future Land Purchase Bill than to the interest of the Irish tenants. The Government proposed to abolish evictions by executing them under another name, with the object of getting rid of the record of such transactions as evictions. The attempt to bolster up the judicial rents as the basis for purchase would defeat its own end, because the land would not be purchased on the judicial basis. The present measure would simply be regarded as a monument of stupidity and inaptitude. A speedy revision of rents was absolutely necessary.

Mr. Gladstone thought the debate had been conducted with great ability. Presuming that the Government maintained an open mind with regard to the suggestions made he thought it needless to press the amendment to a division, but that the House should be left at liberty to amend and substantially improve the Bill. The committee understood that if pressed to do so, the Government were willing to drop the bankruptcy clauses. He reminded the House that those clauses constituted what the Government had always put forward as a prominent part of the Bill and that no substitute was proposed. Assuming that Mr. Chamberlain intended to press his amendments, Mr. Gladstone called attention to and hailed his speech with great satisfaction. There was no reason to compel the Government to reject the suggestion with regard to the revision of judicial rents, and there was no apparent disposition on the part of the House to sustain the Government in rejecting the proposals of the Cowper commission. The Opposition had obtained a vantage ground which they could not have anticipated a week ago, and with the prospect of a still further improvement in the views with which the measure was regarded by the other side of the House, he had hoped the amendment would not be pressed.

The amendment was negatived and the Bill read a second time without division. It was decided to consider this Bill in committee on Thursday next

In the House of Lords this afternoon Baron Ashbourne, Lord Chancellor of Ireland, moved the second reading of the Crimes Bill. After speeches by Earl Granville, the Duke of Argyll, Lord Carnarvon and others, the Bill was read a second time.

A Dublin cable says: Justice O'Brien, in his address to the Grand Jury of County Kerry yesterday, stated that there was a decrease of crime in the county. He said he could not, however, congratulate the people on the fact, the cause of it being the complete subjugation of the peaceable members of the community to a lawless organization, which was now allowing the well-disposed a little repose from violence. Notwithstanding this there were 60 cases of malicious injury before the jury, showing that a deplorable amount of crime was still committed with impunity. The applications for protection had also increased. The social tyranny had extended to mercantile and legal dealings, resulting in the complete suspension of the law.

Full reports of the first criminal trials which took place on Wednesday for resisting eviction with scalding water accompaniment have just reached here from Limerick. Justice Johnson presided at the assizes. It seems that on the estate of the Earl of Devon a sheriff, thirty constables and eight bailiffs had evicted a tenant named Halliman. There had been the usual barricade of trees, timber and rocks. Six men and three women—part belonging to the family of the tenant and the others being neighbors—were the resistants and indicted. Evidence was given by the bailiffs establishing beyond doubt the identities of those of the accused who threw boiling water and scalding porridge and used pitchforks through the orifices made by the besieging bailiffs. It was distinctly shown that one prisoner thrust a red-hot iron bar through one of the orifices, burning an emergency man. Local solicitors appeared for the accused and watched the case, but there was no barrister. Not a bit of evidence for the defence was adduced, and no address was made in favor of the prisoners. Justice Johnson summed up pointedly against the accused, but, after some hours' deliberation, a majority of the jurors favoring acquittal, they were discharged, the judge roundly scolding the unknown dissentients. Five men were next tried for riotous conduct at another eviction on the same estate. In this case, however, some witnesses did testify against the police, charging them with barbarity. In a short time the jury acquitted the accused, amid the cheers of the spectators.

TURNED THE HOSE ON THEM.

A Lively Battle Between Railroad Laborers and the City Authorities at Youngstown, O.

A Youngstown (O.) despatch says: A regular pitched battle between about fifty Pittsburg & Western Railroad employees, mostly Italians, on one side, and the whole city police force, with twenty-five specials, the City Engineer and Street Commissioner's force, every member of the City Council and Fire Department, under the leadership of Marshal Williams, on the other, took place at 1.30 yesterday afternoon. Contractor Kelly, of the Pittsburg & Western, had a construction train standing across Mill street, making a roadbed about three feet above its grade, when the city forces at a given signal, blown on the fire whistle, put in an appearance, and two well directed streams from three-inch nozzles soon drowned the railroaders out. They deserted their locomotive and cars and the police mounted the locomotive. The railroaders rallied and climbed upon it, and a battle took place. Revolvers were drawn, the police used clubs and both parties fought until they all tumbled out of the engine cab. By this time 2,000 people had congregated and a hand-to-hand fight occurred. The police again captured the locomotive and pulled the train out of reach. Several arrests have been made, among them Contractor Kelly, who is now in the lock-up. The city forces are now shoveling away the obstructions, and police are guarding the crossing.

THE LATE YACHT CALAMITY.

Three More Bodies Recovered—A Distressing Incident of the Accident.

A Brooklyn despatch says: Three more of the bodies of the ill-fated pleasure seekers who went down with the yacht Mystery were recovered at Point Breeze yesterday afternoon, and there are only twelve now missing. One of the saddest incidents of the disaster came to light to-day. A month ago Chas. Gargot, of 86 Park avenue, after having been out of employment for some weeks, secured a lucrative position in a Chicago plate glass establishment. He went on, leaving his wife and two children at home. They were drowned. Yesterday a letter came from Chicago to 86 Park avenue. Mrs. Gargot's brother received it, and seeing it addressed to his dead sister in the familiar hand-writing of her husband, forwarded it to Mr. Gargot's brother. He opened it and found within an affectionate letter to the dead wife and money to pay her expenses to Chicago with her children. There was an admonition to come at once.

Krupp Dead.

A Berlin cable says: Frederick Krupp, the well known German metal founder and gigantic steel gun manufacturer, died yesterday in his villa near Essen, Rhenish Prussia. Herr Krupp was born at Essen, 1812. The enormous manufactory at Essen was established by the father of the deceased in 1827. At first the elder Krupp had only two workmen, and the works were conducted on the most limited scale; but under the supervision of the son they attained to their present gigantic proportions. Herr Frederick was the discoverer of the method of casting steel in very large masses. He sent to the London Exhibition of 1851 a block weighing 45 German quintals, and at present a block can be cast weighing more than 4,000 quintals. Herr Krupp manufactured a large number of articles used for peaceful purposes, but his name is more particularly associated with the gigantic steel siege guns which the Germans used with such terrible effect against the city of Paris. In 1864 the Emperor William offered him letters of nobility, which he declined to accept.

A Collision of Trains.

A London despatch says: Word reached here of a collision yesterday afternoon on the Petrolea and Sarnia Branch of the Grand Trunk, near Wyoming, the consequences of which, however, were not very serious. The gravel train in charge of Conductor Gillean, of this city, was backing round the "V" towards Petrolea, when the passenger train from that station ran into it. The passengers were considerably shaken up, and Mr. Alexander, of this city, was thrown down and somewhat cut. The engine men of the passenger train jumped and escaped injury. No one on the gravel train was hurt, though the caboose was pretty badly smashed. It took about two hours to clear the track.

SENTENCED TO DEATH.

Sensational Close of a Triple Murder Trial in Paris.

A Paris cable says: The Pranzini trial came to an end at half-past 6 o'clock last evening in the presence of a most dazzling bouquet of Parisian mondaines, artists and demi-mondaines. Among the spectators sitting near me I noticed the Comtesse de Bourbon, the Duchesse de Fitzjames, Mlle. Rossita Mauri and a bevy of danseuses from the Opera. Sitting right behind me were MM. Rochefort and Clemenceau. Mlle. Jeanne Gramer sat looking at the trial eating chicken sandwiches and now and then refreshing herself from a delicate little silver flask.

Pranzini stood cool but pale, listening to every word uttered by his counsel, and now and then he turned his eyes toward the pretty women and bewitching toilets that made the courtroom resemble a flower garden.

When the prisoner's counsel, Maître Demange—who is considered at the bar one of the most accomplished rhetoricians since Maître Lachaud—ended his speech with the words, "Pranzini demande la vie avec toutes ses jouissances—la vie avec les femmes; la vie avec le jeu," Pranzini stretched out his left arm, and with stentorian voice shouted:

"Give me death or give me liberty; I am innocent!"

The jury retired, and after an hour and three-quarters' deliberation they returned a verdict of guilty as to the murder of Marie Regnault and her servant, but said that the killing of the little girl was without premeditation.

The President, eyeing Pranzini ferociously, said, "Pranzini, have you anything to say?"

Pranzini answered in dry, crisp tones, and with clenched teeth, "Non!"

Then the judge pronounced the death sentence. The ladies cried "Oh! Oh!" and many fainted away, causing a tremendous tumult. Pranzini motioned with his hands as if he wanted to speak. A dead silence ensued. Pranzini then muttered, "I swear to God I am innocent!"

And this closed the trial for the triple murder of the Rue Montaigne.

ATTEMPT TO MURDER

A Russian Grand Duchess by Religious Fanatics.

A London cable says: A despatch from St. Petersburg, which has come by way of Gumbinnen, in Eastern Russia, states that on July 10th a band of religious fanatics attempted to murder the wife of Grand Duke Nicholas Constantinovitch, son of Grand Duke Constantine, uncle of the Czar. The attempt at assassination was made at the palace, where the lady and her husband were stopping. The cause given for the attack was that the Grand Duchess, who is a Lutheran, refused to modify the terms of her marriage covenant, which accords her the privilege of remaining a Lutheran and joining the Greek Church. The fanatics were all arrested, having been caught near the palace. While they were being removed to jail they cried to the Grand Duchess, "We have already had enough of Maria Paulovona," referring to the Grand Duchess of that name who is the wife of the Grand Duke Vladimir, brother of the Czar, whom the populace have suspected of making proselytes. It is stated that previous to the attempt religious fanatics also tried to kill the Grand Duchess Elizabeth, wife of the Grand Duke Serge. This lady is also a Protestant, being a daughter of Grand Duke Louis the Fourth of Hesse.

THE NOBLE NOODLES

Who Admire Mrs. Leslie Will Not Fight.

A London cable says: There will be no duel between the Marquis de Leuville and the Russian Prince Eristoff, who a few days ago played respectively the parts of cowhider and cowhided in Hyde Park. The Marquis thirsted for blood, so he told his friends, but various influences which were brought to bear induced the Prince to disappoint the noble Marquis in his longing. He was appealed to by Mrs. Leslie not to increase a painful scandal, and declared that consideration for her feelings was sufficient to induce him to let the Marquis alone. He has proposed marriage to Mrs. Leslie and has been refused, but that did not diminish his princely politeness and consideration. Mrs. Leslie, who has great confidence in the ability of the Marquis to do things well, also advanced the argument that the Marquis, who, she says, is the best duellist in the world, would either wound or kill him, and that it was beneath him entirely to be run through or shot by a man like De Leuville. The Prince refused to consider the question of danger, but he decided that if Mrs. Leslie's feelings were not at stake, his dignity as a genuine and unquestioned prince would prevent him from fighting with a gentleman who was not even a genuine and an unquestioned marquis.

Burned by Molten Iron.

A Chicago despatch say: A frightful accident occurred on Saturday morning at the Union Steel Works, corner of Ashland and Archer avenues. Three men were engaged in pouring hot iron into a mould that was damp, when the metal flew up and burned them dreadfully. They were taken to the county hospital and the physicians declare that their recovery is out of the question. Two of the injured are Poles and the third a Hungarian. Their names are: Michael Hischo, George Woodford and Feral Kutsche. The following were seriously injured, but will probably recover: James Benneke, Samuel Wakel, James Hurst and David Jenkins. Woodford and Hischo were married. They and Kutsche were taken to the hospital, while the others were removed to their homes. J. F. Johnson, the foreman, was also struck by the flying metal and slightly burned.

Among the queer names in the Chicago directory for 1887 are the following: Woggow, Smrz, Smalrkivoies, Smuczynski, Hop, Wow, Yshick, Yskia, Zwierschouska, Szolmochowski and Trjnak.

On Jubilee day Birmingham gave an entertainment to 72,000 school children, Blackburn to 17,000, Bradford to 23,000, Leeds entertained 20,000 poor adults and 80,000 school children, Manchester gave a breakfast to 80,000 children, Nottingham feasted 50,000, Portsmouth gave tea and medals to 23,000 and Sheffield feasted and gave medals to 50,000.

KILLED IN COLD BLOOD.

Prominent Washington Citizen Knifed to Death on the Streets by a Laboring Man.

A last (Wednesday) night's Washington despatch says: The most sensational murder that has occurred here since the assassination of President Garfield was committed about 5 o'clock this evening on the corner of Fifteenth street and Pennsylvania avenue, opposite the northeastern end of the Treasury Department Building. Mr. J. C. Kennedy, an attorney and real estate agent, one of the oldest residents of Washington and a personal acquaintance of many of the most prominent people of the National Capital, was murdered in cold blood and apparently without provocation by John Daily, a white laborer. A few minutes before 5 o'clock Mr. Kennedy left his office, just above Riggs' Bank, and crossed the street to the opposite corner, where he mailed several letters. He then started to take a car of the Fourteenth street road. When he was within a few feet of the car Daily, who had been loitering around the corner for several hours, walked up behind him and drawing a large, keen-bladed knife, similar to those used by butchers in killing hogs, ran it into Mr. Kennedy's right side near the abdomen with a vicious lunge, and then gave it a jerk sideways. Mr. Kennedy fell to the ground, and after giving one cry of "Murder," groaned deeply and pointed to his murderer, who made no attempt to escape. A crowd assembled, and Henry Ason, a colored watchman, seized Daily, who had stood looking on, apparently the most unconcerned and self-possessed man in the crowd. Mr. Kennedy expired in about five minutes. The excitement rose rapidly and the crowd grew boisterous, threatening to hang the murderer. Daily paid but little attention to them and refused to say why he committed the crime. Once when provoked he turned serenely to the crowd and said, "Yes, I killed him—d—n him." It was with difficulty that the crowd was restrained until Daily was conveyed to the station.

COL. REYNOLD'S ROMANCE.

Why a Rich South Carolinian Took His Slave for a Wife.

A Columbia, S. C., despatch says: A special to the Daily Register from Sumter, S. C., reports the death in that county last Saturday of Colonel William J. Roynolds, in the 79th year of his age. Colonel Reynolds, fifty years ago, was one of the most promising young men in the State, and was noted for his industry, integrity and active interest in military affairs. He fell deeply in love with a beautiful young girl belonging to one of the first families in Claremont county, and made suit for her hand. He seemed to be favorably regarded by the girl herself, but her parents had more ambitious views for her, and would not allow her to marry him. Nothing daunted, the young man went to work to win a name and position which would render him more acceptable to the parents. He was elected to represent his county in the State Legislature; served one term with credit and distinction, and returning to his home made another effort to secure the hand of the girl to whom he was attached. He was again refused; but after he had been elected a third time over prominent and wealthy competitors the opposition to him was apparently silenced, the young woman promised to be his wife, and all the preparations were made for the wedding. At the last moment she wrote a note saying that she had yielded to the wishes of her mother and must decline to fulfil her engagement. This broke up Colonel Reynolds' life and career. After brooding for a long time over his disappointment he took for a wife a negro girl who had been his slave, and lived with her to the last, regardless of public opinion and the entreaties of his relatives. He reared a large family of children, and himself drew up a will providing for them all and putting them on an equality with his own nearest relatives. He left an estate consisting of some thousands of dollars in money and 4,000 acres of land, and it is thought that the validity of the will will be sustained.

FOUR PERSONS DROWNED

By the Boat Being Cut in Two by a Steamer.

A last (Sunday) night's Detroit despatch says: Between 11 and 12 o'clock last night a shocking accident occurred on the river nearly opposite this city, by which three men and a woman lost their lives. The four, consisting of Christopher Nicolans and his wife, Jacob Bachmann and Jacob Rohler, all residents of Detroit, had been spending the evening at Le Bœuff's wine house on the Canadian shore, just above Walkerville, and started to return a few minutes past 11. When near the island wharf the steamer Mackinac, whose approach the occupants of the boat had not noticed until too late to avoid her, struck the frail craft square on the beam and cut it completely in halves. The force of the blow threw the occupants of the rowboat into the water, and they were drawn beneath the surface by the powerful suction of the steamer's paddles before they had time even to utter a cry for help. The steamer was immediately stopped and every effort made to rescue the unfortunate people, but no trace of them could be discovered. The three men were all employed at Kling's brewery, in this city.

Sanitary Value of Hot Tea.

Tea taken hot is certainly more wholesome than iced tea. This is well shown by the enormous population of China, which could never have increased to its present numbers if epidemics had ravaged that empire as they have those of the West. In spite of overcrowding to a degree elsewhere unknown, and indescribably filthy surroundings, the Chinese have remained healthy. The only sanitary redeeming feature of their lives is the almost universal use of tea as a beverage. That is to say, of water that has been boiled. This lesson in practical sanitation is of more value than anything brought forth by our numerous boards of health, National, State or municipal. In the presence of an epidemic of cholera, typhoid fever or dysentery, the wisest precaution to take against infection would be to boil all fluids used for drinking purposes.—St. Louis Globe-Democrat.

Miss Marietta Holley (Josiah Allen's wife) received $11,000 for the manuscript of her new book, "Samantha at Saratoga."

LABBY'S LETTER.

What the Jubilee Cost the Queen—Cheap French Wines—The Language of a Fishfag—Advice to the Irish.

Mr. Labouchere cables from London to the New York World:

The announcement that the Jubilee hospitalities will cost the Queen upward of $500,000 is an exaggeration. The very highest official estimate, including charges of every sort and description, is under $250,000. These payments are to be made out of the accumulations of the civil list.

People who are in the habit of drinking cheap French wines under the delusion that they are consuming pure Bordeaux or Burgundy, will be interested to learn that within the last few weeks half a million gallons of Italian wines have reached Bordeaux from Naples and Bari, in addition to some two hundred thousand gallons of Greek wine. Of course these wines, which are bought at inconceivably low rates, will leave the town to which they are consigned after having been transferred by dexterous mixing into Medoc or Macon.

Having sought consolation by the abuse of its friends, the Times proceeds to deal with Mr. Gladstone's speech to the American delegates who brought him over the testimonial and with the delegates. Mr. Joseph Pulitzer is described as a Bavarian, Mr. Perry Belmont as a man who wants promotion and is willing to flatter the Irish, the committee as composed of pushing Irish tradesmen. Says the Times: "The whole thing is, as was shown in our columns a month ago, a delightful combination of vulgar political intrigue and sordid commercial speculation. The money was raised by charging for admission to dancing and fireworks. As for Mr. Gladstone, his colossal vanity and insatiable appetite for flattery are well known, and he has repaid the donors with flattery as gross and as clumsy as that which pleases his own far from fastidious palate. It is difficult to conceive the depths to which a man has sunk before he can contemplate such an offering with anything but repugnance and disgust." Is not all this a little overdoing the vituperation? The Times appeals to all patriotic and intelligent men. May not possibly some of them vaguely opine that the cause that has to be defended by vilification of every one in the language of a fishfag is more notable for its weakness than its strength?

The Coercion Bill has passed the House of Commons and will in a few days receive the Royal assent. The centre of resistance will therefore be transferred from London to Ireland. If the Tories fancy that the victory is already won, they are in a fool's paradise. Let there be no outrage. The Tories hope to force the Irish into crime as a justification for the Crimes Act. The Irish must not play their game. They must oppose with a passive resistance whenever an eviction is attempted. The home of the victim should be barricaded and the task of the exterminators rendered difficult. Whenever a man turns informer or takes land from which the rightful holder has been evicted, such a man should be treated as a leper. If the Irish are only true to themselves it will be found more easy to pass a Coercion Act in England than to carry it out in Ireland.

A LONG BRANCH COSTUME.

A Story Which All the Ladies Will Appreciate.

One of the drollest exhibitions of dress was made by a stout lady who went on an excursion to escape the heat of the city. She had bestowed unusual pains on her costume, which was of ecru pongee. The skirt and the waist were trimmed with innumerable rows of fine knife pleating, made by machinery. It was flat-pressed, neat and rather becoming. She had a parasol made of over-lapping rows of the same pleating. She had a peaked bonnet, on which several rows of it were placed. Nothing could have been finer than the lady's appearance as she sat down among the rather envious company. Pretty soon dampness came into the air and did a fatal work for the frills. Every particle of the dressing came out of the knife pleats. A brisk wind blew them out and blew them up. The fulness required for pleating is just three times the surface it covers. That parasol was a mass of crazy, ruffled rags. That hat laid over any old Irish cap that ever crossed a peat bog on a Tipperary widdy's head. That dress was a half-inflated, flopping balloon. The face of the lady got crimson with a sense of her disordered condition, and one was justified in thinking it would be $10 or ten days she would be getting at 10 in the morning in the police court.—Long Branch Letter.

Advertising for Skin Grafts.

(Hartford Times.)

Several months ago Miss Emma Neuman, of Bristol, had her scalp torn from her head by her hair catching in machinery in the mill where she was employed. Dr. J. Wilson, of Bristol, has been diligently engaged since in building up a new scalp by grafting on the head minute bits of skin taken from the arms of various persons. Probably he has exhausted the list of Miss Neuman's friends who were willing to contribute to her relief, for at this time he calls for outside aid, in the following card:

Young persons, not over 30, who are willing to confer a favor on Miss Emma Neuman, will greatly oblige her and her friends if they will allow seeds for grafting in the new scalp to be taken from their arm. The family and friends have furnished material, and a good scalp is being made, but the lack of sufficient material is now the greatest obstacle in successfully covering the entire head. The piece for grafting is pinched up and slipped off without pain or bad effect on the person. Those who will assist the recovery of Miss Neuman may call on Dr. Wilson at his office at 9.30 a.m. or notify him, and arrangements will be made for the convenience of parties.

DR. J. WILSON, Bristol, Conn.

V. V. Ashford, a member of the Sandwich Islands revolutionary Cabinet, was at one time a book agent in Toronto.

"And what would you prescribe for the baby?" asked an anxious father of an absent-minded physician. "Oh! the usual thing," returned he. "Perfect quiet, no worry, exercise, amusement; no coffee, no spirits, and smoking in moderation."

The mosquito is at hum wherever he may be.

Brass kettles, once hammered out, are now spun on a lathe.

CURRENT TOPICS.

RINGLETS flourished in 1846. In those days accomplished girls "twanged the light guitar" and accompanied themselves in the most sentimental of songs. They liked sitting dreaming in the moonlight alone, or en tete-a-tete. They read unlimited novels and had no sense of humor. They never awoke to the realities of life until they married and wore their hair in bands. If you put a girl in ringlets what can you expect? Certainly nothing practical or energetic. It is well known that the slightest exertion takes the ringlets out of curl. Let us hope that fate will never be so cruel as again to make them fashionable.

THE Empress of Austria is very proud of the produce of her fine Schoenbrunn farm. She recently sent a fine ham, weighing twenty-two pounds, to her sister, addressed "To the Countess of Trani at Baden, from her sister the Empress of Austria," but the certificate of origin which should have accompanied it was forgotten, and the customs officers at Limbach detained the parcel, and sent to the Inspector of Markets at Vienna a printed form, which, filled up, read as follows: "A parcel is lying at the customs addressed to the Countess de Trani. Please inform us if the sender, the Empress of Austria, resides at Vienna and is a pork butcher by trade." A satisfactory answer was returned.

THE biggest missionary enterprise on record has been accomplished by Rev. George Muller, founder of an orphanage at Bristol, who has just returned from a preaching tour round the world. The indefatigable evangelist has been absent ten years, during which time he has travelled over 130,000 miles, extending through the United States, New Zealand, Australia, the Malayan Peninsula, China, Japan and the journey home through Europe. What makes the feat really extraordinary is that Mr. Muller is now 82 years of age, and is reported to have finished in splendid condition. His united congregations during the tour amount to over a million persons. A peculiarity of the veteran's methods of collecting money for his orphanage is that he never asks for it. He merely tells his story of how he has been sustained in the past, and the wealth comes rolling in.

NEVER disappoint a woman. As Congreve says, "Hell has no fury like a woman scorned." The other morning a woman in New York city committed suicide because her husband would not permit her to spend the day in the country. He foolishly insisted that she should stay at home with him and assist him in his drinking saloon instead, and in her disappointment she took her life. An even more striking instance of the inability of some women to endure the frustration of their plans is reported from Kansas City. Mrs. Jamieson, a wife and mother, had arranged to go on an excursion with her family, but a rainstorm intertered. The love of a devoted husband and the claims of three young children were not sufficient to stay the woman's suicidal hand, and she deliberately swallowed a fatal dose of chloroform. A more senseless and cruel act was never committed. Surely the nature of woman passeth all understanding.

M. P. LECLERC has propounded a theory that odor is, like light and sound, a phenomenon of undulation. He cites in support of his view that many substances, like sulphur and copper, do not emit odors until they are rubbed, and it is more reasonable to suppose that the rubbings cause undulations than that under that condition the substances emit matter which cannot be detected except as a smell. Again, arsenious acid when thrown upon a burning coal gives thick gray fumes and an odor of garlic. In the solid state it has no smell, and no more in the vaporous state if no chemical change takes place in volatilizing it. But when it is thrown upon the hot coal a reduction takes place to arsenic, that is volatilized and then reoxidized on coming in contact with the air, and we have a smell accompanying the chemical action the same as in many other cases we have light or heat in connection with it. M. Leclerc, continuing his experiments with a rather imperfect instrument, claims to have produced interference of odors analogous with the interference phenomena of light

MANY people do not know how easily they can protect themselves and their children against the bites of gnats and other insects. Weak carbolic acid sponged on the skin and hair, and in some cases the clothing, will drive away the whole tribe. A great many children and not a few adults are tormented throughout the whole summer by minute enemies. We know persons who are afraid of picnics and even of their own gardens on this account. Clothing is an imperfect protection, for we have seen a child whose foot and ankle had been stung through the stocking so seriously that for days she could not wear a leather shoe. All this can be averted according to our experience, and that we believe of many others, by carbolic acid judiciously used. The safest plan is to keep a saturated solution of the acid. The solution cannot contain more than 6 or 7 per cent., and it may be added to water until the latter smells strongly. This may readily and with perfect safety be applied with a sponge. We have no doubt that horses and cattle could be protected in the same way from the flies, which sometimes nearly madden them, and it even seems possible that that terrible scourge, the African Tsetse fly, might be kept off in the same manner.

A CABLE special to the New York Post says: "Sir Allen Young, and not Baron Nordenskjoeld, as has been reported, will probably command the expedition to the south pole which Australia is preparing to send out." Sir Allen Young, then an untitled captain in the mercantile marine, was the volunteer sailing master of the expedition of McClintock in the yacht Fox in 1857-1859, to the cost of which he was a contributor. This was the expedition which finally settled the question of the fate of Sir John Franklin's party by finding a record left by them on the shore of King William's Land. In 1875 he commanded an expedition, fitted out partly at his own expense and partly at that of Lady Franklin, in search of further relics of Sir John's party, but was compelled by the ice to turn back before reaching his destination. His vessel was the Pandora, which, having been sold to James Gordon Bennett, had her name changed to the Jeannette and carried De Long's ill-fated party on its expedition and sank in the Arctic Ocean north of Siberia. Captain Young, in 1876, had command of a vessel which carried a supply of provisions to the Arctic regions for the Alert and Discovery, under Sir George Nares, but which those vessels did not find, owing to their failure to land at Littleton Island on their way home.

A WEALTHY woman of Chicago holds that the girls of her city have not received justice at the hands of novelists; and she offers to pay all the expenses of publishing a story which shall reveal the fair beings as they are. What if the novelist should tell the whole truth?

THE hackmen of Victoria, British Columbia, subscribed $100 towards the celebration of the Queen's Jubilee at that place, but the hack ordinance was published in the Colonist, and they asserted that this, by apprising visitors of their rights, reduced the hackmen's profits, and they refused to pay the money subscribed.

THIRTY-FIVE hundred crates of tomatoes, from the steamer City of Augusta's cargo of 6,000 packages of Savannah "garden truck," were sent outside of New York harbor on Wednesday and dumped into the sea. Meeting hot weather in rather ripe condition made them not worth the cost of freight.

THE head of the famous lead pencil firm of A. W. Faber, Freiherr von Faber, recently celebrated his 70th birthday at Stein, near Nuremburg. He has changed his native village into one of the finest in Germany, founded the famous Germanic Museum in Nuremburg and will be remembered for many other charitable bequests.

EX-GOVERNOR ALGER of Michigan does not weary in well-doing. He now wants the Board of Regents of the State University to establish at Harper Hospital, Detroit, a clinical school in connection with the university, and offers to give $10,000 to start the fund necessary therefor. This hospital, by the way, was originally the benefaction of a poor woman who sold fruit and vegetables in Central market.

"THE fool," says the Philadelphia Press, "who rows a pleasure boat into the wake of a passing steamer in order to frighten his women companions received summary punishment at Pittsburg Sunday, when Richard Lane, who insisted upon perpetrating the deed, was drowned by the upsetting of his own boat. It is well for a joker who insists upon such fun to do his laughing before the boat capsizes."

HARRIET BEECHER STOWE is failing rapidly. The brilliant intellect which conceived the immortal tale of "Uncle Tom's Cabin" is perceptibly shattered. The death of Prof. Stowe has added years to the appearance of his lonely wife, and she has lost entirely her vigor and enthusiasm. In her modest little house in Hartford she awaits listlessly the end of her busy life. Sadly she said a few days ago to a friend: "No; I write no more. I have done, I have done, I have done."

THE Sandwich Islands are a prolific source of interesting news of late. Walter Murray Gibson, Premier of the Hawaiian Kingdom, is a man over 70 years of age, but hale and vigorous. Miss Howard St. Clair, a handsome California book agent, claims that the Premier has failed to keep a promise of marriage, and that the sum of $100,000 will just about quiet the throbbings of her more or less broken heart. An effort at a compromise is being made.

THERE is a place in New York where the finest of wedding trousseaus, even down to the shoes, stockings and everything else, may be hired for a night. The owner of the place says that prominent society women get married in suits furnished for the night. When asked by friends after the marriage why they do not wear the dresses they tell them that they intend never to wear them after the first night. Men are also rigged up in wedding finery for $2. The ladies pay from $7 to $40 for their outfits.

MRS. MARY MAPES DODGE, the brilliant and popular editor of "St. Nicholas," was a young widow before she ever entertained the idea of writing for publication. The first contribution she ever sent to a magazine was promptly accepted, and there was an instant demand for her sketches, but when she completed the manuscript of "Hans Brinker," her greatest work, she had much difficulty in finding a publisher, chiefly because the scene of the story was laid in Holland. But more copies of "Hans Brinker" have been sold than of any other book for children from the pen of an American author.

A GOOD old friend of ours, says the Buffalo Commercial, says that it is incomprehensible to her how people can eat meat during this "heated term." She claims that the poor animals become overheated, that their flesh is full of impure matter, and that meat ought not to be eaten in warm weather anyway. For herself, she "eschews" meat, and when she wants something "stronger" than vegetables she eats "kidneys, sweetbreads, a little bacon, some liver now and then and occasionally tripe." She regards this diet as much more healthy than "flesh" of overheated animals. She says, however, that as a rule during the summer she is "strictly vegetarian," and "lives almost entirely on milk and eggs."

AT this season of the year, says the Scientific American, the annoyance caused to animals by flies and mosquitoes often amounts to positive agony, and at all times, in what is called good corn weather, it is sufficient to prevent the stock eating enough to keep them in good condition. The animals will stand in the water or pass the greater part of the day in the shade rather than expose themselves to the sunshine, going out to eat only when driven by hunger. They quickly lose flesh, the flow of milk shrinks and a loss is incurred that cannot be easily made good again. At all times a good feed of grain is beneficial to stock, but it is especially so when flies are very annoying, since it will do much to prevent shrinkage of flesh and milk. Horses and milch cows may be protected, in a great measure, by wiping them all over with a sponge dipped in soapsuds in which a little carbolic acid has been mixed.

THE number of distinctions conferred on the occasion of the late Jubilee celebration were as follows: Peerages, 8, including Lord Londesborough, Viscount Galway and Sir William Armstrong, of Armstrong gun fame. Privy Councillors, 2—Mr. John Floyer and Sir John Cowell. Baronetcies, 13. Knighthood (not of any Order), 33. The knights include the Lord Mayor of York, the Lord Provost of Edinburgh, and the Mayors of Liverpool, Leeds, Sheffield, Bristol, Salford, Newcastle-on-Tyne, Portsmouth, Norwich and Windsor. Knight of the Garter, 1—The Crown Prince of Austria. Knight Grand Cross of the Bath, 7, including the Khedive of Egypt, and six foreign princes. Knights Commanders of the Bath, 12. Companions of the Bath, 31. Knights Grand Cross of the Order of St. Michael and St. George, 2. Knights Commanders, 15; among them Dr. Grant, Ottawa. Companions, 8.

Latest Ladies' Fashion Notes.

A new idea in Jerseys is a low-necked and short-sleeved one embroidered with beads.

Another fabric very popular at the seaside is a heavy quality of wrinkled cheese cloth in delicate evening shades. They are trimmed with numerous rows of narrow watered ribbon, and produce good effects in draping.

Point d'esprit is much used for summer evening gowns, not only in white but the new colored sorts that come in shades of green, heliotrope, porcelain blue and old pink. The narrow watered ribbons is a favorite trimming on these frocks also.

For wearing to the beach for the morning bath gowns easily put off and on are selected. A pretty one is of soft, light weight, cream colored flannel, simply draped and trimmed with wide Hercules braid. The bodice is a loose belted waist of flannel, with fine blue lines through it, made with a sailor collar opening over a shirt of white flannel.

A novel design for cloaks for travelling or coaching is copied from the cloaks of the Irish peasant women and envelop the wearer from head to foot. They are made of six or seven breadths of twilled silk gathered to a velvet standing collar. They are without sleeves, but the front breadths are doubled from the foot up and the arms pass out between the doubled fronts; a ribbon belt attached to the two back seams forms them into the waist.

These cloaks are shown in brown, gray or navy blue silk, striped with hair lines of ecru or red, and are shirred into the velvet collar. Thin silks made waterproof are made up in this design for rain or dust cloaks. Other travelling cloaks of gray camel's hair or serge are made up with a much closer shape and are trimmed with three rows of dull silver galloon. Dark, cross-barred homespuns in shades of ecru and brown are made up as ulster and travelling cap for use in ocean voyaging.

The tailors are making coats for use in yachting and coaching of soft, loosely woven woollens with herring-bone stripes like chuddah. These have loose fronts held by a band or girdle fastened with a silver clasp, while the back is adjusted in long pleats, beginning at the collar. A cape or hood is worn with these garments; they are made up in fawn color with heliotrope silk facing, or in gray blue with dark navy blue silk. They reach to the heel and wholly protect their garments underneath.

Travelling dresses for summer journeys by rail or steamer are made of lustrous mohairs, either in shades of French gray or gray and white stripes, stripes of fawn and white, blue and white, or solid dark blue. Some of these dresses are braided with picot braid in flower patterns, while others have only stitching. Some of these mohair travelling gowns, made for June brides, have been trimmed with the many rows of narrow moire ribbon so popular just now. With them are worn little, close bonnets of gray straw, trimmed with Russian tulle and clusters of red carnations, forget-me-nots or bluettes.

That cobwebby Indian silk fabric that used to be known years ago as "pineapple gauze" is re-introduced under the name of "sunshiny" and comes with the edge lined with five or six rows more closely woven than the rest. This is torn off in lengthwise stripes and serves, unhemmed, for the flounces. A pretty black dress of this gauze had a full, plain skirt with the stripes running lengthwise about it. Another full skirt over it was draped a little, and in the back was a sash of the palest pink moire, the ribbon sixteen inches in width. The waist was laced up the back, and pointed both back and front, was half low in the neck and lined with folds of pale pink crepe lisse; the sleeves were unlined and were filled at the arm-hold, held in at the elbow with five rows of narrow pink moire ribbon.

The English girls are wearing frocks of white organdy and sheer mull, made with voluminous draperies and all the edges hem-stitched. These frocks have big bishops' sleeves, which come down full nearly to the waist and held there by a band of ribbon, a full frill falling about the waist. The neck is cut half low, with a wide frill of lace gathered on the edge and falling downward, after the fashion of our mothers' "berthas." Around the throat English girls wear with these dresses a tight necklace of amber or gold beads or imitation pearls immediately beneath the chin. This, however, is only becoming to those who have very round, full throats that are not too long.

A Connecticut postmaster has received (from some enemy of his doubtless) a letter addressed: "Please hand to the most beautiful and intelligent young lady in New Haven, from 18 to 24 years old, and who moves in the best society, unopened." He meets the emergency by proclaiming that the owner can have it upon application.

"Laura," said Mrs. Parvenu, on the hotel piazza, to her daughter, "Laura, go and ask the leader of them orchestras to play that 'Sympathy from Meddlejohn' over again. It's such an awful favorite of mine and your father's too."

When it comes to keeping cool an even temper is better than a ton of ice.

THEIR NAME WAS WADDELL.

A Strange Meeting of Two Brothers Who Had Never Seen Each Other.

A portly, prosperous-looking gentleman sat in a Sixth avenue elevated car on Monday evening. The conductor had just shouted "Umteenth street" and banged the gate. Another portly gentleman came in and sat down. There was a remarkable resemblance between the two men. A journalist nudged portly party number one and said: "Beg pardon, sir. Do you see your counterpart sitting opposite?"

"By Godfrey, he's the image of me."

Then leaning over he tapped the image on the knee with the Evening Sun: "Excuse me, sir. You are my double. Will you oblige me with your card?"

The image looked up, seemed bewildered for an instant. "I haven't a card with me, sir, but my name is Waddell, of Murray, Idaho."

"Waddell, eh? Where is your native place?"

"Manchester, England, sir."

"Your father's name James?"

"Yes, sir. Oblige me with your name, sir."

"Certainly, Jimmy. You don't know me, do you?"

"You look like a Waddell. Are you my brother Smallwood?"

"That's what I am."

The two brothers shook hands for about a minute, exchanging inquiries. An explanation revealed the fact that the elder brother, Smallwood, had left England two years before James was born. He had been in Peru thirty-two years and had not heard from home in twenty years. James was in business in Murray, Idaho. They climbed down the Twenty-third street stairs arm in arm and a moment later were celebrating their meeting with a bottle of Roederer.—New York Evening Sun.

Late Scottish News.

On the 25th ult. a man with only one leg swam across the Clyde between Kirn and the Cloch, a distance of 2½ miles.

The Bishop of Argyll was recently arrested in Algiers as a supposed spy, and detained for a few days.

A long continued draught has caused great scarcity of water in various towns and villages in Scotland.

The Culblean and Kinnord sections of the Marquis of Huntly's Aboyne estate, 9,300 acres, have been sold to Mr. C. H. Wilson, M. P. for Hull, for £45,000.

At the Glasgow Circuit Court, on the 28th ult., the young man Hugh Abernethy, who attempted to murder a young woman with whom he had been keeping company, was—some mitigating circumstances having been allowed—sentenced to imprisonment for twelve months.

Kinblethmont House, five miles from Arbroath, the residence of Lindsay Carnegie, was totally destroyed by fire on the 26th ult. Most of the furniture and the plate were got out of the burning mansion, although not without suffering injury, but, notwithstanding, the loss is estimated at £15,000.

In the Circuit Court, at Aberdeen on the 1st instant, Alexander Stewart, who was charged with the murder of a woman near Huntly, put in a plea of guilty of culpable homicide, and this being accepted he was sent to penal servitude for twenty years. An Aberdeen solicitor named Finlayson was sentenced to fifteen months' imprisonment for forgery.

On the 27th ult. a bronze tablet, bearing the inscription "Here dwelt John Galt at his death, 11th April, 1839," was affixed to the wall of the building at the northwest corner of Blackhall street and West Burn street, in Greenock. The idea of this memorial was suggested a few years ago on the visit to Scotland from Canada of Sir A. T. Galt, son of the novelist, and carried out after some delay by some admirers of Galt's works. The tablet was executed by John C. Wilson & Co., Glasgow.

For the Babies

It is not necessary to buy corn cures. Men and women should remember that Putnam's Painless Corn Extractor is the only safe, sure and painless corn remover extant. It does its work quickly and with certainty. See that the signature N. C. Polson & Co. appears on each bottle. Beware of poisonous imitations.

A Western paper tells about "a sensational lynching." This was to distinguish it from the ordinary quiet and unobtrusive kind.

Don't Hawk, Spit, Cough,

suffer dizziness, indigestion, inflammation of the eyes, headache, lassitude, inability to perform mental work and indisposition for bodily labor, and annoy and disgust your friends and acquaintances with your nasal twang and offensive breath and constant efforts to clean your nose and throat, when Dr. Sage's "Catarrh Remedy" will promptly relieve you of discomfort and suffering, and your friends of the disgusting and needless inflictions of your loathesome disease?

The Experience of Mrs. Peters.

Mrs. Peters had ills,
Mrs. Peters had chills,
Mrs. Peters was sure she was going to die;
They dosed her with pills,
With powders and squills,
With remedies wet and with remedies dry.
Many medicines lured her,
But none of them cured her,
Their names and their number nobody could tell;
And she soon might have died,
But some "Pellets" were tried,
That acted like magic, and then she got well.

The magic "Pellets" were Dr. Pierce's Pleasant Purgative Pellets (the original Little Liver Pills). They cured Mrs. Peters, and now she wouldn't be without them.

Who are to be blessed? Surely the man who minds his own business will be among the number.

If best treatment you could get failed to cure rheumatism do not be discouraged, but take McCollom's Rheumatic Repellant, the best remedy known. Sold by wholesale druggists of Toronto, Hamilton, London, Winnipeg and by retail druggists generally.

Hereafter tavern, shop and other signs in Alsace-Lorraine must bear inscriptions in German only.

A 3-year-old negro boy in St. Augustine Fla., was handcuffed and sent to stealing four plums from a garden.

A Square Statement by a Carpenter.

"For years I have had a chest trouble amounting to nothing short of consumption. I saw how others in like condition had been cured by the use of Dr. Pierce's Golden Medical Discovery, and resolved to test its merits in my own case. The results are so plane as hardly to require a bitstock or any auger-ment in favor of this grate remedy. It does awl it claims! It builds up the system, supports and strengthens where others fail." He adz: "My recovery, which is now on a sure foundation, hinges entirely on the compass of this wonderful Restorative, having tried other remedies without a bit of relief."

You can get more wind out of a ten cent fan than you can from a $500 one. It's the same way with a ten cent man.—Yonkers Statesman.

A company of Frenchmen are breeding Arabian horses in Dakota.

The treatment of many thousands of cases of those chronic weaknesses and distressing ailments peculiar to females, at the Invalids' Hotel and Surgical Institute, Buffalo, N. Y., has afforded a vast experience in nicely adapting and thoroughly testing remedies for the cure of woman's peculiar maladies.

Dr. Pierce's Favorite Prescription is the outgrowth, or result, of this great and valuable experience. Thousands of testimonials, received from patients and from physicians who have tested it in the more aggravated and obstinate cases which had baffled their skill, prove it to be the most wonderful remedy ever devised for the relief and cure of suffering women. It is not recommended as a "cure-all," but as a most perfect Specific for woman's peculiar ailments.

As a powerful, invigorating tonic, it imparts strength to the whole system, and to the womb and its appendages in particular. For overworked, "worn-out," "run-down," debilitated teachers, milliners, dressmakers, seamstresses, "shop-girls," housekeepers, nursing mothers, and feeble women generally, Dr. Pierce's Favorite Prescription is the greatest earthly boon, being unequaled as an appetizing cordial and restorative tonic.

As a soothing and strengthening nervine, "Favorite Prescription" is unequaled and is invaluable in allaying and subduing nervous excitability, irritability, exhaustion, prostration, hysteria, spasms and other distressing, nervous symptoms commonly attendant upon functional and organic disease of the womb. It induces refreshing sleep and relieves mental anxiety and despondency.

Dr. Pierce's Favorite Prescription is a legitimate medicine, carefully compounded by an experienced and skillful physician, and adapted to woman's delicate organization. It is purely vegetable in its composition and perfectly harmless in its effects in any condition of the system. For morning sickness, or nausea, from whatever cause arising, weak stomach, indigestion, dyspepsia and kindred symptoms, its use, in small doses, will prove very beneficial.

"Favorite Prescription" is a positive cure for the most complicated and obstinate cases of leucorrhœa, excessive flowing, painful menstruation, unnatural suppressions, prolapsus, or falling of the womb, weak back, "female weakness," anteversion, retroversion, bearing-down sensations, chronic congestion, inflammation and ulceration of the womb, inflammation, pain and tenderness in ovaries, accompanied with "internal heat."

As a regulator and promoter of functional action, at that critical period of change from girlhood to womanhood, "Favorite Prescription" is a perfectly safe remedial agent, and can produce only good results. It is equally efficacious and valuable in its effects when taken for those disorders and derangements incident to that later and most critical period, known as "The Change of Life."

"Favorite Prescription," when taken in connection with the use of Dr. Pierce's Golden Medical Discovery, and small laxative doses of Dr. Pierce's Purgative Pellets (Little Liver Pills), cures Liver, Kidney and Bladder diseases. Their combined use also removes blood taints, and abolishes cancerous and scrofulous humors from the system.

"Favorite Prescription" is the only medicine for women, sold by druggists, under a positive guarantee, from the manufacturers, that it will give satisfaction in every case, or money will be refunded. This guarantee has been printed on the bottle-wrapper, and faithfully carried out for many years.

Large bottles (100 doses) $1.00, or six bottles for $5.00.

For large, illustrated Treatise on Diseases of Women (160 pages, paper-covered), send ten cents in stamps. Address,

World's Dispensary Medical Association,
663 Main St., BUFFALO, N. Y.

D U N L. 30 87.

ALMA COLLEGE
THE LEADING CANADIAN COLLEGE FOR YOUNG WOMEN
60 PAGE PAMPHLET FREE
ST. THOMAS, ONT.

I CURE FITS!

When I say cure I do not mean merely to stop them for a time and then have them return again. I mean a radical cure. I have made the disease of FITS, EPILEPSY or FALLING SICKNESS a life-long study. I warrant my remedy to cure the worst cases. Because others have failed is no reason for not now receiving a cure. Send at once for a treatise and a Free Bottle of my infallible remedy. Give Express and Post Office. It costs you nothing for a trial, and I will cure you. Address DR. H. G. ROOT,
Branch Office, 37 Yonge St., Toronto.

DUNN'S
BAKING POWDER
THE COOK'S BEST FRIEND

CONSUMPTION.

I have a positive remedy for the above disease; by its use thousands of cases of the worst kind and of long standing have been cured. Indeed, so strong is my faith in its efficacy, that I will send TWO BOTTLES FREE, together with a VALUABLE TREATISE on this disease to any sufferer. Give express and P. O. address.
DR. T. A. SLOCUM,
Branch Office, 37 Yonge St., Toronto

THIS PAPER may be found on file at Geo. P. Rowell & Co's Newspaper Advertising Bureau (10 Spruce St.), where advertising contracts may be made for it IN NEW YORK.

THE ADVANCE.

Is published

Every Thursday,

FROM THE OFFICE,

Collingwood Street, - - Flesherton, Ont.

TERMS OF SUBSCRIPTION:

$1 per annum when paid strictly in advance
$1 50 per annum when not so paid.

A. R. FAWCETT,
Editor and Proprietor.

FLESHERTON:
THURSDAY, JULY 28, 1887.

EDITORIAL NOTES.

We once knew a man who thought the editor of a certain country paper had no right to drop one issue during the year. The editor got a little warm at the man's "smallness of soul," and thus addressed him:—"My friend, you appear to have forgotten the fact, that you left some wood in my yard last week; and also—" "Well, sir, and wasn't it good sound maple and beech wood?" interrupted the man with a snort. "It was, replied the editor freezingly, "but it was just a quarter of a cord short of the right measurement! I would not have alluded to this fact if you had not spoken as you have in reference to my dropping an issue of my paper, and—." But the man was gone, and the editor resumed his work with a sigh.

An anonymous writer, in last week's issue of the Markdale Standard, writing above the signature, "An Observer," takes us to task for saying what we did in reference to the precedent established by certain citizens of Markdale, in the matter of bringing their edibles along with them to this place on the 12th of July. Anonymous writers frequently do criticise assertions made, or opinions advanced, by us. But, bless you! it only shows the weakness of their position when they seek to hide their sayings under cover of a false name. "They love darkness rather than light," &c. "An Observer" evidently believes in delivering his fire only when well under cover.

It's no use trying—we give it up! We have done all in our power to suppress Prof. E. Stone Wiggins, weather prophet, astronomer, financier, and what not, but Edward's too much for us. Choke him off in Canada and he bobs up serenely in the United States. Expose and ridicule his weather prophecies, and he's off on earthquakes instanter. Follow him up in this direction, and you suddenly find him engaged in a profound calculation concerning certain heavenly bodies—such as the "Star of Bethlehem," &c. We respectfully turn him over to our able city contemporary, the Toronto World; failing there, we have still Prof. Johnson, of the British Lion and American Eagle, to fall back upon!

Markdale, Berkeley and Kell's L.O. Lodges celebrated the 'twelfth' in that small village lying to the south of us, known as Flesherton. The Markdale brass band led the procession, and wafted upon the balmy air some delicious and appropriate strains of music. —Markdale cor. Grey Review.

In that case, when referring to Markdale in future, we should say—"The little hamlet to the North of us!" Thanks! oh, thanks awfully for the suggestion! By the bye, we would gently remind the writer of the above, that it was the Flesherton Band "lead the procession" at Irish Lake picnic to the tune of dollars and dimes at that! Ha, ha, "Mulcahy"! we've got ye' there on the hip, me boy!

Mr. Flesher, of Flesherton, offers a mill site in that village free to any one who will agree to put up a roller mill. If the owners of the splendid unused site in Durham would do the same thing it would be an inducement worth mentioning. If a little place like Flesherton can produce a man with so much public spirit, surely some of the Durham property owners might take a lesson out of his book. The probabilities are that if the thing was properly managed the results would more than repay the outlay—Grey Review.

The above is incorrect. Mr. A. Munshaw, proprietor of the hotel here—and not Mr. Flesher—"offers a mill site," &c. to any one who will build a roller flour mill in Flesherton. It is also incorrect to speak of this town as a "little place" unless the Review is willing to speak of Durham in a similar manner. Flesherton is away ahead of the "ancient village" to the West of us in many respects.

BE ON YOUR GUARD.—Don't allow a cold in the head to slowly and surely run into Catarrh, when you can be cured for 25c. by using Dr. Chase's Catarrh Cure. A few applications cure insipient catarrh; 1 to 2 boxes cures ordinary catarrh; 2 to 5 boxes is guaranteed to cure chronic catarrh. Try it. Only 25 cents and sure cure. Sold by all dealers.

He Humored Him.

A New York stock broker who was on his way to Buffalo last week, observed that one of his fellow passengers was closely regarding him, and after a time the man came over and asked:

"Didn't I see you in Chicago in 1879?"

The broker wasn't in Chicago that year, but thinking to humor the stranger he replied in the affirmative.

"Don't you remember of handing a poor devil a silver dollar one night in front of the Tremont?"

"I do."

"Well, I'm the chap, I was hard up, out of work and about ready to commit suicide. That money made a new man of me. By one lucky shift and another I am now worth $25,000."

"Ah! glad to hear it."

"And now I want you to take $5 in place of that dollar. I can't feel easy until that debt is paid."

The broker protested and objected, but finally, just to humor the man, he took the $20 bill and gave him back $15. The stranger then withdrew and everything might have ended then and there if the broker, on reaching Buffalo, hadn't ascertained that the "twenty" was a counterfeit and that he was $15 out of pocket.

He Wanted an Explanation.

"You look like a clergyman," observed a hard up man to the gentleman next him in the smoker.

"I am," was the reply.

"Then I'd like to have you explain something to me."

"What is it?"

"You know, the Bible says 'as ye sow, so shall ye reap.' Now I've been sewing up holes in these trousers for two years, and I want to know when I am likely to reap another pair."

And he got the whole seat to himself.

An Ohio dentist has devoted himself to active politics, probably on the ground that his calling has fitted him for "taking the stump."

Sore Eyes

The eyes are always in sympathy with the body, and afford an excellent index of its condition. When the eyes become weak, and the lids inflamed and sore, it is an evidence that the system has become disordered by Scrofula, for which Ayer's Sarsaparilla is the best known remedy.

Scrofula, which produced a painful inflammation in my eyes, caused me much suffering for a number of years. By the advice of a physician I commenced taking Ayer's Sarsaparilla. After using this medicine a short time I was completely

Cured

My eyes are now in a splendid condition, and I am as well and strong as ever.—Mrs. William Gage, Concord, N. H.

For a number of years I was troubled with a humor in my eyes, and was unable to obtain any relief until I commenced using Ayer's Sarsaparilla. This medicine has effected a complete cure, and I believe it to be the best of blood purifiers.—C. E. Upton, Nashua, N. H.

From childhood, and until within a few months, I have been afflicted with Weak and Sore Eyes. I have used for these complaints, with beneficial results, Ayer's Sarsaparilla, and consider it a great blood purifier.—Mrs. C. Phillips, Glover, Vt.

I suffered for a year with inflammation in my left eye. Three ulcers formed on the ball, depriving me of sight, and causing great pain. After trying many other remedies, to no purpose, I was finally induced to use Ayer's Sarsaparilla, and,

By Taking

three bottles of this medicine, have been entirely cured. My sight has been restored, and there is no sign of inflammation, sore, or ulcer in my eye.—Kendal T. Bowen, Sugar Tree Ridge, Ohio,

My daughter, ten years old, was afflicted with Scrofulous Sore Eyes. During the last two years she never saw light of any kind. Physicians of the highest standing exerted their skill, but with no permanent success. On the recommendation of a friend I purchased a bottle of Ayer's Sarsaparilla, which my daughter commenced taking. Before she had used the third bottle her sight was restored, and she can now look steadily at a brilliant light without pain. Her cure is complete.—W. E. Sutherland, Evangelist, Shelby City, Ky.

Ayer's Sarsaparilla,

Prepared by Dr. J. C. Ayer & Co., Lowell, Mass.
Sold by all Druggists. Price $1; six bottles, $5.

The

CHILDRENS HEALTH.

One of Natures Kindest Gifts is a Healthy Constitution. Guard it against disease by using

Siamese Worm Powders.

Worms are the fruitful cause of many disorders in Children. SIAMESE WORM POWDERS will expel Worms in every case where they exist, will regulate the Stomach and Bowels at the same time. Use them, you won't regret it.

Peck's Pleasant Pills!

Should always be used for Sick Headache. Their operation is mild and pleasant. They strike home each time when used for a Disordered Liver. Ask for them. Get them. Don't forget the name, Peck's Pleasant Pills.

If your druggist has not the above preparation in Stock, W. W. STEPHEN & CO., of Meaford, will send them to you prepaid on receipt of 25c. for either, 5 of each, or assorted for $1.00.

W. W. STEPHEN & CO.

Druggists, Wholesale & Retail.

MEAFORD.

IN the matter of WILLIAM HOGG, of the Village of Flesherton Station, in the County of Grey, General Storekeeper:

The insolvent has made an assignment of his Estate to the undersigned, in pursuance of an Act respecting Assignments for the benefit of Creditors, 48 Vic., Chap. 28, and the Creditors are notified to meet at No 23 Wellington Street East, Toronto, on Monday 18th July, 1887, at 4 o'clock, p.m., to receive statements of his affairs, appoint Inspectors, and for the ordering of the affairs of the Estate generally.

And Notice is hereby given, that after 15th August, next, the said Trustee will proceed to distribute the assets of the said Debtor among the parties entitled thereto, having regard only to the claims of which Notice shall have been given, and that he will not be liable for the assets, or any part thereof so distributed to any person or persons of whose debt or claim he shall not then have had notice.

E. E. C. CLARKSON,
Trustee.

26 Wellington St. East, Toronto.
4th July, 1887. 316-317

Agents, Agents!

NOW READY—!—OUR NEW BOOK

EARTH, SEA AND SKY

OR

Marvels of the Universe

Being a full and graphic description of all that is wonderful in every Continent of the Globe, in the world of waters and the starry Heavens. Containing thrilling adventures on land and sea, renowned discoveries of the world's greatest explorers in all ages, and remarkable phenomena in every realm of nature. Embracing the striking physical features of the earth the peculiar characteristics of the human race, of animals, birds, insects, etc., including a vivid description of the Atlantic, Pacific and Indian Oceans and of the Polar Seas, the monsters of the deep, beautiful seashells and plants, singular fishes and dwellers in the world of waters, remarkable ocean currents, etc., together with the amazing phenomena of the solar and starry systems, by Henry Davenport Northrop, D.D., embellished with over 300 fine engravings. Liberal terms to agents. Oxford Publishing Company, 5 Jordan St., Toronto, Ont. 316-48

ROAD NOTICE.

Township of Artemesia.

Notice is hereby given that the Municipality of Artemesia will after one month from the first publication hereof in the FLESHERTON ADVANCE newspaper, the date of which first publication will be on the 7th day of July, 1887, proceed to pass a By-Law establishing the undermentioned Deviation of road in this Township, viz., from a point numbered 41 on a deviation under By-Law 33, made by T. Gilliland, Esq., between Lots 21 and 21 in the 12th Concession, on same bearing to centre of Road, known as Campbell's road, instead of on bearing 42 as mentioned on plan by said Gilliland, which part of said By-Law 33 will be repealed, and also to satisfy the original intention to carry any other part of said road in the Divisional line of Lots as far as practical.

Council will meet on second Monday of Aug., instead of 1st, to pass it.

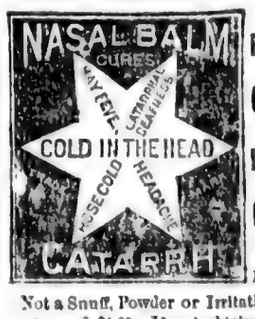
W. J. BELLAMY, Township Clerk.

One High-Bred Durham Bull,

"KING BILLY,"

The Royal Champion,

Will stand for service for the year 1887, at Lot 102, 1st Range, W.T. & S.R., Artemesia, at the small sum of 50c. W. C. PARKER.



A POSITIVE CURE FOR CATARRH. GIVES Immediate Relief FOR Cold in Head, HAY FEVER. EASY TO USE.

Not a Snuff, Powder or Irritating Liquid. Price 50 cts. and $1.00. If not obtainable at your druggists, sent prepaid on receipt of price. Address ELY BROS. & CO., Brockville, Ont.

NOTICE.

GRAY CHAMPION!

A THOROUGH-BRED DURHAM BULL, with good pedigree, will stand for service at Lot 142 West T. & S.R., Artemesia. TERMS, $1 if paid on or before Jan. 1st, 1888; otherwise, $1.25.

Also thorough-bred BERKSHIRE BOAR at same place. JACOB A. LEVEN.

Farm for Sale!

100 ACRE FARM, 85 acres cleared, in good state of cultivation, Log Barn, Frame Stable and other out-buildings. Good Roughcast House, splendid Cellar, good Well at the door, large Orchard with good bearing Fruit Trees. Lots 148, 149, 150, 3rd Range East, Artemesia. Possession can be had this fall. Title clear. JAMES BEECROFT,
314-319. Proprietor.

WHAT IS IT?

IT IS A FACT AND NO CONTROVERSY THAT

JOHNSON'S

TONIC BITTERS

and NERVINE is the best remedy in the market for nervous diseases of any sort. Hysteria, Loss of Appetite, Debility from loss of fluids or overwork, Paleness of Complexion so often seen in young females and all complaints arising from poverty of blood.

It is a fact and no gainsaying that JOHNSON'S TONIC LIVER PILLS are the very best in the market for diseases caused by Torpid Liver and derrangement of the Stomach or Kidneys.

It is a fact and no one will deny it that JOHNSON'S ALL HEALING WHITE OINTMENT is the best in the market for Burns, Scalds, Chilblains, Salt Rheum, Barbers Itch, Pimples and all Skin Disorders arising from scrofulous taint

W. S. CHRISTOE has been appointed Agent for the above and has them on sale at his Medical Hall, Flesherton. Try for yourselves and be satisfied.

DUNDALK

PUMP WORKS!

C. R. PHILLIP'S,

Manufacturer of all kinds of PUMPS.

Cylinder Check Valve & Cistern Pumps.

Orders Respectfully Solicited and satisfaction guaranteed.

JAMES SULLIVAN,

Tin-Smith, AGENT.
FLESHERTON.

J. B. SLOAN

Has any quantity of Shingles, &c., on hand at Eugenia.

Cheap for Cash.

James Sullivan,

The Tinsmith, - Flesherton

Repairing, Eavetroughing, and in fact everything in the business will receive my prompt and careful attention at reasonable prices.

THE MARKETS.

FLESHERTON.

Carefully Corrected Each Week.

Flour	$4	00	to 4	20
Fall Wheat	$0	75	to 0	75
Spring Wheat	0	75	0	75
Barley	0	30	0	45
Oats	0	26	0	26
Peas	0	47	0	48
Butter	0	12	0	13
Eggs, fresh	0	14	0	14
Potatoes bush	0	50	0	50
Pork	5	60	5	60
Hay, per ton	10	00	10	00
Hides	6	00	7	00
Wool		20		22
Sheepskins	0	40	0	50
Geese	0	05	0	05
Turkeys	0	8	0	8
Chickens per pair	0	25	0	30
Ducks per pair	0	40	0	50

AT GORDON'S

HARNESS SHOP

FLESHERTON,

You will find an assortment of

Heavy and Light Harness,

Whips, Brushes, Curry Combs, Sweat Pads, and the celebrated "Harness Oil."

COLLARS A SPECIALTY.

Cheap for Cash. Call and Examine.

R. J. SPROUL,

Flesherton, Conveyancer, Appraiser, Valuator and Money lender. Deeds, Mortgages, leases and Wills drawn up and Valuations made on shortest notice. Charges very low. Apply to R. J. SPROULE, Postmaster, Flesherton.

CLAYTON'S HARNESS SHOP!

FLESHERTON,

Is the place to get your Harness Collars, &c, made up in good style.

Shop in W. Clayton's Boot & Shoe Store, Flesherton.

HARNESS HARNESS.

If you want Harness, Single or Double, or Horse Blankets, Trunks, Bells, Valises, Curry Combs, Brushes or the celebrated Harness Oil, call & examine before purchasing elsewhere.

R. J. WATSON,
PRICEVILLE.

PHOTOGRAPHY.

MRS. BULMER,

Photographer,

Flesherton - Ont.

Having spent some time in the studio of the famous Toronto Photographer, Mr S. J. Dixon, where I acquired valuable knowledge in Retouching, I feel assured I can give good general satisfaction. A call respectfully solicited,

MRS. BULMER.

Flesherton, Sept. 17th, 1885.

THE CELEBRATED DR CHASE'S MANDRAKE DANDELION LIVER CURE

HAVE YOU

Liver Complaint, Dyspepsia, Indigestion, Biliousness, Jaundice, Headache, Dizziness, Pain in the Back, Costiveness, or any disease arising from a deranged liver, DR. CHASE'S LIVER CURE will be found a sure and certain remedy.

NATURE'S REMEDY

The unqualified success of Dr Chase's Liver Cure in Liver Complaint rests solely with the fact that it is compounded from nature's well-known liver regulators, MANDRAKE AND DANDELION, combined with many other invaluable roots, barks and herbs, having a powerful effect on the Kidneys, Stomach, Bowels and Blood. 500,000 SOLD

Over one-half million of Dr. Chase's Recipe Books were sold in Canada alone. We want every man, woman and child who is troubled with Liver Complaint to try this excellent remedy.

SOMETHING NEW. GIVEN AWAY FREE

Wrapped around every bottle of Dr. Chase's Liver Cure is a valuable Household Medical Guide and Recipe Book (84 pages), containing over 200 useful recipes, pronounced by medical men and druggists as invaluable, and worth ten times the price of the medicine.

TRY CHASE'S CATARRH CURE. A safe and positive remedy. Price, 25 cents.

TRY CHASE'S KIDNEY AND LIVER PILLS. 25 cts. per box.

SOLD BY ALL DEALERS

T. EDMANSON & CO., Sole Agents, Bradford

Flesherton Meat Market.

S. SPIRIT, - - PROPRIETOR.

Cash paid for fat Cattle and Sheep.

Fresh Meats constantly on hand for Cash. Orders promptly filled.

—EUGENIA—

Real Estate Agency

MONEY TO LOAN at lowest rates of interest and on terms of repayment to suit borrower.

FARMS bought and sold.

CONVEYANCES of all kinds properly executed.

COMMISSIONER for taking affidavits in H.C.J., Agent for the Norwich Fire Insurance Society. All business promptly, carefully and confidentially attended to.

Office, Corner of Inkerman and Napoleon Streets.

HENRY MELDRUM,
AGENT.

Medical Hall,

FLESHERTON,

Is the place to obtain Mixed

Paints

A Great Variety and Cheap.

Linseed Oil.

White and Red

LEAD!

Venetian Red,
Yellow Ocre,
Varnish.

Medicines

Of Large Variety, and constantly adding new ones.

White Wine Vinegar.

MEDICINAL STIMULANTS

Of Best Quality.

CONFECTIONERIES.

BISCUITS by best Makers.

Beef, Iron & Wine.

PLASTER OF PARIS,
DIAMOND DYES,
TRIANGLE DYES,
MAGNETIC DYES.

LYTLES "SHEEP DIP."

Don't let your Cattle or Sheep suffer from vermin, with an effectual so near you. Only $1 for a pint, enough to make 40 gallons of wash.

"GOLD OIL!"

Unparrelled for Rheumatism.

THIS

ESTABLISHMENT

Pays cash for everything, receives discount and therefore can sell cheap.

A George Washington Story.

"Look here, Johnnie, you betcher don't git me to believe no more of them George Washington stories," said a Bowling Green boy to his chum.

"Why what's the matter with you, Cholly?"

"Well, t'other night pa was telling me about how good a boy Georgie was, and how when he cut the cherry tree he up and told and didn't even get a licking. So I thought to-day I would play 'hookey' from school and go home to tell my father of it. I reached home about dark with my fishing-pole over my shoulders, and the old man met me at the door and exclaimed, 'Where have you been?'

"Pa, I cannot tell a lie, I played 'hookey' and went fishing."

"He took me to the buggy house and secured the buggy whip, and now I can't go in swimming all the summer, because the boys will want to know where I got the stripes."

"George Washington maybe could play the can't-tell-a-lie racket on his old man, but it won't work for a cent on mine."

ARE YOU MADE miserable by Indigestion, Constipation, Dizziness, Loss of appetite, Yellow Skin? Shiloh's Vitalizer is a positive cure. Sold at Medical Hall.

His Scheme for Peace.

A rather slim chap, with canary hair rippling beneath a helmet with a pugaree stepped into a fashionable establishment where arms are sold and called unto the clerk.

"Have you any self-cocking seven shooters?"

"Yes," replied the clerk; "would you like to look at them?"

"I would."

In about two minutes the counter was covered with revolvers, and the man with canary hair examined them and said:

"Give me six."

The clerk seemed astonished, but tied up the pistols; at which moment the customer commenced to fan himself with his helmet, and remarked:

"Got any shot guns?"

"Yes. What kind do you prefer—plain or laminated steel?"

"Doesn't make any difference. Give me about two of each kind."

The clerk thought he had struck a lunatic; but he didn't care whether he took the cash of a sane man or a lunatic. So he tied the guns up, and was about to announce the amount of the bill, when the young man inquired:

"Do you keep cannons?"

"We have some nice brass cannons that carry a twenty pound solid ball," replied the clerk.

"Are they mounted on wheels?"

"They are."

"Then give me three."

The clerk was considerably amazed, but took the order for the cannons down on paper and said:

"Now is there anything else you would like to see?"

"Yes; I would like very much to see some daggers."

"We have a fine stock of daggers," replied the clerk, as he placed several specimens on the counter: "Here is one with a solid silver handle which comes a little higher than the others."

"I will have six of the silver handed ones. Now let me look at a few swords."

"What kind do you want? We have a number of different styles."

"What kind, for instance?" asked the canary haired youth.

"Well, we have the cavalry sabre—"

"Give me two."

"And we have the cutlass."

"The kind used by pirates?" asked the long slender youth, with a smile that betrayed his anxiety.

"Yes, the very kind."

"I will take six of them."

"Now we have some Turkish cimetars."

"I want four of them. I also want two claymores, just like the one in the window."

The clerk took down his order, and began to fancy how much his employer would think of him for selling such a big bill, when the customer said:

"I want half a dozen Springfield rifles with bayonets on them."

"I will take your order and fill it to-morrow. Is there anything else?"

"Yes; I want some harpoons and spears."

"Those we have not in stock," said the clerk; "but we can get them and deliver them with the shot guns."

"Now I want some hand grenades and dynamite."

"We don't keep them."

"Don't keep them?" replied the customer in surprise; "don't keep them?"

"No."

"Well, then, send all those things up to my hotel, C. O. D."

The man presented his card to the clerk, who thanked him for purchasing such a nice big bill, and said:

"I hope to see you when you play in New York."

"I play in New York? I don't play."

"Beg your pardon," said the clerk, apologetically; "I thought you were the manager and star of a sensational dramatic company, playing a far west blood curdling piece, and that you came for properties—"

"Oh, no," laughed the man with yellow hair; "I am simply going down to Texas to start a paper. There are certain journalistic amenities down there that I desire to observe to the letter. I don't wish to be mistaken for an amateur."—Puck.

Struck by Lightning.

During the thunder storm on Saturday night last the barn belonging to Mr. Jos. McMorris, about a mile and a half from Heathcote, was struck by lightning. The lightning ripped about half the roof off, tore into shreds one end of the barn, ripped and splintered bents, beams, &c. &c. Mr McMorris himself was standing in the kitchen door at the time and was knocked down and badly stunned, but recovered in a short time—frightened, perhaps, out of a year's growth. The damage done to the barn will be considerable, perhaps about one hundred dollars or so. It is insured in the Grange Insurance Company, and we understand that company does not insure against lightning, which, if so, is unfortunate for Mr. McMorris. A heavy rain at the time saved the building and contents from total destruction by fire. The building will have to be repaired immediately so that Mr. McMorris can save his crops, but it can never be repaired so as to make it as good as before.—Thornbury Standard.

A PERSON.—Unable to sleep in bed, unable to work, unable to take ordinary exercise from the effects of Asthma until using Southern Asthma Cure. A sample package relieved, three packages permanentirely cured.

Farewell Pond Durham, Ont.

"DAUNTLESS!"

Bay Pedigree

WILL be for the service of Cows the season of 1887 at his own place, Lot 152, 3rd Range West, T. & S.R., Artemesia

TERMS:—$1.00 per cow, payable on or before Jan. 1st, 1888. Cows not returned regularly to bull will be charged whether in calf or not.

DONALD McKENZIE.
Proprietor.

(31-8-17)

TIMBER AND LAND SALE.

CERTAIN lots and the timber thereon situate in the Townships of Allan, Assiginack, Bidwell, Billings, Carnarvon, Campbell, Howland, Sheguiandah, Tehkummah and Mills on the Manitoulin Island, in the District of Algoma, in the Province of Ontario, will be offered for Sale at Public Auction in blocks of 200 acres more or less, on the first day of September next, at 10 o'clock, A.M. at the Indian Land Office in the Village of Manitowaning

Terms of Sale:—Bonus for timber payable in cash, price of land payable in cash, a license fee also payable in cash and dues to be paid accordingly to Tarriff upon the timber when cut.

The land on which the timber grows to be sold with the timber without conditions of settlement.

At the same time and place the Merchantable Timber of not less than nine inches in diameter at the butt, on the Spanish River Reserve and French River lower Reserve will be offered for sale for a cash bonus and annual ground rent of $100 per square mile, and dues to be paid on the timber as cut, according to Tariff of this Department.

For full particulars please apply to Jas. C. Phipps, Esq., Indian Supt. Manitowaning, or to the undersigned.

No other paper to insert this advertisement without authority through the Queen's Printer

L. VANKOUGHNET.
Deputy of the Supt Gen'l. of Indian Affairs.

Department of Indian Affairs,
Ottawa, 2nd June, 188[illegible]

SHILOH'S CATARRH REMEDY—a positive cure for Catarrh, Diptheria and Canker Mouth. Sold at Medical Hall.

For Toilet Use.

Ayer's Hair Vigor keeps the hair soft and pliant, imparts to it the lustre and freshness of youth, causes it to grow luxuriantly, eradicates Dandruff, cures all scalp diseases, and is the most cleanly of all hair preparations.

AYER'S Hair Vigor has given me perfect satisfaction. I was nearly bald for six years, during which time I used many hair preparations, but without success. Indeed, what little hair I had, was growing thinner, until I tried Ayer's Hair Vigor. I used two bottles of the Vigor, and my head is now well covered with a new growth of hair. —Judson B. Chapel, Peabody, Mass.

HAIR that has become weak, gray, and faded, may have new life and color restored to it by the use of Ayer's Hair Vigor. "My hair was thin, faded, and dry, and fell out in large quantities. Ayer's Hair Vigor stopped the falling, and restored my hair to its original color. As a dressing for the hair, this preparation has no equal.—Mary N. Hammond, Stillwater, Minn.

VIGOR, youth, and beauty, in the appearance of the hair, may be preserved for an indefinite period by the use of Ayer's Hair Vigor. "A disease of the scalp caused my hair to become harsh and dry, and to fall out freely. Nothing I tried seemed to do any good until I commenced using Ayer's Hair Vigor. Three bottles of this preparation restored my hair to a healthy condition, and it is now soft and pliant. My scalp is cured, and it is also free from dandruff.—Mrs. E. R. Foss, Milwaukee, Wis.

Ayer's Hair Vigor,

Sold by Druggists and Perfumers.

PERFECT SAFETY, prompt action, and wonderful curative properties, easily place Ayer's Pills at the head of the list of popular remedies for Sick and Nervous Headaches, Constipation, and all ailments originating in a disordered Liver.

I have been a great sufferer from Headache, and Ayer's Cathartic Pills are the only medicine that has ever given me relief. One dose of these Pills will quickly move my bowels, and free my head from pain.—William L. Page, Richmond, Va.

Ayer's Pills,

Prepared by Dr. J. C. Ayer & Co., Lowell, Mass.
Sold by all Dealers in Medicine.

Publisher's Announcement!

In the matter of

FINE JOB

Printing!

It is generally conceded that the

Flesherton Advance

TAKES THE

BISCUIT!

EVERY TIME!

Posters! Posters!

From an Eighth Sheet to a mammoth Three-Sheeter—plain or in colors—at prices that will arrest your attention and surprise you.

Auction Sale Bills

WHILE YOU WAIT.

PAMPHLETS!

Big, Little, Great and Small.

Circulars, Bill Heads,
Note Heads, Streamers,
Flyers, Dodgers,
Business Cards,
Visiting Cards,
Shipping Tags,
Labels, etc. etc.

DRUGGISTS' LABELS

As cheap and as good as can be obtained in the city.

New Material

Is added to our stock every Spring and Fall.

NOTICE!

THE ADVANCE will be sent to any address in Canada or the United States for $1 per year; and to England, Ireland, or Scotland for $1.50

THE ADVANCE unquestionably has no superior as a live Local and Family newspaper in Simcoe, Grey, or Bruce.

A. R. FAWCETT,

Editor and Proprietor,

FLESHERTON, ONT.

Medical.

DR. CARTER,
M.C.P. & S., ONT.
PHYSICIAN, SURGEON, &c.
FLESHERTON.

Office, Strain's block. Residence, Wm. Wright's

Dentistry.

DENTISTRY.

Thomas Henderson, L.D.S.

SURGEON DENTIST.

Gold Medalist and Honor Graduate of the R.C.D.S.,

Will visit FLESHERTON, (Munshaw's Hotel) 1 and 2 of each month. Teeth extracted, inserted and filled in the highest styles of the art, and at moderate rates.

HEAD OFFICE, 761 YONGE ST., TORONTO.

Legal.

J. W. FROST, LL.B.,
Barrister, Solicitor, Conveyancer.

Office,—Strain's Building, FLESHERTON.
A. A. CHESLEY, Solicitor and Conveyance Resident Manager.
MR. FROST will be found at the Office Thursdays as heretofore.

P. McCULLOUGH,
Barrister, Solicitor, &c.
Office, over McFarland's Store, Markdale. Money to Loan.

MASSON & MASSON,

BARRISTERS, SOLICITORS &c.
OFFICES—Owen Sound in Vicker's Block Poulett St., Branch office in Markdale, over McFarland's store, on Friday and Saturday every week.
J. MASSON, Q.C. S. MASSON. W. MASSON
N.B.—Private & Company's funds to invest at from Six to Eight per cent.

Business Cards.

John W. Armstrong,
FLESHERTON, Co. GREY.

DIVISION COURT CLERK, COMMISSIONER in B. R., Conveyancer, &c. Agent for purchased sale of lands. Appraiser for C. L. C. Co. and F. P. B. & S. Society. Money to Loan on the most reasonable terms. ISSUER OF MARRIAGE LICENSES. NOTARY PUBLIC

MONEY TO LOAN.
At 6 Per Cent.
On Town or Farm Property.

S. DAMUDE,
Flesherton.

W. J. BELLAMY.
TWP. CLERK ARTEMESIA.
CONVEYANCER, COMMISSIONER INSURANCE AGENT, &c.

DEEDS, MORTGAGES, LEASES, &c., prepared and properly executed. Insurance effected in first-class companies. Money to lend at lowest rates.

GET YOUR MEAT

—:FROM:—

Petch & Mitchell,

GENERAL BUTCHERS,

FLESHERTON!

Cash paid for fat cattle, &c.

NEW LIVERY!

THE undersigned begs to announce that he has started a first-class Livery in the stable opposite Munshaw's Hotel, Flesherton, where the travelling public can be accommodated with good rigs and horses at most reasonable prices. Try me and be convinced.

Respectfully yours,
W. H. JOHNSTON.

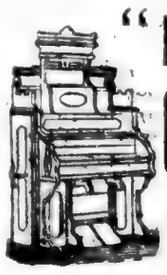
Flesherton, Nov. 19th, 1886.

Picture Framing,

Neatly, Cheaply & Quickly Done, by

J. E. MOORE,

Durham St., Opposite Clayton's Harness Shop



"BELL" ORGANS

Unapproached for Tone and Quality.

CATALOGUES FREE.

BELL & CO., Guelph, Ont.

The Human Auction.

Ho! here are lives by the score to sell;
  Up to the platform, gents, and bid;
Make me an offer, they'll pay you well—
  All of 'em ripe for the coffin lid.
Here is a woman, pinched and pale,
  Plying her needle for daily bread;
Give me a shirt for her—more on sale,
  Dying! gentlemen—dying!—dead!

A family, six in number, here,
  Fresh from a cellar in Somers Town;
Mother her sixth confinement near,
  Father and brats with fever down.
'Twas Pestilence spoke then, was it not?
  "An open sewer," I think he said;
Well, his offer shall buy the lot.
  Dying! gentlemen—dying!—dead!

Now, good customers, here's a chance:
  A thousand men in the prime of life,
Wielders of musket, sword and lance,
  Armed and drilled for the deadly strife.
General Warfare lifts his hand—
  "A bullet for each," cries the gent in red,
No offer but his—fast flows the sand,
  Dying! gentlemen—dying!—dead!

A body of toilers, worn and weak,
  Clerk and curates and writing men—
Look at the flush on each sunken cheek,
  Mark the fingers that grasp the pen!
Come, good gentlemen, can't we deal?
  Has Drudgery's eye for bargains fled?
He offers, at last, the price of a meal—
  Dying! gentlemen—dying! dead!

—GEORGE R. SIMS.

SIR HUGH'S LOVES.

The letter was as follows:

"MADAM,—I am directed by Mr Huntingdon to inform you that from this day he will hold no communication with you or your husband.

"He wishes me to add that he has sent all clothes, jewels, and personal effects belonging to his daughter Nea Huntingdon, now styling herself Nea Trafford, to the enclosed address, and he has directed his manager, Mr. Dobson, to strike Mr. Maurice Trafford's name off the list of clerks. Any attempts to open any further correspondence with Mr. Huntingdon will be useless, as all such letters will be returned or destroyed.—I remain, madam, your humble servant, SISTER TERESA."

Enclosed was a cheque for two hundred pounds and a little slip of paper with a few pencilled lines in Sister Teresa's handwriting.

"For the love of heaven do not send or come—it would be worse than useless, he is nearly beside himself with anger; your maid interceded for you with tears, and has been sent away with her wages. No one dares to say a word."

Oh fathers! provoke not your children to wrath. It was that hard, cruel letter that changed Nea's repentance to unrelenting bitterness.

Instinctively she felt the iron of her father's will enter into her soul. In a moment she understood, as she had never done before, the hardness and coldness of his nature, the inflexibility of his purpose; as well might she dash herself against a rock as expect forgiveness. Well, she was his own child, her will was strong too, and in the anguish of her despair she called upon her pride to support her, she leant her fainting woman's heart upon that most rotten of reeds.

He had disinherited her, his only child, he had flung her away from him. Well, she would defy him; and then she remembered his ill-health, their projected to Pau, their happy schemes for the future, till her heart felt almost broken, but for all that she stood like a statue, crushing down the pain in the very stubbornness of her pride.

Ah, Nea, unhappy Nea! poor motherless, wilful girl; well may she look round her with that scared, hunted look.

Was this her future home, these poor rooms, this shabby furniture? Belgrave House closed to her for ever. But as she looked round with that fixed miserable glance, why did the tears suddenly dim her eyes?

Her glance had fallen on Maurice, still sitting motionless with his hands before his eyes—Maurice, her husband; yes, there he sat, the man whom her own wilfulness had dragged to the brink of ruin, whose faith and honor she had tempted, whose honest purpose she had shaken and destroyed, who was so crushed with remorse for his own weakness that he dare not look her in the face; and as she gazed at him, Nea's whole heart yearned with generous pity over the man who had brought her to poverty, but whom she had loved and would love to her life's end.

And Maurice, sitting crushed with that awful remorse, felt his hands drawn down from his face, and saw Nea's beautiful face smiling at him through her tears, felt the smooth brown head nestle to his breast, and heard the low sobbing words—

"For better, for worse, for richer, for poorer, till death us do part, have I not promised, Maurice? take me to your heart and comfort me with your love, for in all the world I have no one but you—no one but you!"

CHAPTER X.

IN DEEP WATERS.

Let our unceasing, earnest prayer
Be, too, for light, for strength to bear
Our portion of the weight to care,
That crushes into dumb despair
One half the human race.

O suffering, sad humanity!
O ye afflicted ones, who lie
Steep'd to the lips in misery,
Longing and yet afraid to die,
Patient though sorely tried!
I pledge you in this cup of grief,
Where floats the fennel's bitter leaf!
The battle of your life is brief,
The alarm, the struggle, the relief;
Then sleep we side by side.

Longfellow.

Nea had to learn by bitter experience that the fruits of disobedience and deceit are like the apples of Sodom, fair to the sight, but mere ashes to the taste, and in her bitter mood she owned that her punishment was just.

Slowly and laboriously, with infinite care and pains, she set herself to unlearn the lessons of her life. For wealth she had poverty; for ease and luxury, privation and toil; but in all her troubles her strong will and pride sustained her; and though she suffered, and heaven only knew how she suffered! she never complained or murmured until the end came.

For her pride sustained her, and when that failed, her love came to her aid.

How she loved him, how she clung to him in those days, no one but Maurice knew; in her bitterest hours his words had power to comfort her and take the sting from her pain. When it was possible, she hid her troubles from him, and never added to his by vain repining and regrets.

But in spite of Nea's courage and Maurice's patience, they had a terrible hard life of it.

At first Maurice's efforts to find another clerkship were in vain, and they were compelled to live on the proceeds of the cheque; then Nea sold her jewels, that they might have something to fall back upon. But presently Mr. Dobson came to their aid.

He had a large family, and could not do much, as he told them, sorrowfully; but he found Maurice, with some trouble, a small clerkship at eighty pounds a year, advising him at the same time to eke out their scanty income by taking in copying work of an evening.

Indeed, as Maurice discovered many a time in his need, he did not want a friend as long as the good manager lived.

And so those two young creatures took up the heavy burden of their lives, and carried it with tolerable patience and courage; and as in the case of our first parents, exiled by a woman's weakness from the fair gardens of Paradise, so, though they reaped thorns and thistles, and earned their bread by the sweat of their brow, yet the bitter-sweet memories of their lost Eden abode with them, and in their poverty they tasted many an hour of pure unsullied love.

For they were young, and youth's courage is high, and the burden of those days was not yet too hard to be borne.

Nea longed to help Maurice, but her pride, always her chief fault, came as a stumbling-block in her way; she could not bear to go into the world and face strangers. And Maurice on his side could not endure the thought that his beautiful young wife should be exposed to slights and humiliations; so Nea's fine talents wasted by misuse.

Still, even these scruples would have faded under the pressure of severer needs, had not children come to weaken Nea's strength and keep her drudging at home.

Nea had never seen her father or heard anything from him all this time. Maurice, it was true, had humbled himself again and again, but his letters had all been returned unopened.

But when her boy was born, Nea's heart softened by the joys of maternity, yearned passionately for a reconciliation, and by her husband's advice, she stifled all feelings of resentment, and wrote as she had never written before, as she never could write again, but all in vain; the letter was returned, and in her weakened state Nea would have fretted herself to death over that unopened letter if it had not been for her husband's tenderness and her baby's innocent face.

How the young mother doted on her child! To her he was a miracle, a revelation. Nature had opened a fount of consolation in her troubles. She would lie, patiently for hours on her couch, watching her baby in his sleep. Maurice coming in jaded and weary from his work would pause on the threshold to admire the picture. He thought his wife never looked so beautiful as when she had the boy in her arms.

And so the years passed on. Maurice worked, and struggled, and pinched, till his face grew old and careworn, and the hard racking cough began to make itself heard, and Nea's fine color faded, for the children were coming fast now, and the days were growing darker and darker.

By and by there was a baby girl, with her father's eyes, and beautiful as a little angel; then twin boys whom Nea kissed and fondled for a few weeks, and then laid in their little coffins; then another boy who only lived two years; and lastly, after a long lapse of time, another girl.

But when this one was born the end was fast approaching. Mr. Huntingdon had been abroad for a year or two, and had just returned to Belgrave House—so Mr. Dobson informed Nea when he dropped in one evening on one of his brief visits—and he had brought with him a young widowed niece and her boy.

Nea remembered her cousin Erle Huntingdon and the dark-eyed girl whom he had married and taken with him to Naples; but she had never heard of his death.

Doubtless her father meant to put Beatrice in her place, and make the younger Erle his heir; and Nea sighed bitterly as she looked at her boy playing about the room. Mr. Dobson interpreted the sigh aright.

"Try again, Mrs. Trafford," he said, holding out his hand as he rose; "humble yourself in the dust, for the sake of your children." And Nea took his advice, but she never had any answer to her letter, and soon after that their kind old friend, Mr. Dobson, died, and then everything went wrong.

Maurice's employer gave up business, and his successor, a hard grasping man, found fault with Maurice's failing health, and dismissed him as an incompetent clerk; and this time Maurice found himself without friends.

For a little time longer he struggled on, though broken in heart and health.

They left their comfortable lodgings and took cheaper ones, and sold every article of furniture that was not absolutely necessary; and the day before the baby was born, Nea, weeping bitterly, took her last relic, her mother's portrait, from the locket set with pearls from her neck, and asked Maurice to sell the little ornament.

All through that long illness, though Heaven only knows how, Maurice struggled on.

Ill himself, he nursed his sick wife with patient care and tenderness.

Nea and her little ones had always plenty of nourishing food, though he himself often went without the comforts he needed; he kept the children quiet, he did all and more than all a woman would have done, before, worn out at last in body and mind, he laid himself down, never to rise again.

And Nea, going to him with her sickly baby in her arms, saw a look on his face that terrified her, and knelt down by his side, while he told her between his paroxysms of coughing what little there was to tell.

She knew it all now; she knew the poor, brave heart had been slowly breaking for years, and had given way at last; she knew what he had suffered to see the woman he loved dragged down to the level of his poverty, and made to endure such bitterness of humiliation; she knew, when it was too late, that the man was crushed under the consequences of his weakness, that his remorse was killing him; and that he would seal his repentance with his life. And then came from his pale lips a whispered entreaty that Nea shuddered to hear.

"Dearest," he had said, when she had implored him to say what she could do to comfort him, "there is one thing: go to your father. Yes, my darling," as she shivered at his words, "go to him yourself; let him see your dear face that has grown so thin and pale; perhaps he will see for himself, and have pity. Tell him I am dying, and that I cannot die in peace until he has promised to forgive you, and take care of you and the children. You will do this for me, Nea, will you not? you know how I have suffered, and will not refuse me."

Had she ever refused him anything? Nea kissed the drawn pallid face without a word, tied on her shabby bonnet, and took her baby in her arms—it was a puny, sickly creature, and wailed incessantly, and she could not leave it—then with the tears blinding her poor eyes, she walked rapidly through the dark streets, hardly feeling the cutting wind, and quite unconscious of the driving sleet that pelted her face with icy particles.

For her heart felt like a stone; Maurice was dying; but no! he should not die: with her own hands she would hold back her beloved from the entrance to the dark valley; she would minister to his fainting soul the cordial of a tardy forgiveness, though she should be forced to grovel for it at her father's feet. And then all at once she suddenly stopped, and found she was clinging, panting for breath, to some area railings, that the baby was crying miserably on her bosom, and that she was looking through the open door into her father's hall.

There was a carriage standing there, and a footman was shivering as he walked up and down the pavement. No one took notice of the beggar-woman as they thought her, and Nea, moved by a strange impulse and desire for warmth and comfort, crept a few steps nearer and looked in.

There was a boy in a velvet tunic sliding up and down the gilded balustrades; and a tall woman with dark hair, and a diamond cross on her white neck, swept through the hall in her velvet dress and rebuked him. The boy laughed merrily and went a few steps higher.

"Beatrice and the young Erle Huntingdon," said Nea to herself. And then a tall thin shadow fell across the doorway, and, uttering a half-stifled cry, Nea saw her father, saw his changed face, his gray hair and bowed figure, before she threw herself in his way.

And so, under the gas-light, with servants watching them curiously, Mr. Huntingdon and his daughter met again. One who stood near him says an awful pallor, like the pallor of death, came over his face for an instant when he saw her standing before him with her baby in her arms, but in the next he would have moved on had she not caught him by the arm.

"Father," she sobbed; "father, come with me. Maurice is dying. My husband is dying; but he says he cannot die until he has your forgiveness. Come home with me; come home with your own Nea, father," but he shook off her grasp, and began to descend the steps.

"Here, Stephen;" he said, taking some gold from his pocket; "give this to the woman and send her away. Come, Beatrice, I am ready."

Merciful Heaven! had this man a human heart, that he should disown his flesh and blood? Would it have been wonderful if she had spoken bitter scathing words to the unnatural parent who was driving her from his door? But Nea never spoke, she only turned away with a shudder from the sight of the proffered gold, and then drawing her thin cloak still closer round her child, turned wearily away.

True, she had sinned; but her punishment was a hundred times greater than her sin, she said to herself, and that was all. What a strange stunned quietness was over her; the pain and the fever seemed all burnt out. She did not suffer now. If something that felt like an iron claw would leave off gripping her heart, she could almost have felt comfortable. Maurice must die, she knew that, but something else had died before him. She wondered if it were this same heart of hers; and then she noticed her baby's hood was crooked, and stopped at the next lamp-post to put it straight, and felt a vague sort of pity for it, when she saw its face was pinched and blue with cold, and pressed it closer to her, though she rather hoped to find it dead when she reached home.

"One less to suffer and to starve," thought Nea.

Maurice's wistful eyes greeted her when she opened the door, but she only shook her head and said nothing; what had she to say? She gave her half-frozen infant into a neighbor's care, and then sat down and drew Maurice's face to her bosom, still speechless in that awful apathy.

And there she sat hour after hour, till he died peacefully in her arms, and his last words were, "I believe in the forgiveness of sins."

* * * * * *

When she had ceased to wish for them, friends came around her in her trouble and ministered to her wants.

Kind faces followed Maurice to his last resting-place, and saved him from a pauper's grave.

The widow and her children were clothed in decent mourning, and placed in comfortable lodgings.

Nea never roused from her silent apathy, never looked at them or thanked them.

Their kindness had come too late for her, she said to herself, and it was not until long afterwards that she knew that she owed all this consideration to the family of their kind old friend Mr. Dobson, secretly aided by the purse of her cousin Beatrice Huntingdon, who dare not come in person to see her. But by and by they spoke very firmly and kindly to her. They pointed to her children—they had placed her boy at an excellent school—and told her that for their sakes she must live and work. If she brooded longer in that sullen despair she would die or go mad; and they brought her baby to her, and watched its feeble arms trying to clasp her neck; saw the widow's passionate tears rain on its innocent face—the tears that saved the poor hot brain—and knew she was saved; and by and by, when they thought she had regained her strength, they asked her gently what she could do. Alas! she had suffered her fine talents to rust. They had nothing but impoverished material to use; but at last they found her a situation with two maiden ladies just setting up a school in the neighborhood, and here she gave daily lessons.

And so, as the years went on, things became a little brighter.

Nea found her work interesting, her little daughter Fern accompanied her to the school, and she taught her with her other pupils.

Presently the day's labor became light to her, and she could look forward to the evening when her son, fetching her on his way from school, would escort her home—a humble home it was true; but when she looked at her boy's handsome face, and Fern's innocent beauty, and felt her little one's caresses, as she climbed up into her lap, the widow owned that her lot had its compensations.

But the crowning trial was yet to come; the last drop of concentrated bitterness.

Not long after Maurice's death, Mr. Huntingdon made his first overture of reconciliation through his lawyer.

His niece, Beatrice, had died suddenly, and her boy was fretting sadly for his mother.

Some one had pointed out to Mr. Huntingdon one day a dark-eyed handsome boy in deep mourning, looking at the riders in Rotten Row, and had told him that it was his grandson, Percy Trafford.

Mr. Huntingdon had said nothing at the time, but the boy's face and noble bearing haunted him, he was so like his mother, when as a child she had played about the rooms at Belgrave House. Perhaps, stifle it as he might, the sobbing voice of his daughter rang in his ears, "Come home with your own Nea, father;" and in spite of his pride his conscience was beginning to torment him.

Nea smiled scornfully when she listened to the lawyer's overtures. Mr. Huntingdon was willing to condone the past with regard to her son Percy. He would take the boy, educate him, and provide for him most liberally, though she must understand that his nephew, Erle, would be his heir, still on every other point the boys should have equal advantages.

"And Belgrave House, the home where my boy is to live, will be closed to his mother," asked Nea, still with that delicate scorn on her face.

The lawyer looked uncomfortable.

"I have no instructions on that point, Mrs. Trafford; I was simply to guarantee that he should be allowed to see you from time to time, as you and he might wish it."

"I cannot entertain the proposal for a moment," she returned, decidedly: but at his strong remonstrance she at last consented that when her boy was a little older, the matter should be laid before him; but no doubt as to his choice crossed her mind. Percy had always been an affectionate child; nothing would induce him to give up his mother.

But she became less confident as the days went on; Percy grew a little selfish and headstrong, he wanted a man's will to dominate him; his narrow, confined life and the restraints that their poverty enforced on them made him discontented. One day he encountered the lawyer who had spoken to his mother—he was going to her again, with a letter that Mr. Huntingdon had written to his daughter—and as he looked at Percy, who was standing idly on the doorstep, he put his hand on his shoulder, and bade him show him the way.

Nea turned very pale as she read the letter. It was very curt and business-like; it repeated the offer he had before made with regard to her son Percy, only adding that for the boy's future prospects it would be well not to refuse his terms. This was the letter that, after a moment's hesitation, Nea placed in her boy's hands.

"Well, mother," he exclaimed, and his eyes sparkled with eagerness and excitement, "I call that splendid; I shall be a rich men one of these days, and then you will see what I shall do for you, and Fern, and Fluff."

"Do you mean that you wish to leave us, Percy, and to live in your grandfather's house?" she returned, trying to speak calmly. "You know what I told you—you were old enough to understand what your father suffered, and—and," with a curious faintness creeping over her, "you see for yourself there is no mention of me in that letter. Belgrave House is closed to your mother."

"Yes, I know, and it is an awful shame, but never mind, mother, I shall come and see you very often;" and then when the lawyer had left them to talk it over, he dilated with boyish eagerness on the advantage to them all if he accepted his grandfather's offer. His mother would be saved the expense of his education, she would not have to work so hard; he would be rich himself, and would be able to help them. But at this point she stopped him.

"Understand once for all, Percy," she said with a sternness that he had never seen in her, "that the advantage will be solely for yourself; neither I nor your sisters will ever accept help that comes from Belgrave House; your riches will be nothing to me, my son. Think again before you give up your mother."

He would never give her up, he said, with a rough boyish caress; he should see her often—often, and it was wicked, wrong to talk about refusing his help; he would talk to his grandfather and make him ashamed of himself—indeed there was no end to the glowing plans he made. Nea's heart sickened as she heard him, she knew his boyish selfishness and restlessness were leading him astray, and some of the bitterest tears she ever shed were shed that night.

But from that day she ceased to plead with him, and before many weeks were over Percy had left his mother's humble home, and, after a short stay at Belgrave House, was on his way to Eton with his cousin Erle Huntingdon.

Percy never owned in his secret heart that he had done a mean thing in giving up his mother for the splendors of Belgrave House, that the thought that her son was living in the home that was closed to her was adding gall and bitterness to the widow's life; he thought he was proving himself a dutiful son when he came to see her so often, though the visits were scarcely all he wished them to be.

True, his mother never reproached him, and always welcomed him kindly, but her lips were closed on all that related to his home life. She could speak of his schoolfellows and studies, but of his grandfather, and of his new pony and fine gun she would not speak, or even care to hear about them. When he took her his boyish gifts they were quietly but firmly returned to him. Even poor little Florence, or Fluff as they called her, was obliged to give back the blue-eyed doll that he had brought for her. Fluff had fretted so about the loss of the doll that her mother had bought her another.

Percy carried away his gifts, and did not come for a long time. His mother's white wistful face seemed to put him in the wrong. "Any other fellow would have done the same under the circumstances," thought Percy, sullenly; "I think my mother is too hard on me;" but even his conscience misgave him, when he would see her turn away sometimes with the tears in her eyes, after one of his boasting speeches. He was too young to be hardened. He knew, yes, surely he must have known? that he was grieving the tenderest heart in the world, and one day he would own that not all his grandfather's wealth could compensate him for being a traitor to his mother.

(To be continued.)

Care of Preserved Fruit.

Keeping fruit or any provision depends on three things. It must be sound to begin. A speck of decay or acid change will develop ferment in a kettle of fruit. Second, the jars or cans must be air-tight. The object of steaming the fruit is to expel the air and arrest the change in the juice, which would naturally proceed to ferment. Air penetrates in finer ways than we can discern, and needs much less than the crevice of a hair or pin's point to enter and spoil the contents. Glass that is free from cracks or air bubbles, well-glazed stoneware, free from flaws, yellow ware, or strong, dark earthen jars, will keep the fruit from the air, provided it is sealed with wax, putty, or bladder, soaked and left to shrink on the mouth of the jars. Cans with screw tops and rubber rings are apt to have slight defects, which prevent perfect sealing, and cannot be depended on without wax. Third, the jars must be kept in a dry, dark, cold place, very little above freezing. A shelf in a furnace-warmed cellar or store-room opening from a kitchen is not the place to preserve fruit. It may be put up in the best manner, and yet spoil through keeping in the light or where it is not cool. Glass cans should be wrapped in paper, buried in sand or sawdust or kept in a dark closet. Packed with plenty of chaff, oats, dry sand or sawdust, or dry sifted ashes, most preserves will stand freezing weather without injury, but each can needs at least six inches of non-conducting material about it on all sides, for protection. A pit on one side of the cellar, dug below the reach of frost, and lined with boards, with straw or ashes between them and its walls, will keep preserves from heat or freezing. A pit dug in the cellar, four feet below the level of its floor, well drained and lined as above, will prove the best place for keeping small quantities of preserves, enough for a single family.

Chicago Fifty-three Years Ago.

Capt. F. McCumber, of Burlington, Wis., who is said to be the oldest lake captain now living (he is 82), says in a recent letter to the Hon. John Wentworth, of Chicago: "I came to Chicago in July, 1834, in command of the schooner Thomas Hart, of Carthage, on the Genessee River; there was no harbor then, and we lay one mile from the mouth of the river and discharged our cargo with a scow at the forks of the river—mostly Indian goods. There were many Indians at Chicago at that time. We went from Chicago to St. Joseph; got into the river, and discharged the rest of our cargo there—Indian supplies—shovelled in sand for ballast, and left for Buffalo. I think the first shipment of wheat from Lake Michigan was made in that year. The wheat was stored at St Joseph. I tried to get it; went up the river to Cassopolis on the steamer David Crockett, to find the owner, but he had contracted with one of Oliver Newberry's vessels, the Marengo, Capt Dingley, master, who died the same year of cholera at Detroit. This is about all the information I can give you. I am 82 years old and my memory is failing. I am here on a little farm quietly waiting the end."

A Very Cool Burglar.

A young woman of Portland, Me., awoke the other night to find a man ransacking her bureau. She screamed, but the burglar, with great coolness, said: "Keep cool, sis; I won't hurt you. All I want is the trinkets." Her scream, however, had alarmed the house, and the burglar fled. He left his hat behind in his flight, and the gentleman of the house, in hopes that it might serve as a clue to his detection, hung it on the hat rack in the hall. The family then retired again to rest. In the morning it was found that the hat was gone. The burglar had returned later in search of his head-gear, found it, and once more made off unmolested.

Nothing New Under the Sun.

Shakspeare seems to have been very well up in most of the slang phrases of the present day. In "Henry VIII." we have "too thin;" In "King John," "come off!" and "you are too green and fresh;" in "A Winter's Tale," "What, never?" and although he does not exactly use the exclamation rats! we have in "Hamlet," "A rat! a rat!" which is pretty near it. John Bunyan used the phrase, "it is a cold day" in connection with adversity, so it would seem that Solomon was not far from the truth when he said, "there is nothing new under the sun," or words to that effect.—Boston Courier.

The Syracuse Standard tells a pretty story of a little girl, who was recently reprimanded for conduct which her mother did not think became her. The little one, who took refuge in the nursery to shed her tears, was shortly afterward overheard indulging in a soliloquy. "Mamma is real mean," she said, "and I don't like her any more. No, I don't. If she didn't live here I"—[with emphasis on the first person, singular number]—"shouldn't invite her to come to my house."

In St. John County, Fla., a few days ago, while a little 2-year-old girl was playing in the yard the family heard piercing cries, and on running to investigate found the child lying on the ground, while on her breast stood a rooster crowing triumphantly. One of the little girl's eyes had been pecked out.

In Edinburgh a disused railroad tunnel is to be utilized for raising mushrooms.

THE ARREST OF MISS CASE.

The Incident which has Set England Boiling.

Mr. Newton is a hard-worked magistrate who has the misfortune to preside over a court the atmosphere of which is saturated with moral effluvia. It is therefore not to be wondered at if occasionally his decisions are such as to make men marvel who are less habituated to the poisoned air of Marlborough street. But even when we make allowance for his vitiating environment, we can see no excuse for the way in which he dealt, yesterday, with the charge brought against Miss Elizabeth Case, whose treatment, judging solely from the reports in the morning newspapers, both at the hands of the policeman Endacott, and the Police Magistrate, Mr. Newton, seems to have been simply abominable. Here are the facts, taken from the report in the Standard:

On Tuesday night, at quarter-past 8 o'clock, Miss Case, a modest looking, neatly dressed young woman of 23, left her lodgings in the neighborhood of Oxford street to make some small purchases for herself. Miss Case was forewoman in a large dressmaker's establishment, near Oxford street. She had been in her situation three weeks, and during that time had never been out of doors until the night before last, when, with her employer's assent, she went out to buy some things. She walked along Tottenham Court road and Oxford street, and then round by Jay's mourning warehouse in Regent street. On her return she was making her way through the crowd, when Police Constable Endacott took hold of her arm. Startled beyond measure, she asked him what he wanted. He replied by accusing her of soliciting prostitution, and forthwith ran her into the police station. When the police constable was sworn he declared that he saw Miss Case, in company with another woman, whom he did not identify or produce, stop three gentlemen in succession, the last of whom, the constable said, complained in her hearing that he had been stopped three times in the streets since he had left church, and that he was glad she was in custody. That gentleman was not produced, and no evidence whatever was tendered in support of the constable's evidence. Three specific offences were alleged to have been committed at three separate places with three different men, but not one of these men was produced in court. The whole charge rested upon the unsupported oath of one policeman. Then the lady who employed Miss Case entered the box. She said she was the prisoner's employer. She had a large establishment near Oxford street, and the prisoner was her forewoman. (The rest of the evidence we quote textually.) The policeman has been to my house about it, and I consider that he made an improper accusation against my forewoman. He said, "I want to know where your lodger is, as she has been walking the streets for an improper purpose." I told him she was not doing such a thing.

Mr. Newton—I think she was.

The employer—Oh, no; it is quite a mistake. She has never been out of my house before.

Mr. Newton—She was out last night. Stand down, if you please.

The employer—I say she was not out for such a purpose.

Mr. Newton—I say yes.

The employer—I do not understand what you mean.

Mr. Newton (addressing the prisoner) said: Now, just you take my advice. If you are a respectable girl, as you say you are, don't walk Regent street and stop gentlemen at 10 o'clock at night. If you do, you will be surely fined or sent to prison, after this caution I have gven you.

The prisoner left the icourt with her friends.

Now, here we have a Magistrate declaring, on the unsupported testimony of one police constable, that a modest-looking young girl, whose employer gave a perfectly good account of her presence in Regent street at that time, was a prostitute plying for hire. It seems to be enough for Mr. Newton that a young woman is in Regent street at half-past 9 at night for him to believe any statement made by a policeman as to her misconduct. This is a monstrous ruling, against which we cannot too strongly protest. Regent street after half-past 9 is practically set apart for prostitutes, and all decent girls who have to pass through it if they stop a man, even to ask their way, are to be fined or sent to prison. The matter cannot stop here. Sir Charles Warren will do well to institute a searching inquiry into the conduct of the Constable Endacott. If Miss Case had her companion with her, and she can swear to the facts, proceedings ought to be instituted for perjury without delay. It is intolerable that the liberty and character of every decent woman who passes through Regent street at night is to be at the mercy of every police constable on the beat. But this is the actual result of Mr. Newton's decision—a decision which that gentleman must look back upon to-day with grave regret.—Pall Mall Gazette.

The Age of the Earth.

In boring a well on the farm of Mrs. Sarah Williams, some five miles south of Colusa, J. C. Frazier, who has the farm rented, struck a piece of wood at a depth of 170 feet. The wood brought up by the auger was in an excellent state of preservation and was pronounced "all oak." The place is only fifty feet above the sea level, so that the wood is 120 feet below the ocean's surface. If it was sunk there when this valley was a lake or an arm of the bay it was in pretty deep water. How long since this piece of wood was in a growing tree? The valley, of course, has grown, but without some convulsion of nature the growth has been slow, not perhaps, over one foot per century. Then has it been 17,000 years since this oak tree grew? In the shadow of the Infinite this is not long, but measured by the history of man it is indeed a long space.—Calusa (Cal.) Sun.

When She Cares for an Old Man.

I asked her if it was possible for a young woman to care for a man much older than herself. "Yes," she replied, "if a man is honorable and occupies a good position in the world; if he is kind, considerate and attentive; if he can take care of a wife and is affectionate to her, the husband commands the respect of the wife, and upon this foundation the structure of a substantial and lasting life is builded."—Louisville Post.

Boston has a tailor appropriately named Bodkin.

MRS. STOWE'S GREAT STORY.

The Aged Authoress Tells How She Wrote "Uncle Tom's Cabin."

"No, I write no more. I have done, I have done, I have done."

Anything more pitiful, more pathetic, more tragic, cannot be imagined than the effect of the above few words, coming in broken and faltering accents from the lips of Harriet Beecher Stowe.

That the bright intellect of the author of "Uncle Tom's Cabin" is undoubtedly shattered cannot be longer denied.

"Yes, my dear, I loved to write, and began very young. I especially liked writing short stories when I lived in Brunswick, Me. For these I used to get $15, $20 and $25—good pay in those times. I never thought of writing a book when I commenced 'Uncle Tom's Cabin.' I became first roused on the subject of slavery when I lived in Cincinnati, and used to see escaping slaves come over the Ohio from Kentucky. Ah, me! it thrills me even now, the sight of those poor creatures! Now, a young girl, suggesting the lover, parent or brother for whom her heart was breaking in bondage; again, the strong husband, aged father or stalwart brother. Oh, I must write a story to stop the dreadful shame! I kept putting it off, dreading to bring the characters to life, till the Fugitive Slave Law lashed me into fury, and I commenced what I meant to be a short story like the others. But it grew and grew and grew, and came and came and came. I wrote and wrote and wrote, and finally thought I never should stop. I did not plan the book as it turned out. I was only full of the wrath, and the story built itself around it as I wrote. A publisher was waiting for a story from me. I told him the subject I had undertaken. He wrote, saying: 'You have struck a popular subject; for heaven's sake keep it short.' I wrote in reply: 'I shall stop when I get through—not before.' He never got it, for I had to make a book of it. While writing it I was filled with an enthusiasm which transfused my being, knew no hindrance, no rival interest, no belief but in writing it. I had young children, was keeping house and teaching school at the time, and never worked so hard, but I had to write. Dinner had to be got, I knew. This had to be written, just as much—aye, and more, too. It was though it was written through me, I only holding the pen. I was lifted off my feet. Satisfied? I never thought about being satisfied. When it was finished it was done, and relief came. I never felt the same with anything I afterwards wrote."—Hartford (Conn.) Letter in Pittsburg Dispatch.

Good Advice to Contributors.

Every now and then it becomes an editor's duty to say a few words to contributors, either privately or in his editorial columns, in regard to their methods of preparing manuscripts. It is, fortunately, no longer necessary to say "write only on one side of the paper," or "don't fold each sheet separately;" for no one to-day commits these capital offences. Untidy manuscripts, however, are still common. A private letter, bearing on this point, was written by one of our editors last week, which ran somewhat as follows:

DEAR MISS ——,—I am sorry that we cannot use the accompanying article. As I have written to you once or twice in a way not usual with an editor, I am tempted to go further and give you a little advice about the appearance of your manuscripts. If you will excuse my saying it, they are very untidy. It is greatly to your disadvantage that they come into the editor's hands in such condition; he is always prejudiced at the start against a manuscript that is rolled, or folded so as to necessitate a constant effort to keep the pages open sufficiently to read, and made up of different kinds and sizes of paper, or blotted and interlined to the extent of being rendered in the least illegible, or that is in any other way untidy. It is said of one well-known editor that he refuses to read any manuscripts that are untidy or hard to hold. The manuscript should be so prepared that the editor can put his whole thought upon its subject matter. That manuscript is the most welcome, perhaps, that is prepared from a pad of note paper size, and is sent in an envelope large enough so that the paper need not be folded. Then the editor will at least not be prejudiced against an article before he begins to read. —Independent.

Story of a Popular Song.

Mr. J. M. Whyte, the evangelist, is now in the city, after a season of hard work in the Ottawa Valley region. Mr. Whyte is one of the well-known Whyte brothers, whose singing of gospel songs touches a responsive chord in the popular heart, as is shown by the fact that they are in demand at revivals all over the Continent. One of Mr. Whyte's most touching songs is one called "Papa, What Would You Take For Me?" which he has sung in many places. The music is his own, the poem being one of those literary wanderers which are constantly found going the endless "rounds of the press." Mr. Whyte tried to find the author of the poem, but could not for a long time. Another evangelist visited Warsaw, Ind., and there the author found the wandering child of his genius in musical dress. He made himself known and has since communicated with Mr. Whyte. His name is S. B. McManus, and he informs Mr. Whyte that the poem has been published in hundreds of papers in America, Britain and other countries, and has been translated into half-a-dozen foreign languages.—Toronto Globe.

Natural Gas and Setting Hens.

The women in and for eight or ten miles around Anderson are just boiling over with wrath because the terrible roaring of the immense gas well at that village has been more disastrous to the egg crop than the loudest thunder ever heard. Not an egg will hatch, and even the old hens refuse to lay, the noise being so great that the biddies become so bewildered that they cannot return to the nest, and even forget to put a shell on the egg.—Muncie Herald.

A New Yorker bought a blue flannel suit for $4. He wore the clothes on Saturday, and his skin was stained by the dye. Nor was that all. On Sunday nervous tremors seized him, and the tremors clearly were due to the dye. He reported the case, and the authorities are putting the cheap cloth to a test.

OVER A BANK WITH A BURGLAR.

Mr. Bleakly's Thrilling Encounter with a Midnight Visitor.

A story of a thrilling midnight tussle with a burglar comes from Verplanck, New York State. For some weeks Tarrytown, Peekskill and other towns along the Hudson have been visited at frequent intervals by marauders who have entered and robbed houses, and when pursued, have escaped in a small yacht in which their nocturnal excursions are made. The gang numbers five men and usually includes a boy, who crawls through windows or transoms and opens the doors for his pals. Wednesday night they visited Verplanck and entered the houses of A. Bleakly, D. Tuttle and two others. At Tuttle's they secured a watch, but were frightened off at the other places without booty, one of their number barely escaping capture at the hands of Mr. Bleakly. Mrs. Bleakly, who has been ill, was aroused by some one fumbling under her pillow. She asked if it was her husband and received a muttered affirmative from the burglar. She detected the strange voice, however, and her cries brought Mr. Bleakly from a lounge in an adjoining room, where he lay asleep. He grappled with the intruder and a fierce struggle ensued in the dark. Mr. Bleakly finally succeeded in wrapping his fingers in the burglar's mustache, and was speedily subduing him, when the latter fastened his teeth in the captor's hand, and freeing himself, dashed through the door. Mr. Bleakly, though clad only in his nightrobe, pursued and again grappled the thief in front of the house. In the struggle which followed both men rolled down a steep embankment upon which the house stands, and fell heavily upon the rocks below. Here the burglar again broke away and disappeared through a neighboring alley. Mrs. Bleakly, who had arisen from her bed and followed her husband to the street, where she stood calling upon the neighbors for help, was thoroughly prostrated with fright and her life is despaired of. The thief is described as short and thick set, with a mustache and curly hair.

A Smart Lawyer's Successful Trick.

Law is a very queer thing. Sometimes suggestion of a thing is enough, and other times even absolute proof is no good. Now, when a man dies while a suit is pending the attorney on his side can procure a postponement by saying he's dead. That is how sensible people would put it, but the law calls it "suggesting the death of the plaintiff or defendant." An attorney some time ago was making that common fight against justice by postponement tactics. He had about got to an end of his tether, and felt very blue about it. It seemed inevitable that the case must be tried. He was on hand when the case was called. A bright idea occurred to him. He got up and said: "May it please the Court, I suggest the death of the defendant, and ask an adjournment for two weeks." "Granted." When the case came up again there was a row. The attorney was called up. "What did you mean, sir," asked the Court, "by saying that the defendant was dead, when he is here in court alive and well?" "I did not say he was dead, may it please Your Honor. I merely took the law for it, which provides that counsel may suggest the death of the defendant. I suggested it." —San Francisco Chronicle.

Paper and Glass Houses.

Chicago architects are discussing the possibilities of glass and paper as building material. Glass as a building material has many advantages from a sanitary standpoint. It is cleanly and easily kept unpolluted by disease organisms or disease-producing filth. It is non-absorbent and will not collect or hold moisture, as is the case with wood or brick. It is a poor conductor of heat, save that received from the rays of the sun, which for health purposes is the most valuable. Paper also has its advantages when treated by certain processes. It can be prepared so as to be fire-proof and water-proof, and as a non-conductor of heat it is invaluable. It is no idle hope which calls up a vision of manufactured articles from glass and paper which will fill all the requirements exacted of the building materials of to-day.—Chicago Herald.

Broken Needles Made Into Pins.

Sitting alongside a lady in the elevated train the other day she had occasion to adjust a portion of her dress which was fastened with a black pin, when the head broke in fragments and disclosed the fact that it was some kind of composition fastened on a broken needle. Curiosity led me to make some inquiries, and I found that nearly all the black-headed pins in the market are made from needles which are broken in the factories in testing the eyes. Any one who has handled the black-headed pins has probably noticed their remarkable sharpness as compared with the ordinary white pins sold in the market. This is the explanation—that they are old needles.—New York Tribune.

A Crieff Dinner.

The Scotch, unlike their English neighbors, make Sunday more a day of fasting than feasting. A young Englishman who had paid a visit to the northern portion of Her Majesty's dominions found this to be a fact, and his temper was not improved thereby. On being asked by his friends how he liked his visit to Scotland, he replied: "Oh, I enjoyed myself very much, but I don't care for their Sunday dinners." "Indeed," said they, "and what did you get?" "Nothing in particular," was the reply. "When I was in Crieff all I had for dinner on Sunday was a walk round the church and a smell of the flowers.'

Mr. Wiman's New Enterprise.

Mr. Erastus Wiman has, it is said, bought the large and famous steamship Great Eastern. The price agreed upon is rumored to be not far from $100,000. Those who are acquainted with the facts say that Mr. Wiman is to bring the leviathan ever here and anchor her near Staten Island. The Great Eastern is then to be turned into a monster place of amusement, and will include within its bulwarks a theatre, museum, variety show and restaurant.

An infant son of George A. Perkins, of Petrolea, set fire to its clothing while playing with matches last Wednesday, and was burned to death. The child's mother was also badly burned in trying to put out the flames.

SEEN ON THE HOUSE-TOPS.

Queer Features of Roof Life in Crowded Parts of New York City.

From the editorial rooms of the Mail and Express the roofs of hundreds of houses may be seen spreading on all sides, some high, others low. Amid the wilderness of smoking chimneys, flapping clothes hung out to dry and interwoven telegraph wires is enough rubbish to fill in an acre of swamp land. Old kettles, broken bottles, bricks, shoes, boots, tomato cans and garbage make up the conglomerate heap. Th low-roofed houses seem to be th dumping ground for the tenements of highe buildings. In the tenement house district the condition of things is much worse, the people habitually throw the ashes anc garbage out of their high windows upon the roofs of the adjoining houses. The tendency so natural in simple country folk to toss their rubbish over a neighbor's fence has come to be a practice with the city people also. The countryman, however, has one advantage over his city brother: he can remedy the injury done him by tossing the rubbish back, whereas this is hardly practicable in the city. The only recourse left the injured citizen is to shovel it off into the street, or upon the roof of a house lower than his own. Roof life in New York is a curious and instructive study. Few know how many thousands of people do their work on the housetops, unobserved by passers in the streets. From the Mail and Express windows at least one hundred men and women may be seen on neighboring houses busy with their various occupations. On one roof several women are at their washing tubs, while others are hanging up clothes to dry. On hundreds of roofs long lines of clothes are flapping in the wind. The washing of this city is done upon the housetops. Besides the washerwomen scores of telegraphic linemen are mending their wires. At night time they swarm with human beings. On the east side, where there are few or no public parks, the roofs serve as playgrounds for the poor. Workingmen gather in groups to smoke their pipes, or play dominoes and checkers. Women sit together chatting, while their children run about in play or sprawl at their mothers' knees. Every feature of park life at night may be seen excepting the green trees and the fountains. On some housetops little gardens have been carefully cultivated. Some of them have gravelled paths between the flower beds, where the people walk in the evening.—New York Mail and Express.

"Doctor, Is My Heart All Right?"

A family doctor tells the following amusing story in the July number of Cassell's Magazine: Professor Blank, of E——, devoted a whole week of the session to lecturing to his students on the subject of heart diseases. He had a private apartment opening off the class-room, to which he was wont to retire after he had finished his discourse, in order to take off his gown and enjoy a little meditation by the fire. On the afternoon of the second day a modest knock came to the door. "Enter," said Professor Blank. And, hat in hand appeared one of his students, looking somewhat worried and pale. "What can I do for you, Mr. M.?" "Nothing, I fear," was the reply. "Nothing on earth can aid me. I have the very symptoms that you were to-day describing. Sound me and see, sir." The "sounding" was soon performed. "You're in perfect health as regards your heart." That was the verdict. And Mr. M. went away happy. But hardly had the kindly old professor resumed his seat before another knock resounded on the door. "Come in. Well, what's the matter with you, Mr. C.?" "I'm a dead man," gasped Mr. C., looking wildly round as if he wanted to clutch something. "I've got heart disease, as sure as a gun." "Not quite as bad as that, I trust. Take off your coat." Auscultation and percussion were speedily performed; then the professor laughed in C's face. "Sound as a bell, man," he said. "Go home to your dinner, and don't be a fool." The doctor did not sit down again, however. No, he was afraid there would be more of them, so he hurried along through the quad and got into his carriage. But he had two more visits at his residence on the same night from frightened students, and every day during the remainder of that week he had a visit or two of the same kind. On the following Monday he got on to fevers, and the students completely recovered from their cardiac complaints. Now, I do not mean for a single moment to dispute the fact that there is a good deal of heart complaint about, more in fact than there might have been in the early portion of the century, owing to the race for life and the rate at which the world runs, but I do mean to say that there are ten times more functional and imaginary cardiac ailment than there is of the real thing.

PRO CONFESSO.

Whose writes delightful story,
True and touching, full of lore,
Shall in human nature's longing
Hold a place for evermore.

All the docks and mossy harbors,
Where the sea-ships come and go,
Still rehearse that spell and pleasing
Of the pages of Defoe.

Eldorado?—still we wonder
Can there any Island lie
In the west of life's attaining,
Where our prime might never die?

Still in secret depths of feeling
We escape Time's onward span;
For the youth's remote transfusion
Stirs the pulses of the man.

A CORNETSOLO.

Oh! for a gun with a seven-inch bore,
All carefully loaded and set,
With its muzzle in front of the sleepless youth
Who tortures the brass cornet.

Oh! for a club, and a stout one,
The biggest that man could get,
To knock the breath clean out of the youth
Who tortures the brass cornet.

A Consultation Necessary.

Physician (to anxious wife)—We have held a consultation, madame, over your husband's case; he is a very sick man, and it might be well to send for a minister, think.

Anxious Wife—Will one be enough, doctor, or would you advise a consultation ministers?—Life.

Emotional New York Janitors.

A tenant falls out of a fourth story window and his brains are spattered all over the yard. Says the janitress to her husband: "Ain't it too bad? We had just cleaned the yard so nicely!"

MENTAL CLOUDS.

A Group of Curious Illustrations of Mind Affections.

(David Swing, in the Chicago Journal.)

The eclipse of memory which has suddenly fallen upon the once bright mind of a Chicago young lady awakens, indeed, widespread sympathy for the young beauty and her home circle, but it also compels us to perceive that the different faculties occupy different parts of the brain tissue, and thus a calamity to a beloved girl casts light upon the physical basis of intellectual action. This lady awoke from a sleep and did not know her own sister or the other members of her family. Her mother lingered upon the borders of some well-known being, but to her sister and brother and father she spoke as to strangers. Her language, her reasoning power, her happiness remained, but the world of persons had vanished, to be succeeded by interesting people, but persons who were unknown. Thus upon some part of the brain a disease had fallen, and the faculty which had for twenty years occupied that apartment was rudely evicted.

It may be there is some part of the brain which is the seat of consciousness, and that the little nerve which leads from the memory of persons to that citadel of consciousness has been injured, and that therefore no communication can be made from the suburb to the central city. Blindness results from some paralysis of a little thread which runs from the eye to the brain, and while the eye itself may be perfect and the consciousness perfect in ability, yet, owing to the injury to the intermediate nerve, the image on the retina cannot pass over to the consciousness. Seeing takes place in the dark caverns of the brain, but the image cannot travel in the dark if the bridge be down between, for the abyss is bottomless. In the case of Miss L. the injury may be only to some nerve delicate as a spider's web. Nature may repair the injury, and the lost persons may all return suddenly as they departed. Generally such injuries are irreparable, but we are glad that they are not always so.

Some years ago Mr. Frank Whetstone, of Cincinnati, became suddenly deranged. He knew and loved all his friends, his city, his home, but his judgment was gone, and he was dangerous because his love was liable to make him offer up himself or some person to the honor of some one else. He was taken to the Columbus Asylum, and after a few weeks his reason came back, and came instantly. He saw at once that he was in an asylum. He sent for the Superintendent, and told him that his perfect reason had come back. He was soon back among his friends and never suffered from a return of the malady.

Rev. Marcus Ormond, of Oxford, O., was stricken instantly with the loss of his language. He knew his children, wife and all his friends, but he could not recall the name of any one or of anything. Language had gone. He was not dumb, but he did not know what word to use. His world was all around him, but the names of things had departed. Sitting by his window one day, perhaps a month after the attack, he suddenly uttered the word "peach" to some blossoms which were near the window. He retained great physical power and all his reasoning faculties. The blight had fallen upon the names of things. Very slowly words came back until he could count upon a hundred or two of terms, but he never was able to command words enough to enable him to resume any work as a public speaker. He must have lost thousands of these names in an instant of time. There is no microscope that could have learned what nerve it was which thus became impaired and cut off names from the central consciousness.

After some boys had returned from a circus they attempted to rival the gymnasts they had just seen, and they began with the handspring act. One lad fell rather heavily upon his head and neck, and deafness set in and became total. The youth of that happy hour in the circus is now a man of 24 or 25, but the world of sounds has left him never to return. He was a musician and can now play the piano for others, while to his own heart there comes no sound whatever from the instrument. Some thread was snapped in that moment of innocent play.

Not all of the brain is made use of by the mental powers. A large part of it is, perhaps, only the hull of the nut or the bark of the tree. It may be the supply train which follows the working and fighting army. A Mr. Jessup, of Hamilton, Ohio, shot a Mr. Smith through the head just above the ear. The ball went through the head. But Mr. Smith not only did not die, but he suffered no particular injury from the invasion of his brain-chamber. He was put to bed and was expected to breathe his last in a few minutes, but he did not meet the public expectation.

Thus, after we have chased the mind into the brain, we are still ignorant of the part played in intellectual action by this or that part of the bulk total. Mr. Webster had a large brain, but we do not know what was the office of his extra ounces. They may have been supply stores which were fed out to the toiling cells within.

It is sad that the bright and happy mind of Miss L. should now be found among these abnormal phenomena of nature; it is pitiful to think that her sceptre of friendship has departed, and that, able and willing to love many friends, she has come to the sad pass of not knowing a sister or brother from a stranger. Perhaps all this cloud will suddenly pass away and the lost will be found.

He Was Not to Blame.

Tramp—Say, boss, won't you please help a poor veteran of the war, an old, one-armed soldier?

Southerner—What! Help a man who fit agin us!

Tramp—I didn't fit, boss. I run.—The Judge.

Stowaways trouble English steamers more this year than ever before. To find ten or fifteen of them is a common thing. They make friends with the men who load the vessels and are put away wherever they can be secreted. In vessels that bring over brick the loaders will build up a little room around two or three men, and in several cases from a dozen or two dozen men have been thus secreted. Most of them are tramps. They only remain in their hiding places till the vessel is well out to sea, when they make their appearance, to be supported during the rest of the voyage.

Jubilee Gratitude.

[Suggested by the Divine Service in Westminster Abbey on the 22nd ult. In that service gratitude to the Most High and devotion to Her Majesty were strikingly blended.]

Raise the song of jubilee,
Spread the tidings far and wide,
Let all the nations joyful be,
And triumph in the crucified:
The year of jubilee proclaim,
And sing the great Redeemer's name.

O, bless the God of grace
For all the favors shown,
To her who rules in righteousness,
And sits on Britain's throne—
Our noble Queen—long may she reign,
And still the cause of right maintain.

Lord, give her subjects grace
Like her to follow Thee,
In all Thine own appointed ways,
In sweet humility
She homage pays before Thy throne,
And owns that Thou art King alone.

Not to palaces of stone
Is her dwelling place confined,
Her subjects are her living throne,
Her sceptre is her mind.
She lives in living hearts sincere,
And countless hosts her name revere.

Flesherton, July 25th, 1887. T.W.

Inistioge.

From our own Correspondent.

Haying is almost over here now and some of the farmers are starting to cut barley and fall wheat.

There will be a picnic in connection with the Methodist S.S. held here on the old picnic grounds on Wednesday 3rd prox.

Miss Lizzie Hutchinson who has been visiting friends in Berlin and Preston for the last two weeks, has returned home.

The Quarterly Meeting in connection with this circuit will be held on Sunday 7th of August at Corbetton.

Mr. and Mrs. Thompson, of Orangeville, were the guests of Mr. W. Ludlow, last week.

Mr. M. Leech has opened out a harness shop here and intends going into the business extensively.

The Inistioge Division, Sons of Temperance has, we believe, a membership of sixty

Mr. W. Jordan who is employed at McQuays saw-mill narrowly escaped having his hand torn off by the shingle saw but fortunately he escaped with a flesh wound and he is again at his work. MACD.

Maxwell.

From our own Correspondent.

Quite a number of our villagers were serenaded one evening last week by a citizen whose time and occupation prevented him from celebrating the Queen's Jubilee at the proper time, but done it up in proper style at his leisure, by walking the streets singing and shouting at a very high pitch. Quite a number arose from their slumbers at the sound of his harmonies to which they listened until near morning but that citizen has not been out for any bug juice since his jubilee.

An accident happened on Sunday last which happily was not so serious as might have been. Mr. John Kerton with his wife and younger son, accompanied by Mrs. Wm. Morrison were driving across the bridge over the Beaver river just north of our village, the bridge broke down, when horses and buggy with its occupants all fell into the river a distance of about eight feet. The buggy was badly wrecked and one of the horses badly hurt. Mrs. Morrison, who is an aged lady received some severe bruises, beside being severely shaken. Mrs. Kerton was also slightly bruised. But the greatest wonder is that they escaped as well as they did. The bridge has been very unsafe for some time and the contract for erecting a new one in its place was let by public auction last week. Mr. David Madill being the contractor.

Another accident occurred on Monday by which Mr. John Field who is around buying wool received some severe cuts and bruises. His horses becoming unmanageable he was thrown from his wagon which ran over him and is now laid up at his brother's, Mr. H. Field.

Mr. W. Guy, who has gone pretty extensively into the bee business, treated his friends and neighbors to the first fruits of his apiary by passing it around from house to house. And we would say come on again Billy, the last was very good.

Among the farmers, haying is about at an end and a bountiful crop.

Fall wheat is being cut and the sample is excellent. Other crops will soon follow and at present promise to be the most abundant ever harvested here.

FOR DYSPEPSIA and Liver Complaint, you have a printed guarantee on every bottle of Shiloh's Vitalizer. It never fails to cure. Sold at Medical Hall.

Meaford Road.

From our own Correspondent.

Nearly all the farmers have finished haying, the crop was good and has been saved in prime condition.

Messrs. T. Gilbert and E. Brodie had each a field of Barley cut and in the barn last week.

The S.S. picnic was held at Bell's lake on Dominion day and was well patronized.

A very successful garden party under the auspices of the day school was held in the school grounds just before the holidays.

Miss Annie Buchannan has gone on a pleasure trip to Sault Ste Marie.

Mr. Adam Hislop has purchased a self binder and is well pleased with the way it works.

Another matrimonial business partnership has been entered into here, the contracting parties being Miss Blair and Mr. J. I. Graham.

A certain woman, Mrs.— who hails from near Flesherton, has been in this neighborhood, but who made a sudden departure, had better stay away from here or else tar and feathers might be possibly called into requisition.

Young America's Quick Wit.

A quick-witted youngster who is always in dirt, got into disgrace the other day. The teacher ferule in hand called him to her desk, and on the way thither the boy made a hasty preparation for the approaching ceremony by hastily drawing his tongue across the palm of his right hand, and wiping the latter upon his pants leg. Arriving at the desk, and at the word of command he extended the newly cleaned hand. The teacher looked at it a moment in silence, and then in a solemn and reproving voice told the little culprit that if he would show her a dirtier hand in that school she would let him off. Quick as thought the little fellow whipped out his left hand from behind his back, and looked up with a smile of triumph. The ferruling was indefinitely postponed.

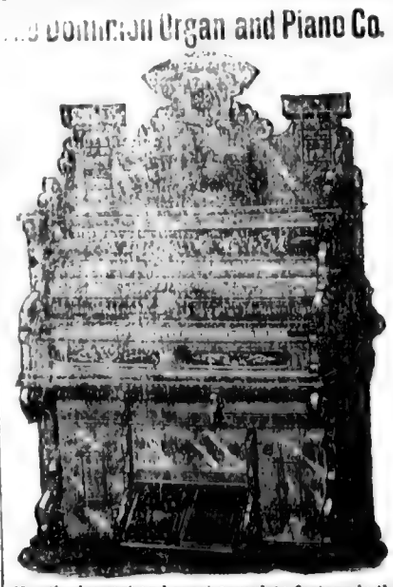
A Fatal Mistake.

Waldemar, July 20.—Shortly after dark on Saturday evening Mrs. Thomas Cole, who resided with her husband on a few acres not far from here, went to get a drink and took a cup in which there was some paris green which she had been using on the potatoes during the day. She filled the cup with water and drank the fatal draught. She was almost immediateiy seized with convulsions. Dr. Gaviller, of Grand Valley was summoned and did all in his power to save the life of the unfortunate woman. On Tuesday she vomited freely, and it was thought she might recover, but early this (Wednesday) morning she breathed her last. She has been residing in this neighborhood for some years, and was highly respected. Her husband is old, and is left in a rather sad condition. She had no family.

Not a particle of calomel, nor any other deleterious substance, enters into the composition of Ayer's Pills. On the contrary, this medicine is carefully compounded from the curative properties of purely vegetable substances. Try it.

"HACKMETACK," a lasting and fragrant perfume. Price 25 and 50 cents. Sold by Medical Hall.

...e Dominion Organ and Piano Co.



Has the largest and most complete factory in the Dominion—150x155.

Highest Honors ever Awarded to any Maker in the World.
Medal and Diploma at Centennial, 1876.
Medal and Diploma at Sydney, Australia, 1877.
Gold Medal at Provincial Exhibition, Toronto, 1878.
Highest Awards at Industrial Exhibition, Toronto, 1879-80-81.

WE ARE NOW MANUFACTURING
SQUARE AND UPRIGHT PIANOS.
BEST IN THE MARKET.
Correspondence Solicited. Send for Illustrated Catalogue, mailed free. Address
DOMINION ORGAN AND PIANO COMPANY,
BOWMANVILLE, ONT.

ADVICE TO MOTHERS.—Are you disturbed at night and broken of your rest by a sick child suffering and crying with pain of Cutting Teeth? If so send at once and get a bottle of "Mrs. Winslow's Soothing Syrup" for Children Teething. Its value is incalculable. It will relieve the poor little sufferer immediately. Depend upon it, mothers; there is no mistake about it. It cures Dysentery and Diarrhœa, regulates the Stomach and Bowels, cures Wind Colic, softens the Gums, reduces Inflammation, and gives tone and energy to the whole system. "Mrs. Winslow's Soothing Syrup" for children teething is pleasant to the taste and is the prescription of one of the oldest and best female physicians and nurses in the United States, and is for sale by all druggists throughout the world. Price twenty-five cents a bottle. Be sure and ask for "MRS. WINSLOW'S SOOTHING SYRUP," and take no other kind.

SLEEPLESS NIGHTS, made miserable by that terrible cough. Shiloh's Cure is the remedy for you. Sold at Medical Hall.

SHILOH'S CURE will immediately relieve Croup, Whooping Cough, and Bronchitis. Sold at Medical Hall.

THE REV. GEO. H. THAYER, of Bourbon, Ind., says: "Both myself and wife owe our lives to SHILOH'S CONSUMPTION CURE." Sold at Medical Hall.

NEW ADVERTISEMENTS.

—AT—

RUSSELL'S

NOTED

JEWELRY

STORE,

Flesherton!

Is to be found the finest and most complete stock of

WATCHES, CLOCKS, JEWELRY,

SILVERWARE, and FANCY Goods in this section of country.

Some beautiful designs in ladies' R. Plate Bar Pins and Brooches. Just received, SPECTACLES for the million. In Watches, we keep Waltham, Elgin, Springfield, Illinois, Hampden, Columbus, Swiss, in gold, gold-filled, silver and silver-ore cases, 2, 3, 4, & 5 ozs. at from $6.90 to $60, warranted from 2½ to 5 years.

☞ Our Watch Repair Book tells the startling tale of 486 watches repaired from July 1st 1886 to July 1st 1887, which is 140 over and above what any other dealer can show in this section and (We) did not add the watch soles and clock repairs and call them watch repairs to swell the number as some dealers do. Of course our watch repairs increased considerably since last fall on account of so many poor watches being auctioned off around here which needed any amount of repairing and the people are becoming wise to the fact now that for thoroughly good Watches, Clox, Silverware, etc., and for Fine Watch Repairing, they have of necessity to go to Russell's Noted Jewelry Store, Flesherton

J. BRANDER

PRICEVILLE,

While returning thanks to his patrons and the public for their valuable support in the past, begs to announce that he is prepared to supply their various needs

We make it our business to keep a supply of Goods suitable for the needs of our customers, and as

We Buy in Large Quantities Direct from the Manufacturers,

FOR CASH, we are in a position to

Give Extra Value

in every department. Every one should see the immense value we have in FALL GOODS just arriving

Very Respectfully,
JAS. BRANDER.

Priceville, July 20, 1887.

STRAYED.

CAME to the premises of the undersigned, Lot 3, Con. 4, Artemesia, on 4th June, 1 steer. Owner can have the same by proving property and paying expenses. WM. FLETCHER.

STRAYED

FROM the premises of the undersigned, Lot 145, 2nd Range West, Back Line, 1 red, yearling steer. Any person giving information will be suitably rewarded. JEREMIAH PIPER.

MAXWELL

CARRIAGE WORKS!

LITTLE & BLAKELY,

MANUFACTURERS OF
Carriages, Democrats, Wagons &c

Repairing, Painting, Horse-Shoeing, and General Jobbing

Done on Short Notice and at Reasonable Prices.

JOHNSON LITTLE. Blacksmith,
THOS. A. BLAKELY, Wagon-Maker & Painter.

Maxwell, May 26th, 1887.

BOOTS & SHOES!

Having received large additions to my Stock, I have a good supply on hand of Summer Goods.

LADIES' WEAR.—A fine assortment in Prunella, French Kid, Goat, Polish Calf, Buff and Heavy Boots.

MISSES AND BOYS WEAR.—A large variety of Lace & Button Boots Shoes and Slippers.

CHILDRENS WEAR.—A very large assortment of all sorts and sizes.

MENS WEAR.—I have Buff, Calf and Enamelled Balmorals, Oxford Ties and Strong Lace Boots.

FOR PRICE AND QUALITY, CANNOT BE SURPASSED.

WM. CLAYTON, . Flesherton.

CHEAP ❋ AND ❋ DURABLE!

—THE WELL-KNOWN—

SPEIGHT WAGON!

Call and get Prices, &c. from undersigned.

STOVES, TINWARE, &c. for sale as usual

First-class value in every department.

Agent for VICKER'S EXPRESS. All parcels left with him will be promptly and carefully attended to.

STRAIN'S. - FLESHERTON.

FLESHERTON.

MARBLE WORKS:

E. VANZANT,

ALL KINDS OF

Marble and Monumental Works,

Such as Monuments, Tomb Tables, Headstones Counter and Table Tops—in American and Italian Marble and Granite, and made on short notice. Also Mantles in Marble and Marbleized Slate, &c., &c.

Flesherton, Aug. 30, 1883.

HEALTH FOR ALL.

HOLLOWAY'S PILLS & OINTMENT

THE PILLS

Purify the Blood, correct all Disorders of the

Liver, Stomach, Kidn'ys, and Bowels.

They invigorate and restore to health Debilitated Constitutions, and are invaluable in all Complaints incidental to Females of all ages. For Children and the aged they are priceless.

THE OINTMENT

Is an infallible remedy for Bad Legs, Bad Breasts, Old Wounds, Sores and Ulcers. It is famous for Gout and Rheumatism. For Disorders of the Chest it has no equal.

For SORE THROAT, BRONCHITIS, COUGHS, COLDS

Glandular Swellings, and all Skin Diseases it has no rival; and for contracted and stiff joints it acts like a charm.

Manufactured only at Professor HOLLOWAY'S Establishment,

78, New Oxford Street (late 533, Oxford Street), London.

and are sold at 1s. 1½d., 2s. 9d., 4s. 6d., 11s., 22s., and 33s. each Box or Pot, and may be had of all Medicine Vendors throughout the World.

☞ Purchasers should look to the Label on the Pots and Boxes. If the address is not 533, Oxford Street, London, they are spurious.

FOR SALE.

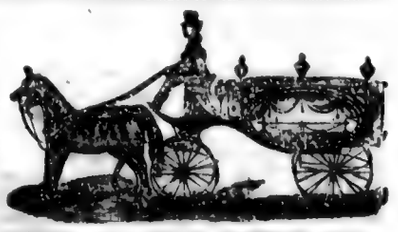
The undersigned has White Ash Butter Tubs and Churns for sale.

JOS. McCORMICK,
304-320, Flesherton.

FLAGS AND BANNERS

of superior quality, for Orange and other Societies. Order early.

W M. TEGART,
Thornbury, Ont.



J. W. BATES,

Furniture Dealer and Undertaker,

FLESHERTON, . . ONT.

FLESHERTON ADVANCE.

"TRUTH BEFORE FAVOR."—"PRINCIPLES, NOT MEN."

VOL. VII., NO. 319. FLESHERTON, ONTARIO, THURSDAY, AUGUST 4, 1887. A. R. FAWCETT, EDITOR & PROPRIETOR.

For above fine finished Watches, Accurate Hampden's—my name on, and the reliable Waltham and Elgin Watches, in Gold, Filled Gold, and Coin Silver Cases, go to

W. A. BROWN'S

FINELY STOCKED JEWELERY STORE.

I am known as the Reliable Jeweller for 20 miles North, South, East and West. I never have misrepresented purposely any goods sold since being in business here. It is easy to sell a 11 Jewelled Watch for "Full Jewelled." It is much easier to sell 8 k. Gold Watches and call them 12 or 14. I don't have to do it. My own name on all warrants, and you will find I can be held responsible if goods are not right.

—|342|—

WATCHES & CLOCKS

Booked in Repair Book since July 1st, 1886.

SQUARE DEALING.

PRICES CLOSE.

SPECIALTIES:—Fine Watch Repairing, Spex Fitting.

W. A. BROWN,

The People's Jeweller, Markdale.

CONSUMPTION IN FLESHERTON.

There being good prospects of a fresh quantity of Flour to be consumed in the village and surrounding country the present season, the undersigned has opened out with a good stock of the following lines:—

ROLLER FLOUR!

Best Brands.

Rolled & Granulated Oat-Meal.

Corn Meal,
Cracked Wheat,
Chop,
Shorts,
Bran and Oats,

At Bottom Prices for Cash.

Special Discounts

According to amount of Purchase.

W. W. TRIMBLE,

Next door to Clayton's Shoe Store.

(312-364)

SAY, HALLO THERE! ADVERTISING PAYS! Of course it does. Just plant an advertisement in THE ADVANCE and see for yourself. Hundreds have done so and were benefitted. Have you a farm you want to sell or rent? Advertise in THE ADVANCE. Have you anything under the sun you want to sell or trade? An advertisement in THE ADVANCE will bring you customers every time. Do you want to buy anything or hire help? Advertise in THE ADVANCE every time. Address or call on A. R. Fawcett, ADVANCE Office, Flesherton, for terms, &c.

PRINTING! YES, OH, YES! IT WILL PAY all manners of persons who read this advt. to get their Printing done at THE ADVANCE Office, Flesherton. Good work at honest prices every time! A dollar saved is a dollar earned—so the proverb goes. Pamphlets, Posters, Circulars, Programs, Dodgers, Streamers, Bill Heads, Note Heads, Receipts, Note Forms, Business Cards, Visiting Cards, Labels, Tags, &c., Plain or Colored. Address or call on A. R. Fawcett, ADVANCE Office, Flesherton, for terms.

ADVERTISE in The ADVANCE

Tit-Bits.

Consisting of Local and Other Interesting Items gathered by The Advance Reporters.

Get your LEMONS at Keefer's.

For fine Silverware go to Russell's, Flesherton.

J. W. Henderson, Esq., of Toronto, was in town over Sunday last.

Mr. Thos. Henderson, L.D.S., of Toronto, was in town Monday and Tuesday last on a professional visit.

Top Buggy for sale cheap or would exchange for a good young horse, W.W. TRIMBLE.

Mr. Smith, the barber, will be in Flesherton next Monday (cattle fair day) to attend to all requiring his services.

Mrs. J. C. Griffiths and her daughter, Miss Alice Griffiths, of Owen Sound, are visiting friends here.

The Artemesia Voters' Lists have just been printed at this office. A lot of new names have been added since last year.

A fine stock of all kinds of Machine Needles constantly on hand at Russell's Noted Jewelry Store, Flesherton.

Mr. Nelson Hurlburt, of Messrs. Little & Hurlburt, contractors, Thornbury, was in town one day last week and gave us a call.

Mr. Owens and his sister-in-law, Miss Webb, both of Owen Sound, are the guests of A. S. VanDusen, Esq., of this place.

Shorts, Chop, Bran, Oats, and all kinds of Oat Meals kept constantly on hand at the new flour and feed store.—W. W. TRIMBLE.

Mr. F. T. Carr returned home to Virginia from York Co. on Tuesday last. He will remain home until after harvest when he has the option of taking a good position in Toronto.

An immense stock of Razors, Combs, Pipes, Purses, Shaving Brushes, Pocket Combs, Scissors of all kinds, Ladies Toilet setts, &c., just received at Russell's, Flesherton.

The Annual Fall Show of Artemesia Agricultural Society will be held in Priceville on Tuesday, October 4th. Prize Lists and other particulars in connection therewith will appear in due time.

Mr. Aylesworth, the celebrated Toronto architect, paid Flesherton a flying visit one day last week. The visit was made, we believe, in connection with our new schoolhouse building, of which he is the architect.

Mr. Aikenhead and two sons, Mrs. Aikenhead (nee Armstrong), and Miss Aikenhead, are the guests of Squire Armstrong. The first named is senior member in one of the best known hardware firms in Toronto—cor. King and Yonge streets.

Mr. H. Bull, of H. Bull & Son, Pumpmakers, &c., Thornbury, was in town last week, and did quite a business. Mr. Bull will be in Flesherton on Tuesday next, when those requiring anything in the pump line can call at Munshaw's hotel or leave orders at ADVANCE office.

Our attention has been called to the fact that much of the cedar plank used in constructing new sidewalks in this town is dozy, not to say partially rotten—particularly that used on Toronto street. This is not a wise policy. How much better it would be to pay a good price for first-class cedar and have sidewalks that would not require repairing every year. Cedar is one of our most useful and durable timbers, but care should be exercised in choosing that which is not in an advanced stage of decomposition. Some one seems to have fallen into this error in the matter of our new sidewalks.

Biscuits, Cheese and Bacon, also Lemons for sale by W. W. TRIMBLE.

For fine Watches, Clocks, and Jewelry go to Russell's Noted Jewelry Store, Flesherton.

Artemesia Council will meet in the Town Hall, Flesherton, on Monday next, for the transaction of business. The regular monthly Cattle Fair will be held here on the same day.

The Garden Party held on the grounds of the Methodist parsonage Maxwell, on Thursday evening last, was a grand success financially and otherwise. The proceeds amounting to the handsome sum of $73.41.

Mr. Ward, Head Master of the Collingwood Public Schools, his wife and two younger children, are home on their annual visiting tour among their many friends and acquaintances in Flesherton and vicinity. Mr. Ward is as genial, keen and ready-witted as ever.

If you want a Watch you will save money by buying from Russell, Flesherton, warranted from 2) to 5 years covering all breakages.

On Friday evening last Messrs. J. Sullivan and W. P. Crossley, together with their eldest little girls, took train at our railway station for Owen Sound, from whence they proceeded by boat to Manitoulin Island. They will return to Flesherton in two weeks. We hope they will have a pleasant trip.

Go to Keefer's for GRAHAM FLOUR.

Mr. J. E. Moore, of this town, has secured the contract for the erection of a neat brick residence on Sydenham street, for the Agricultural Editor of THE ADVANCE. The building is to be ready for occupation by the 1st of November in the present year. Work has already been commenced.

EGGS wanted at R. Keefer's.

Mr. M. P. McMaster of the Thorold public school has tendered his resignation to the trustee board, having accepted the headmastership of the Niagara Falls public schools at a salary of $750. This places Mr. McMaster at the head of one of the finest schools of the country, and we congratulate him on the improvement in his circumstances which the change will effect.

A new stock of superior Razors just received at Russell's Noted Jewelry Store, Flesherton.

Several young men and a couple of females of the demi-monde stripe indulged in a sort of "can-can" within the borders of staid and respectable Artemesia the other night. God help them to reform and become useful and respectable members of society!—Yes, and God help them if those disgraceful midnight orgies are ever again attempted in this Township.

Get your Flour at Keefer's.

One of the chief features in connection with the East Grey Fall Exhibition to be held here next month, will be the large and splendid array of special prizes. On account of making careful preparations in connection with the department, the Society is a little late in issuing their prize list pamphlets, which, however, are now in press and will in probability be in the hands of the energetic and popular Sec.-Treas., S. Damude, Esq., (Flesherton P. O.) for distribution early next week. In our next issue we hope to be able to give full particulars in connection therewith. In the meantime let us earnestly urge our agricultural friends to give their county exhibition a hearty and unstinted support. If you are not already a member, send a dollar to the Secretary here and get your ticket. Even should you not exhibit a single thing it will be money profitably spent.

The Big Sign for Flour.

Notice the big sign next door to Clayton's shoe store, where you can get the choicest Roller Flour cheap for cash. W. W. TRIMBLE.

Have I paid the printer?

A fancy stock of Fancy Goods of every description at Russell's, Flesherton.

The woman referred to by our Meaford Road correspondent last week as "living near Flesherton" has left for parts unknown. Nobody is sorry as it seems her reputation was not of the best.

Mr. Robt. Conn, 2nd con., Euphrasia, farmer, who had this year 22 acres of fall wheat and other grain in proportion, was through with cutting and getting all his harvest in on Thursday, July 28th,—and which remarkable fact one of our cattle dealers, Mr. Ed. O'Brien, thinks worth his paying a cent postage to send to the Agricultural Editor of the FLESHERTON ADVANCE. [Just the kind of items we like to get, friend Purdy.—ED.]

We forgot to mention our visit to Chatsworth last week. In company with Mr. J. G. Keefer, of the Forest Free Press office, we struck that town on the afternoon of Friday, 22nd ult., and found our genial friend, Mr. G. J. Blyth, of the News, up to his elbows in work. Chatsworth is a smart little town, much larger than we had anticipated. Just now a very fine brick schoolhouse is being erected there, which will be a great boon to the people living in the village and locality.

Somebody has been endeavoring to start a boneyard just in the rear of the lot on which THE ADVANCE office stands. Heads and entrails of slaughtered animals have been thrown there from time to time, the odor from which is at times positively sickening. It is simply disgraceful that such things should be tolerated in a town enjoying the wide reputation for cleanliness that Flesherton does. Where is our Board of Health? Immediate steps ought to be taken to compel the guilty party or parties to have some regard for the health of their neighbors if they have none for themselves. In future if the proper authorities do not promptly enforce our sanitary regulations, we shall see to it that the names of all violators of the same—without respect to person—adorn the columns of THE ADVANCE. Free as this country is—and it is too mighty free in some respects—it does not allow people to do just what they like, especially when the rights of others are interfered with.

A jolly picnicking party, returning from Bell's lake one evening last week, had some remarkable experiences. Something seemed to be the matter with the horses, as they persisted often in the mad attempt to climb or throw themselves over the tongue of the vehicle—perchance with the view of changing sides. The driver could not make out what was the matter; and for the matter of that, neither could anybody else. When the horses were not engaged in the "change sides" business, they occasionally varied the monotony of the trip by suddenly stopping and becoming profoundly absorbed in the surrounding landscape. At the railway crossing there was very nearly a serious collision between the horses and a swiftly passing lorry, which was conveying Dr. Sproule to the home of one of his patients, who lived near the railway track. So close was the "call" that the tongue of the vehicle grazed one of the lorry's passengers on the back. When within about one mile of Flesherton the horses did manage to smash the tongue of the rig. Then it was discovered that the lines had been changed in position—hence the peculiar action of the horses. The young people walked home.

The tonic and alterative properties of Ayer's Sarsaparilla are too well known to require the specious aid of any exaggerated or fictitious certificate. Witnesses of the marvelous cures effected by this preparation are to-day living in every city and hamlet in the land.

—AT—

RUSSELL'S

NOTED JEWELRY STORE,

Flesherton!

Is to be found the finest and most complete stock of

WATCHES, CLOCKS, JEWELRY,

SILVERWARE, and FANCY Goods in this section of country.

Some beautiful designs in ladies' R. Plate Bar Pins and Brooches. Just received, SPECTACLES for the million. In Watches, we keep Waltham, Elgin, Springfield, Illinois, Hampden, Columbus, Swiss, in gold, gold filled, silver and silver-ore cases, 2, 3, 4, & 5 ozs. at from $6.90 to $60, warranted from 2½ to 5 years.

Our Watch Repair Book tells the startling tale of 486 watches repaired from July 1st 1886 to July 1st 1887, which is 140 over and above what any other dealer can show in this section and We did not add the watch sales and clock repairs and all these watch repairs to swell the number as some dealers do. Of course our watch repairs increased considerably since last fall on account of so many poor watches being auctioned off around here which needed any amount of repairing and the people are becoming wise to the fact now that for thoroughly good Watches, Clocks, Silverware, etc., and for Fine Watch Repairing, they have of necessity to go to Russell's Noted Jewelry Store, Flesherton.

Who the Real Sufferer Was.

"Do you suffer much from cold feet" inquired the shoe merchant with kindly interest, as he complied with the lady's request and showed her the thickest soled shoes he had in the store. "She suffer! broke in her husband impetuously. "Great Scott! She suffer? Not much. I'm the victim; I'm the one that has to suf—

"George!" said the lady. That was all she said, but George seemed to understand, and there was silence that was not broken until the merchant observed in a deferential and funereal way that it looked as if there was going to be some kind of a storm if the wind didn't change.

FARMERS!

Don't forget there is good work done at the Flesherton

WOOLEN FACTORY

And we are doing all in our power to please. Customers are finding out it is to their advantage to deal with us as our Prices are Low and Our Goods are Reliable, and notwithstanding price being cut so close on account of hard times, I intend to reduce the manufacturing prices in nearly every branch, viz., OILING, ROLL CARDING, SPINNING, WEAVING, &c., &c. Give us a trial and see for yourself.

W. H. FLESHER.

Flesherton, May 26th, 1887.

In Memoriam.

To the Heroic Engineer, H. Donnelly, who died at his post in the recent disastrous collision at St. Thomas:

To the engineer and hero be all praise and honor due,
Who stood firm, despising danger, to his post and duty true;
With his hand upon the lever, firm the grand old hero stood;
Just to save the train he perished; tried his best, did all he could.

Life to him was just as sweet as our life is to us all,
But he bravely stood and perished, gave his life at duty's call;
"'Twas quixotic, rash and foolish"—thus the bitter cynics say;
Such his praise, because to save them he had thrown his life away.

"He was half intoxicated"—such the words that others use;
Bitterly they thus revile him; thus the dead man they abuse.
Oh! thank God, that he is resting deep below the crumbling clay,
Sleeping sound within his coffin, little recks he what they say.

Shame upon the scandal-mongers, shame upon their cowardly race;
They, if Donnelly were living, dared not say it to his face.
Take one of these base revilers, place the lever in his hand,
Place him in the same position as poor Donnelly did stand.

Let us watch our noble cynic—see his coward's cheek turn pale;
Little thinks he of his duty, little thinks he of the train.
Not like he who stood and perished—filled a hero's noble grave,
All our cynic thinks is simply his own cowardly life to save.

Just because he did his duty, to his post stood nobly true,
Bitter words and harsh revilings are the perished hero's due;
Such his praise and such his honor, he who feared not death and pain,
He who nobly, bravely, grandly perished in the raging flame.

Thus his epitaph should read: "Lies a hero underneath,
One whose noble brows deserved the victorious hero's wreath."
One who died upon his engine, true and faithful to the last,
Calm and cool, as swiftly forward to death's doom his engine dashed,
With his hand upon the throttle faced grim death without a fear.
Oh! may angels crown with laurels the name of Donnelly, Engineer.

GEO. T. PARDEE (aged 14),
G. T. R., Niagara Falls, Ont.

SIR HUGH'S LOVES.

CHAPTER XI.

THE WEE WIFIE.

And that same God who made your face so fair
And gave your woman's heart its tenderness,
So shield the blessing He implanted there,
That it may never turn to your distress,
And never cost you trouble or despair,
Nor granted leave the granted comfortless,
But like a river blest where'er it flows,
Be still receiving while it still bestows.
Jean Ingelow.

So far, that my doom is, I love thee still,
Let no man dream, but that I love thee still.
Tennyson's Guinevere.

"Shall we soon be home, Hugh?"

"Very soon, Wee Wifie."

"Then please put down that great cracking paper behind which you have been asleep the last two hours, and talk to me a little. I want to know the names of the villages through which we are passing, the big houses, and the people who live in them, that I may not enter my dear new home a perfect stranger to its surroundings;" and Lady Redmond shook out her furs, and settled herself anew with fresh dignity.

Sir Hugh yawned for the twentieth time behind his paper, rubbed his eyes, stretched himself, and then let down the window and looked absently down the long country road winding through the stubble land; and then at the eddying heaps of dry crisp leaves now blown by the strong November wind under the horses' feet, and now whirling in crazy circles like witches on Walpurgis's night, until after a shivering remonstrance from his little wife he put up the window with a jerk, and threw himself back with a discontented air on the cushions.

"There is nothing to be seen for a mile or two, Fay, and it is growing dusk now; it will soon be too dark to distinguish a single object;" and so saying, he relapsed into silence, and took up the obnoxious paper again, though the words were scarcely legible in the twilight; while the young bride tried to restrain her weariness, and sat patiently in her corner. Poor Hugh, he was already secretly repenting of the hasty step he had taken; two months of Alpine scenery, of quaint old German cities, of rambling through galleries of art treasures with his child-bride, and Hugh had already wearied of his new bonds. All at once he had awakened from his brief delusion with an agony of remembrance, with a terrible heart-longing and home-sickness, with a sense of satiety and vacuum. Fay's gentleness and beauty palled on him; her artless questioning fatigued him. In his secret soul he cried out that she was a mere child and no mate for him, and that he wanted Margaret.

If he had only told his young wife, if he had confided to her pure soul the secret that burthened his, child as she was, she would have understood and pitied and forgiven him; the very suffering would have given her added womanliness and gained his respect, and through that bitter knowledge, honestly told and generously received, a new and better Fay would have risen to win her husband's love.

But he did not tell her—such a thought never entered his mind. So day by day her youth and innocent gaiety only alienated him more, until he grew to look upon her as a mere child, who must be petted and humored, but who could never be his friend.

Yes, he was bringing home his bride to Redmond Hall, and that bride was not Margaret. In place of Margaret's grand face, framed in its dead-brown hair and deep, pathetic eyes, was a childish face, with a small rose-bud mouth that was just now quivering and plaintive.

"Dear Hugh, I am so very tired, and you will not talk to me," in a sad babyish voice.

"Will talking rest you, Birdie," asked Hugh, dropping his paper and taking the listless little hand kindly.

Fay dropped her head, for she was ashamed of the bright drops that stole through her lashes from very weariness. Hugh would think her babyish and fretful. She must not forget she was Lady Redmond; so she answered, without looking up,

"We have been travelling since daybreak this morning you know, Hugh, and it is all so fresh and strange to me, and I want to hear your voice to make it seem real somehow; perhaps I feel stupid because I am tired, but I had an odd fancy just now that it was all a dream, and that I should wake up in my little room at the cottage and find myself again Fay Mordannt."

"Is not the new name prettier, dear?" observed her husband, gently.

Fay colored and hesitated, and finally hid her face in shy fashion on Hugh's shoulder, while she glanced at the little gold ring that shone so brightly in the dusk.

"Fay Redmond," she whispered. "Oh yes, it is far prettier," and a tender smile came to her face, an expression of wonderful beauty. "Did ever name sound half so sweet as that?"

"What is my Wee Wifie thinking about?" asked Hugh at last, rousing himself with difficulty from another musing fit.

Fay raised her head with a little dignity.

"I wish you would not call me that, Hugh."

"Not call you what?" in genuine astonishment. "Why, are you not my Wee Wifie? I think it is the best possible name I could find for you; is it not pretty enough for your ladyship?"

"Yes, but it is so childish, and will make people smile, and Aunt Griselda would be shocked, and——" but here she broke off, flushed and looking much distressed.

"Nay, give me all your reasons," said Hugh, kindly. "I cannot know all that is in my little wife's heart yet." But Hugh, as he said this, sighed involuntarily, as he thought how little he cared to trace the workings of that innocent young mind.

The gentleness of his tone gave Fay courage.

"I don't know, of course—at least I forget—but I am really sure that—that—'The Polite Match-Maker' would not consider it right."

"What?" exclaimed Hugh, opening his eyes wide and regarding Fay with amazement.

"'The Polite Match-Maker,' dear," faltered Fay, "the book that Aunt Griselda gave me to study when I was engaged, because she said it contained all the necessary and fundamental rules for well-bred young couples. To be sure she smiled, and said it was a little old-fashioned; but I was so anxious to learn the rules perfectly that I read it over three or four times."

"And 'The Polite Match-Maker' would not approve of Wee Wifie, you think?" and Sir Hugh tried to repress a smile.

"Oh, I am sure of it," she returned, seriously; "the forms of address were so different."

"Give me an example, then, or I can hardly profit by the rule."

Fay had no need to consider, but she hesitated for all that. She was never sure how Hugh would take things when he had that look on his face. She did not want him to laugh at her.

"Of course, it is old-fashioned, as Aunt Griselda says; but I know the 'Match-Maker' considered 'Honored Wife,' or 'Dearest Madam,' the correct form of address." And as Hugh burst out laughing, she continued, in a slightly injured tone—"Of course I know that people do not use those terms now, but all the same I am sure Aunt Griselda would not think Wee Wifie sufficiently respectful,"—and here Fay looked ready to cry—"and though the book is old-fashioned she said many of the rules were excellent."

"But, Fay," remonstrated her husband, "does it not strike you that the rules must be obsolete, savoring of the days of Sir Charles Grandison and Clarissa Harlowe? Pshaw!" with a frown, "I forgot I was gauging a child's intellect. Well," turning to her, "what is your busy little mind hatching now?"

"Dear Hugh," stammered Fay timidly, "I know I am very ignorant, and I ought to know better, and I will look in the dictionary as soon as I———but I do not know the meaning of the word obsolete."

"Pshaw!" again muttered Sir Hugh; then aloud, "the term, honored madam, signifies disused, out of date, ancient, antiquated, antique, neglected and so on."

"Ah, Hugh, now I know you are laughing at me; but," rather anxiously, "'The Match-Maker' cannot be all wrong, can it? It is only what you call absolete."

"My dear child," answered Hugh, gravely, "you can trust your husband's judgment, I hope, before even this wonderful book—in this matter I am sure you can; and in my opinion the prettiest name I could have selected is this 'Wee Wifie.' It pleases me," continued Hugh, his fine features working with secret pain. "It is no name of the past, it touches on no hope for fortune, and it reminds me of my little wife's claim to forbearance and sympathy from her extreme youth and ignorance of the world. To others you may be Lady Redmond, but to me you must ever be my Wee Wifie."

Fay clasped his neck with a little sob.

"Yes, you shall call me that. I know I am only a silly ignorant little thing, and you are so grand and wise; but you love your foolish little wife, do you not, Hugh?"

"Yes, of course;" but as Hugh hushed the rosy lips with that silencing kiss, his conscience felt an uneasy twinge. Did he really love her? Was such fondness worth the acceptance of any woman, when, with all his efforts, he could scarcely conceal his weariness of her society, and already the thought of the life-long tie that bound them together was becoming intolerable to him? But he shut his ears to the accusing voice that was ever whispering to him that his fatal error would bring its punishment. Well, he was responsible, humanly speaking, for the happiness of this young life; as far as he knew how, he would do his duty.

"Well, sweetheart," he observed, glancing enviously at Fay's bright face, now quite forgetful of fatigue—how could she be tired while Hugh talked to her!—"what other amusing rules does this marvellous book contain?"

"I do think it is a marvellous book, though it is somewhat obsolete;" and here Fay stammered over the formidable word. "I know it said in one place that married people ought to have no secrets from each other, and that was why I told you about Frank Lumsden;" and here Fay blushed very prettily.

"Frank Lumsden," observed Hugh, in some perplexity; "I don't think I remember, Fay."

"Not remember what I told you that Sunday evening in the lane—the evening after we were engaged! How Mr. Lumsden wanted to tell me how he admired me, but I cried and would not let him; and he went away so unhappy, poor fellow. As though I could ever have cared for him," continued Fay, with innocent scorn, as she looked up into Hugh's handsome face. He was regarding her attentively just then.

Yes, she was pretty, he knew that—lovely, no doubt, to her boy lovers. But to him, with the memory of Margaret's grand ideal beauty ever before him, Fay's pink and pearly bloom, though it was as purely tinted as the inner calyx of a rose, faded into mere color prettiness. And as yet the spell of those wonderful eyes, of which Frank Lumsden dreamt, had exercised no potent fascination over her husband's heart.

"Hugh," whispered Fay, softly, "you have not kept any secrets from me, have you? I know I am very young to share all your thoughts, but you will tell your little wife everything, will you not?"

No secrets from her! Heaven help her, poor child. Would she know—would she ever know? And with a great throb of pain his heart answered "No."

"Why are you so silent, Hugh; you have no secrets surely?"

"Hush, dear, we cannot talk any more now; we have passed the church and the Vicarage already—we are nearly home;" and as he spoke they came in sight of the lodge, where Catharine was waiting with her baby in her arms.

Fay smiled and nodded, and then they turned in at the gate, and the darkness seemed to swallow them up.

The avenue leading to Redmond Hall was the glory of the whole neighborhood.

Wayfarers, toiling along the hot and dusty road that leads from Singleton to Sandycliffe, always paused to look through the great gate at the green paradise beyond.

It was like a glade in some forest, so deep was its shadowy gloom, so unbroken its reponse; while the arrowy sun-shaft flickered patterns on the mossy footpaths, or drew a golden girdle round some time-worn trunk.

Here stood the grand old oaks, under whose branches many a Redmond played as a child in the days before the Restoration—long before the time when Marmaduke, fifth baronet of that name, joined the forces of Rupert, and fell fighting by the side of his dead sons.

Here too were the aged beeches; some with contorted holes, and marvellously-twisted limbs, like Titans struggling in their death-throes, and others with the sap of youth still flowing through their woody veins, as they stood clothed in the beauty of their pain. Fay had often played in this wonderful avenue. She remembered, when she was a child, rambling with her nurse in the Redmond woods, with their copses of nut-trees and wild-rose thickets; and their tiny sylvan lawns, starred over with woodland flowers, such as Spenser would have peopled "with bearded Fauns and Satyrs, who with their horned feet do wear the ground, and all the woody nymphs—the fair Hamadryades;" but though she peered eagerly out in the darkness, she could see nothing but the carriage lamps flashing on some bare trunk or gaunt skeleton branches.

"Dear Hugh," she whispered, timidly, "how gloomy and strange it looks—just like an enchanted forest."

"They have not thought fit to cut down the trees to give light to your ladyship," observed her husband, laughing at her awe-struck tone. "Give me your hand, you foolish child; when we have passed the next turning you will see the old Hall. There will be light enough there;" and scarcely had the words passed his lips before the Hall burst upon them—a long low range of building, with its many windows brilliantly illuminated and ruddy with firelight, while through the open door the forms of the assembled servants moved hither and thither in a warm background of light.

"What a lovely old place," cried Fay, breathless with excitement. "I had almost forgotten how beautiful it was, but I shall see it better by daylight to-morrow."

"Yes," he returned, with a sigh, "I shall have plenty to show you, Fay, but now let me help you off with those furs, and lift you out."

Fay shook herself free of the heavy wraps, and then sprang lightly to the ground; and with her head erect like a little queen, stepped over the threshold of her new home with her hand still in her husband's.

The circle of men and women gathered in the great hall, with the housekeeper and grey-haired butler at their head, thrilled with a vague surprise and wonder at the sight of the childish figure beside their master.

"Good evening to you all," said Hugh, trying to speak cheerfully, though there was a huskiness in his pleasant voice that was foreign to it. "You see I have brought home your new mistress at last, Ellerton. Mrs. Heron," shaking hands with her, "you must give Lady Redmond a hearty welcome."

"Yes, indeed, Sir Hugh," and the stately housekeeper folded her plump hands and looked complacently at the pretty face before her. "A thousand welcomes both to you and her ladyship, Sir Hugh, and a long life and a happy one to you both."

But the housekeeper, as she ended her little speech with an elaborate curtsey, was marvelling in her kindly heart what on earth had possessed her master to bring this lovely child to be the mistress of Redmond Hall.

"Thank you, very much," returned Fay, timidly, and her sweet face flushed as she spoke. "I trust we shall soon become good friends. I know how you all love my dear husband, and I hope in time that you will be able to love me too for his sake."

"There can be no doubt of that, I should think, Mrs. Heron," returned Sir Hugh, moved in spite of himself; and at his tone the shy fingers closed more tightly round his. Those who were standing by never forgot Fay's look, when the girl-wife raised her beautiful eyes to her husband's face.

"And now," cantinued Sir Hugh, "you are very tired, Fay, but our good Mrs. Heron will show you your rooms, that you may rest and refresh yourself after your long journey. This is your maid, I believe," turning to a fresh, bright-looking girl, behind him; then, as Fay obediently left him, "What time will dinner be served, Ellerton?"

"At a quarter to eight, Sir Hugh."

"Very well; I hope there are lights and a fire in the study."

"Yes, Sir Hugh, and in the damask drawing-room as well." But his master did not seem to hear him, as he walked slowly across the hall on his way to his dressing-room.

CHAPTER XII.

IN THE BLUE NESTIE.

. . . . This perhaps was love—
To have its hands too full of gifts to give
For putting out a hand to take a gift;
To have so much, the perfect mood of love
Includes, in strict conclusion, being loved;
As Eden dew went up and fell again,
Enough for watering Eden, obviously
She had not thought about his love at all.
The cataracts of her soul had poured themselves,
And risen self-crown'd in rainbow; would she ask
Whocrown'd her?—it sufficed that she was crown'd
E. B. Browning

Redmond Hall was a curious old house; it had been built originally in Gothic style, but an aspiring Redmond, who was ignorant of the laws of architecture and not possessed with the spirit of uniformity, had thrown out windows and added wings that savored strongly of the Tudor style, while here and there a buttress or arch was decidedly Norman in its tendency.

To a connoisseur this medley of architecture was a great eye-sore, but to the world in general the very irregularity of the grey old pile added to its picturesque entirety, and somehow the effect was very pleasing.

The various owners of the Hall, holding all modern innovations in abhorrence, had preserved its antiquity as far as possible by restoring the old carvings and frescoes that were its chief ornaments. The entrance-hall was of noble dimensions, with a painted ceiling, and a great fireplace surrounded by oaken-carvings of fruit and flowers, the work of Gibbon, with the Redmond motto, "Fideles ad urnam," in the centre.

The walls were adorned with stag's antlers, and other trophies of the chase, while implements of warfare, from the bow and arrow to the modern revolver, were arranged in geometrical circles round the battered suits of armor.

The dwelling-rooms of the house, with the exception of the drawing-room and billiard-room, were long and low, with the same painted ceilings and heavy oak-carvings; and some of the windows, especially in the library and morning-room, were furnished with such deep embrasures as to form small with-drawing rooms in themselves, and leave the farther end of the apartment in twilight obscurity even on the brightest summer's day.

Many people were of opinion that the old Hall needed complete renovation, but Sir Wilfred had cared little for such things. In his father's time a few of the rooms had been modernised and refurnished, the damask drawing-room for example, a handsome billiard-room added, and two or three bedrooms fitted up according to nineteenth century taste.

But Sir Wilfred had preferred the old rooms in the quaint embrasures, where many a fair Redmond dame had worked with her daughters at the tapestry that hung in the green bedroom, which represented the death of Saul and the history of Gideon.

In these rooms was furniture belonging to many a different age. Carpets and chair-cushions worked in tent stitch and cross stitch and old-fashioned harpsichord; gaudy white and gold furniture of the Louis Quatorze time, mixed with the spindle-legged tables of the Queen Anne epoch.

At the back of the Hall lay a broad stone terrace reaching from one end of the house to the other.

On one side were the stables and kennels, and on the other a walled sunny garden, with fruit trees and a clipped yew-hedge and a sun-dial, on which a stately race of peacocks loved to plume themselves.

Beyond divided by the yew-hedge was the herb-garden, where in the olden time, many a notable house-mother, with her chintz skirts hustled through her pocket-holes, gathered simples for her medicines, and sweet-smelling lavender and rosemary for her presses of home-spun linen.

These gardens were walled and entered by a curiously-wrought iron door, said to be Flemish work; and below the terrace lay a smooth, gentle-sloping lawn, that stretched to the edge of a large sheet of water, called by courtesy the lake—the whole shut in by the background of the Redmond wood.

Here through the sunny afternoon slept purple shadows, falling aslant the yellow water-lilies, and here underneath the willows and silvery birches, in what was called "The Lover's Walk," had Hugh dreamed many a day-dream, whose beginning and whose end was Margaret.

Poor Hugh! he little thought as he paced that walk that the day should come when his wife should walk there beside him, and look at him with eyes that were not Margaret's.

When Fay, escorted by Mrs. Heron and followed by Janet, had ascended the broad oaken staircase, and passed through the long gallery, the housekeeper paused in a recess with four red-baized doors.

"Sir Hugh's dressing-room, my lady," she explained, blandly, "and the next door belongs to Sir Hugh's bath-room, and this," pointing solemnly to the central door, "is the Oriel room."

"What," faltered Lady Redmond, rather fearing from Mrs. Heron's manner that this room might be the subject of some ghost story.

"The Oriel room," repeated the housekeeper still more impressively, "where the Redmond ladies have always slept. In this room both Sir Wilfred and Sir Hugh were born, and Sir Marmaduke and his sons Percy and Herewald were laid in state after the battle."

It was well that Fay did not understand the latter end of the housekeeper's speech, but she shuddered notwithstanding with vague discomfort when the door was opened, and all the glories of the Oriel room were displayed before her. It was so large and grand that a queen might have slept in it and have been content, but to Fay's eyes it was only a great gloomy room, so full of hidden corners and recesses, that the blazing firelight and the wax candles only seemed to give a faint circle of light, beyond which lurked weird shadows, hiding in the deep embrasures of the windows, or beaming against the painted ceiling.

The cabinets and wardrobe, and grotesque tables and chairs, all of black oak, and, above all, the great oak bedstead with its curiously twisted pillars and heavy silk damask curtains—each projected separate shadows and filled Fay's mind with dismay, while from the panelled walls the childish figure was reflected in dim old mirrors.

"Oh dear," sighed the little bride, "I shall never dare to be by myself in this room. Janet, you must never leave me; look how those shadows move."

"It is not quite canny, my lady," replied Janet, glancing behind her at her mistress's word, "but I think I can mend matters a little;" and so saying, she touched the logs so smartly that they spluttered and emitted showers of sparks, till the whole room gleamed warm and ruddy with reflected brightness.

"That is better, Janet," cried Fay, delightedly: "but where are you going, Mrs. Heron?" for the housekeeper was making mysterious signs that her lady should follow her to a curtained recess; "indeed," she continued, wearily, "I am very tired, and would rather see nothing more."

"Don't be too sure of that, my lady," returned Mrs. Heron, smiling, and her tone made Fay follow her at once.

But the next moment she uttered a little scream of delight, for there, hidden away behind the ruby curtains, was a tiny room—"a wee blue-lined nestie," fitted up as a boudoir or morning-room. The bow window promised plenty of light, a cheerful modern paper covered the wall, with one or two choice landscapes; the snowy rug; the soft luxurious couch and low easy-chairs, covered with delicate blue cretonne; the writing-tables, and bookcase, were all so suggestive of use and comfort. Two lovebirds nestled like green blossoms in their gilded cage, and a white Persian kitten was purring before the fire.

"Oh, the dear room!" exclaimed Fay, in a perfect ecstasy, and then oblivious of her dignity, her fatigue, and the presence of the stately housekeeper, Lady Redmond sat down on the soft white rug, and lifted the kitten on her lap.

"I had a Persian kitten once," she observed, innocently; "but I took her down to the cowslip meadow and lost her. We called her the White Witch, she was so pretty and so full of mischief. I made myself quite ill crying over her loss, we were so afraid she was killed," and here Fay buried her face in the little creature's fur, as she rocked herself to and fro in the fire-light.

Mrs. Heron and Janet exchanged looks. Janet was smiling, but the housekeeper's face wore a puzzled expression; her new mistress bewildered her.

The worthy soul could make nothing of these sudden changes: first a tiny woman rustling in silks, and holding her head like a little queen, with a plaintive voice speaking sweet words of welcome; then a pale, tired lady peering into corners and averse to shadows; and now, nothing but a pretty child rocking herself to and fro with a kitten in her arms. No wonder Mrs. Heron shook her head rather gravely as she left the room.

"What on earth will my master do with a child like that?" she thought; "she will not be more of a companion to him than that kitten—but there, he knows his own business best, and she is a pretty creature." But all the same, Mrs. Heron still shook her head at intervals, for all the household knew that Margaret Ferrers, the sister of the blind vicar of Sandycliffe, was to have come to the Hall as its mistress; and the housekeeper's faithful eyes had already noticed the cloud on her master's brow.

"'Marry in haste and repent at leisure,' that is what many a man had done to his cost," she soliloquised, as she bustled about her comfortable room. "Well, she is a bonnie child, and he's bound to make her happy; she will be like a bit of sunshine in the old Hall if he does not damp her cheerfulness with his gloomy moods."

A little while afterwards, Ellerton met his little mistress wandering about the Hall, and ushered her into the damask drawing-room. Fay was looking for her husband.

She had escaped from Janet, and had been seeking him some time, opening doors and stumbling into endless passages, but always making her way back somehow to the focus of light—the big hall; and feeling drearily as though she were some forlorn princess shut up in an enchanted castle, who could not find her prince.

(To be continued.)

Applauded the Speaker.

While Senator Harris was speaking at Cynthiana the other day, says the Louisville Courier-Journal, a half-intoxicated Irishman, who had crawled upon the rear of the platform, interrupted him several times with remarks that were not quite intelligible. Finally Mr. Harris turned to the man and said:

"Please don't interrupt me, my friend. I am not much used to public speaking, and if you want to talk, I'll have to quit."

"Bless yez!" said the Irishman, "it's not after interruptin' ye I am. I'm only approvin' of what ye say. Faith, and I didn't know it was in yez to do as well as yer doin."

The Senator from Madison was completely knocked out by this speech, but he bowed his thanks to the Hibernian and joined heartily in the laughter which the latter's response had caused.

Discharged the Prisoners.

A constable recently brought a man before a Justice of the Peace in a Dakota "no license" county charged with selling liquor.

"Well, Jim," said the Justice, addressing the officer, "where's the licker he was selling?"

"They had just finished drinkin' the last of it, Your Honor."

"Hey?" thundered the court.

"I say it was all gone 'fore I got there."

"All gone before you got there! Great Scott, where was you all the time? Do you think I am goin' on with a case like this without some licker put in as evidence for the court to sample? Let the prisoner go, and mebby he'll bring some more to town. And you see that you get around and make your arrest just before he begins to sell, and not after it's all been swallered by a lot o'fellers that ain't half as dry as the court!" —Dakota Bell.

What Caused the Delay.

We are a little behind with the paper this week, but ask to be excused for the reason that we have had to cook, wash, iron, milk the cow, do the press work, entertain distinguished people and keep the flies off with one hand while writing with the other.—Santa Anna (Tex.) Enterprise.

Building Monuments.

Through life we build our monuments
  Of honor and, perhaps, of fame;
The little and the great events
  Are blocks of glory or of shame.

The modest, humble and obscure,
  Living unnoticed and unknown,
May raise a shaft that will endure
  Longer than pyramids of stone.

The carven statue turns to dust,
  And marble obelisks decay;
But deeds of pity, faith and trust
  No storms of fate can sweep away.

Their base stands on the rock of right,
  Their apex reaches to the skies;
They glow with the increasing light
  Of all the circling centuries.

Our building must be good or bad;
  In words we speak, in deeds we do;
On sand or granite must be laid
  The shaft that shows us false or true.

How do we build—what can we show
  For hours and days and years of toil?
Is the foundation firm below?
  Is it on rock or sandy soil?

The hand that lifts the fallen up,
  That heals a heart or binds a wound,
That gives the needed crust and cup,
  Is building upon solid ground.

Is there a block of stainless white
  Within the monumental wall,
On which the sculptured skill can write:
  "He builded well; so should we all!"

—Christian Intelligencer.

A Fish Jewel Case.

Giles Busby, a Toledo fishmonger, was cleaning a white fish last Monday, and in the larger intestines of the fish he found a diamond ring. The ring had engraved upon its inner surface "J. A. B., Chicago, '69." Busby forwarded the ring to the Chief of Police in this city. Yesterday Mrs. Julia A. Lennox, of 12 Lennox place, identified and recovered the ring. She tells an interesting story of its loss. In 1869 she, as Miss Bennett, became engaged to Mr. Lennox, and he gave her this diamond ring, for which he paid $450. Upon their bridal trip in 1871 Mrs. Lennox lost this ring; while she was washing her hands in the toilet room of the Pullman car the ring slipped from her finger and dropped through the waste pipe. As the train happened to be crossing the bridge over the St. Lawrence River, near Montreal, just at that time the bereaved bride had no hope of recovering the ring. There are no white fish in the St. Lawrence; the theory is that a small fish seized upon the ring, and that at some future time this small fish, while cruising about the lakes, fell a prey to the white fish in which the long-lost ring was discovered. Giles Busby, the Toledo fishmonger, received from Mr. Lennox a check for $100 for his honesty.—Chicago News.

Is a Bustle a Garter?

Mr. Justice Kekewich was occupied yesterday with the hearing of an action relating to patents in dress improvers. The court was strewn with various specimens of these articles, and considerable amusement was caused by the spectacle of a judge and several leading counsel, including the Attorney-General, arguing gravely on the intricacies of the various designs for dress improvers.

Mr. Justice Kekewich, after looking at several designs, said: I hope you are going to produce another of these articles, Mr. Aston, which I do not see here. It is called the Jubilee. (Laughter.)

Mr. Aston—I have never heard of it, my Lord.

His Lordship—It is one which when a lady sits down plays the National Anthem. (Great laughter.)

Later on Mr. Aston argued that a dress improver was virtually the same as a garter.

His Lordship—Do you mean that seriously.

Mr. Aston—Yes I do, my Lord. They are the same, though not in size.

His Lordship—Very well, Mr. Aston, I can see I shall want a jury of matrons on this case before it is done.—Pall Mall Gazette.

The City Man as a Farmer.

(From Our Country Home.)

CAPITAL STOCK FIRST YEAR.

O Conceit.
O Money.
O Farm.
O Practical Knowledge.
O Experience.

CAPITAL STOCK END OF TEN YEARS.

O Experience.
O Practical Knowledge.
O Farm.
O Money
O Conceit.

Attacked by a Steer.

Mr. Andrew Aitken, of Paris station, was attacked by a steer on the road the other day. After dodging the first charge, Mr. Aitken made for the fence, but before he got there the wild steer was upon him, threw him to the ground, and began a savage attack on his prostrate form. Mr. Aitken is not only a courageous man but a man of cool nerve. He kept his presence of mind at this moment of deadly peril and managed by a series of quick movements to avoid a thrust from the long, sharp horns. Finally the opportunity he wanted arrived. Turning quickly on his back he grasped the nose of the beast as it made a blind lunge at him, and held it by the cartilage in a vice like grip. His extraordinary strength enabled him to retain his hold, which he increased with the other hand, and so he held the steer until the drover got a rope and tied its horns to its fore leg.

Lonely Jacob's Ladder.

On Mount Whitney, the highest mountain in California, at a level 14,000 feet above the sea and 1,500 feet above the timber line, where there is no soil and no moisture save snow and hail and ice, there grows a little flower shaped like a bell flower, gaudy in colors of red, purple and blue. It is called Jacob's Ladder, and its fragrance partakes of the white jasmine. It blooms alone, for it not only has no floral associate, but there is no creature, not even a bird or insect, to keep it company.—Eureka (Nev.) Sentinel.

It is only within the past 500 years that women have danced publicly with men. Italy first began the custom, but the Church condemned it.

A DIABOLICAL CONCERT.

Hon. S. S. Cox Describes the Song of the Donkeys of Prinkipos.

The following is an extract from the Hon. S. S. Cox's recent Tammany speech: Last summer it was my pleasure to live in one of the isles of the princes. It is called Prinkipos. It is a few miles below Constantinople in the Sea of Marmora. It is a sort of Saratoga for pleasure and health seekers, set on a mountainous island of pines—a paradise—a new South, bursting out of the old harried Propontis! There was one drawback to the pleasures of Prinkipos. The isle, like that of Shakspeare's "Tempest," was "full of strange noises"—not the nightingale in the evening, nor the cocks at dawn, nor the shepherds, nor the vendors of fish, nor the dry cicada, nor the flap of the American flag in front of our legation. These were pleasures, and they did not interrupt my morning dreams, but hark! when the sun paints in gold and purple the Asian mountains, I hear an equivocal sort of bruit. Is it the distant thunder of Jove from Mount Olympus, in sight of our isle? Is it the rolling of the Ismid train across the channel? It starts afar! It approaches! It is—No? Yes? It is the grand diapason of the jackasses. (Roars of prolonged laughter.) It frights the isle from its propriety.

Be it known that the isle is full of donkeys. They carry water and vegetables—and tourists—up and down and over the mountains. I am not unfriendly to the donkey. He has a good name for patience and industry. I was familiar with them in and out of Congress. I admire their courage. They can whip a California grizzly.

When Jack salutes Jenny, though miles apart, then the jubilee of noisy affection begins. It is an infernal concert, amorous, jocund and ear-benumbing. It starts with an exaggerated case of asthma. (Laughter.) This rasps your soul. The beast loses, then catches its breath with a harsh, squeakish sibilation, until a roar as of forty hungry lions comes to its relief. (Laughter.) All the powers of wheezy, whistling, gasping suction are exhausted. Then follow terrific expirations of the bellowing monster. (Laughter.) Suction and emission—repeated with "damnable iteration"—until the noise dies out in an agony unutterable. I used to hear when a boy the creaking of the untarred wheels of the Conestoga waggon from Pennsylvania. I have lately heard the screaming shadoof, turned by blind buffalos, pumping the Nile upon the fruitful land of Egypt, but never before or since have I heard such a diabolical concert as this braying of the donkeys of Prinkipos.

How the Monkey Stole the Money.

In a house on the Boulevard Napoleon of Toulouse, a woman locked up her money in a desk and went out shopping; on her return she missed three napoleons, a gold five-franc piece and a franc in silver. There was no trace of a burglary. Very much bewildered by these losses, the good woman was deep in reflection over the matter when she heard a roar of laughter from her neighbor's garden. "Oh, the thief!" cried several persons at once. "Where has he stolen this?" The dame descended instantly, ran out and said: "Oh! my money, messieurs; where is the thief?" "He is up a tree, madame," pointing up to a monkey in a high branch above them, "but here is the money!" The monkey, who certainly would be an invaluable assistant to a burglar, had been seen to climb into the window of one of the good lady's rooms, had unlocked a drawer, found the money and, concealing it in his jowl, had brought it to his master. I find that no less an authority than Buffon declares that a female chimpanzee who went out to service at Loango made the beds, swept the house and so far assisted in the cooking as to turn the spit. M. de Grandpre, an officer of the French navy, tells of another chimpanzee, on board a French man-of-war, which assists the cook and turns the capstan and furls sail as well as any of the sailors. In China monkeys help in the tea picking, and Lord Monboddo used to gravely contend that apes could talk readily enough, but that their superior cunning told them to hold their tongues lest they should be put to hard work.—Leeds Mercury.

A Life Wasted on Perpetual Motion.

George Johnson, aged 78, died at the Bristol Town Farm on Sunday. He was an interesting character, his chief notoriety being in his effort to perfect perpetual motion. He became so engaged in this subject about 40 years ago, at the time of the perpetual motion craze, that his mind became unbalanced, and since that time he contrived several ingenious devices which are curiosities. Mr. Johnson was a mechanic of more than common skill in the use of tools, yet he was never able to use his ability to accumulate any property.—Hartford Times.

Slow Starvation.

Rev. D. Frank Culley, missionary to Labrador coast of the Society for the Propagation of the Gospel, has published a letter in the St. John's (Nfld.) Mercury, in which a painful account of the slow starvation of the people is detailed. He cites instances where villages had to subsist on rock cod for months; where men walked hundreds of miles for flour and could only get one barrel.

Driven to Desperation.

Jack—What! Are you smoking cigarettes?

Harry—Yes, dash it all! Cora refused my offer of marriage last night, and I don't care now what becomes of me.—Tid Bits.

Sound Advice.

An innocent Cheyenne man wrote to a Denver sport the other day and asked the question: "How can a man get rich at poker?" The sport promptly replied: "Don't poke."—Denver News.

A Cheerful Believer.

A farmer stood at the Ithaca gas well yesterday and sadly declared it was just ruining Bible prophecy to dig such things. On being asked to explain he said: "If the oil and gas is all pumped out of the earth, don't it stand to reason that there will be nothing left inside for the final burning up of the world. It is just spoiling Bible prophecy, and ought to be stopped."—Elmira Gazette.

HALTER OR ALTAR.

A Sarnia Man Prefers Death to Matrimony.

A passenger who arrived here last evening from Sarnia tells of a startling tragedy that took place in that town yesterday. It would seem that a carpenter named Frank Howard has recently been paying marked attentions to a Miss Lafarge, whose friends are said to live in Tilbury Centre. Matters finally came to a crisis, and the pair were to have been married yesterday at the Farmers' Hotel in Sarnia. All the preparations were made, the would-be bride, the witnesses and the clergyman were on time, but the bridegroom was missing. After waiting for a considerable time a general search was instituted, and the dead body of Howard was found suspended by a rope to one of the beams in the barn on the hotel premises. It was evidently a case of suicide, the motive for which has not yet transpired.—London Advertiser.

Latest from the Northwest.

Superintendent White, of the C.P.R., who has just returned from the West, says the trestle bridges between Calgary and Donald, B.C., will be made to give place to iron bridges.

Mr. Burgess, Deputy Minister of the Interior, has returned from his Western trip and will await here the arrival of the Minister of the Interior.

Gophers are doing considerable damage in some portions of the Territories. Mr. Crawford, a member of the Northwest Council, says that the municipality of Indian Head, which offers a bonus for their destruction, in the month of May last paid for seventy-five thousand tails at three cents per tail.

The United States authorities having granted the extradition of Fant, Chief McRae's assailant, he was brought to the city to-night.

Mr. Daly, M.P., was banquetted by his constituents at Brandon to-night. The general tone of the speeches shows that the Province is entirely united on the subject of disallowance, though a portion of the West does not like the way in which Winnipeg has been, according to their views exclusively running things.

A Victoria, B.C., despatch states that the Grand Trunk Railway will apply to the British Columbia Legislature at its next session for a franchise for a railway through Yellowhead Pass and Chilcoutin county via Bute Inlet to Esquimalt.

Already between five and six miles of the Red River Valley Railway have been graded.

Captain W. C. B. Graham, Dominion Immigrant Agent, has received a despatch informing him that 822 Icelanders left Glasgow en route to Manitoba on July 7th by the steamer Buenos Ayres. The party is expected to arrive in Quebec on Monday and to reach Winnipeg at the end of next week. The Icelanders who arrived last Saturday have not yet taken up land, but have nearly all secured situations.

Hon. Alexander Mackenzie and Mr. Duncan McIntyre passed through the city for Banff this morning. The ex-Premier appeared to be still very weak.

About $100,000 will be expended this year in the construction and repair of Northwest Mounted Police barracks.

It is believed that there is every likelihood of the construction of the Northwest Central Railway being deferred for at least another year.

The Scribe at the Circus.

Oh, the drums were heard and the piccolo note, as the circus up-town paraded, and the shorn-off mule and whiskered goat and the elephant umber shaded. I followed it calmly at early morn, my work and my labors spurning, and I harked to the sound of a rusty horn with a wild and unhallowed yearning. Few and short were the tunes they played, and they paused not at all to monkey; so I slowly followed the route they made at the heels of the lop-eared donkey. I bought up a seat at the show that night, and looked at the limber woman, who tied herself in a knot so tight she seemed more like hemp than human. And I eagerly looked at the wondrous bloke who swallowed some cotton blazing, and blew from his nostrils a cloud of smoke till I thought he was sheol raising. And I watched the clown as he ran and rolled and stood in a dozen poses, and worked off a string of jokes so old they came from the time of Moses.—Atchison (Kan.) Globe.

The Address of Venus and Adonis.

The non-delivery of a telegram sent from Manchester to Lichfield a week or so ago was attended by some amusing circumstances. Some old tapestry was lent by Mr. Litchfield, an art dealer, to the Jubilee Exhibition, and, requiring the return of a certain panel, he particularized in his telegram by stating the size and subject, "Venus and Adonis," ending the message with sender's name "Litchfield." A clerk at once replied to "Venus and Adonis, Lichfield," and after making every effort to deliver the message, the Post-Office officials were constrained to wire back to Manchester that no Venus and Adonis could be found in the cathedral city.—Electrical Review.

French as She is Spoke.

Mrs. A. (who is taking French lessons)—"Now, Bridget, when Prof. Blanque comes you must say 'entrez' to him, and he will know what you mean and come into the parlor." The bell rings and Bridget goes to the door. It is the professor. "Ontario," says Bridget. "Wud ye walk into the parlor, sur?" The professor walked in, and Bridget reported her triumph to the cook.—Harper's Bazar.

War to the Knife.

Miss Shawsgarden (of St. Louis to Miss Breezy, of Chicago)—"Well, how is everything in Chicago? Dull, as usual, I suppose."

Miss Breezy—"No, things are looking very bright. How is the pasturage in St. Louis"—Charleston News and Courier.

In a series of experiments made by the Ohio Agricultural Experiment Station on cabbage worms, the most efficacious remedy was found to be a mixture of one ounce of pyrethrum with buckwheat flour.

That is the last novel I shall ever read," said a gentleman, throwing the book down in disgust. "What's the matter, dear?" inquired his wife, "doesn't it end happily?" No, they were married."

A Cure for Whooping Cough.

Maryhill is a large and important suburb of Glasgow. On Thursday a travelling candy-man and rag-gatherer, with a cart drawn by an ass, drew up in front of a row of houses known as Pirrat's row, a little off the highway at Maryhill, Glasgow. Two children living in this quarter are suffering from whooping cough. After a short conversation with the proprietor of the ass, the mothers of the two children took up a position, one on each side of the animal. One woman then took one of the children and passed it below the ass's belly to the other woman, the child's face being toward the ground. The woman on the other side caught hold of the child, and, giving it a gentle somersault, handed it back to the other woman over the ass, the child's face being toward the sky. The process having been repeated three times, the child was taken away to the house, and then the second child was similarly treated. While this was going on two other children were brought to undergo the magical cure. In order that the operation may have its due effect the ass must not be forgotten, and at the close of the ceremony each mother must carry her child to the head of the animal and allow it to eat something, such as bread or biscuits, out of the child's lap. This proceeding having been performed in turn by the four mothers, the prescribed course was concluded. When it began there was not many people present, but before it was finished quite a number of spectators had gathered. From inquiries made it seems the mothers are thoroughly satisfied that their children are the better of the enchantment.—Notes and Queries.

Egyptian Street Cries.

The street cries of any city are full of interest, but those of Eastern thoroughfares are particularly significant. The Muskee, of Cairo, its great native street, is a singular, Oriental looking place, always crowded with strange people, calling somewhat after this fashion:

Seller of sugar and water—Refresh thy heart! Quench the heat!

Seller of raisin water—It is well clarified. Oh my son! By the life of thy father, it is well clarified!

Milkman—Let our morning be white!

Pretzel seller—O all nourisher! O all good! O determiner! O omniscient pretzels!

Beggar—I am the guest of God and of the prophet. I have not yet breakfasted.

Passer-by (in reply)—God opens to thee the hearts of men!

Another (to one sneezing)—Praise God! Thank God!

All present—God have mercy on you!

The sneezer—God guide me and you! God reward you

Muezzin (from a mosque)—God is greatest! I declare that there is no god but God! I declare that Mohammed is the prophet of God! Come to prayer! Come to salvation! Prayer is better than sleep! God is very great! There is no God but God!

Seller of wheat cake—These belong to thee, O fasting man! How they did knead thee in the night, O cakes!

Rose seller—The rose was a thorn; she bloomed from the sweat of the prophet.

And thus the cries continue, hour after hour and day after day.

Ethics of Gambling.

Paterfamilias (at the breakfast table)—"Mabel, I have learned that young Goithard, who comes to see you, gambles occasionally."

Daughter (composedly)—"Oh, you mustn't believe all you hear, pa."

P.—"Well, I know he has been seen playing billiards, and you must drop him. Nice way for a young man to begin life. Let me have the part of the paper with the stock market, please."

D.—"Certainly, pa. I don't think there is a great deal of harm in billiards."

P. (warmly)—"The loser pays, and what is that but gambling, eh? (Consults his paper.) Yes, gambling. That's the only word for it—— What! hello! Big drop in Sou'-sou' west-half-west-little-western! Gracious gimeni! Five hundred gone at a single slap! Whew! I was an idiot to risk it."

D.—"What's the matter, pa?"

P.—"Ah—a—a—nothing, nothing. A little disappointment; that's all."—Philadelphia Inquirer.

Why Hannah Left the Church.

A lady was relating to me the other day her trials and tribulations in the matter of arranging the household machinery so that the inevitable hitches and jars of the inner workings should not be apparent to the outside world. In describing the various idiosyncrasies of servants which had come under her notice she said: "Some years ago I had a good settled white woman as house servant, who, though of most exemplary deportment in every other respect, seemed to consider Sundays as in nowise different from the other days of the week. Finally I said to her: 'Hannah, why don't you take your Sundays off? You should take some advantage of the oppportunity to go to church.' You can appreciate my feelings when she replied: 'Well, Mrs. ——, I used to go reglar to church, but I never jined. My next door neighbor was a shoutin' member, and I tell you what she done—she scalded my dog. That's ben twenty years ago and I ain't never went to church since.'"—Washington Capital.

The Old Maids at the Jubilee.

An elderly maiden lady, living near Sidcup, wrote to the Lord Chamberlain a few weeks ago saying that she believed every class of Her Majesty's subjects would be represented at the Abbey excepting one, "the old maids" of Her Majesty's Dominions, and she asked for two tickets to have the honor of representing the "old maids," wishing to have a lady friend to accompany her. In due course she received a polite reply from Lord Lathom, saying that he was "quite unable to resist the force of her argument," and would, therefore, send her a ticket for the Abbey, whither, of course, the old lady went on Tuesday week.—London Court Journal.

Lord Palmerston used to say that one of his best services to the country was the purchase of the camp ground at Aldershot for fifteen pounds per acre. Since then, and largely as a consequence of the establishment of the camp, land at Aldershot has been sold at the rate of a thousand pounds an acre.

The Passing Crowd.

Did you ever stand in the crowded street,
  In the light of a city lamp,
And list to the tread of the million feet
  In their quaintly musical tramp?
As the surging crowd goes to and fro,
  'Tis a pleasant sight between,
To mark the figures that come and go
  In the ever-changing scene.

Here the publican walks with the sinner proud
  And the priest in his gloomy cowl,
And Dives stalks in the motley crowd
  With Lazarus cheek by jowl;
And the daughter of toil, with her fresh young heart
  As pure as her spotless fame,
Keeps step with the woman who makes her mart
  In the haunts of sin and shame.

When time shall have beaten the day's tattoo,
  And in dusky armor night
Is treading with echoless footstep through
  The gloom of the silent night,
Some few of these shall be daintily fed
  And sink to slumbers sweet,
While many will go to a sleepless bed
  With never a crumb to eat!

Ah, me! when the hours go joyfully by
  How little we stopped to heed
Our brothers' and sisters' despairing cry
  In their woe and bitter need.
Yet such a world as the angels sought
  This world of ours we'd call,
If the brotherly love our Father taught
  Was felt by each for all.

A Cat and a Parrot.

The Danbury News says: Dr. Snow has a very fine cat and a parrot. Both occupy prominent quarters in his office, the cat most of the time monopolizing his chair, and the parrot confined in a cage hangs beside a window. As is natural, the cat and parrot have become friends and take great interest in each other. The other day the doctor returned from his round of calls, and on entering his office was met by his cat, which seemed to be evincing great uneasiness. She ran on before him and kept looking up and mewing; she would advance a short distance ahead of him and then run back. The doctor concluded that she was hungry and went and procured a piece of meat and offered it to her. She refused to touch it, but kept up her running back and forth. Finally she sprang upon the sill of the open window and looked out and mewed. This called the doctor to the window, and he looked out, and then discovered the cause of the cat's distress, the parrot, which was walking majestically about the yard in the grass. He had escaped from his cage and flown out of the window, and the cat was trying to tell her master about it. She succeeded by her sign language. The parrot was easily captured and returned to his quarters.

A Toronto Boy's Romantic Adventures.

Four years ago Willie Noland, then aged 9, ran away from his home in this city, bent on striking out for himself. His family made every effort to locate him, but without avail. His brother, Mr. Richard Noland, of the Montreal House, never, however, gave up the search, and as late as Wednesday last wrote to a friend in the States inquiring if he had seen or heard anything of the adventurous lad. By a strange coincidence the youngster turned up at the hotel yesterday—well dressed, healthy and with more than "$15 in his inside pocket." The joy attending the reunion between the two brothers may be imagined. Young Noland has been all over the continent since he left Toronto, having got into the circus business. His presence in the city at this time is due to the fact that he is travelling with Burk's show as a contortionist. His professional name is Willie Leroux, and his performances are wonderfully clever. There was a happy time at the Montreal House last night over the lost having been found.—Toronto World.

Two Midsummer Love Stories.

A young German carpenter was married to a pretty Bohemian girl in Omaha the other day after a six months' courtship, which must have been conducted entirely in pantomime, as neither can speak a word of the other language. The services of an interpreter were needed at the altar, but the young couple seemed as happy as if they had talked sweet nothings into each other's ears all their lifetime.

A romantic wedding took place at Edwardsville, Ill., the other day, when Prof. James O. Duncan, of Vandalia, a widower, was married to Mrs. Lillie Carroll, of Springfield, a widow. The marriage was the culmination of a series of coincidents in the lives of the wedded pair. The Rev. J. B. Thompson, who performed the ceremony, officiated in the same capacity at Prof. Duncan's first marriage and also at Mrs. Carroll's first marriage, and preached the funeral sermon at the death of Prof. Duncan's wife and at the death of Mrs. Carroll's husband. It was this strange fatality of circumstances which induced the couple to seek again the services of Mr. Thompson.

A Jubilee Story.

Two Scotch fishwives in London were talking about the Jubilee the other day. "Eh, wumman," said one to the other, "can ye tell me what a jubilee is, for I hear a' the folk spakin' aboot it?" "Ou, ay," replied the other, "I can tell ye that; ye see, when a man and a wumman has been marrit for five-and-twenty year, that's a siller waddin'; and when they've been marrit for fifty year that's a gouden waddin'; but when the man's deed, that's a jubilee!"

Cute John.

Chinamen entertain very exalted ideas of justice. The other day a citizen, who left a shirt at a Chinese laundry to be washed and dressed, was told when he went to get it that it had been lost. The Celestial washerman said he might, perhaps, find the missing article some day.

"But I want it now," said the owner.

"Belly good. Don't be aflaid," was the reply. "If I no find shirtee, you no pay for washee."—Toronto Mail.

Knew Their Friends.

A young physician who had recently hung out his sign came home one day in high spirits.

"Do you know, my dear," he said to his wife, "I'm really becoming quite well known here. The undertakers bow to me lready."

"Does Mr. Stirling live here?" asked a mechanic of a woman he met at the door. "Yes, sir." "I have come down to clean out his furnace". "You're just a littlet late; the sheriff has just been here."

THIS PAPER may be found on file at Geo. P. Rowell & Co's Newspaper Advertising Bureau (10 Spruce St.), where advertising contracts may be made for it IN NEW YORK.

THE ADVANCE.

Is published

Every Thursday,

FROM THE OFFICE,

Wellingwood Street, - - Flesherton, Ont.

TERMS OF SUBSCRIPTION:

$1 per annum when paid strictly in advance
$1.50 per annum when not so paid.

A. R. FAWCETT,
Editor and Proprietor.

FLESHERTON:
THURSDAY, AUG. 4, 1887.

HONESTY.

It is not often we hear such vigorous and practical sermons on the subject of honesty as was delivered in the Methodist church here last Sabbath evening by the Rev. J. W. Shilton, B. A. But we do often hear sermons in which honesty is vaguely hinted at; or, if touched upon at all, an impression is created that it is but a matter of secondary importance. Sometimes it is handled with such mathematical precision, that it fails to make any impression upon the mind of the average hearer. At others it is touched so lightly as to suggest the proximity of dynamite, powder and other combustibles. Perchance the speaker fears to give offence! Which reminds us of a local preacher — a very eccentric but pious man—who, one Sabbath many years ago, preached a sermon in a little village church in this County. In the course of his remarks he referred to the devil. "Some of your mealy-mouthed young preachers," he said, call him the Evil One; some call him the Serpent; some call him the Old Serpent; some even overcome the peculiar delicacy of their feelings and call him the Devil; but brethren"—here the speaker's eyes flashed and clenching his fist he struck the pulpit with terrific force—"I say it's the Devil and the damned Devil!" Truly some of our preachers are as "mealy-mouthed" in dealing with the question of honesty as they are in dealing with matters of much less importance.

What is a man "called of God" to preach the Gospel for, if it is not to speak "the truth, the whole truth and nothing but the truth" concerning God's dealings with man and man's duty to his Creator! It is not honest to withold part of the truth in secular matters, how much less so in those pertaining to the immortal well-being of the soul. And yet how much dishonesty is practiced in thousands of pulpits throughout the world, where men stifle their honest convictions—the result of patient, careful and thoughtful study and research—because some particular creed has ordained that "thus far shalt thou go and no further!" How he hedges, and tacks, and shortens sail, treads on the dangerous(?) dividing line, and finally drops into the well-worn old ruts once travelled by men who had neither his talents nor his capabilities for acquiring knowledge; but who, nevertheless were honest, circumstances and surroundings taken into consideration. Thought has advanced and is advancing, and with the increased facilities for mental development at our disposal, and an ever widening circle of intelligence constantly at work diffusing rays of spiritual and intellectual light among the masses, it is not to be wondered at that the fallacies entertained and cherished by the sturdy and pious people of past centuries, have been exploded. The arts and sciences have proportionately advanced. Everything seems tending to a higher degree of perfection, in the material as well as in the spiritual world. But we digress, and in that respect are like many speakers, who, having chosen a text, wander from Genesis to Revelation and back again, hunting for ideas, but never again referring to their text!

The sermon by Rev. Mr. Shilton was eminently practical. He spoke "straight to his text." He showed that a man was possessed of a threefold nature, viz., the body, the mind and the soul, and that he should deal honestly with each. Taking for his text the words, "Render unto Caesar the things which are Caesar's and unto God the things that are God's," the speaker proceeded to "hew to the line let the chips fall where they might." It was man's duty to be honest with his body, and not overtax its capibilities by working sixteen and eighteen hours during the day. (N.B. —It is needless to say many people are extremely honest in this latter particular.) He should be honest with his mind, and last but most important of all, he should be honest with his soul. Of course honesty in our dealings with each other formed a leading theme of the sermon. And so it should, for without it religion would be a farce and a mockery. People must deal squarely and honestly with each other if they ever hope to reach the "far better land." In doing so they are honoring their Creator and becoming more and more like him. How beautifully the noble minded Burns put it:

"Princes and lords are but the breath of kings,
An honest man's the noblest work of God."

One cannot fail to be struck with the fact, that sermons, such as the one we more particularly allude to, create lasting impressions. Being intellectual and logical, as well as breathing the purest religious sentiments, they appeal with equal force to the doubter and to the believer. Thoughts—healthy thoughts—are carried beyond the environments of the sacred edifice, and who knows but that the seed thus sown in honest hearts may have good results, although, perchance, not seen until "after many days?" The believer is strengthened and blessed and goes out into the world with lighter tread and with a keener desire to reach greater heights in his religious life. His whole being is permeated with pure desires and lofty motives. Step by step he marches heavenward. Thorns there are, and rocks, and precipices, and by-paths, but onward and upward—as if on eagle's pinions—he pursues a steady course to that haven where immortal life and the best company in the universe await him.

WHAT IS IT? Not a snuff, powder or liquid, but a preparation peculiar to itself. Easy to use, pleasant in effect, Nasal Balm will positively cure cold in the head, Catarrh and kindred disorders.

The Appetite

May be increased, the Digestive organs strengthened, and the Bowels regulated, by taking Ayer's Pills. These Pills are purely vegetable in their composition. They contain neither calomel nor any other dangerous drug, and may be taken with perfect safety by persons of all ages.

I was a great sufferer from Dyspepsia and Constipation. I had no appetite, became greatly debilitated, and was constantly afflicted with Headache and Dizziness. I consulted our family doctor, who prescribed for me, at various times, without affording more than temporary relief. I finally commenced taking Ayer's Pills. In a short time my digestion and appetite my bowels were regulated, and, by the time I finished two boxes of these Pills my tendency to headaches had disappeared, and I became strong and well.—Darius M. Logan, Wilmington, Del.

IMPROVED

I was troubled, for over a year, with Loss of Appetite, and General Debility. I commenced taking Ayer's Pills, and, before finishing half a box of this medicine, my appetite and strength were restored. —C. O. Clark, Danbury, Conn.

Ayer's Pills are the best medicine known to me for regulating the bowels, and for all diseases caused by a disordered Stomach and Liver. I suffered for over three years with Headache, Indigestion, and Constipation. I had no appetite, and was weak and nervous most of the time.

BY USING

three boxes of Ayer's Pills, and, at the same time dieting myself, I was completely cured. My digestive organs are now in good order, and I am in perfect health.—Philip Lockwood, Topeka, Kans.

Ayer's Pills have benefited me wonderfully. For months I suffered from Indigestion and Headache, was restless at night, and had a bad taste in my mouth every morning. After taking one box of Ayer's Pills, all these troubles disappeared, my food digested well, and my sleep was refreshing.—Henry C. Hemmenway, Rockport, Mass.

I was cured of the Piles by the use of Ayer's Pills. They not only relieved me of that painful disorder, but gave me increased vigor, and restored my health.—John Lazarus, St. John, N. B.

Ayer's Pills,

Prepared by Dr. J. C. Ayer & Co., Lowell, Mass. Sold by all Druggists and Dealers in Medicine.

The

CHILDRENS HEALTH.

One of Natures Kindest Gifts is a Healthy Constitution. Guard it against disease by using

Siamese Worm Powders.

Worms are the fruitful cause of many disorders in Children. SIAMESE WORM POWDERS will expel Worms in every case where they exist, will regulate the Stomach and Bowels at the same time. Use them, you won't regret it.

Peck's Pleasant Pills!

Should always be used for Sick Headache. Their operation is mild and pleasant. They strike home each time when used for a Disordered Liver. Ask for them. Get them. Don't forget the name, Peck's Pleasant Pills.

If your druggist has not the above preparation in Stock, W. W. STEPHEN & CO., of Meaford, will send them to you prepaid on receipt of 25c. for either, 5 of each, or assorted for $1.00.

W. W. STEPHEN & CO.

Druggists, Wholesale & Retail,

MEAFORD.

IN the matter of WILLIAM HOGG, of the Village of Flesherton Station, in the County of Grey, General Storekeeper.

The insolvent has made an assignment of his Estate to the undersigned, in pursuance of an Act respecting Assignments for the benefit of Creditors, 48 Vic., Chap. 26, and the Creditors are notified to meet at No. 26 Wellington Street East, Toronto, on Monday 18th July, 1887, at 4 o'clock, p.m., to receive statements of his affairs, appoint Inspectors, and for the ordering of the affairs of the Estate generally.

And Notice is hereby given, that after 15th August, next, the said Trustee will proceed to distribute the assets of the said Debtor among the parties entitled thereto, having regard only to the claims of which Notice shall have been given, and that he will not be liable for the assets, or any part thereof so distributed to any person or persons of whose debt or claim he shall not then have had notice.

E. R. C. CLARKSON,
Trustee.

26 Wellington St. East, Toronto.
4th July, 1887. 316-317

Agents, Agents!

NOW READY—|—OUR NEW BOOK.

EARTH, SEA AND SKY

OR

Marvels of the Universe

Being a full and graphic description of all that is wonderful in every Continent of the Globe, in the world of waters and the starry Heavens. Containing thrilling adventures on land and sea, renowned discoveries of the world's greatest explorers in all ages, and remarkable phenomena in every realm of nature. Embracing the striking physical features of the earth the peculiar characteristics of the human race, of animals, birds, insects, etc., including a vivid description of the Atlantic, Pacific and Indian Oceans and of the Polar Seas, the monstors of the deep, beautiful seashells and plants, singular fishes and dwellers in the world of waters, remarkable ocean currents, etc., together with the amazing phenomena of the solar and starry systems, by Henry Davenport Northrop, D.D., embellished with over 300 fine engravings. Liberal terms to agents. Oxford Publishing Company, 5 Jordan St., Toronto, Ont. 316-338

ROAD NOTICE.

Township of Artemesia.

Notice is hereby given that the Municipality of Artemesia will after one month from the first publication hereof in the FLESHERTON ADVANCE newspaper, the date of which first publication will be on the 7th day of July, 1887, proceed to pass a By-Law establishing the undermentioned Deviation of road in this Township, viz., from a point numbered 11 on a deviation under By Law 303, made by T. Gilliland, Esq., between Lots 23 and 24 in the 12th Concession, on same bearing to centre of Road, known as Campbell's road, instead of on bearing 42 as mentioned on plan by said Gilliland, which part of said By-Law 303 will be repealed, and also to satisfy the original intention to carry any other parts of said road in the Divisional line of Lots as far as practical.

Council will meet on second Monday of Aug., instead of 1st, to pass it.

W. J. BELLAMY, Township Clerk.

One High-Bred Durham Bull,

"KING BILLY,"

The Royal Champion,

Will stand for service for the year 1887, at Lot 102, 1st Range, W.T. & S.R., Artemesia, at the small sum of 50c. W. C. PARKER

TAMARAC ELIXIR
NATURE'S REMEDY
FOR COUGHS, COLDS, HOARSENESS
THROAT & LUNG COMPLAINTS
INSTANT RELIEF POSITIVE CURE

SOUTHERN ASTHMA CURE
DOUBLE TREATMENT IN EACH PACKAGE
INSTANT RELIEF FOR
ASTHMA AND BRONCHITIS
BY MAIL ON RECEIPT OF PRICE
SAMPLES, 25c.; REGULAR SIZE, $1.00
ADDRESS FULFORD & CO., BROCKVILLE, ONT.

NOTICE.

GRAY CHAMPION!

A THOROUGH-BRED DURHAM BULL, with good pedigree, will stand for service at Lot 142 West T. & S.R., Artemesia. TERMS, $1 if paid on or before Jan. 1st, 1888; otherwise, $1.25.

Also thorough-bred BERKSHIRE BOAR at same place. JACOB A. LEVER.

Farm for Sale!

100 ACRE FARM, 85 acres cleared, in good state of cultivation, Log Barn, Frame Stable and other out-buildings. Good Roughcast House, splendid Cellar, good Well at the door, large Orchard with good bearing Fruit Trees. Lots 148, 149, 150, 3rd Range East, Artemesia. Possession can be had this fall. Title clear. JAMES BEECROFT,
314-319. Proprietor.

WHAT IS IT?

IT IS A FACT AND NO CONTROVERSY THAT

JOHNSON'S

TONIC BITTERS

and NERVINE is the best remedy in the market for nervous diseases of any sort. Hysteria, Loss of Appetite, Debility from loss of fluids or overwork, Paleness of Complexion so often seen in young females and all complaints arising from poverty of blood.

It is a fact and no gainsaying that JOHNSON'S TONIC LIVER PILLS are the very best in the market for diseases caused by Torpid Liver and derrangement of the Stomach or Kidneys.

It is a fact and no one will deny it that JOHNSON'S ALL HEALING WHITE OINTMENT is the best in the market for Burns, Scalds, Chilblains, Salt Rheum, Barbers Itch, Pimples and all Skin Disorders arising from scrofulous taint

W. S. CHRISTOE has been appointed Agent for the above and has them on sale at his Medical Hall, Flesherton. Try for yourselves and be satisfied.

DUNDALK

PUMP WORKS!

C. R. PHILLIP'S,

Manufacturer of all kinds of PUMPS.

Cylinder Check Valve & Cistern Pumps.

Orders Respectfully Solicited and satisfaction guaranteed.

JAMES SULLIVAN,
Tin-Smith, AGENT.
FLESHERTON.

J. B. SLOAN

Has any quantity of Shingles, &c., on hand at Eugenia.

Cheap for Cash.

James Sullivan,

The Tinsmith, - Flesherton

Repairing, Eavestroughing, and in fact everything in the business will receive my prompt and careful attention at reasonable prices.

THE MARKETS.

FLESHERTON.

Carefully Corrected Each Week.

Flour	$4 60 to	4 20
Fall Wheat	$0 75 to	0 75
Spring Wheat	0 75	0 75
Barley	0 80	0 45
Oats	0 26	0 26
Peas	0 47	0 48
Butter	0 14	0 14
Eggs, fresh	0 14	0 14
Potatoes bush	0 50	0 50
Pork	5 60	5 60
Hay, per ton	10 00	10 00
Hides	6 00	7 00
Wool	20	22
Sheepskins	0 40	0 56
Geese	0 05	0 05
Turkeys	0 8	0 8
Chickens per pair	0 25	0 30
Ducks per pair	0 40	0 50

AT GORDON'S

HARNESS SHOP

FLESHERTON,

You will find an assortment of

Heavy and Light Harness,

Whips, Brushes, Curry Combs, Sweat Pads, and the celebrated "Harness Oil."

COLLARS A SPECIALTY.

Cheap for Cash. Call and Examine.

R. J. SPROUL,

Flesherton. Conveyancer, Appraiser, Valuator and Money lender. Deeds, Mortgages, leases and Wills drawn up and Valuations made on shortest notice. Charges very low. Apply to R. J. SPROULE, Postmaster, Flesherton.

CLAYTON'S HARNESS SHOP!

FLESHERTON,

Is the place to get your Harness Collars, &c, made up in good style.

Shop in W. Clayton's Boot & Shoe Store, Flesherton.

HARNESS HARNESS HARNESS.

...If you want Harness, Single or Double, or Horse Blankets, Trunks, Bells, Valises, Curry Combs, Brushes or the celebrated Harness Oil, call & examine before purchasing elsewhere.

R. J. WATSON.
PRICEVILLE.

PHOTOGRAPHY.

MRS. BULMER.

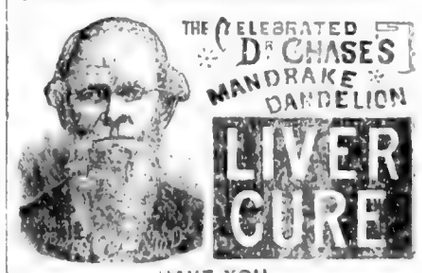
Photographer.

Flesherton - Ont.

Having spent some time in the studio of the famous Toronto Photographer, Mr. S. J. Dixon, where I acquired valuable knowledge in Retouching, I feel assured I can give good general satisfaction. A call respectfully solicited.

MRS. BULMER.

Flesherton, Sept. 17th, 1885.



HAVE YOU

Liver Complaint, Dyspepsia, Indigestion, Biliousness, Jaundice, Headache, Dizziness, Pain in the Back, Costiveness, or any disease arising from a deranged liver, Dr. CHASE'S LIVER CURE will be found a sure and certain remedy.

NATURE'S REMEDY

The unqualified success of Dr. Chase's Liver Cure in Liver Complaint rests entirely with the fact that it is compounded from nature's well-known liver regulators, MANDRAKE AND DANDELION, combined with many other invaluable roots, barks and herbs, having a powerful effect on the Kidneys, Stomach, Bowels and Blood. 600,000 SOLD

Over one-half million of Dr. Chase's Recipe Books were sold in Canada alone. We want every man, woman and child who is troubled with Liver Complaint to try this excellent remedy.

SOMETHING NEW. GIVEN AWAY FREE

Wrapped around every bottle of Dr. Chase's Liver Cure is a valuable Household Medical Guide and Recipe Book (84 pages), containing over 200 useful recipes, pronounced by medical men and druggists as invaluable, and worth ten times the price of the medicine.

TRY CHASE'S CATARRH CURE. A safe and positive remedy. Price, 25 cents.

TRY CHASE'S KIDNEY AND LIVER PILLS. 25 cts. per box.

SOLD BY ALL DEALERS

T. EDMANSON & CO., Sole Agents, Bradford

Flesherton Meat Market.

S. SPIRIT, - - PROPRIETOR.

Cash paid for fat Cattle and Sheep.

Fresh Meats constantly on hand for Cash. Orders promptly filled.

—EUGENIA—

Real Estate Agency

MONEY TO LOAN at lowest rates of interest and on terms of repayment to suit borrower.

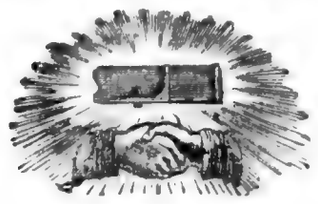
FARMS bought and sold.

CONVEYANCES of all kinds properly executed.

COMMISSIONER for taking affidavits in H.C.J., Agent for the Norwich Fire Insurance Society. All business promptly, carefully and confidentially attended to.

Office, Corner of Inkerman and Napoleon Streets.

HENRY MELDRUM,
AGENT.



Publisher's Announcement!

In the matter of

FINE JOB

Printing!

It is generally conceded that the

Flesherton Advance

TAKES THE

BISCUIT!

EVERY TIME!

Posters! Posters!

From an Eighth Sheet to a mammoth Three-Sheeter—plain or in colors—at prices that will arrest your attention and surprise you.

Auction Sale Bills

WHILE YOU WAIT.

PAMPHLETS!

Big, Little, Great and Small.

Circulars, Bill Heads,
Note Heads, Streamers,
Flyers, Dodgers,
Business Cards,
Visiting Cards,
Shipping Tags,
Labels, etc. etc.

DRUGGISTS' LABELS

As cheap and as good as can be obtained in the city.

New Material

Is added to our stock every Spring and Fall.

NOTICE!

THE ADVANCE will be sent to any address in Canada or the United States for $1 per year; and to England, Ireland, or Scotland for $1.50

THE ADVANCE unquestionably has no superior as a live Local and Family newspaper in Simcoe, Grey, or Bruce.

A. R. FAWCETT,

Editor and Proprietor,

FLESHERTON, ONT.

Poisoned.

A small child of Mr. Theron Patterson (Wiarton) came nearly losing its life on Tuesday last by taking carbolic acid. It appears a neighbor's child had brought the bottle containing the poison into the house not being noticed by Mrs. Patterson, whose child took a small quantity before being discovered. Medical aid was at once summoned and it is believed the child will soon recover. This is another example of the carelessness of some parents in leaving bottles containing poison in the reach of children.—Wiarton Echo.

A Dundalk Item.

The Dundalk Herald is responsible for the following:—"One of our mercantile firms has been annoyed for several days by an obnoxious smell about the premises, arising from some unknown source. A sanitary inspector visited the place and after removing boards and inserting his nasal organ into every crevice and corner, announced his inability to detect the cause. The odor was so disagreeable that the book-keeper had his desk removed to another part of the building, but this did not do any good. Finally, health officer Tedford proceeded to dissect the ink bottle, which was found to contain a thousand or more dead flies. This discovery solved the mystery and the place will not be fumigated."

Bear Captured.

On Sunday morning the 24th July, a bear weighing some 300 pounds was captured by Messrs. J. and D. Hisey, together with J. B. Doner. From what we can learn, it appears that these gentlemen had set a bear trap some days previous, and on visiting the place on the morning mentioned found his bearship securely trapped, having some small saplings gnawed down in his anger at being ensnared. We learn that there are several of these animals in parts of Sunnidale yet, where the boys avail themselves of the opportunity of thinning them out.—Creemore Advertiser.

Accident.

On Monday afternoon an old man named Hamilton McLeod, while digging in the cellar at the rear part of Butchart's new building, had his leg broken near the ankle by a small portion of the earth caving in. Drs. McCullough and Denhart set the injured limb; but it will be some time before he will be able to be around again, two bones being broken. He comes from near Markdale and was dependent on his daily earnings. We understand that Mr. R. P. Butchart has generously offered to pay for necessary attendance and board till the man is well again; but we think it time that a House of Refuge was built by the County, where needy persons could be provided for at the public expense.—Owen Sound Times.

Cowardly and Malicious Assault.

A week ago Sunday night a scene occurred on the 6th con. of Egremont, not far from town which partakes so much of the nature of Western States rowdyism that an effort should be put forth by the authorities to detect the rascals concerned in it. The particulars of the affair as told our reporter by the victim are as follows: About 10 o'clock on the night in question Mr. Robt. Britton, a young man, was on his way home from a neighbors when he was set on near Mr. Andrew Donog's gate by a couple of persons whom in the darkness he was unable to identify. Hearing a step behind him Britton turned around just in time to receive a heavy blow on the shoulder from a club in the hands of his assailant, the blow evidently being aimed at his head. He struck his opponent and was in a fair way to give him the punishment he deserved, when he was struck in the back of the head and rendered insensible by a second person. After stunning their victim the two cowardly miscreants evidently kicked him until they they thought he was done for, as, on regaining his senses, Mr. Britton was so sore from bruises on his body that he could scarcely move, he managed to crawl home and is now able to move around again although the doctor forbids his attempting to work for several weeks. Mt. Forest Representative.

Why They Calls 'Em Bulgarians.

Customer (pointing to dropsical mongrel)—"What kind of a dog is that?"

Dog fancier—"That's a Bulgarian terrier, sir."

Customer—"How terribly fat and swollen he looks!"

Fancier—"Oh, that's the breed, sir! They calls 'em Bulgarians 'cause of the bulge on 'em!"

A Child's Cute Question.

Little Fanny looked intently at her mother for some time. Then she said:

"Mother, you ain't a girl, are you?"

"No, Fanny."

"What are you?"

"I am a woman."

"You were a girl once, weren't you?"

"Yes, Fanny."

"Well, where is that girl now?"

A Roland for an Oliver.

A lawyer driving along a country road asked a woman who was walking in the same direction which way he had to turn to reach B—. The woman gave him directions, and added that she was going in that direction, and would point out the way. "All right, good women," said the lawyer, "jump up; better bad company than none." After jogging some miles further the woman descended and thanked him for the drive. "Have I much further to go ere I reach the B— road?" asked the limb of the law. "Oh, you passed it some two or three miles back," was the answer, "but as I thought bad company better than none I brought you on."

What First Prompted It.

"Do you belong to the society known as the Woman's Suffrage asked a farmer of a woman whose appearance might possibly indicate that fact.

"Certainly I do, sir," replied the lady.

"May I ask what are the real objects of the society?" he asked.

"To promote the welfare of women and to elevate the sex," he replied.

"Is that all?"

"That is all."

"May I ask what first prompted the organization of such a society?"

"Yes, sir; we have no objections to answering such questions. It was first prompted by the scarcity of husbands."

The Importance of Geography.

Negro father (to son)—"How yer gittin' 'long at school?"

Boy—"Fust-rate."

Father—"What yer flingin' yer mine down on fur de mos' part?"

Boy—"Rifmertic."

Father—"Got down ter jogerfy yit?"

Boy—"No, sah."

Father—"Wall, I wants yer ter git down ter dat ez soon ez yer ken."

Boy—"What's jogerfy gwine to do fur me?"

Father—"What's it gwine ter do fur you? Wy, it il allus keep yer outen de po' house, dat's whut it gwine ter do."

Boy—"How come?"

Father—"Is yer dun los' all yer sense dat yer doan know how come? Doan yer know dat er man wid plenty o' jogerfy in his head ken allus tell de age o' er hoss by lookin' at him? Doan yer know he ken fling his eye up ter de clouds an' tell w'en its gwine ter rain, an' dat he ken skin er sheep jes like snatchin' off er shirt? Know dat man whut tuk er peach tree switch an' found dat fine well o' water on de Fulgum place, doan yer?"

Boy—"Yes, sah."

Father—"Wall, he wuz er fine han' at jogerfy. Go back ter dat schoolhouse an' study jogerfy, son; go right back dar an' study it dis minit."

The Rushing Spirit.

A Chicago man, in attempting to jump on a closing bridge, had both legs broken. When he had been taken to a hospital and relieved as much as possible of his suffering, a physician asked him why he jumped upon the bridge. "Was your time so valuable that you felt it your duty to risk your life?"

"Yes, sir."

"That's the way with our Chicago people," said the physician, addressing some one who stood near. "Everything is sacrificed upon the altar of time, but it is this rushing spirit that has given Chicago an advanced position among the great cities of the world. My friend," again speaking to the wounded man, "you did not stop to consider the danger of your unfortunate hurry, did you?"

"No, sir."

"Your aim was to get over on the north side as soon as possible?"

"Yes, sir."

"Your mind was wholly taken up with the business awaiting you?"

"Yes, sir."

"Wonderful people, sir." said the physician, again addressing the bystander. "And," turning to the wounded man, "you would have rushed in front of a railroad train?"

"I guess I would, sir."

"What business was it that could not allow you to wait a few moments until the bridge could be closed?"

"Well, you see a feller named Jim had jest opened a new saloon an' tapped a keg of free beer an' put out a lunch, an' I knowed that if I didn't hustle, the fellers would get away with it all, an' I didn't have time to wait for the bridge to close, but I almost wish now that I had, for I've lost my chance any way."

Drowning Accident at Windsor.

Windsor, Ont., Aug. 2.—A party of dancers who took part in the emancipation celebration here last night embarked in a small boat about 12 o'clock last night to cross to Detroit. One of the party stepped on the side of the boat, which capsized and the occupants were thrown into the river. Officer Nash of the Windsor police force, who was on the dock at the time, pulled off his hat and coat, and jumping into the water, rescued four of the drowning party. Miss May Lewis of Clinton, Mich., aged 18, was drowned. The body is not yet recovered.

A Common Cold

Is often the beginning of serious affections of the Throat, Bronchial Tubes, and Lungs. Therefore, the importance of early and effective treatment cannot be overestimated. Ayer's Cherry Pectoral may always be relied upon for the speedy cure of a Cold or Cough.

Last January I was attacked with a severe Cold, which, by neglect and frequent exposures, became worse, finally settling on my lungs. A terrible cough soon followed, accompanied by pains in the chest, from which I suffered intensely. After trying various remedies, without obtaining relief, I commenced taking Ayer's Cherry Pectoral, and was

Speedily Cured.

I am satisfied that this remedy saved my life.—Jno. Webster, Pawtucket, R. I.

I contracted a severe cold, which suddenly developed into Pneumonia, presenting dangerous and obstinate symptoms. My physician at once ordered the use of Ayer's Cherry Pectoral. His instructions were followed, and the result was a rapid and permanent cure.—H. E. Simpson, Rogers Prairie, Texas.

Two years ago I suffered from a severe Cold which settled on my Lungs. I consulted various physicians, and took the medicines they prescribed, but received only temporary relief. A friend induced me to try Ayer's Cherry Pectoral. After taking two bottles of this medicine I was cured. Since then I have given the Pectoral to my children, and consider it for Colds, Coughs, and all Throat and Lung diseases, ever used in my family.—Robert Vanderpool, Meadville, Pa.

The Best Remedy

Some time ago I took a slight Cold, which, being neglected, grew worse, and settled on my lungs. I had a hacking cough, and was very weak. Those who knew me best considered my life to be in great danger. I continued to suffer until I commenced using Ayer's Cherry Pectoral. Less than one bottle of this valuable medicine cured me, and I feel that I owe the preservation of my life to its curative powers.—Mrs. Ann Lockwood, Akron, New York.

Ayer's Cherry Pectoral is considered, here, the one great remedy for all diseases of the throat and lungs, and is more in demand than any other medicine of its class.—J. F. Roberts, Magnolia, Ark.

Ayer's Cherry Pectoral,

Prepared by Dr. J. C. Ayer & Co., Lowell, Mass. Sold by Druggists. Price $1; six bottles, $5.

The well-bred Durham Bull,

"DAUNTLESS!"

Red Pedigree

WILL be for the service of Cows the season of 1887 at his own place, Lot 152, 3rd Range West, T. & S.R., Artemesia.

TERMS.—$1.00 per cow, payable on or before Jan. 1st, 1888. Cows not returned regularly to bull will be charged whether in calf or not.

DONALD McKENZIE,
Proprietor.

(313-317)

TIMBER AND LAND SALE.

CERTAIN lots and the timber thereon situate in the Townships of Allan, Assiginack, Bidwell, Billings, Carnarvon, Campbell, Howland, Shegniandah, Tehkummah and Mills on the Manitoulin Island, in the District of Algoma, in the Province of Ontario, will be offered for Sale at Public Auction in blocks of 200 acres, more or less, on the first day of September next, at 10 o'clock, A.M. at the Indian Land Office in the Village of Manitowaning

Terms of Sale:—Bonus for timber payable in cash, price of land payable in cash, a license fee also payable in cash and dues to be paid accordingly to Tarriff upon the timber when cut.

The land on which the timber grows to be sold with the timber without conditions of settlement.

At the same time and place the Merchantable Timber of not less than nine inches in diameter at the butt, on the Spanish River Reserve and French River lower Reserve will be offered for sale for a cash bonus and annual ground rent of $1.00 per square mile, and dues to be paid on the timber as cut, according to Tariff of this Department.

For full particulars please apply to Jas. C. Phipps, Esq., Indian Supt. Manitowaning, or to the undersigned.

No other paper to insert this advertisement without authority through the Queen's Printer

L. VANKOUGHNET,
Deputy of the Supt. Gen'l. of Indian Affairs.

Department of Indian Affairs,
Ottawa, 2nd June, 1887.

GREAT OFFER!

The Advance from now until end of the year for 35 cents.

Medical.

DR. CARTER,
M.C.P. & S., ONT.
PHYSICIAN, SURGEON, &c.
FLESHERTON.

Office, Strain's block. Residence, Wm. Wright's

Dentistry.

DENTISTRY.

Thomas Henderson, L.D.S.

SURGEON DENTIST,

Gold Medalist and Honor Graduate of the R.C.D.S.,

Will visit FLESHERTON, (Munshaw's Hotel) 1 and 2 of each month. Teeth extracted, inserted and filled in the highest styles of the art, and at moderate rates.

HEAD OFFICE, 761 YONGE ST., TORONTO.

Legal.

J. W. FROST, LL.B.,
Barrister, Solicitor, Conveyancer.

Office,—Strain's Building, FLESHERTON.

A. A. CHESLEY, Solicitor and Conveyancer, Resident Manager.

MR. FROST will be found at the Office on Thursdays as heretofore.

P. McCULLOUGH,
Barrister, Solicitor, &c.
Office, over McFarland's Store, Markdale. Money to Loan.

MASSON & MASSON,

BARRISTERS, SOLICITORS, &c.
OFFICES—Owen Sound, in Vicker's block Poulett St.; Branch office in Markdale, over McFarland's store, on Friday and Saturday every week

J. MASSON, Q.C. S. MASSON. W. MASSON

N.B.—Private & Company's funds to invest at from Six to Eight per cent.

Business Cards.

John W. Armstrong,

FLESHERTON, Co. GREY.

DIVISION COURT CLERK, COMMISSIONER in B. R., Conveyancer, &c. Agent for purchased sale of lands. Appraiser for C. L. C. Com. and F. P. B. & S. Society. Money to Loan on the most reasonable terms. ISSUER OF MARRIAGE LICENSES. NOTARY PUBLIC.

MONEY TO LOAN.
At 6 Per Cent.

On Town or Farm Property

S. DANIELL,
Flesher...

W. J. BELLAMY,

TWP. CLERK ARTEMESIA.

CONVEYANCER, COMMISSIONER, INSURANCE AGT, &C.

DEEDS, MORTGAGES, LEASES, &c., prepared and properly executed. Insurance effected in first-class companies. Money to lend at lowest rates.

GET YOUR MEAT

—:-FROM-:—

Petch & Mitchell,

GENERAL BUTCHERS,

FLESHERTON!

Cash paid for fat cattle, &c., &c.

NEW LIVERY!

THE undersigned begs to announce that he has started a first-class Livery in the stand opposite Munshaw's Hotel, Flesherton, where the travelling public can be accommodated with good rigs and horses at most reasonable prices

Try me and be convinced.

Respectfully yours,

W. H. JOHNSTON.

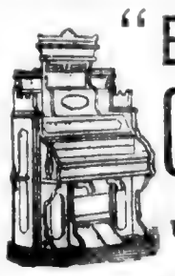
Flesherton, Nov. 19th, 1886.

Picture Framing,

Neatly, Cheaply & Quickly Done, by

J. E. MOORE,

Durham St., Opposite Clayton's Harness Shop



"BELL" ORGANS

Unapproached for Tone and Quality.

CATALOGUES FREE.

BELL & CO., Guelph, Ont.

THE —— EPISODE.

Dr. Tanner Explains to the Commons Why He Used "Cuss" Words.

A last (Thursday) night's London cable says: Dr. Tanner (Home Ruler) appeared before the House of Commons this afternoon in obedience to its summons, to explain the charge made by Mr. Long (Conservative), that the doctor had in the lobby and in the presence of several members called Mr. Long a "—— snob," and used other improper language. Dr. Tanner said he regretted the trouble the House had been put to about the matter. Mr. Long's manner and language when he approached him (Dr. Tanner) were part of an arrangement to annoy him. Mr. Long twice importuned him, and said in reference to his exclusion from the division (a matter over which he was still very sensitive), "That was a nice sell you got." Dr. Tanner said he was sorry for replying to Mr. Long as he did, and withdrew the indecorous expressions.

Mr. Long arose and denied Dr. Tanner's statements, declaring he did not make use of the alleged words about a sell.

Messrs. George Hawkesworthe Bond and James Bigwood (Conservatives) confirmed his statement.

Mr. Patrick O'Hea (Home Ruler for West Donegal) said he was also present and that he heard Mr. Long say, "That was a nice sell you got." Mr. O'Hea added that Dr. Tanner was jeered at by Mr. Long and his comrades.

Sir Julian Goldsmid (Liberal-Unionist) urged that the House let the matter drop.

Mr. W. H. Smith said he regretted that he was unable to accept Sir Julian Goldsmid's advice. Dr. Tanner had offered no explanation of his failure to attend the House last Monday when the matter was first brought up. Parliament must mark its sense of his misconduct in some manner. If a month's suspension was too long, the term of suspension would be shortened.

GREAT EXPLOSION.

Powder House Struck by Lightning—Great Destruction of Property.

A Streator, Ill., despatch says: The powder house of the C. W. & V. Coal Company was struck by lightning at 2.30 a.m., causing a terrible explosion, killing one man and wounding many, and demolishing all the property for blocks around it. There was not a window left unbroken within half a mile of the explosion. Not a vestige of the powder house remains, while where it stood is an excavation about sixty feet long, forty feet wide and twenty feet deep.

Rescuing parties were speedily formed and the search for the dead and injured began. Strange as it may seem, only one fatality has been reported, but a large number are seriously injured. Among the wounded are: Mary Lone, right hip broken; James Blackmore, hurt in the back; Mrs. Blackmore, several ribs broken; Mrs. James Sheldon, three ribs broken; Mrs. Thomas Birdwell, badly cut by flying glass; Mrs. Hattie Reaschon, an aged widow, struck over the eye with a brick and badly injured. A tramp who was sleeping on a car near the powder house was fatally injured. The number of minor casualties will reach 100. There were forty-five dwellings almost totally demolished, and there is not a plate-glass left in the business part of the city. It is impossible at this time to estimate the loss, but it will probably reach $100,000,

Late Scotch News.

Mrs. Dingwall Fordyce, widow of the former proprietor of Brucklay, died a few days ago at Blairgowrie.

The will of the late Mr. J. Graham, of Skelmorlie, has been registered. The amount bequeathed is over £300,000.

The death is announced at Edinburgh of Mrs. Livingston, of Drumsynie, Argyllshire, a great grand-daughter of Flora Macdonald.

Victoria Public Park, Partick, was opened on the 2nd inst. by Sir Andrew Maclean, Provost of the burgh. A new park was also opened at Coatbridge.

Mrs. D. O. Hill's statue of Burns at Dumfries has been lifted from its pedestal, which is to be heightened so as to enhance the effect of the colossal figure.

One of the markers at the butts at the Aberdeen Wapinschaw, a private in the Gordon Highlanders, was on the 5th July killed by a bullet which glanced off the target.

Alex. Adams, who started to walk on stilts from Dundee to London, was brought to mother earth with grief and an injured leg, through a collie attacking his stilts at Stirling.

The Duke of Buccleuch is about to erect a memorial to his son, the late Earl of Dalkeith, on the spot on the hillside at Achnacarry, Inverness-shire, where the lamented young nobleman lost his life in the autumn of last year.

The King of Saxony arrived at the Alexandra Hotel, Edinburgh, on the 30th ult., accompanied by the Earl of Hopetoun. After seeing the sights and visiting Forth Bridge he left for the Highlands.

Rev. Dr. Burns, Kirkliston, was entertained to dinner in Darling's Hotel, Edinburgh, recently, by the Free Church Presbytery of Linlithgow, and presented with an address, on occasion of his jubilee.

D. Thomson, Bervie, Kincardineshire, has been giving Alex. Orchardson, Grange, a thrashing, for trying to take his sweetheart away from him, and the Sheriff said he likely "got no more than he deserved," and so let Thomson off with an admonition.

The acreage of Edinburgh is stated at 6,002, and the length of the streets 130 miles. There are 42,413 inhabited houses. Fifty constables are employed in special duties, and 433 in ordinary duties. The total cost of the police is £45,049, but £1,982 is received for special services.

The following is the inscription on the monument at Kinghorn to Alexander III.: "To the illustrious Alexander III., the last of Scotland's Celtic kings, who was accidentally killed near this spot, March XIX., MCCLXXXVI. Erected on the sex-centenary of his death."

The Princess of Wales is having a cart built specially for tandem driving. The Princess is an admirable whip.

Beaufort Castle, Lord Lovat's picturesque seat in Inverness, has been leased for two months by W. K. Vanderbilt at a rental of $10,000. It is the finest sporting estate in England.

HEADING FOR CANADA?

The Chief of the Chicago Boodlers Escapes from the Sheriff.

A last (Sunday) night's Chicago despatch says: W. J. McGarrigle, the convicted boodler, has escaped. All day to-day every available policeman and detective in Chicago are trying vainly to find him. Telegrams have been sent all over the country in the hope of heading him off, but little hope is entertained that he will ever again be in the custody of the people of Cook County. Last evening Sheriff Matson drove up to the county jail in his buggy, got out and disappeared in the building, reappearing in a few minutes with McGarrigle. The two entered the vehicle and drove to McGarrigle's house in Lakeview. Upon arriving there Sheriff Matson and his charge dismounted and entered the house. McGarrigle greeted his wife and children very affectionately, and all entered the front room. In a few moments McGarrigle went upstairs to see the baby. Sheriff Matson remained downstairs in the front room. Although McGarrigle was out of sight he was not out of hearing of the sheriff, who heard him talking in the room upstairs. Presently he descended and said he would like to take a bath. McGarrigle went into the bath-room, accompanied by his wife, closed the door and Sheriff Matson heard Mrs. McGarrigle tell the domestic to bring some clean clothing for Mr. McGarrigle. Sheriff Matson could hear the water running into the bath-tub. He waited a liberal time for the bath and then asked McGarrigle's little girl, who had remained in the room with him, to tell her father he must hasten. The child went to deliver the message, entered the back room and did not reappear. When after a considerable time the little girl had not returned, the sheriff for the first time grew suspicious that something was wrong, and stepping to the door that separated the front parlor from the bed-room knocked and called "McGarrigle." No response was returned, and upon entering the bed-room Mrs. McGarrigle said that her husband must be still in the bath. The sheriff at once made for the bath-room, and upon entering saw that McGarrigle had not changed his underwear and had not been in the bath. Then came a hasty search, but McGarrigle had disappeared entirely. The sheriff ran out of the house, searched the yard and the outhouses and finally roamed throughout the neighboring yards, but he was unable to find a trace of his prisoner. He finally hastened to the nearest station, the police of the entire city were soon warned, detectives by scores began to scour the city and every policeman was ordered to remain on duty indefinitely in the hope that some of them might run across the ex-Warden. The reason for taking McGarrigle home from jail is found in the fact that States Attorney Grinnell, for reasons of his own, has had frequent consultations with McGarrigle, most of them outside of the jail. It was arranged that the two should meet at McGarrigle's house. The State Attorney, for some reason, could not keep the engagement. McGarrigle was convicted a short time ago for having been engaged in the wholesale robbery of Cook County, and was sentenced to three years' imprisonment, and was awaiting the result of a motion for a new trial. He was formerly chief of police.

Although McGarrigle was in the custody of the sheriff on the case for which he was tried he was still under bonds of over $60,000 on twenty other indictments.

DANCING NAKED AROUND THE FIRE.

Extraordinary Case of Religious Frenzy and Superstition in Spain.

A Paris cablegram says: A very extraordinary case is about to come before the high tribunal of Malaga. A few months ago, a woman belonging to the village of Torrox declared that the Virgin Mary had appeared to her and had ordered her to preach a new gospel for the salvation of mankind, as the end of the world was at hand. The woman's story was believed without hesitation, and soon the whole village was in a state of religious frenzy. The woman preached in favor of the abandonment of earthly possessions, and advocated a return to the mode of life and habits of primitive man. During the height of the frenzy a large fire was lighted in the village, into which the converts to this fantastic superstition threw their valuables, furniture and clothes, men, women and children dancing and shouting around the fire in a state of complete nudity. Warned of what was going on, the local gendarmerie arrived only just in time to save the infants from being thrown into the fire by their frenzied mothers, and to prevent the houses at the village from being set on fire.

Mr. Wall Gets a Testimonial.

A New York despatch says: Mr. John M. Wall, of the New York Tribune, was the recipient this afternoon of a cheque drawn on the National Broadway Bank for $1,030 by his Irish-American friends. The presentation was made in Cafe Park Place. The testimonial was presented in recognition of his suffering as a patriot in Kilmainham Jail, Ireland, as a fellow-prisoner of Charles Stewart Parnell, and of the injury he received when visiting Canada with editor O'Brien. He was struck in the head with a stone and badly cut in the temple while in Toronto. After the presentation a collation was served.

Together in Death.

A Providence, R.I., despatch says: Giles Luther, an aged resident in the outskirts of Warren, left his invalid wife at 11 o'clock last night to get a neighbor to go to town for a doctor, as Mrs. Luther was failing. On his return he walked into the Kickimuit River, four feet deep at that place, and, being much fatigued and partially blind, was unable to get out. Searching parties found his body this morning, and his wife died while they were bringing it into the house.

Sam Jones recently preached four days in Henry County, Kentucky, without making a single convert. At the close of his last sermon he remarked: "The sermon which I have just preached at you was the one which converted Sam Small. I therefore thought it ought to make at least one convert here, but I had forgotten that this congregation is composed of citizens of Henry County."

A BRIDE FOR HEAVEN'S SON.

The Way the Wife of the Young Chinese Emperor Was Chosen.

In the San Francisco Chronicle of July 3rd was the following: The Chinese residents of this city were somewhat anxiously awaiting the arrival of news relating to the approaching nuptials of His Imperial Majesty Kwong Suey, "Son of Heaven" and "Lord of Ten Thousand Years," etc. A despatch received in this city yesterday announced that a bride had been selected for the young Emperor, and that $5,000,000 would be expended in the celebration of the most auspicious event. As soon as it becomes known when the imperial affair will take place the Emperor's wealthy and loyal citizens of this city will prepare for the proper observance of the event. The day will be made a holiday, the dragon flag will be floated, feasting made the order of business, and perhaps a procession and other exercises will be held. But as yet the date of the marriage remains with the fates, which the astrologers of the Empire must divine. The first ceremony of betrothal has now been observed. This is the choice of the bride. A Chinese Empress is not chosen for nobility of family or reputation, although generally she is taken from the nobility. Her personal beauty is the almost exclusive requirement. The mother of Hien Fung, a former Empress, kept a fruit-stall. The Emperor himself has nothing whatever to do with the selection of the Empress. The present Empress-Dowager, who is a very able woman, and who has reigned as Regent, some time ago issued an edict through the Pekin Gazette that the Emperor should marry, and set a date when a reception should be held to candidates for the high honor. On the appointed day the Mongolian papas and mammas took their fairest daughters to the Empress' palace. The Empress, with her ladies, then chose the handsomest virgin. She should be Empress. But the Emperor is also legally entitled to eight Queens. Consequently eight other handsome virgins were chosen to fill these high offices. The personality of these selections has not reached this city, but the next mail is expected to furnish the particulars. It is now the duty of the Imperial Board of Astrologers to consult the stars and determine the lucky day when, if the marriage takes place, all will be well. If it does not go well all will go wrong with the astrologers. They are consequently very careful, and consult the stars and various deities favorable to matrimony. The date of the marriage being discovered, other ceremonies ensue, such as the presentation of 100 cakes to the Empress-elect. If the Emperor should die before the wedding takes place it would be quite the proper thing for the fiancee to commit suicide. At any rate, she must go and live at the palace and remain a virgin. When she is 61 years of age she will be rewarded by the reverence of her relatives. The Emperor Kwong Suey, from all accounts, is a commendable young man, and has considerable influence with Confucius and the other gods. On May 4th, for instance, he prayed for rain, the China papers relate. On May 13th it rained. All China fell down on its knees to express thanks for the beneficent hearing of Kwong Suey's petition. Suey was born in 1871, and was crowned at the age of 4. He is the son of the seventh brother of the Emperor preceding the last. It is expected that after his marriage the Empress Dowager will hand over the reins of government entirely to Suey.

Latest Old London Gossip.

Mr. Chamberlain is not well. He is getting too fat.

Orientalism is to replace Japaneseism in decoration.

Tandems are on the increase in London. A new tandem club has been started.

It is proposed to import a supply of pompano for introduction into British waters.

Buffalo Bill and his entire troop of Indians attended church the other day in full war paint.

Some of the most aristocratic houses in London decorated their balconies on the day of the Jubilee with carpets, rugs and colored bed-quilts.

At the laying of the foundation stone of the Imperial Institute the Queen used glasses in public for the first time. The lenses were no larger than a shilling piece and set in a plain bit of tortoise shell.

A French philosopher shows that Alsace-Lorraine should really belong to France, for the reason that there are many more brunettes than blondes there, and hence it is more French than German.

The casualties of the Jubilee procession foot up about six hundred. Three hundred were cases of fainting, over twenty of sunstroke. There were several broken legs, arms and collar bones, and dislocations. Some people suffered concussion of the brain, some had their chests crushed, and others were kicked by horses.

Round the Globe in Sixty-Nine Days.

A London cable says: The Times to-day announces that a copy of one of its issues has made the circuit of the globe in sixty-nine days. Its journey was made via the Suez Canal route to Yokohama, and thence to London via the Canadian Pacific line and Atlantic connections. This is the shortest time in which the circuit has been made under the British flag. Influential metropolitan and Provincial journals continue to urge the importance of the recognition of the Canadian route to the East. The press is practically unanimous in favor of a subsidy to the Canadian service.

Those Dear Horses.

A London cable says: The statement by the War Secretary in the House of Commons on Tuesday night, that the Government had decided to purchase no more Canadian horses for the army owing to the price, show that the influence of the county members and the agricultural societies, in favor of using the home supply, have prevailed. It is thought here that the Canadian Government could meet the objection as to cost by initiating horse fairs at recognized centres, so that the expenses of officers in scouring Canada for good animals might be avoided.

The Best Card.

"I am king," remarks Kalakaua, majestically. That may be so, but the Honolulu rifles appear to be the ace.—San Francisco Post.

TEST FOR THE EYE.

An Instrument That Will Tell a Woman's Exact Age.

At the French Academy of Medicine, according to a cablegram, Dr. Javal presented an optometer recently made by Dr. George J. Bull, son of Mr. Richard Bull, of this city, who has attained a high position in his profession in the Old World. The design of the optometer, which it is unnecessary to describe in scientific language, is to enable an oculist to tell instantaneously what glasses are required by far-sighted or near-sighted persons. The inventor has had in regard to it a peculiarly happy idea, especially suited for French practitioners and patients. The figures marked upon the graduated scale at which the subject has to look through a lens or a simple aperture, according to the more or less deteriorated condition of his eyes, appear, when the instrument is held as one would hold a sheet of paper, to be a series of irregular, elongated figures, but when viewed through the aperture with the optometer held as one would hold a telescope they resolve themselves into small dominoes. These dominoes are arranged in such a way that the sum of the dots on the furthest domino seen indicates the degree of far or near sightedness, while the number of dominos distinguished indicates the focusing power of the eye examined. There is another extraordinary feature about this instrument. The focusing power of the eye diminishes as age advances, the change commencing in early childhood. This axiom has been borne in mind and applied to drawing up a column of figures along the line of dominos. As soon as any one tells the number of figures he or she sees distinctly, his or her age is revealed beyond dispute. The laboratory of Sorbonne charged itself with some expensive engraving necessary for perfecting Dr. Bull's instrument.

DIPHTHERIA AT LEVIS.

Some Herculean Work for the Provincial Health Board.

A Quebec despatch says: The recent outbreak and ravages of diphtheria at Levis are more than accounted for by the statements communicated by a resident of the place. Some time ago the authorities removed all the bodies interred in the old Levis Cemetery to a new one. Curiosity in some instances and accident, or the work of exhumation in others, caused the opening of the coffins removed, and crowds of children were permitted to gather around and to peer into the receptacles of the dead, despite the stench arising from the decomposed remains. A merchant of the place who lately lost a child by diphtheria kept the body two or three days in the house, which was open as usual for the neighbors and children to visit and pray around the corpse. When told the risk that he was causing his own family and that of his neighbors to run, the bereaved father simply replied that if others were to die of the disease it was the will of the good God, and could not be helped. Four little boys carried the coffin to the grave, and a few days later another child was buried from the same house.

Don't Despise Onions.

A mother writes: "Once a week invariably, and it was generally when we had cold meat minced, I gave the children a dinner, which was hailed with delight and looked forward to; this was a diah of boiled onions. The little things knew not that they were taking the best of medicines for repelling what most children suffer from—worms. Mine were kept free by this remedy alone. Not only boiled onions for dinner, but chives also were they encouraged to eat with their bread and butter, and for this purpose they had tufts of the chives in their little gardens. It was a medical man who taught me to eat boiled onions as a specific for a cold in the chest. He did not know at the time till I told him that they were good for anything else."

The above appeared in the Lancaster New Era, and having fallen under the eye of an experienced physician of that county, he writes as follows:

"The above ought to be published in letters of gold and hung up beside the table, so that the children could read it, and remind their parents that no family ought to be without onions the whole year round. Plant old onions in the fall, and they will come up at least three weeks earlier in the spring than by spring planting. Give children of all ages a few of them raw, as soon as they are fit to be eaten; do not miss treating them with a mess of raw onions three or four times a week. When they get too large or too strong to be eaten raw, then boil or roast them. During unhealthy seasons, when diphtheria and like contagious diseases prevail, onions ought to be eaten in the spring of the year at least once a week. Onions are invigorating and prophylactic beyond description. Further, I challenge the medical fraternity, or any mother, to point out a place where children have died from diphtheria or scarlatina enginosa, etc., where onions were freely used."

Latest from Ireland.

Rev. Thomas Waugh is conducting another evangelistic campaign in Belfast.

An addition of 339 was made last year to the membership of the Irish Methodist Church.

A circular has been issued to the Royal Irish Constabulary conceding special favors to them in connection with the Queen's Jubilee.

In consequence of the great scarcity of water in Belfast, caused by absence of rain for nearly six weeks, several large spinning mills have partially ceased working.

Mr. Justice Harrison, in opening the Kildare Assizes on the 7th July, congratulated the Grand Jury on the state of the county. There was nothing in the statistics of the county, or in any of the returns, that called for special remark.

Mrs. Kennedy, who has just finished her honeymoon, was bathing in a lake at Moyree, County Clare, with several companions, when she suddenly disappeared and was drowned. At Cara Lake, near Glenbigh, three cattle drovers bathed in a lake at the side of the road. Their clothes not having been removed a considerable time afterwards, a search was instituted and their dead bodies were recovered.

—Two clergymen, well known in the Diocese of Niagara, are devoting a portion of their vacation time to laying a floor in a little English church in Muskoka.

THE BANE OF ENGINEERS.

What Happened to a Train on a Moonlight Night.

"Moonlight nights—they are the bane of railroad engineers," remarked a head official of the Baltimore & Ohio Railroad to a Cincinnati Commercial Gazette reporter. He is a gentleman who knows every branch of railroading.

"I would have thought that the trainmen would be glad to have moonlight nights," interposed the writer.

"No, sir; all engineers dread moonlight nights; they try the nerves of the engineers to the utmost. Engineers like to run on dark nights. On a moonlight night the trouble with them is no trouble at all—shadows. An engineer, looking out from his engine sees before him all manner of shadows. He is sure that the shadow across the track is a man, or a rock, or some kind of an obstruction. He doesn't know, and he is kept in a state of nervous excitement all the time. Going around curves, along hillsides, very curious shadows are outlined around the track, and very often an engineer is so worked up over a night's ride that he is scarcely able to perform his duties. Some years ago, when I was going over the main stem of the Baltimore & Ohio one night, there was a freight wreck ahead of us. They were running freight in convoys then, or as we now call them in sections. Our train was stopped and I went forward to see what was the damage. Lying in a cut was about the worst freight wreck I have ever seen. I went forward to see what the trouble was. It was a moonlight night and when I got forward I saw the engineer. He was shaking all over with excitement. He was one of the oldest and best engineers on the road, and I was surprised to see him so nervous, as he escaped unhurt."

"'What is the trouble, Tom?' I asked him. I could see nothing wrong."

"'It was a rock,' replied Tom. 'I was coming round the curve when I saw it. It was a big one; big enough to smash a whole train. I reversed the engine to avoid a smash up, and the cars coming down the grade just piled up in the shape you see them.'

"I looked around, but could see no rock anywhere. The wreck was cleared away that night, and there wasn't the sign of an obstruction near the locomotive. We all were curious to find out what had caused the trouble. The next night a railroad man went to the cut, and there in the moonlight he saw a perfect image of a big rock lying across the track. He looked up on the hillside, and there was a big rock throwing its shadow down on the track that caused a wreck that cost the company thousands of dollars. No, sir; if an engineer wants things to suit him, he don't want moonlight by which to run his train."

SUNSTROKE.

Its Symptoms and Its Best Method of Treatment.

A physician gives some valuable and seasonable information about sunstroke. During the hot weather, when exposed to the sun, headache, giddiness, nausea and disturbance of sight, accompanied with great prostration of the physical forces, are indications that sunstroke is probably imminent. The best plan is to immediately retire to a cool place and apply some simple restoratives as aromatic ammonia, and it can no doubt be prevented. Those exhausted with the heat have a cool, moist skin, a rapid, weak pulse and respiration movement, and the pupil is dilated. Immediate unconsciousness frequently results from heat apoplexy, and is likely to prove fatal. Hot foot baths, bleeding, etc., is the best treatment in such cases. In thermic fever the patient is unconscious and convulsed, and the body temperature may be 10° above the normal state, and the skin is very hot. An application of ice to the head and cold water to the body is the best treatment, as the object is to cool the body immediately. It is always best to obtain medical advice in serious cases.

Milk Preservation.

Pure air is indispensable for the preservation of milk and the place where milk is kept should be as free from taints of all kinds as possible. A writer in the Country Gentleman has found the common moulds in cellars to sour milk quickly and to produce the special fungi found upon sour milk—a blue mould and a bright red one, which is much like the round cluster cups of rust in form. As mould and mildew are abundant in damp confined places, and cellars are usually close and damp, they are not suitable places for keeping milk in. The easiest way to keep milk sweet is to bottle it, using a perfectly clean bottle, and to plunge the bottle in a vessel of cold water; or if there is an open well, to hang it in the well near the surface of the water. If the bottle is set, with the cork or cover loose, in a pot of cold water and this is then brought to a boiling heat, the milk, if quite sweet, will then keep a week if immediately closed up and kept in a cool, airy place. An ice closet is not a good place for keeping milk on account of its dampness, which causes a disagreeable odor and impure air. A refrigerator may be purified most effectively and the air kept dry and sweet by keeping some fresh quicklime on a plate in it. The lime will absorb one-third of its weight of water and thus dry the air and greatly increase the effect of the coolness of the ice.

A Lucky Sub-Inspector of Police.

Mr. Blake has been transferred from the Governorship of the Bahamas to that of Newfoundland. Only a few years back Mr. Blake was an humble sub-inspector of Iriah constabulary, and he has certainly played his cards well. From the day he married Miss Bernal-Osborne—the Duchess of St. Alban's sister— his life has been one succession of leaps up the ladder of fame. The late Mr. Bernal-Osborne was furious at his daughter's marriage with the "green peeler," as he contemptuously termed him, but had he lived to see the progress his son-in-law was destined to make in the world, he would probably have been more than reconciled to the match. Mr. Blake is certainly a rising man, and one of the big governorships will assuredly be his in due course.—London Life.

The Toronto city assessors have about completed their labors and it is understood there will be an increase in the assessment of about $13,000,000. This will bring the assessment up to about $96,000,000.

CURRENT TOPICS.

In Wyoming, before an election, a woman beat her husband in the nomination for a local office, but the husband took it very good-naturedly because there was a chance the office would be in the family, anyway. This story is told to illustrate the felicities of woman suffrage.

At the session of the Bible School at Northfield, Massachusetts, Mr. Moody was asked whether a choir should be placed at the front or back of the church. He answered the question with the remark: "You notice how our ears are put on." It is not often that a great religious question is so easily and effectually disposed of.

In his cable letter to the New York Tribune Edmund Yates corrects the current statement that Queen Victoria means to ask Parliament to appropriate $2,500,000 to cover the expenses of entertaining the royalties attending the Jubilee. The total expense, it appears, was some $275,000, and it is to be defrayed from accumulated surpluses of the civil list.

Another American girl is about to become a European Princess. Miss Winnaretta Singer, daughter of the late Mr. Singer, of Singer sewing-machine notoriety, is going to wed the Prince de Montfellard, whose title dates from the times of the Crusades. His future motherin-law, now the Duchess de Camposelice, was the daughter of an English confectioner.

Notwithstanding the probable fact that there is no "electric fluid," says the New York Commercial Advertiser, and the known fact that electricity does not "travel," but is merely molecular change, and that consequently thunderbolts never hit anybody, and lightning rods only "lower the potential," people are getting "struck by lightning" and the "electrical fluid" is running up and down steeples all over the country.

The Parsees of Bombay have long been famous for their charitable munificence, and the example of the late Sir Jamsetjee Jejeebhoy, known throughout the civilized world for his liberality, is being emulated at the present day by another Parsee, Sir Dinshaw Manockjee Petit, Sheriff of Bombay, who has just offered the Government of Bombay one and one-half lakh ($75,000), for the purpose of establishing a female college in that city.

The purlieus of Naples are nearly as crowded with seething humanity at this season as the tenement houses of New York, yet the hot weather makes no such massacre of the innocents as it does on this continent. "The reason," said an Italian lady, "is because poor Neapolitan children are allowed to run about naked, while American babies are swathed in flannels till they die of weakness caused by excessive perspiration."

Roses are the fashionable flower of the present season in London, the national emblem being chosen in honor of the Jubilee. Beds of shaded roses are arrayed on dinner and supper tables, artistically harmonized from the deepest damask red down to pale sea roses. The rose was introduced into Britain at a very early period and has always thriven there, yielding to no other country except the blessed valley at the foot of the Balkans, near Adrianople.

Owing to the disturbed condition of Bulgaria the monument which the officers of the Russian grenadier regiment intended to raise at Plevna in memory of the grenadiers who fell there in 1877 will be erected at Moscow. It will contain five groups of figures and four statues of saints, with the following inscription, in the Russian, Bulgarian, Roumanian and Servian languages: "To their comrades who fell in the glorious battle of Plevna, Nov. 28, 1877, by the Russian Grenadiers."

Dr. Cyrus Edson, of New York, has been investigating the manufacture of cheap ice creams, and he reaches the conclusion that during the heated term the milky preparation is apt to contain a fungus growth that is injurious to health. Young girls who go promenading with economical beaux may expect to hear frequent admonitory remarks about this lurking fungus growth. The girls may suggest, however, that the doctor's analysis relates only to cheap ice cream, and that the high-priced article may still be eaten with comparative safety.

A high-pressure hydrant system is being introduced in England, where manufacturers and insurance people are taking great interest in it. Where fire occurs the ordinary pressure is insufficient at a little elevation for effective work. The system proposes the construction of steel tanks charged with water, connecting with the ordinary mains, which can be submitted to any desired pressure up to 100 or 120 pounds to the square inch. This pressure is maintained by a series of wrought-iron cylinders filled with compressed air.

The tincture of the chloride of iron is a remedy frequently dispensed by the obliging apothecary to those who consult him and appear to need a tonic. It is generally taken well diluted with water, and is often drawn into the mouth through a glass tube or straw "to save the teeth." It has recently been shown that a tooth immersed in a solution of this tincture diluted with eight parts of water has its enamel entirely destroyed in one hour. The water increases the destructive power of the iron, and, on that account, it should not be used in dilution, but syrup is advised instead.

At Muirkirk, in Scotland, a monument in memory of some Covenanters who suffered in the cause of religion has for some time been in course of construction. It has just been inaugurated. The monument is a polished granite obelisk, and is the gift of Mr. Charles Howatson, Glenbuck. The names inscribed on it are Richard Cameron, John Smith, William Adams and John Brown, of Priesthill. The shaft of the monument has two draped figures—one pointing to the earth, where lie bodies of the martyrs, the other pointing to the skies.

An interesting phenomenon has for some time past been observed on the eastern coast of the Caspian Sea. The Kara Bobhas is an estuary nearly separated from the main body of the sea by a bank through which there is an inlet. The evaporation from this gulf is so great that a current continually sets in from the Caspian, and, as there is no return current, the water of the gulf becomes more saliferous, and a deposit of salt is in course of formation. The natural result of this would appear to be that this gulf will be cut off from the Caspian, and being thus dried up, will become an extensive salt bed.

Gold will only melt at a comparatively high temperature, as we all know, but what is not generally known, The Jewellers' Journal says, is that if two per cent. of silica be added to the gold it can be melted over the flame of a common candle. From the same source the reader may learn that a pretty alloy, said to resemble gold exactly, can be made with 16 parts copper, 1 of zinc and 7 of platinum. The copper and platinum are covered first with borax and then with powdered charcoal and melted, then the zinc added, and the alloy thus produced is exceedingly malleable and can be drawn into the finest wire, while it never tarnishes.

Through railway communication is to be established across South America, from the Atlantic to the Pacific. Three years ago the Argentine Government constructed a line of road, standard gauge, from Buenos Ayres to the city of Mendoosa, in the Andes, on the boundary of Chili, within 160 miles of Santiago, the capital of the latter country, which was already connected with Valparaiso, the most important of the Pacific ports. It is intended to extend this road through the Andes, a chain of mountains 20,000 feet high, and complete this gap of 160 miles, thus connecting Buenos Ayres and Valparaiso, and forming a line from coast to coast.

There are two styles of complexions in vogue this season, and to attain them cosmetics are used recklessly, says a fashion writer. One, for pallid people, is ivory white, and is supposed to be the accompaniment of soft, brown eyes and hair to match. The style of cuticle that is most popular, however, and which may go with all shades of hair except black and dark brown, is known as the "peachblow." It is a rosy flush suffusing the entire face, tinting the ears a deep rose, and scarcely fading out beneath the chin or at the nape of the neck. Women with this kind of skin will wear pink gowns during the summer, for the "peachblow" is to take the lead in attire as well as in complexion.

Alexander Graham Bell, the Brantford boy, whose telephones are ringing all over the world, has gone to his summer home, near Cape Breton, N. S. He went up there for the first time last summer, rented a house for $100 for the season, and liked it so well that this spring he bought a small island near by for $500, upon which he is trying to keep cool, with more or less success, these torrid days. He has an improvised "cottage," made out of an old farmhouse, this year, but proposes to build a handsome home by next year. It is rather noteworthy that neither Bell nor his thrifty father-in-law (Gardiner G. Hubbard), who is the business manager of their fortunes, has built a house since they came to be millionaires. Both live in Washington in houses built by other men, altered to suit them after they had purchased them.

Mr. Gorham Gray writes of the project of telephone communication between this continent and Europe: "Telephoning through a wire being only and simply a wave of reproduction, similar to an air wave or sound, or I might say a wave of the ocean, is perfectly practicable for three million miles, and in fact more so under water than aerial, for disturbances atmospheric do not occur under water, nor do disturbances occur at a depth below a given sounding distance below the surface of the water, as the water at that depth is at rest. The small steel wire which I already have used for four years under water is a perfect reproducer, and will reproduce three million miles far better than the one hundred miles now so long in my service, and giving clear reproduction of conversation, and without any induction whatever."

Hemorrhage from the lungs is a symptom of consumption which excites the greatest apprehension, not only in the patients, but in friends. It should be remembered that it is not only rarely fatal, but also that it invariably brings relief, in a measure, from the cough and the distressing constricted sensations previously felt in the chest. Many remedies are advised for this emergency, but rest and opium are the most valuable. One grain of opium, or twenty-five drops of laudanum, should be given at once, and repeated in from four to six hours. The patient must be kept perfectly quiet, and not allowed to speak. His fears are best subdued by the force of example, and his friends must appreciate this fact and conduct themselves accordingly. Rest in bed should be enforced for three or four days after the hemorrhage has ceased.

In the tomb of an Egyptian mummy a pair of stockings has been found which proves that short socks were worn by the Egyptians 2,000 years ago, and that the art of knitting had then attained great perfection. These curious socks are made from fine sheep's wool, at first probably white, but now brown with age. The needles with which the work was done are supposed to have been somewhat thicker than those now in use, and the knitting is loose and elastic. The work begins in the simplest manner, with a single thread, but grows fanciful as progress is made. Instead of ending, like the modern sock, with a rounding point, two branches of equal width run out like the fingers of a glove. This was made to suit the sandals, which had a strap fastened at the middle and passing over the sock when on the foot. The work shows a very skilful hand.

In the warmer months the diet should be composed largely of vegetable food. These should be chosen with care, for many of them are extremely unwholesome if not perfectly fresh and sound. Almost all of them, except berries, are improved by washing or soaking them some time in cold water. This renders some of them, such as are to be eaten without cooking, more crisp and refreshing, while all are cleansed from possible contamination. The sources of impurity are so numerous that safety can be secured only by constant watchfulness. The ground in or upon which vegetables are grown, the hands employed in securing them and the localities in which they are stored are too apt to be unclean and the sources of disease. The healthy human stomach has a great capacity for digesting and destroying disease germs; otherwise no one would live through one summer in the city; but when weakened by toil or sickness it loses this resisting capacity to a large degree, and the consequences are seen in the increased mortality list which marks the advent of hot weather.

The library of the British Museum now contains more than 2,000,000 books, which occupy three miles lineal of bookcases eight feet high. The library has increased to such an extent that the disposition of the books has become a serious difficulty to the authorities. There is still so much crowding that in a very short time the state of the library will necessitate the building of a new wing unless other means are devised to obviate the difficulty. The scheme which has now been considered by the trustees and has received their sanction is one for the introduction of movable presses into the library.

The women of the country should give more time to rest and relaxation and less to routine housework. They should make fewer pies and less cake and do more sitting down in the rocking chair on the porch. They would be far more useful in their families as the years go by. The woman who stays at home every day but when she "goes to meeting" on Sunday, who is always "doing for the family," will soon not only have no idea beyond the family circle, but none there to its advantage. She will be worn out physically and mentally early in life, and her children will begin to ignore her before they are gone.

An American engineer, who has made the subject a special study on the spot, has calculated that the Chinese Wall has a contents of 18,000,000 cubic metres (6,350 million cubic feet). The cubic contents of the Great Pyramid is only 241,000 metres. The material used in the construction of the Chinese Wall would be sufficient to build a wall round the globe 1.8 metre (6 feet) high, and 0.6 metre (2 feet) thick. The same authority estimates the cost of the Chinese Wall to be equal to the railway mileage of the United States (128,000 miles). The stupendous work was constructed in the comparatively short period of twenty years.

Ambergris, which commands a high price for perfumery and is prized in the East as medicine and as a flavor in cookery, was once absurdly guessed to be hardened foam of the sea, or a fungoid growth in the ocean, but is now known to be a secretion of the liver of the spermaceti whale, and is evidently a product of some disease in the animal. It is a soft, fatty substance of variegated gray or blackish color, and emits an agreeable odor when rubbed or heated. It is principally found floating on the sea of warm climates, though it is also obtained from the intestines of the whales. The largest piece known weighed 182 pounds, and was bought from the King of Tydo by the Dutch East India Company. A piece weighing 130 pounds was found in a whale near the Windward Islands and sold for £500.

A police justice in the city of New York is an officer of serious responsibilities. This year Police Justice Duffy, who has served thirteen years, passed sentence in more than 16,000 cases. He says that the most difficult of the duties of a police justice is to act according to the dictates of his conscience. By long training he thinks that he always knows when a prisoner is lying. A guilty prisoner's wisest course, he declares, is to say: "Judge, I am guilty. I throw myself on the mercy of the court." In a case of intoxication or disorderly conduct this course is likely to secure his discharge, if it is a first offence. "When a woman weeps before me," declares Judge Duffy, "I remember that I had a mother, a sister and nieces, and I am apt to let her go. When a man weeps, I think the worse of him. I haven't wept myself since I was 16 years of age."

According to Charles Frederick Holden, in St. Nicholas, the white ant is the most dreaded of insect invaders. In Africa their houses are dome-shaped mounds often 18 feet high. These insects erect pyramids 1,000 times higher than themselves. The ants on their travels so conceal their approach that their presence is not suspected until the damage is done. They usually tunnel into any object which they attack, often reducing it to a mere shell. In this way they have been known to ascend within the leg of a table, devour the contents of a box upon it, and descend through a tunnel bored in another leg, all in one night. An officer of the English army while calling upon some ladies in Ceylon was startled by a rumbling sound. The ladies started with affright, and the next instant they stood with only the sky above them. The roof had fallen in and lay all about them, leaving them miraculously unharmed. The ants had made their way up through the beams, hollowing them out until a great part of the framework of the house was ready to fall at the slightest shock.

An observer down South says an alligator's throat is an animated sewer. Everything which lodges in his open mouth goes down. He is a lazy dog, and instead of hunting for something to eat, he lets his victuals hunt for him. That is, he lies with his great mouth open, apparently dead, like the 'possum. Soon a bug crawls into it, then a fly, then several gnats, and a colony of mosquitoes. The alligator doesn't close his mouth yet. He is waiting for a whole drove of things. He does his eating by wholesale. A little later a lizard will cool himself under the shade of the upper jaw. Then a few frogs will hop up to catch the mosquitoes. Then more mosquitoes and gnats will light on the frog. Finally a whole village of insects and reptiles settle down for an afternoon picnic. Then all at once there is an earthquake. The big jaw falls, the alligator blinks one eye, gulps down the entire menagerie, and opens his great front door again for more visitors.

A Queen in Scarlet.

The Queen of Portugal wore a scarlet satin dress, trimmed with lace of a combination of cream and gold. Her train had on each side down a border of gold and scarlet silk brocade; her neck and arms were covered with diamonds, and sapphires of enormous size, like gems, were pendant from her ears. On her head she wore an aigrette of scarlet feathers, with diamond stars among the hair, which was gathered very high up.—Paris Register.

Wednesday, August 3rd, is Brantford's civic holiday.

THE BEGINNING OF THINGS.

When Coins, Maps, Pens and Other Popular Things Were New.

The first coining of money is attributed to Pheidon, King of Argos, in 895 B.C. Coined money was first used in London twenty-five years before the Christian era, but gold was not coined here till the eleventh century, and money was not given the round form to which we are accustomed until the lapse of another hundred years or so.

The first geographical map of England was made in the year 1520.

Handkerchiefs were first manufactured at Paisley in 1743.

Post-offices were first known in England as early as 1581, and exactly one hundred years later a penny post was introduced for London and its suburbs by an upholsterer named Murray.

Pens were first used in the seventh century. They were, of course, quills, and steel pens did not come into use until 1820, when the first gross of them was sold wholesale for £7 4s. The quality of these pens was greatly inferior to that of those for which we now pay sixpence a gross.

The first navigable canal in England was made in 1134, when Henry I. joined the Trent to the Witham.

Spectacles were first used in the latter part of the thirteenth century. There is no certainty as to who was the inventor of them, but the distinction is generally claimed for Alessandra di Spina, who is said to have made some about 1285.

Woollen cloth was first made in England in 1331, though its making is one of the most ancient arts. It was not dyed or dressed by Englishmen until 1667.

Cricket was first played about the year 1300. It was then and for a long time afterwards known as "club ball."

The first voyage around the world was made in the Vittoria, a ship which formed part of the expedition that sailed under Magellans in 1519.

The first London directory was printed in 1677, and contained sixty-four pages, with the names of 1,790 persons or firms. —London Exchange.

Bartholdi's Great Work.

The statue of Liberty enlightening the world, which stands on Bedloe's Island, in the harbor of New York is one of the most sublime artistic conceptions of modern times. The torch of the goddess lights the nations of the earth to peace, prosperity and progress, through Liberty. But "liberty" is an empty word to the thousands of poor women enslaved by physical ailments a hundredfold more tyrannical than any Nero. To such sufferers Dr. Pierce's Favorite Prescription hold forth the promise of a speedy cure. It is a specific in all those derangements, irregularities and weaknesses which make life a burden to so many women. The only medicine sold by druggists, under a positive guarantee from the manufacturers, that it will give satisfaction in every case, or money will be refunded. See guarantee printed on wrapper enclosing bottle.

Lord Brassey, having made a present to the town of Hastings of a building for an art school and public library, to cost $75,000, it has been suggested that the institution be called De Bresci Free Library, after the imaginary ancestor of the Brasseys.

The three R's brought Regret, Reproach and Remorse to a great political party in 1884. The three P's, when signifying Dr. Pierce's Purgative Pellets, bring Peace to the mind, Preservation and Perfection of health to the body.

Worse Than Full Dress.

Victoria, B. C., Times: An undress rehearsal of the ladies and gentlemen taking part in the paper carnival will take place at 8 o'clock this evening in the skating rink, Yates street.

The Five Sisters.

There were five fair sisters and each had an aim—
Flora would fain be a fashionable dame;
Scholarly Susan's selection was books;
Coquettish Cora cared more for good looks;
Anna, ambitious, aspired after wealth;
Sensible Sarah sought first for good health,

So she took Dr. Pierce's Golden Medical Discovery and grew healthy and blooming. Cora's beauty quickly faded; Susan's eyesight failed from over-study; Flora became nervous and fretful in striving after fashion, and a sickly family kept Anna's husband poor. But sensible Sarah grew daily more healthy, charming and intelligent, and she married rich.

In India and Africa certain tribes consider the monkey to be either sacred or equal to a human being. A slave once said: "If I had held my tongue like the monkey I should never have been put to work."

Demonstrated.

Sometimes it costs hundreds of dollars to convince a man; very often less is required, but in the case of Polson's Nerviline, that sovereign remedy for pain, 10 cents foots the bill, and supplies enough Nerviline to convince every purchaser that it is the best, most prompt and certain pain remedy in the world. Nerviline is good for all kinds of pain, pleasant to take, and sure to cure cramps and all internal pains. It is also nice to rub outside, for it has an agreeable smell, quite unlike so many other preparations, which are positively disagreeable to use. Try it now. Go to a drug store and buy a 10 cent or 25 cent bottle. Polson's Nerviline. Take no other.

His Trade to Go.

"Opposed to Commercial Union, eh? And why are you against it?" a citizen asked a tough-looking mariner at Yonge street wharf yesterday.

"It will interfere with vested rights."

"Whose vested rights?"

"Mine. Commercial Union will deprive me of my legitimate calling."

"What are you?"

"A smuggler."—Toronto Mail.

Got There Just the Same.

A Boston girl entered Manville's store yesterday, and stepping up to Ed. Manville, said:

"I would like to purchase a diminutive feline intestine prepared expressly for a banjoseph."

"She got a fiddle string at once."—Whitehall Times.

Last week Mr. Leeper, hotel keeper at Roseneath, was fined $650 for selling firewater to twenty Indians. This is the heaviest fine ever imposed on one man in the United Counties of Northumberland and Durham for violation of the liquor law

WHAT AILS YOU?

Do you feel dull, languid, low-spirited, lifeless, and indescribably miserable, both physically and mentally; experience a sense of fullness or bloating after eating, or of "goneness," or emptiness of stomach in the morning, tongue coated, bitter or bad taste in mouth, irregular appetite, dizziness, frequent headaches, blurred eyesight, "floating specks" before the eyes, nervous prostration or exhaustion, irritability of temper, hot flushes, alternating with chilly sensations, sharp, biting, transient pains here and there, cold feet, drowsiness after meals, wakefulness, or disturbed and unrefreshing sleep, constant, indescribable feeling of dread, or of impending calamity?

If you have all, or any considerable number of these symptoms, you are suffering from that most common of American maladies—Bilious Dyspepsia, or Torpid Liver, associated with Dyspepsia, or Indigestion. The more complicated your disease has become, the greater the number and diversity of symptoms. No matter what stage it has reached, Dr. Pierce's Golden Medical Discovery will subdue it, if taken according to directions for a reasonable length of time. If not cured, complications multiply and Consumption of the Lungs, Skin Diseases, Heart Disease, Rheumatism, Kidney Disease, or other grave maladies are quite liable to set in and, sooner or later, induce a fatal termination.

Dr. Pierce's Golden Medical Discovery acts powerfully upon the Liver, and through that great blood-purifying organ, cleanses the system of all blood-taints and impurities, from whatever cause arising. It is equally efficacious in acting upon the Kidneys, and other excretory organs, cleansing, strengthening, and healing their diseases. As an appetizing, restorative tonic, it promotes digestion and nutrition, thereby building up both flesh and strength. In malarial districts, this wonderful medicine has gained great celebrity in curing Fever and Ague, Chills and Fever, Dumb Ague, and kindred diseases.

Dr. Pierce's Golden Medical Discovery

CURES ALL HUMORS,

from a common Blotch, or Eruption, to the worst Scrofula. Salt-rheum, "Fever-sores," Scaly or Rough Skin, in short, all diseases caused by bad blood are conquered by this powerful, purifying, and invigorating medicine. Great Eating Ulcers rapidly heal under its benign influence. Especially has it manifested its potency in curing Tetter, Eczema, Erysipelas, Boils, Carbuncles, Sore Eyes, Scrofulous Sores and Swellings, Hip-joint Disease, "White Swellings," Goitre, or Thick Neck, and Enlarged Glands. Send ten cents in stamps for a large Treatise, with colored plates, on Skin Diseases, or the same amount for a Treatise on Scrofulous Affections.

"FOR THE BLOOD IS THE LIFE."

Thoroughly cleanse it by using Dr. Pierce's Golden Medical Discovery, and good digestion, a fair skin, buoyant spirits, vital strength and bodily health will be established.

CONSUMPTION,

which is Scrofula of the Lungs, is arrested and cured by this remedy, if taken in the earlier stages of the disease. From its marvelous power over this terribly fatal disease, when first offering this now world-famed remedy to the public, Dr. Pierce thought seriously of calling it his "Consumption Cure," but abandoned that name as too restrictive for a medicine which, from its wonderful combination of tonic, or strengthening, alterative, or blood-cleansing, anti-bilious, pectoral, and nutritive properties, is unequaled, not only as a remedy for Consumption, but for all Chronic Diseases of the Liver, Blood, and Lungs.

For Weak Lungs, Spitting of Blood, Shortness of Breath, Chronic Nasal Catarrh, Bronchitis, Asthma, Severe Coughs, and kindred affections, it is an efficient remedy.

Sold by Druggists, at $1.00, or Six Bottles for $5.00.

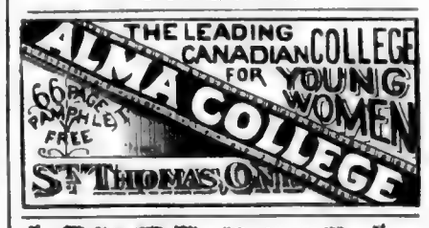
Send ten cents in stamps for Dr. Pierce's book on Consumption. Address,

World's Dispensary Medical Association,
663 Main St., BUFFALO, N. Y.

DON L. 31 87.



I CURE FITS!

When I say cure I do not mean merely to stop them for a time and then have them return again. I mean a radical cure. I have made the disease of FITS, EPILEPSY or FALLING SICKNESS a life-long study. I warrant my remedy to cure the worst cases. Because others have failed is no reason for not now receiving a cure. Send at once for a treatise and a Free Bottle of my Infallible remedy. Give Express and Post Office. It costs you nothing for a trial and I will cure you. Address DR. H. G. ROOT,

Branch Office, 37 Yonge St., Toronto.

DUNN'S BAKING POWDER

THE COOK'S BEST FRIEND

CONSUMPTION.

I have a positive remedy for the above disease; by its use thousands of cases of the worst kind and of long standing have been cured. Indeed, so strong is my faith in its efficacy, that I will send TWO BOTTLES FREE, together with a VALUABLE TREATISE on this disease to any sufferer. Give express and P. O address.

DR. T. A. SLOCUM,

Branch Office, 37 Yonge St., Toronto

BEST IN THE WORLD!

MARLIN Magazine Rifle.

For large or small game, all sizes. The strongest shooting rifle made. Perfect accuracy guaranteed, and the only absolutely safe rifle on the market

BALLARD GALLERY, SPORTING AND TARGET RIFLES, world renowned. Send for Illustrated Catalogue. MARLIN FIRE ARMS CO., New Haven, Conn.

Tit-Bits.

Continued from First Page.

The only place to get your Watch Repaired properly is at Russell's, Flesherton.

Last Saturday evening a steer belonging to Mr. A. Munshaw, of this place, got into the drain in the field near the plank bridge, and but for the assistance of some men would have been drowned.

The Thornbury News hints that we do not spell "Tit-Bits" correctly. Will it be kind enough to point out our alleged mistake? While its editor is wading through his Worcester, we may inform our readers, that the name of one of the best known—certainly the most largely read—English newspapers in the world first suggested the idea to us. The spelling of the words above by that paper, is in perfect harmony with ours.

Takes the Bun.

McGowan's Roller Flour takes the Lem. Sold only by W. W. TRIMBLE.

Died.

BROWNLEE.—At the residence of Squire Armstrong, Flesherton, on Monday, Aug. 1st, Mrs. George Brownlee, aged 89 years.

DUNN.—Suddenly, on the 12th inst., at his residence, 14 Reid street, Dunfermline, Scotland, Robert Dunn, manufacturer, deeply regretted. [The deceased was brother-in-law to Henry Meldrum, Esq., Eugenia.—ED.]

TAMARAC.—Is the discovery of a leading physician, and after years of experimenting it is now offered you in a perfected state as a never-failing cure for Coughs, Colds and Throat and Lung complaints.

Gone From our Midst.

Very few people were surprised last Monday forenoon to learn of the death of Mrs. Geo. Brownlee, of this town, which occurred at the residence of her daughter, Mrs. J. W. Armstrong, on the morning of the day named. The old lady must have been nearly ninety years old when she passed away into "that far distant land of glory and light" -although heaven does seem very close at hand sometimes. Deceased retained full consciousness up to the very moment of her departure, and feared not the summons which called her into the presence of the Great Judge.

Deceased was born in the North of Ireland—near far-famed Enniskillen and came to this country many years ago. She was a pious and God-fearing woman and a faithful member of the Methodist church. The aged partner of her joys and sorrows still remains to mourn her loss. She also leaves behind her a large circle of sorrowing children, grand-children and great-grand-children, who have the respectful sympathy of the community in their bereavement.

"She is not dead but sleepeth."

The funeral on Tuesday evening was largely attended. There were some beautiful floral offerings by friends of deceased.

The remedy which most successfully combats malarial disorders, is Ayer's Ague Cure. It is a purely vegetable compound, and contains neither quinine nor any other dangerous ingredient. Warranted to cure chills and fever.

Meaford Road.

From our own Correspondent.

SAW MILL BURNED.

About midnight on the 27th, ult, the eclipse steam saw mill was discovered to be on fire and with broom handle factory and a new building just erected for a planing mill was totally consumed, together with a large quantity of lumber, shingles and logs. Loss on buildings $3,000 and on stock $3,000. Insurance on buildings $1,500.

ACCIDENT.

Just the day before the above fire Jas. A. Warling who was employed in the shingle mill had his right hand badly cut with one of the butting saws. His thumb was cut off and his two first fingers badly mangled.

BE ON YOUR GUARD.—Don't allow a cold in the head to slowly and surely run into Catarrh, when you can be cured for 25c. by using Dr. Chase's Catarrh Cure. A few applications cure insipient catarrh; 1 to 2 boxes cures ordinary catarrh; 2 to 5 boxes is guaranteed to cure chronic catarrh. Try it. Only 25 cents and sure cure. Sold by all dealers.

BLEEPLESS NIGHTS, made miserable by that terrible cough. Shiloh's Cure is the remedy for you. Sold at Medical Hall.

Maxwell.

From our own Correspondent.

The garden party of last week, held on the Methodist Parsonage grounds, was a success in every particular. Rev. W. Ferrier, who had full control of the management deserves more than a passing remark for the manner in which it was got up and conducted. About four hundred guests assembled and everyone seemed to enjoy themselves. Every young man brought out his best girl and the older ones followed suit as well as they knew how. The refreshments were got up in good style and of the best. The music by the Flesherton Brass Band was enjoyed by every one, as was also the vocal music by other Flesherton friends. And the Maxwell Choir also added their mite toward the entertainment. The speeches by the Rev. Gentlemen were of course in place as far as they went, but the most of the Rev. Gentlemen who were invited failed to appear, perhaps thinking we could get along very well without them. Well, we can only say that these gentlemen lost a good days enjoyment. Proceeds of Party over seventy dollars.

A considerable amount of comment is made over the conduct of certain parties who have adopted young boys from the orphans home. One man who had one of these boys, for some trifling offence struck him a severe blow in the face causing the blood to flow freely and also severely beat him in other ways. The boy not liking such treatment has gone to seek another home. "Ah," say the knowing ones. "I thought he was just such a man"—he looks just like a cruel master.

Another who adopted an orphan boy, for some slight offence cruelly beat him and would not let him into the house at nights to sleep. One night he slept in the woodshed and another night he slept at a neighboring farmer's, but perhaps this party made agreement to use him in this way at times as our 'uns live strictly up to their agreements.

The parties injured by last week's accidents are, we are happy to say, entirely recovered.

Mr. W. Guy is manufacturing Pea harvesters. We wish him every success as every farmer wants something faster than the old method.

Quite a number of Binders have been sold to farmers in this neighborhood.

Our School Trustees are having the school house thoroughly repaired and cleaned.

There is great demand for harvest men here.

The harvest has fully commenced and help very scarce.

ADVICE TO MOTHERS.—Are you disturbed at night and broken of your rest by a sick child suffering and crying with pain of Cutting Teeth? If so send at once and get a bottle of "Mrs. Winslow's Soothing Syrup" for Children Teething Its value is incalculable. It will relieve the poor little sufferer immediately. Depend upon it, mothers; there is no mistake about it. It cures Dysentery and Diarrhœa, regulates the Stomach and Bowels, cures Wind Colic, softens the Gums, reduces Inflammation, and gives tone and energy to the whole system. "Mrs. Winslow's Soothing Syrup" for children teething is pleasant to the taste and is the prescription of one of the oldest and best female physicians and nurses in the United States, and is for sale by all druggists throughout the world. Price twenty five cents a bottle. Be sure and ask for "MRS. WINSLOW'S SOOTHING SYRUP," and take no other kind.

Lines on the Death of Mr. James McNally, Died, June 11th, 1887.

Dear Father he has left us,
Gone to that home above,
His sufferings so very great,
I cannot put in words.

The nights were long and weary,
The pain it was so great,
We marvelled at his patience,
It was so very good.

The mornings and the evenings,
Are lonely since he's gone,
But we know that he is happy,
'Tis wicked for to mourn.

His arm-chair now stand empty,
His china tea-cup, too,
It seems to me I love them,
Because they served him so.

The shade-trees to are growing
That he planted long ago,
It seems strange to see them flourish,
While he is sleeping low.

Oft I dream I see him smiling,
As he did in days of yore,
When I wake 'tis but to sorrow,
For we will meet on earth no more.

Fain would I ask him back
To fill his place on earth,
But I know that from his happiness
He never will depart.

An unkind friend hath said,
That he was not kind at all,
But that is very false indeed,
For he was kind to all.

For I know that he was always
The peacemaker in his home,
He gave us good advices,
Until the death bell rung.

Ask sister, brother, mother,
His history to unfold,
They will all tell the same story,
From the youngest to the old.

And now I'm going to tell you
Just of his last request,
That we each and all should meet him,
In that holy land of rest.

Rest on dear patient parent,
As happy as you be,
We will try to follow Jesus,
And one day meet with thee.

SHILOH'S CURE will immediately relieve Croup, Whooping Cough, and Bronchitis. Sold at Medical Hall.

Proton Station.

From an Occasional Correspondent.

CHURCH OPENING.

The new Presbyterian church at Proton Station will be opened on Sunday next, Aug. 7th. Services will be conducted in the morning at 11 o'clock, and in the evening at 7 o'clock, by Rev. A. Gilray, pastor of the College street Presbyterian church, Toronto. At 3 p.m. the Rev. Thos. Watson, Baptist minister, Flesherton, will preach. On Monday evening, Aug. 8th, a tea-meeting will be held. Tea will be served in the grove adjoining the church, from 5 to 8 o'clock; literary entertainment will begin at 8. Following speakers are invited, viz.: Revs. A. Wilson, Markdale; T. Watson and J. W. Shilton, B.A., of Flesherton; Dr. Strongman, Ph. D., and Ross, B.A., of Dundalk; Bradley, of Corbetton; McLelland, of Shelburne. Rev. A. Gilray has kindly consented to remain. Good music will be furnished by the Dundalk Presbyterian Choir and others. Admission 25 cents; children under 12 years of age, 15 cents.

Painful Accident to a Farmer.

On Saturday last Mr. James Orr, a well known farmer living near Emery, on the 6th concession of York township, was hauling in grain. When turning th brow of a hill the load upset and Mr. Orr fell a distance of fifteen feet, sustaining such injuries that his recovery is doubtful. The backbone is either broken or dislocated—the doctors in attendance are as yet not sure which. Everything possible is being done to pull Mr. Orr through. He is about 35 years of age and well-known in the township. Dr. Charlton and Dr. M. Aikins are in attendance.

THE REV. GEO. H. THAYER, of Bourbon, Ind., says: "Both myself and wife owe our lives to SHILOH'S CONSUMPTION CURE." Sold at Medical Hall.

ARE YOU MADE miserable by Indigestion, Constipation, Dizziness, Loss of appetite, Yellow Skin? Shiloh's Vitalizer is a positive cure. Sold at Medical Hall.

FOR DYSPEPSIA and Liver Complaint, you have a printed guarantee on every bottle of Shiloh's Vitalizer. It never fails to cure. Sold at Medical Hall.

"HACKMETACK," a lasting and fragrant perfume. Price 25 and 50 cents. Sold by Medical Hall.

A NASAL INJECTOR free with each bottle of Shiloh's Catarrh Remedy. Price 50 cents. Sold at Medical Hall.

A WONDERFUL ORGAN. The largest organ and one that plays a controlling part of the health of the body is the liver. If torpid or inactive the whole system becomes diseased. Dr. Chase's Liver Cure is made specially for Liver and Kidney diseases, and is guaranteed to cure. Receipe book and medicine $1. Sold by all dealers.

SHILOH'S CATARRH REMEDY—a positive cure for Catarrh, Diptheria and Canker Mouth. Sold at Medical Hall.

NEW ADVERTISEMENTS.

J. BRANDER

PRICEVILLE,

While returning thanks to his patrons and the public for their valuable support in the past, begs to announce that he is prepared to supply their various needs

We make it our business to keep a supply of Goods suitable for the needs of our customers, and as

We Buy in Large Quantities Direct from the Manufacturers,

FOR CASH, we are in a position to

Give Extra Value

in every department. Every one should see the immense value we have in FALL GOODS just arriving

Very Respectfully,
JAS. BRANDER.

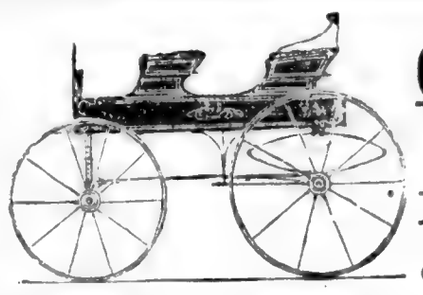
Priceville, July 20, 1887.

STRAYED.

CAME to the premises of the undersigned, Lot 3, Con. 4, Artemesia, on 4th June, 1 steer. Owner can have the same by proving property and paying expenses. WM. FLETCHER.

STRAYED

FROM the premises of the undersigned, Lot 145, 2nd Range West, Back Line, 1 red, yearling steer. Any person giving information will be suitably rewarded. JEREMIAH PIPER.



MAXWELL
CARRIAGE WORKS!

LITTLE & BLAKELY,
MANUFACTURERS OF
Carriages, Democrats, Wagons &c.

Repairing, Painting, Horse-Shoeing, and General Jobbing

Done on Short Notice and at Reasonable Prices.

JOHNSON LITTLE. Blacksmith,
THOS. A. BLAKELY. Wagon-Maker & Painter.

Maxwell, May 20th, 1887.

BOOTS & SHOES!

Having received large auditions to my Stock, I have a good supply on hand of Summer Goods.

LADIES' WEAR.—A fine assortment in Prunella, French Kid, Goat, Polish Calf, Buff and Heavy Boots.

MISSES AND BOYS WEAR.—A large variety of Lace & Button Boots, Shoes and Slippers.

CHILDRENS WEAR.—A very large assortment of all sorts and sizes.

MENS WEAR.—I have Buff, Calf and Enamelled Balmorals, Oxford Ties and Strong Lace Boots.

FOR PRICE AND QUALITY, CANNOT BE SURPASSED.

WM. CLAYTON, . Flesherton.

CHEAP ❋ AND ❋ DURABLE!

—THE WELL-KNOWN—

SPEIGHT WAGON!

Call and get Prices, &c. from undersigned.

STOVES, TINWARE, &c. for sale as usual

First-class value in every department.

Agent for VICKER'S EXPRESS. All parcels left with him will be promptly and carefully attended to.

STRAIN'S. - FLESHERTON.

FLESHERTON.

MARBLE WORKS:

E. VANZANT,

ALL KINDS OF

Marble and Monumental Works,

Such as Monuments, Tomb Tables, Headstones Counter and Table Tops—in American and Italian Marble and Granite, and made on short notice. Also Mantles in Marble and Marbleized Slate, &c., &c.

Flesherton, Aug. 30, 1883.

HEALTH FOR ALL.

HOLLOWAY'S PILLS & OINTMENT

THE PILLS

Purify the Blood, correct all Disorders of the

Liver, Stomach, Kidn'ys, and Bowels.

They invigorate and restore to health Debilitated Constitutions, and are invaluable in all Complaints incidental to Females of all ages. For Children and the aged they are priceless.

THE OINTMENT

Is an infallible remedy for Bad Legs, Bad Breasts, Old Wounds, Sores and Ulcers. It is famous for Gout and Rheumatism. For disorders of the Chest it has no equal.

For SORE THROAT, BRONCHITIS, COUGHS, COLDS

Glandular Swellings, and all Skin Diseases it has no rival; and for contracted and stiff joints it acts like a charm.

Manufactured only at Professor HOLLOWAY'S Establishment,

78, New Oxford Street (late 533, Oxford Street), London,

and are sold at 1s. 1½d., 2s. 9d., 4s. 6d., 11s., 22s., and 33s. each Box or Pot, and may be had of all Medicine Vendors throughout the World.

Purchasers should look to the Label on the Pots and Boxes. If the address is not 533, Oxford Street, London, they are spurious.

FOR SALE.

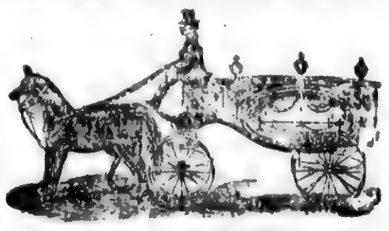
The undersigned has White Ash Butter Tubs and Churns for sale.

JOS. McCORMICK,
304-330. Flesherton.

FLAGS AND BANNERS

of superior quality, for Orange and other Societies. Order early.

W M. TEGART,
Thornbury, Ont.



J. W. BATES,

Furniture Dealer and Undertaker.

FLESHERTON, ONT.

FLESHERTON ADVANCE.

"TRUTH BEFORE FAVOR."—"PRINCIPLES, NOT MEN."

VOL. VII., NO. 320. FLESHERTON, ONTARIO, THURSDAY, AUGUST 11, 1887. A. R. FAWCETT, EDITOR & PROPRIETOR.

For above fine finished Watches, accurate Hampden's—my name on, and the reliable Waltham and Elgin Watches, in Gold, Filled Gold, and Coin Silver Cases, go to

W. A. BROWN'S

FINELY STOCKED

JEWELERY STORE.

I am known as the Reliable Jeweller for 20 miles North, South, East and West. I never have, misrepresented purposely any goods sold since being in business here. It is easy to sell a 11 Jewelled Watch for "Full Jewelled." It is much easier to sell 8 k. Gold Watches and call them 12 or 14. I don't have to do it. My own name on all warrants, and you will find I can be held responsible if goods are not right.

—1—|342|—1—

WATCHES & CLOCKS

Booked in Repair Book since July 1st, 1886.

SQUARE DEALING.

PRICES CLOSE.

SPECIALTIES:—Fine Watch Repairing, Spex Fitting.

W. A. BROWN,

The People's Jeweller, Markdale.

CONSUMPTION IN FLESHERTON.

There being good prospects of a fresh quantity of Flour to be consumed in the village and surrounding country the present season, the undersigned has opened out with a good stock of the following lines:—

ROLLER FLOUR!

Best Brands.

Rolled & Granulated Oat-Meal.

Corn Meal,
Cracked Wheat,
Chop,
Shorts,
Bran and Oats,

At Bottom Prices for Cash.

Special Discounts

According to amount of Purchase.

W. W. TRIMBLE,

Next door to Clayton's Shoe Store.

(312-364)

0 000000000000000000000000000000000

SAY, HALLO THERE! ADVERTISING PAYS! Of course it does. Just plant an advertisement in THE ADVANCE and see for yourself. Hundreds have done so and were benefitted. Have you a farm you want to sell or rent? Advertise in THE ADVANCE. Have you anything under the sun you want to sell or trade? An advertisement in THE ADVANCE will bring you customers every time. Do you want to buy anything or hire help? Advertise in THE ADVANCE every time. Address or call on A. R. Fawcett, ADVANCE Office, Flesherton, for terms, &c.

0 000000000000000000000000000000000

PRINTING! YES, OH, YES! IT WILL PAY all manners of persons who read this advt. to get their Printing done at THE ADVANCE Office, Flesherton. Good work at honest prices every time! A dollar saved is a dollar earned—so the proverb goes. Pamphlets, Posters, Circulars, Programs, Dodgers, Streamers, Bill Heads, Note Heads, Receipts, Note Forms, Business Cards, Visiting Cards, Labels, Tags, &c. Plain or Colored. Address or call on A. R. Fawcett, ADVANCE Office, Flesherton, for terms.

ADVERTISE in The ADVANCE

Tit - Bits.

Consisting of Local and Other Interesting Items gathered by The Advance Reporters.

Miss May Damude returned home from her visit to Gorrie last week.

Mr. Jos. Blackburne is attending Grand Lodge, I.O.O.F., at Peterborough, Ont., this week.

One day last week, Mr. Chas. LeGard got his third finger broken while helping to lift a barrel of salt into his wagon.

A return match of baseball will be played on Friday next, between the Flesherton and Station juniors.

Mr. Wm. Strain's block is receiving a coating of paint which adds much to its appearance.

ICE CREAM.—Miss Hind will keep Ice Cream for sale during the day while the warm weather lasts. Remember place, near new schoolhouse.

We had the pleasure of meeting our old friend, Mr. Purdy, the Station postmaster, on Friday. He is as genial and courteous as ever and always has a pleasant word for ye editor.

Miss Edith B. VanDusen, the well-known poetess of Owen Sound, is the guest of her uncle, A. S. VanDusen, Esq. We had the pleasure of a call from the talented young lady one day last week.

The Cattle Fair held here on Monday last was largely attended. Some very fine cattle changed hands at good prices. Messrs. E. & W. S. O'Brien sold a herd of eighteen fine bovines to Mr. Dean, of Toronto.

The annual Harvest Home in connection with the Methodist church, Flesherton, will be held, in all probability, in the month of September. A meeting of farmers will shortly be convened to attend to the preliminaries.

Harry Stewart, who was working on the Berwick farm yesterday, while standing in the barn after unloading a load of hay, was struck on the head by a piece of falling timber, which inflicted a severe cut.—Shelburne Free Press.

An item copied from the Thornbury Standard recently—in noticing an accident by fire—made a mistake in saying that the Grange Insurance Co. does not insure against damages done by lightning. It insures against damage both by fire and lightning.

Mr. John Lockhart and his boy were working at the limekiln on Monday. It caved in and Mr. Lockhart was buried in the ruins. The boy called on all the neighbors, who assembled quickly, and relieved Mr. Lockhart, but he was seriously injured.—Shelburne Free Press.

Miss Annie Ekins, from Mr. C. J. Sproule's school, and Miss Sarah Hogg, from Miss Hopkins' school, passed the recent High school entrance examinations for this county. There were 190 applicants in all, of whom 136 were successful. We congratulate the young ladies above mentioned and wish them continued success.

Mr. Chas. McConnell, our famous bear hunter, succeeded in capturing another of the wild beasts on Wednesday, about two miles from Dundalk. His bearship was secured alive after a desperate struggle and brought to the village, where he died in a few hours, probably from exhaustion. He was an old black one and if fat would weigh about two hundred pounds.—Dundalk Herald.

Farmers Attention.

If you want to save money buy your Meat from Petch & Mitchell. We are now selling Beef from 4c. up. Always a good stock on hand and the best Meat the country can produce. Special reductions for large quantities for thrashing. Eggs or salt pork taken same as cash. PETCH & MITCHELL, butchers, Flesherton, 2t.

Mr. Aikenhead and family, of Toronto, returned home this week.

Mrs. Robt. Fawcett is visiting friends in Thornbury and neighborhood.

Mr. Munshaw's old dog wound up his career the other day by taking a dose of prussic acid. He died almost instantly, as the poison named is one of the most deadly known.

The double verandahs placed around the residence of M. Richardson, Esq., of this place, are tasteful in design and a decided improvement generally. Mr. J. E. Moore was the contractor.

Our junior reporter went to Heathcote on Saturday and came back to Flesherton on Monday. He reports harvesting operations as being nearly completed down there. Some got through a couple of weeks ago.

Flesherton Lodge A.O.U.W., No. 142, will hold a basket picnic in the Beaver Meadow, South of Flesherton, on Tuesday, 30th inst. The members of Sister Lodges are cordially invited to be present and have a good time. Flesherton Brass Band will be in attendance.

Next week we purpose taking up the subject of "Drainage in Flesherton." This will form the text for the leading editorial, in which we also intend to allude to the importance of turnpiking and boulevarding in places situated like this. We feel convinced that the subject demands something more than a passing notice.

Our Station friends have not let the grass grow under their feet since the formation of the new school section. Already the brow of the "Orange Hall hill" to the right is crowned with a neat brick schoolhouse ready for shingling. Our worst wish is that many boys and girls may go forth from its walls and become useful members of society.

While passing the drill shed here on Saturday we observed a rather remarkable instance of canine sagacity. A dog came trotting along to the gate leading to Mr. Bradley's house. Arriving there he examined the gate critically—but for a moment only—then with a dexterous movement of his fore paws he swung it open and passed on into the yard!

Our sidewalks, with few exceptions, now present a respectable appearance, having undergone some very necessary repairs since last week's issue went to press. Some further improvements should, and we believe, will be made this season. In future it is to be hoped these matters will be attended to earlier in the season.

Mr. Newbigging, of Hamilton, was the guest of Mr. James G. Russell, of this town, on Monday. He bicycled it the most of the way from the Ambitious City to this place. He and Mr. Russell have been "chums" since the latter—well, say since he emerged from long clothes. A very agreeable time was spent in talking about old times.

"Is this hot enough for you?" is the sublime question asked by nine out of every ten persons during the scorching weather we individually and collectively are now endeavoring to pass through as cooly as possible. Our junior Prince of darkness has placed a big "hot weather club" within easy reach of every member of our staff. So, beware how you tread on the tails of our coat until the "dog-days" are number with the things of the past!

Birth.

FAWCETT.—In Thornbury, on the 5th inst., the wife of Mr. Geo. I. Fawcett, of a son.

Ayer's Sarsaparilla is designed for those who need a medicine to purify their blood. No other preparation so well meets this wants. It increases the appetite and rejuvenates the whole system. Its record, for forty years, is one of constant triumph over disease.

"Can you tell me what kind of weather we may expect next month?" wrote a farmer to the editor of his country paper. The editor replied: "It is my belief that the weather next month will be very like your subscription bill." The farmer wondered for half-an-hour what the editor was driving at, when he happened to think of the word "unsettled." He sent a postal note.

Shoddy pedlers are on the war-path. A number of Albermarle (Co. Bruce) farmers gave notes for certain pieces of cloth, part of which was delivered at the time the notes where taken. The balance of cloth never came to hand but the farmers have to pay the full amount of the notes all the same. When will farmers learn that it is always safest to patronize reliable home dealers?

A son of Mr. Grice, near the Ballinfad brick yards, met with an accident one day last week while engaged in drawing in fall wheat. He was going up a hill when the tongue came out of the waggon, allowing the waggon to run back. The young man held on to the lines and was prostrated to the ground. We understand he was badly hurt, but hope he will be around again soon.—Mt. Forest Representative.

Two Irishmen met on the sidewalk near THE ADVANCE office the other day. Said one to the other—just as one of our citizens passed by—"An' who is yon sphry lookin' chap wid the impayrial an' fierce mustache?" "Shure," said the other in some amazement, "one wud think ye wor a stranger here till hear yez spake loike that—shure an' isn't that Carprel Hales, wan av the bushi known min in the counthry!" (N. B.—the entire staff are of opinion Mr. Hales should treat the crowd to ice cream. What do you think, John?)

In his eloquent sermon last Sunday evening, Rev. Mr. Shilton incidentally alluded to the future state, completely disproving the old theory, that the immortal as well as the mortal parts of man lie dormant in the grave—(for centuries perhaps) until the "judgement trumpet shall sound." It is a comforting thought, that what we call death is merely a sort of sleep—an exchanging of the mortal for the immortal. This idea, although pretty generally held, is not often alluded to in the pulpit. It is a most cheering and comforting thought; and, what is better, it is fully sustained by sacred writers.

Mr. Samuel Kingston complains—with very good reason, too—that, although he has been paying taxes into the Township Treasury for nearly twenty years no money is laid out by either pathmaster or Councillors on the streets leading past his residence. This is far from dealing squarely with such a worthy and honest citizen as Mr. Kingston. Besides, Beechel street is one of the best travelled highways in the town. Mr. K. also complains of piles of wood left on the street opposite his house, and says—good-humoredly—"they will be robbin' me of air next!"

Some means ought to be devised for levying an equalized share of taxes on the ratepayers of this place, for the the proper and efficient management of our sidewalk system. The slipshod style prevails at present; so that when it is proposed to lay down a new sidewalk now-a-days, individual ratepayers have to bear the heaviest part of the burden in connection therewith, while all share alike the benefits to be derived therefrom. The remedy is to be found in the resurrection of the defunct Police Trustee "form of government." Until that time arrives, we cannot expect any improvement in the existing condition of things.

DESCRIPTION.—Pleasing, soothing, relieving, healing, curing, is the description of Nasal Balm, which is receiving a national reputation as a cure for Catarrh, Cold in the Head, Hay Fever, &c.

—AT—

RUSSELL'S

NOTED

JEWELRY

STORE,

Flesherton!

Is to be found the finest and most complete stock of

WATCHES, CLOCKS, JEWELRY,

SILVERWARE, and FANCY Goods in this section of country.

Some beautiful designs in ladies' R. Plate Bar Pins and Brooches. Just received, SPECTACLES for the million. In Watches, we keep Waltham, Elgin, Springfield, Illinois, Hampden, Columbus, Swiss, in gold, gold-filled, silver and silver-are cases, 2, 3, 4, & 5 ozs. at from $6.90 to $60, warranted from 2½ to 5 years.

Our Watch Repair Book tells the startling tale of 4,863 watches repaired from July 1st 1886 to July 1st 1887, which is 140 over and above what any other dealer can show in this section and (We) did not add the watch sales and clock repairs and call them watch repairs to swell the number as some dealers do. Of course our watch repairs increased considerably since last fall on account of so many poor watches being auctioned off around here which needed any amount of repairing and the people are becoming wise to the fact now that for thoroughly good Watches, Clocs, Silverware, etc., and for Fine Watch Repairing, they have of necessity to go to Russell's Not'd Jewelry Store, Flesherton.

Taking Him at His word.

"Whar'd yo' git dat load er lumber, Br'er Jimson?"

"Down ter de Healin' Ba'm Chu'ch.

"Dasso, Br'er Jimson? Why has dey tored de buildin' down?"

"Oh, no, sah! Hit's dar yit, but I hearn Parson Blowhard say dat de pews was free, so I riz up 'arly dis mornin' an' went down dar an' ripped up a pa'r of 'em an' fotched 'em erlong."

For removing dandruff, Ayer's Hair Vigor has no equal. It restores faded and gray hair to its original color, stimulates the growth of the hair, and gives it a beautiful, glossy, and silken appearance.

—FARMERS!—

Don't forget there is good work done at the Flesherton

WOOLEN FACTORY

And we are doing all in our power to please. Customers are finding out it is to their advantage to deal with us as our Prices are Low and Our Goods are Reliable, and notwithstanding price being cut so close on account of hard times, I intend to reduce the manufacturing prices in nearly every branch, viz., OILING, ROLL-CARDING, SPINNING, WEAVING, &c., &c. Give us a trial and see for yourself.

W. H. FLESHER.

Flesherton, May 20th, 1887.

SHOT IN HIS TRACKS.

A Tragedy on the Banks of the Niagara—Fatal End of a Quarrel.

A last (Thursday) night's Buffalo despatch says: On Sunday last George Stevens and Peter Nettle met at a drinking place at Victoria and had some words. They quarrelled for some time and would have come to blows if bystanders had not interfered and prevented it. They parted, each threatening that he would get even the first time that an opportunity presented itself. That opportunity came last evening for the first time, and at the hour named Nettle was walking quietly down the Canadian shore with a double-barrelled breech-loading shotgun in his hand. He had been shooting at blackbirds. When a little over a mile below the ridge he came across Jim Ludridge, Jack Keller, George Stevens and another man seated in a boat and finishing the hauling of the seine. When Nettle came abreast of the boat Stevens looked up quickly and said, "Who are you shooting at." Nettle replied, "I am shooting at birds, but, —— you, I'll shoot you if you don't get out of the road." Nettle then fired again but wide of the boat. This enraged the men, and as if by impulse they all sprang to the beach. Stevens was in front, and as he came rapidly up the bank Nettle told him to keep back. Stevens, however, kept coming, and when he was within forty feet of Nettle the latter deliberately placed the gun to his shoulder, took aim and pulled the trigger. Stevens threw up his arms, uttered a groan and fell dead, shot through the heart. He never spoke and scarcely seemed to move, so quickly had death resulted. The other men seemed dazed and stunned for a minute and then, after partly realizing the awful tragedy which they had witnessed, darted for the murderer. He was game and stood his ground, but he dropped the gun. One of the party picked this up, and saying, "D—— you, I'll brain you," struck at him. The butt of the gun only glanced from his head, but the blow had been sufficient to cut the scalp and cause the blood to flow freely. Nettle then started up the river, and for an hour after the shooting seems to have been doing about as he liked. He then went towards Victoria, and was met by Constable Richard Griffin, who took him into custody, and after being locked up for a short time he acknowledged the shooting, but said it was done in self-defence. The body of Stevens still lay on the river bank, but was finally removed by order of Coroner Douglass and placed in Sherman's boathouse for the night. The murdered man, George Stevens, was about 27 years of age and unmarried, and had a bad reputation. He had served several terms in the large Canadian prisons, and about three years ago broke out from the Toronto Central Prison in company with another convict. They were seen by the guards and fired upon. Stevens' companion was shot dead, but he escaped and came to this city. Since then he has led a vagabond life along both shores of the Niagara River. His mother lives about three miles below the bridge and is in poor circumstances.

Peter Nettle, the man who did the shooting, is 47 years of age and has a wife and one son. They live on Nettle's Point and have been known as quiet, respectable people, though it is said the father rather liked to brag a little about fighting, and was not averse to taking a hand in a row.

An inquest was held to-day by Coroner Brewster, of Ridgeway. Seventeen jurymen were empannelled, and the verdict was that "George Stevens came to his death at the hands of Peter Nettle while acting in self-defence." The community appear to be well satisfied with the verdict. Nettle is a farmer and bears a good reputation.

WATCHING THE FISH.

Complaint of a Scarcity of Cruisers—Vessels for the St. Lawrence.

A Halifax despatch says: The Dominion fishery cruiser Acadia arrived at Port Hawkesbury yesterday from Halifax, and sailed to return westward. The cruiser Advance, which arrived here from Shelburne last night, proceeded to-night for North Bay, to watch the American fishing fleet. It is proposed to have three cruisers in the Gulf of St. Lawrence on fishery protection within a few days, as the Critic is now there and the Advance will be followed in a few days by the Intrepid, which was recently commissioned for the service in New Brunswick. Capt. Knowlton states that when he seized the Gloucester schooner Annie W. Hodgson at Shelburne he had no doubt the vessel was going to leave the coast without making her report at the Custom house. With reference to the fish found on her deck, he states that they were cod, which he never heard were used for bait; he had no reason for supposing she violated the treaty in this respect. Furthermore, he found no evidence whatever of a treaty violation. Capt. Knowlton's official statement of the Hodgson case was taken here to-day and will be sent to the Fisheries Department at Ottawa. The Prince Edward Island papers complain that the fishery protection service on that coast is not sufficient, and state that there should be more cruisers to keep off or arrest the Americans, who are constantly poaching without the slightest molestation. They say that were more of the fishery protection fleet on the ground there would probably be numerous seizures.

Rescued by a Horse from Drowning.

A Detroit despatch says: At Higgins' Lake, Roscommon County, yesterday Mrs. Charles H. Pettit and her little daughter, aged 3 years, were boating, when the child fell into the water. The mother, in her anxiety and fright, upset the boat, and, as they were alone, the chances were they would both be drowned. Such would have been the case had not their horse, an intelligent French pony, which had been turned loose to graze on the shore of the lake, come to their rescue. It swam out to them, and when they had taken secure hold of its mane, struggled back to shore, a tired, but heroic pony. The animal is inclined to be balky, and he never would pull anything but a light load; but he is a prime favorite now.

How He Managed.

"My dear old friend, how were you able to acquire such an immense fortune?"

"By a very simple method."

"When I was poor I made out that I was rich, and when I got rich I made out that I was poor."

AN UNHEARD OF HORROR.

Chicago Woman and Baby Roasted Alive in Mid-air—Heroism of Two Firemen.

A last (Friday) night's Chicago despatch says: The story of the attempted rescue of Mrs. Trugo and her babe, as described in later accounts, is one of peculiar horror and pathos. The police and firemen had rescued her husband and four eldest children, but she was in some manner—readily ascribed to the confusion of the moment—neglected and left with her 2-year-old baby Mary. The poor woman resorted to the window. A fireman saw her, and plunging back through the smoke he returned to her chamber. All escape from the rear with such a burden as a woman and child was impossible. He thought of the bed cord, and tearing it out bound the woman and her baby with it and pushed them through the window. He played out the rope until from the heat and smoke he was ready to fall to the floor, when he fastened the upper end to the bed-post and fled. Far from accomplishing his gallant purpose he had but too surely compassed the destruction of those he sought to save. His rope was too short, and instead of dropping woman and child to the ground or within reach of those below, he had suspended them in front of the first floor window, from which fire poured. She swung there ten or twelve feet from the ground, writhing, shrieking and struggling as the fire swept off her garments and choked and broiled her alive, the baby in her arms. By the most singular fatality the flames which were destroying her left the rope intact. It became a necessity if not to save the woman to at least remove the revolting sight. This duty was assumed by Capt. Wm. A. Cowan, of truck No. 8, who might have ordered another man to the task, but who chose to chance the fate which he was told by the spectators awaited his efforts. Seizing a ladder he threw it up to the blazing window, and with an axe mounted and stood on its blazing rung. He deliberately entered the flames, and, as they encircled him from helmet to boots, he struck at the rope. He could not see the rope, and struck with inaccurate aim once, twice, as the clothing fell from him, but he struck in vain. At the third stroke the blade cut the rope. Simultaneously the burning ladder broke and the three blazing human beings fell to the ground. The baby was already dead, and the mother died a few hours later, and the captain lies in his home in death agonies.

Two bakers, Essen and Unsbetter, who are believed to be responsible for the neglect which caused the fire, have been arrested. The police say the pair became drowsy from drink, and instead of watching the stove fell into a stupor, from which they only awoke when they and the tenants were at the mercy of the flames.

MR. GANS' PARLOR-WINDOW KISS

Is it Disorderly Conduct to Osculate With a Chicago Girl?

A Chicago telegram says: Justice Lyon was to-day called upon to decide whether kissing in a parlor where it could be seen across the street was disorderly conduct. The complainant was Mrs. Oleson, keeper of a fashionable boarding house at No. 1,400 Michigan avenue, a neighborhood which in days gone by furnished many a curious scandal. Among Mrs. Oleson's lady boarders was a Miss Hanson, whose face and form were undeniably fair to see, and who, if some rather vinegary-looking witnesses were to be believed, was as complacent as she was beautiful. These witnesses included numerous members of both sexes, all of whom were got up in elaborate style, and certainly gave effect to Mrs. Oleson's statement that her establishment was a fashionable one. The terms of familiarity which have for some time existed between Miss Hanson and Gus. E. Gans, a male admirer, have been the occasion of much gossip among the other boarders and the scandal culminated last evening, when Mrs. Oleson swore out a warrant for the arrest of Gans on the charge of disorderly conduct. George Ross, who lives across the street from the boarding-house, said he had seen the prisoner fondle the young lady's hair and kiss her or bite her, witness couldn't tell which.

The ladies living there gave similar testimony, and several declared that the prisoner "acted very disorderly."

"Do you consider it disorderly conduct to be kissed by a young man before a window?" asked the Court of the tallest witness.

"Of course I do," she replied with a proud elevation of her shapely nose. At this the rest tittered and blushed profusely.

Justice Lyon meditated a moment and then said: "Well, I think there is more jealousy here than disorderly conduct. I'll discharge the prisoner. There seems to have been no harm done, and as Mr. Gans is handsome and Miss Hanson beautiful, I will forgive them. There are quite too many misses and young bachelors on the stand to make the prosecution effective."

Romance of the Press-Room.

A St. Louis despatch says: The marriage of E. C. Woodward, of the Woodward & Tiernan Printing Company, one of the wealthiest establishments in the city, to Miss Lizzie Bierks, who has for five years been a press-feeder in the house, is announced to-day. The couple were married on January 29th, but fear of parental wrath led young Woodward to defer the announcement. The young wife continued to feed presses until two weeks ago. Woodward's fears appear to be well founded, as his father is said to be willing to give him a chance to try the world single-handed.

The Sunrise Photographed.

A successful attempt to make a photograph of a sunrise from the summit of Pike's Peak has been made by C. F. Snyder, a member of the Signal Corps.—Omaha (Neb.) Bee.

There are over 300,000 children in the United States between 1 and 12 years old whose lives are insured.

Hector Berlioz's grand "Messe des Morts," which was first introduced into this country by the late Dr. Damrosch, will be performed at the next Birmingham Musical Festival. Handel's oratorio "Saul" will likewise be heard on this occasion, and Dr. Hubert Parry will contribute an ode.

A GREAT FORGER SET FREE.

One of the Bank of England Forgers Given His Liberty from Prison.

A London cablegram says: George Bidwell, who was sentenced to life imprisonment for forging Bank of England notes, has been released from confinement on the ground of ill health. He sailed for New York on Saturday last.

George Bidwell, the forger, who, according to a cablegram, has just been released from prison in England on account of ill health, and who intends coming to this country, is one of the Bidwell brothers who were associated with George Engles, MacDonald and Williamson in the stupendous Bank of England forgeries sixteen years ago. The gang in 1871 left this city and went to England. They began operations in Liverpool, where in a short time they netted $80,000. They then went to London, and there opened a commission house for the discounting and shaving of commercial paper. The spurious firm was organized by MacDonald under the name of "Warner & Co." The forgers opened an account with one of the leading banks, and bona fide transactions were conducted for several months. When the confidence of the officers of the bank had been gained, the paper of Warner & Co., presented by some of the leading merchants of London, was discounted without suspicion. Before the consummation of the gigantic scheme George MacDonald and one of the Bidwells became infatuated with two women with whom they lived. Upon discovering this fact Engles became afraid that his associates would divulge the scheme to their mistresses. MacDonald and Bidwell were then residing in St. John's Wood, Kensington, London. Engles objected to the women and threatened to cut off business relations unless his companions gave them up. His companions laughed at him, and after a quarter of a million pounds sterling had been realized Macdonald and Bidwell admitted that their women knew all about the scheme. Engles thereupon vanished, and when MacDonald and Bidwell under took to continue the business the plot leaked out, and the sequel showed that if it had not been for the women, in whom they had so much confidence, they would have escaped. In their recklessness MacDonald and Bidwell presented a forged note which had not been dated. The clerk discovered the error and forwarded it to the firm by whom it was supposed to have been issued. It was then pronounced a forgery. To avoid arrest the gang scattered. One of the Bidwells escaped to Scotland, where he was arrested, and his brother was apprehended in Havana, Cuba. MacDonald tried to get clear of his mistress, but failed. He induced her, however, to accept a passage ticket from Liverpool to New York, telling her that he would meet her at the Northern Hotel before the steamer sailed. He did not attempt to meet her, but took a train to Folkestone, crossed to France, and at Havre engaged passage for this city.

Becoming enraged at the disappointment and suspecting the route her lover would most likely take, MacDonald's mistress betrayed him to the English police. A cablegram was flashed to this city, and MacDonald was arrested on board the incoming vessel in the lower bay. After fighting the case in the courts the fugitive was finally returned to England, where he was convicted and sentenced to life imprisonment. The Bidwell brothers received like sentences.

AN UNPAID BOARD BILL

Brings About the Murder of the Landlady and the Suicide of the Boarder.

A last (Wednesday) night's Grand Rapids, Mich., despatch says: A terrible murder was committed here this morning, followed by a suicide. A quarrel over a board bill caused it. Charles J. Wernan, of Paterson, N.J., where his family is, has been for a year past located here as agent for the Metropolitan Insurance Company. He lived at Susan Bonfoey's boarding house, and found the place so pleasant that he frequently took her out riding and to picnics. He is 56 years old, and she over 50, and she has had three husbands (all dead), but is still good-looking and vivacious, and has two daughters and a son. Wernan managed to keep in the good graces of the landlady, and was permitted to be in arrears for fifteen weeks' board. This morning he signified his intention of leaving and Mrs. Bonfoey presented his bill, and a quarrel ensued, she objecting to his departure until satisfactory arrangements for payment of his bill were made. He, in a rage, pulled a revolver and shot the woman in the head, killing her instantly. Then, apparently in horror, he turned the weapon on himself and planted a bullet in his brain, and fell dead to the floor. From photographs and letters found in the belongings of Wernan he is thought to have a family consisting of a wife and five children—three daughters and two sons. His wife is an invalid, and in her last letter to him expresses fears of her recovery and hopes he might soon return home. Upon Wernan's person were found an empty flask that smelled strongly of whiskey, two empty pocket books and an unsigned cheque for $100 upon the First National Bank, Paterson, N.J. The coroner has taken charge of the remains, and the inquest will be held to-morrow.

Costume for Comfort.

The Oriental races who have had to find out for themselves how best to bear torrid temperature, ages ago adopted costumes from which everything tight, stiff and heavy is excluded. Loose garments of soft, light, openmeshed material constitute their principal dress. The turban, as all know who have tried it, is infinitely cooler and hygienically safer than any kind of hot weather headgear worn by western peoples. Probably the latter would never adopt the flowing oriental robes, which certainly are not well designed for the violent physical exertions required for the catching of ferries and trains. But why should not the central idea, the banishment of all stiff, hard, close-fitting garments be utilized?—New York Tribune.

Seventy-five pianos with five hundred trunks of valuables, fine paintings, jewellery and silverware were destroyed by the recent burning of a large storage building in New York city.

In Cincinnati smoking is prohibited on any part of the horse cars.

REMARKABLE HALLUCINATION.

A Young Lady with a Wealthy Lover who Lived Only in Imagination.

A Boston despatch says: Investigations made yesterday and to-day make plain the fact that the ultimate phase of the Crowninshield-Stone affair is a very sad one, sadder in every way than if there had been a lover of Miss Florence Stone and he had really died just as she was about to sail for England to be married, for now the most charitable construction that can be put upon the lady's conduct is that she was the victim of a strange hallucination and did not consciously deceive her friends, who placed every confidence in her till the denouement proved that the whole story of her courtship and marriage to the wealthy English Crowninshield was the creation of her own brain.

The Advertiser says: "The wealthy lover does not exist, nor ever did: the letters which the unfortunate woman would read so readily to those who were in her confidence came through no mail, and were received only at the delivery of her own diseased imagination; the royal gift that her future husband was to present to her on her wedding day was as mythical as the golden treasures of El Dorado. The pitiful part of the matter is that those who knew her best and trusted and loved her most now realize that her whole life for the past two years has been one continued deceit, and they are fain to conclude that she was not herself in all this, which conclusion must be the correct one, for it is impossible that a woman of her character could have systematically and consistently carried on such a farce for so long a time had she been in her right mind. As it is, it is wonderful that she could bring her friends into such complete participation in all her plans, with never a flaw appearing to cause suspicion. They believed in the far-off Mr. Crowninshield, believed in his immense wealth, believed in the ocean voyage to meet him, and for a long time believed in his death."

Said a gentleman who knew Miss Stone intimately: "If she has put others to expense, she has certainly spent a great deal of money herself in her hallucination. She had me make her two big oak chests to carry her things over to England in. I turned out two splendid ones for her, but in a short time they came back because I had put pine bottoms in them. She wanted them solid oak throughout, she said, to show Mr. Crowninshield how we do things over here. She also told me of the memorial chapel that the lover was to erect in Brooklyn. She said he wanted to build one in honor of his father, either in Brooklyn or New York, but that she persuaded him to locate in Brooklyn, since he was an Englishman and it would make no special difference to him. How it could have happened I certainly am at a loss to know. She was sane enough on every other topic."

Miss Stone has gone to Chicago with her sister, who immediately came east for her when the result of the affair became known. It is a strange case, and there may yet be parts in it to clear up.

DR. PARKER'S FAREWELL.

His Friends Under the Impression He Will Remain in the States.

A London cablegram says: Dr. Parker, at the close of his usual Thursday afternoon service in the City Temple, Holborn Viaduct, announced to a crowded congregation that that was the last occasion on which he would preach or conduct any religious service in England until his return from the United States of America on the second Sunday in April next. He said that he had been wondering ever since the announcement was first made that he intended visiting America this year why people thought he would not return, and after much cogitation he supposed it was because they fancied that when he got there he would find that there were no Dissenters there. Every one in America stood for what he was worth, while here a Dissenter was almost obliged to apologize for his convictions. He had received from all classes of people, in high and low stations, the kindest expressions of good-will and wishes for his safe return to England. The conclusion of one letter, which he dearly prized, contained these words: "We sincerely wish you a safe and happy expedition." "That wish," said Dr. Parker, "loses nothing in value and worth because the letter bears the signature of 'William Ewart Gladstone.'"

"ROUGH ON RATS."

A Victim of Whiskey Ends Her Life With Poison.

An Ottawa despatch says: Mrs. Poitvin, wife of Jerry Poitvin, a mill hand who resides on the Richmond road, committed suicide on Monday by taking "Rough on Rats." The woman was addicted to drink, and yesterday when her husband came home at noon he saw no preparation for dinner. Soon his wife came down and went hurriedly to the kitchen, where her husband heard her mixing up some decoction in a glass. A moment afterwards she appeared in the dining-room doorway, and, raising the glass, exclaimed, "See that, Jerry!" She immediately swallowed the contents of the tumbler before her husband, who sprang toward her, could prevent her. The unfortunate woman staggered and fell. Mr. Poitvin almost instantly mixed an emetic of salt and water and forced it down his wife's throat, despite her struggles to eject it. He then immediately went off for a doctor, but when the physician arrived it was too late. The poor victim of drink had breathed her last. She was 33 years of age and came originally from Merrickville.

Salvation Army Wedding.

A St. John, N. B., despatch says: Adjutant Southall, of Halifax, was married here last night to Captain Jennie Langtry, of Toronto, in the presence of four thousand people. Both are officers of the Salvation Army, and the services were performed by Commissioner Coombes and Rev. Dr. Pope.

A Dog Story.—The Youngstown News says: A dog of the water spaniel species, belonging to Mr. W. G. Donnelly, was taken over to Toronto by the steamer Chicora one day last week, and two or three days afterwards he presented himself to his master, having returned all the way from Toronto to Niagara by land. Mr. Donnelly will vouch for the truth of this assertion.

A WARM DISCUSSION.

What Brought About Healy's Suspension—Vernon Harcourt on His Ear.

A last (Friday) night's London cable says: On the resumption of the debate on the Land Bill in the House of Commons last evening Mr. Smith, the Government leader, appealed to the House to expedite the passage of the Bill, which, he said, would prevent harsh evictions. He would not use any threat, but he would remind the House that unless the Bill were through the committee stage early next week it would be difficult to pass the measure at all.

Mr. O'Kelly, Nationalist, moved to give the tenant six months for redemption after receiving written notice of eviction.

After some discussion Mr. Smith repeated his appeal, remarking that such amendments, if persisted in, would endanger the passage of the Bill.

Parnell retorted that if there was no time for a reasonable discussion of this amendment there was no time for the discussion of any other amendment.

The amendment was rejected—164 to 142.

Mr. Morley suggested that the Government allow the tenant one month of undisturbed possession between the service of notice and the execution of the decree.

Mr. Balfour accepted the amendment, expressing the hope that the Opposition would attempt to press the Government no further.

After further discussion a passage at arms occurred between Timothy Healy and the Chairman, the former complaining of Conservative interruptions. The incident was ended by Mr. Healy apologising. The excitement continuing, the Chairman reproved Mr. de Lisle, Conservative, for being disorderly, and refusing him an explanation suspended the sitting in committee and summoned the Speaker to the chair. The Chairman then reported that during the last division following the Healy incident, Mr. de Lisle came to him and remonstrated for not being allowed to explain, whereupon Mr. Healy approached and said, "Come out, de Lisle, if you are a man. If you interrupt me again I will break your neck."

The Speaker demanded an explanation. Mr. Healy said he felt no regret for the course he had taken, and was willing to abide the consequences. The Speaker named Mr. Healy and Mr. Smith moved that he be suspended. Mr. Healy immediately took his hat and, standing in the centre of the House before retiring, said: "I beg that none of my friends vote against this motion." The motion to suspend him was carried without a division.

The sitting in committee being resumed, Mr. Chance, Nationalist, arose to speak. Being interrupted, he called the attention of the Chairman to the jeers from the Government side. (Cries of "de Lisle.") Sir William Vernon Harcourt implored the Chairman to use his authority to prevent systematic insult and provocation from below the gangway opposite. (Cries of "Order.") The members opposite, he said, might move to suspend him if they liked. (Opposition cheers.)

At this point Mr. Bruce, Liberal, arose, but the Chairman ruled him out of order. Sir William Vernon Harcourt, continuing, said that Mr. Bruce was one of those impugned. The members had witnessed incidents of systematic insult night after night.

The Chairman noting that there was no question before the House, the discussion of amendments was continued. Mr. De Lisle again called for a cessation of the debate, but it was refused. Mr. Chance moved an amendment providing that while a tenant is in actual occupation he shall not lose the privilege of voting at elections. Mr. Smith promised that the Government would arrange the matter, and the amendment was withdrawn.

Mr. Smith called the Speaker's attention to the accusation of Sir Wm. Vernon Harcourt that the Opposition had been subjected to studied insult. Such language, he said, was absolutely irregular. The Speaker agreed with Mr. Smith, and said he had not noticed that any particular section of the House was guilty of provocation. Mr. Smith then declared that he was satisfied. At this point Sir Wm. Vernon Harcourt, who in the meantime had been absent, returned to the House. He invited Mr. Smith to make any charges in his presence, but the Speaker having repeated his remarks and the Chairman having confirmed them the incident closed.

Mr. Healy's suspension is for two weeks.

Mr. Dillon said much had been said about the Bill taking away the stock-in-trade of the agitator. He would rejoice to see that happen, for a more thankless, cruel, wearing life than that of the agitators had not yet been discovered.

Lord Salisbury, speaking at Norwich yesterday, warned the Conservative party to prepare for a possible dissolution of Parliament. He said that Parliament had often met with an early termination when its life seemed unendangered, and that the Conservative party must organize to instruct the people against the deception of the separatist apostates, who were only too numerous.

Col. King Harman, Under-Secretary for Ireland, intimated in the House of Commons this evening that the Government had proclaimed Dublin only under the section of the Crimes Act dealing with forcible possession and assaults on the police.

How to Cool a Watermelon.

The perfect Georgia watermelon is that which has been cooled in a dry well. To freeze so genial a thing in a refrigerator is to impair its tropical tone and to deaden certain honeyful impulses that beat in its warm heart. A melon in placid reflection at the bottom of a dry well, harmonizing slowly with the delicious coolness of the earth, is a melon approaching idealization.—Atlanta Constitution.

Says an advertisement in the British Medical Journal: "Skeletons have ruled firm and active throughout the year, with prices unchanged. We have been able to supply the demand for the common varieties promptly, but the finer grades were scarce, and orders for deformities could not always be supplied at once. In this regard the market is still unchanged, although our broker in Paris has orders to buy everything offered at the usual rates."

Louisville Democrat's advice: If you want to go to heaven when you die, you best start now.

CURRENT TOPICS.

CLEVELAND Leader: It is a curious fact that very few women are victims of sunstroke or heat apoplexy. Is it a question of exposure to the sun, of long and short hair, of diet, including drinks, or what does make the difference so marked?

LORD BRASSEY, having made a present to the town of Hastings of a building for an art school and public library, to cost $75,000, it has been suggested that the institution be called the De Bresci Free Library, after the imaginary ancestor of the Brasseys.

FASHION, like history, repeats itself. The oxydized silver chains and ornaments that were in vogue during the palmy days of Herculaneum and Pompeii are now the fad for ladies' wear; and the pulled sleeves that obtained "when George the Fourth was King" are ornamenting the arms of the elite.

NEW YORK Sun: A curious circumstance is before us now in the fact that the Supreme Court of the State is running a concert saloon down in the Bowery. The proprietor failed and a receiver has been appointed by the court to run the machine to make money for the settlement with the creditors.

EVERY year sees a revolt started against black broadcloth as a basis for men's evening dress. This year no less a personage than E. Berry Wall, known to fame as the King of the Dudes, is at the head of the rebellion. He has appeared in a Saratoga ball-room attired in a coat and trousers of wine-colored cloth, and a waistcoat of white satin brocade.

CHARLEY LOOMS, a Kansas City saloonkeeper, has anchored a boat in the exact centre of the Missouri River, where he sells whiskey without paying license. He claims that no one can ascertain under what jurisdiction he does business. Several attempts have been made to convict him under the law, but each time he escaped on the ground of non-jurisdiction. The Missouri Prohibitionists have made at least one man take water.

PERHAPS the most extortion about Niagara Falls, writes a correspondent, is at the upper suspension bridge. Say there are four of you in a carriage. The charge is 25 cents each, 25 cents for the driver and 10 cents for the horses and vehicle—$1.35 to cross a bridge that is so narrow that vehicles cannot pass on it. If that bridge corporation has a soul an improved telescope will have to be built to discover it.

THE citizens of Buffalo have resolved once more to chain Niagara Falls for manufacturing purposes, says the Springfield Republican. A fund is being raised to secure engineering estimates. But why spend money in prospecting for plans? A citizen of New York State once drew up plans for a huge wheel at the falls with a shaft running through to Albany to which all the belting of the State could be attached. The inventor died in an insane asylum, but his idea remains. But seriously, the transmission of power by electricity is likely to work out problems as big as this.

A LONDON correspondent reports that Emily Faithful has come up from Manchester to London, at the Queen's command, to present Her Majesty with the address which she moved in the Queen's honor. It is a gorgeous affair, bound in a foot-square of ivory, exquisitely painted by Miss Charlotte Robinson (Miss Faithful's present companion), with superb Gloire de Dijon roses, which the Queen decrees shall henceforth be called "Jubilee roses." Miss Faithful looks extremely well, and she says she is unusually happy. The smiles of the Queen seem to be as vivifying as sunlight.

THE prevalence of measles in some parts of the world, and its fatality, have aroused health authorities to such an appreciation of the necessity of restricting the spread of this disease that official steps are being taken for the attainment of this end. A recent occurrence at Portsmouth, England, makes the necessity for this work more emphatic. H.M.S. Crocodile arrived at that place with forty persons sick with measles on board, who were permitted to land. From these individuals the disease has spread to an epidemic, and at last reports the number of deaths was 197.

THE discovery has been made, it is said, of a great swindle in railroad ties, of which the Missouri Pacific system of roads is the chief victim. The operators in it have, it is alleged, taken $1,000,000 out of the treasury of the roads more than the legitimate value of the ties. The chief contractors for the ties sublet their contracts in such a way that they got about 10 cents a tie more than they paid at first hand. Ties which were worth from 21 to 23 cents they sold to the roads for 30 cents. The Chicago, Burlington & Quincy and the Rock Island roads are believed to be also great losers.

MRS. ORD, widow of the late general of that name, has recently sold for $1,000 the able upon which Grant and Lee signed the papers providing for the surrender of the rebel armies. The purchaser is a Mr. Gunther, of Chicago. General Ord secured possession of the table at the time of the surrender and his widow obtained a letter from General Grant attesting its genuineness which, we suppose, goes with the table and increases its value. The sum of $3,000 was asked for the table until recently. It is a common enough piece of furniture in itself but valuable on account of its historic associations.

A PRETTY young woman's sleeping car experience is related in that department of the American Magazine where only true stories are placed: "I always lie with my head very far front and my feet near the wall. One night I was awakened by some one stepping on my nose as it lay on the pillow. You can imagine my wrath. I never said a word, but gave the foot the most spiteful pinch, that sent it up after its owner with an exclamation point. The next day, he—a very dapper young man—sat opposite me all day, and, actually, the mean thing never moved without limping! And it couldn't have hurt him that bad, could it?"

MR. GLADSTONE has four sons and three daughters. The eldest son, Mr. William Henry Gladstone, was born in 1840; he is married to a daughter of Lord Blantyre. The second is the Vicar of Hawarden, Stephen Edward Gladstone, who was last year married to a Liverpool lady. The third, Mr. Henry Neville Gladstone, is resident in Calcutta, and the fourth, Mr. Herbert Gladstone, born in 1854, is M.P. for a division of Leeds and distinguished in political life. The eldest daughter, Agnes, was married in 1878 to Mr. Wickham, head master of Wellington College; the second is married to Rev. Henry Drew; the youngest, Helen, is Principal of the College for Women at Newnham, near Cambridge.

ONE of the leading candy manufacturers tells a New York reporter that there is more money in molasses candy at the ordinary selling price than in any other kind. Close to molasses candy comes chocolate drops, caramels and other candies in which sugar and chocolate or plain flavors are the ingredients. The candies on which there is the least profits in proportion to the selling price are those which sell high. The best confectioner's sugar costs but little over six cents a pound, and the best grades of molasses are not dear. These and a little flavoring make molasses candy, and that is why there is so much profit in it. When you come right down to it, children and adults with "the sweet tooth" care more for molasses and plain candies than they do for the expensive and elaborate French confectionery.

THE common assertion that brass cannot be tempered is met by a writer in Mechanical Progress with a statement covering his own experience during a long period. Brass, he asserts, not hard by mixture, but by compression, either rolling, hammering, wire drawing, or any other process which compresses the particles of metal, can be and is tempered regularly, just as easily and in the same manner as in tempering an equal piece of hardened steel, namely, by heat; that is, by placing a small piece of polished steel on the brass object to be tempered, and applying the heat so as to affect equally the brass and steel, the temper of the brass will be made known by the color of the steel, and, consequently, brass may by this process be tempered in exact proportion to every shade of color of the steel.

GENERAL WOLSELEY holds the post of Adjutant-General of the British army on an annual salary of $13,500. To Field Marshal Von Moltke, who performs the same duties in the German army, only $8,600 is paid, and the Adjutant-General of the French army only gets $4,000. When British public attention was called to the fact that a Von Moltke, one of the greatest commanders the world has ever known, was getting less than 60 per cent. of Lord Wolseley's pay for directing the staff of an army fifteen times as large as the British force, it was necessary for the mutual admiration society that exists in the British War Office to break the force of the inevitable odious comparison. Colonel Knox, one of Lord Wolseley's staff subordinates, justified the large salary paid to his chief on the ground that the latter was burdened with "the enormous responsibility involved in a volunteer army," and apparently this amiable quibble was acceptable to the Army Investigation Committee.

THE cholera in Sicily and Calabria is of a more virulent type apparently than Italy has known since 1884. Thus far only sporadic, incomplete reports are obtainable, but, as the spread of the infected area is incessant, we are likely soon to hear a good deal of it. The strongest phase of the thing is that it should reappear for the third consecutive year, practically on the same territory, which hitherto has been unheard of. Physicians in London are getting nervous about the possibility of the plague getting a foothold in the metropolis, owing to the unprecedentedly favorable conditions. During the heated term of the past six weeks the weekly deaths from diarrhœa in the London district have gone up from 9 to 312—of this latter number 265 being infants under 1 year of age. The Lancet points out that one of the surest precursors of cholera in a given district is the tendency to diarrhœaic fatality, and urges the utmost vigilance.

ST. PETER'S EPISCOPAL CHURCH at North Greenfield is probably the only religious edifice in Wisconsin which depends upon champagne bottles for its drainage. When the church was built funds were very scarce, and many small economies were practiced. The congregation on first occupying their place of worship found that it was uncomfortably damp. The fact was mentioned to the late George Stevens, who said: "I'll tell you how to remedy that. Go into my cellar and you will find enough champagne bottles to build a drain with. They are often used for that purpose in England, and when once laid will last forever, if not allowed to choke up." The bottles were secured, the bottoms deftly knocked off, and the necks abbreviated in length. Then, by placing the neck of one bottle in the bottom of another, and so on, a drain was constructed which has kept the little church "extra dry" ever since.

MUCH diversity of opinion exists as to the utility of iron shutters. It is unquestionably true that they are not only undesirable but positively dangerous under certain circumstances. Many fires have been concealed by them until they have attained great headway, and then the shutters have kept the firemen out for some time longer. At the same time, for keeping fire out of a building when a neighboring one is burning, they are positively invaluable. Almost every one has witnessed fires where the firemen have had a fierce struggle to get inside the building, and has wished the iron shutters were not there to prevent the easy handling of the blaze. But certainly every one, too, has seen cases of buildings with inflammable goods piled up near the windows, which would have gone down in a fire, destroying some buildings close by, if the shutters had not presented a non-burnable surface to the flames. As a matter of fact, there is no good reason why one shutter, at least, on each story of a building above the first, should not always be left unfastened, to afford entry to the firemen in case of need, as is largely the practice in some large cities.

AN English paper says: "We are in a position to state that the county of Durham will shortly produce a startling economic improvement in the matter of fuel combustion and the heating of steam boilers. Protection has been obtained for the invention, and in the course of a short time we shall be in a position to lay before our readers the practical details. In the meantime, we can only in the most general terms foreshadow the nature of the results attainable. The cubic bulk of fuel that will henceforth be required for marine steam engines will be reduced by 70 per cent., giving a gain to the extent indicated by that proportion to the stowage space for cargo in ocean going steamships. The time for raising steam will be diminished in all steam boilers, stationary or marine, by at least two-thirds. The cost of fuel consumption will be reduced by more than one-half, and the production of smoke will be absolutely annihilated. The process has been made the subject of actual experimental demonstration. Every test has been applied. The results we have given above are the under-stated consequences of experiments made under circumstances the reverse of favorable to the invention.

IT was in 1868 that the Moabite stone was discovered. It was found at Dibau, in Moab. The supposition has been formed that it was erected by Mesha, King of Moab, mentioned in II. Kings vii. The inscriptions have always been understood to refer to his wars with Israel in the tenth century B.C. The stone, which exists only in fragments, having been broken by the contending Arab claimants, is preserved in the Louvre. Rev. Mr. Lowry, Secretary of the Anglo-Jewish Association, in an article in the last number of the Scottish Review, proclaims the text of the inscription to be a fabrication. According to this writer, who has carefully examined the stone, and who furnishes an illustration, "the dressed surface is ancient, whereas the inscription is modern." The surface is pitted and indented, in consequence of thousands of years of exposure. Not so the inscriptions. The text is given in Hebrew, with a translation. The writer pronounces the text to be "egregiously un-Hebraic," and arrives at the conclusion that notwithstanding its world-wide glorification, the Moabite stone is a "stone of stumbling," and must be consigned to the limbo of marvellous impositions.

HERE is an exceedingly good story from the Boston Herald and there are a good many people who ought to paste it on their mirrors: A prominent newspaper publisher in this city, who has gained fame also in the literary world, once told me that he considered it an affront for any one to say to him: "Now, don't print this in your paper," in the course of any conversation held in his presence. I feel like echoing the same opinion. Certain news is entirely legitimate, no matter where heard or obtained, but a newspaper man respects private affairs and personal feeling just as much as any one else, if he is a man of principle. To be thought differently of always reminds me of the story of the musician and an eminent surgeon who met one evening at a social entertainment. The surgeon said to the musical genius: "Of course you have brought your violin." "No, I have not," said the musician. "But are you not going to play or do something to add to the entertainment of Mrs. Blank's guests?" asked the physician. "I had not thought of it," said the violinist, "but if you will cut off a leg, I will play something." That musician was a wise man. I wish he might set an example to a good many others; it would save some people a good deal of annoyance.

THE question, can an individual shoot himself through the head and afterward through the heart, or through the heart first and afterward through the brain, has recently given rise to much discussion among physicians. It is universally agreed that such a thing is possible. It is popularly supposed that wounds of the heart produce instant death. Such is not always the case. One instance is recorded where a man stabbed another in the heart, and the injured man chased his assailant 150 feet, struck him, nearly killed him, fell and died in an instant. In another instance a man standing behind the counter of his store was shot in the heart. He ran around the counter, a distance of 20 feet, hit the man who had shot him on the head with a hammer and killed him by a blow. Still another case is on record in which a bullet passed through the heart, and the subject, a boy, lived three years and some months afterward. As a rule, serious injury to the brain is followed by immediate loss of consciousness, but that is not invariably the case. It is told of a man who, after shooting his wife, shot himself through the head, but never became unconscious, and apparently recovered. He was sent to the penitentiary, and a year later died of abscess of the brain. A physician in St. Louis who reports this case also describes another—that of a boy of 8 or 9 years of age, who put a pistol to his head and fired. It was demonstrated by probing that the bullet had lodged in the brain, and yet this boy never lost consciousness, but recovered, and seven months after was reported as perfectly well. Many cases similar to these are on record. They have an important medico-legal bearing. If a man is found dead, shot through the head and heart, one would naturally assume that he had been murdered, and yet, as will appear from the foregoing, a suicide may inflict both wounds upon himself.

A Great Wonder in Heaven.

There lived near Alexandria, in Virginia an old colored man and woman, whom their acquaintances called Daddy and Mammy Williams. He had had educational advantages, and could read in a fashion peculiarly his own; but his wife, although lacking as regards erudition, possessed great force of character, which she often displayed in a manner that was very irritating to her husband. When she became particularly fractious Daddy would take the Bible and open to that chapter in Revelation beginning, "And there appeared a great wonder in heaven, a woman clothed with the sun, and the moon under her feet," etc.

With impressive solemnity he would read as follows: "An' dere 'peared a great wonder in heben, a woman!" Slowly closing the book, he would gaze sternly at his now subdued wife, for the passage never failed to produce the desired effect.—Editor's Drawer in Harper's.

Another of Those Old Laws.

Married men are warned that the law of 1741 prohibits the kissing of their wives on Sundays under penalty of fine and imprisonment. Few married men are guilty of the offence, but it won't do any harm to call attention to the Act.—Pittsburg Times.

The Governors of Idaho and Nevada are brothers.

HE SLEPT IN A BATH TUB.

A Montana Editor's Thrilling Night in a St. Paul Hotel.

"I know a good joke on an editor from Helena, M. T.," said a conductor on the St. Paul, "and I guess I'll have to tell it. He's a colonel, but I shan't give you his last name. Last week he came into St. Paul on business, and, after registering at the best hotel in town, started out to see the sights. It was about 2 o'clock in the morning when he returned, a little the worse for wear. It happened that the night porter who showed him to his room was only about half awake, and without knowing what he was doing, ushered the colonel into the bath room attached to his apartment assigned to his use, muttered 'G'night, sir,' and disappeared. Next morning at the breakfast table the Montana journalist met an acquaintance, and said to him:

"'Fine hotel, this.'

"'Yes, one of the best in the country.'

"'Do you like their new fangled beds?'

"'Their beds are all right, though I didn't know there was anything new about them.'

"'Well, they've got the darndest bed in my room you ever set eyes on. It's more like a coffin, and there wasn't a blamed bit of cover on it. I was cold all night. It's true that when a feller gets thirsty in the night he don't have to get out of the bed for a drink, but the worst of it was in my case that it was just my durned luck to leave the thing runnin' a little the last time I took a drink out of it, an' when I woke up again I was nigh drowned in cold water. Never spent such a miserable night in my life.'"—Chicago Herald.

A Toronto Shop-lifter's Big Haul.

Maud Hutchinson, a rather nice-looking and neatly-dressed English girl, was arrested by Detective Black in Toronto yesterday for shop-lifting. Two large packages of goods, embracing everything from a fine tooth comb to a baby's lace bonnet, were described at police headquarters as the proceeds of her work Tuesday in stores on Yonge and Queen streets. In the parcels there were babies' shoes, a package of silver-plated forks, a red linen tablecloth, a pair of sciassors, a whisk, a cake of toilet soap, and a score of other small things. Part of the stuff was found on her when she was arrested, part of it was recovered at her mother's house, 152 King street.

"How long has this been going on?" was asked Inspector Stark.

"I don't exactly know," he answered. "This is merely yesterday's haul."

The girl has only been out from England a short while.

Why Laura Lost Her Beau.

Laura once had an affluent beau,
Who called twice a fortnight, or so,
Now she sits, Sunday eve,
All lonely to grieve,
Oh, where is her recreant beau,
And why did he leave Laura so?

Why, he saw that Laura was a languishing, delicate girl, subject to sick headaches, sensitive nerves and uncertain temper; and knowing what a life-long trial is a fretful, sickly wife, he transferred his attentions to her cheerful, healthy cousin, Ellen. The secret is that Laura's health and strength are sapped by chronic weakness, peculiar to her sex, which Ellen averts and avoids by the use of Dr. Pierce's Favorite Prescription. This is the only remedy, for woman's peculiar weaknesses and ailments, sold by druggists, under a positive guarantee from the manufacturers, that it will give satisfaction in every case or money will be refunded. See guarantee on bottle wrapper.

—A total eclipse of the sun will take place on the 13th of next month, but will only be visible in Europe and Asia. It will last four minutes, and great preparations have been made by the European astronomers who observe it at its totality, which will be in Japan.

To Cure a Corn.

There is no lack of so-called cures for the common ailment known as corns. The vegetable, animal, and mineral kingdoms have been ransacked for cures. It is a simple matter to remove corns without pain, for if you will go to any druggist or medicine dealer and buy a bottle of Putnam's Painless Corn Extractor and apply it as directed the thing is done. Get "Putnam's," and no other.

Forty-five years ago Elam Brown purchased a ranch from a Spaniard in Contra Costa county, California, and he has lived on it ever since. He is 90 years old.

A Flat Contradiction.

Some one has told you that your catarrh is incurable. It is not so. Dr. Sage's Catarrh Remedy will cure it. It is pleasant to use and it always does its work thoroughly. We have yet to hear of a case in which it did not accomplish a cure when faithfully used. Catarrh is a disease which it is dangerous to neglect. A certain remedy is at your command. Avail yourself of it before the complaint assumes a more serious form. All druggists.

The Latest Idea in Dress Coats.

At the Newport Casino dance on Friday night (July 15th) several gentlemen appeared in the latest style of dress coat, just brought over from England—a short, round coat in place of the conventional swallow-tail.—New York Herald.

He ate green cucumbers;
They made him quite sick;
But he took a few "Pellets"
That cured him right quick.
An easier physic
You never will find
Than Pierce's small "Pellets,"
The Purgative kind.

Small but precious. 25 cents per vial.

Objects to Full Dress.

One of the strong points of P. C. Chapman's evidence against Bessie McAllister for keeping a disorderly house at 69 Agnes street was that the defendant was seen with bare arms and shoulders. Counsel for the defence asked the witness if he had ever been at a full dress party. From his answer it appears that he had not been at one. It was proven that the house bore a bad reputation. A fine of $25 and costs or 40 days was inflicted.—Toronto Mail.

A shark recently captured in San Francisco Bay contained a peck of young lobsters.

Mr. Beecher and the Hen.

(Bridgeport (Conn.) Standard.)

"Speaking of clever things," once said Mr. Beecher, "did you ever hear that witty poem written twenty years ago on my name? Here, ma [he always called Mrs. Beecher ma] you read it to Perkins; I've forgotten the words." Mrs. Beecher smilingly put on her glasses, went to a drawer, took out a bit of paper and laughingly read:

Said a great Congregational preacher
To a hen: "You're a beautiful creature."
The hen just for that
Laid three eggs in his hat,
And thus did the hen reward Beecher.

Dr. Pierce's Pleasant Purgative Pellets The Original LITTLE LIVER PILLS.

BEWARE OF IMITATIONS. ALWAYS ASK FOR DR. PIERCE'S PELLETS, OR LITTLE SUGAR-COATED PILLS.

Being entirely vegetable, they operate without disturbance to the system, diet, or occupation. Put up in glass vials, hermetically sealed. Always fresh and reliable. As a laxative, alterative, or purgative, these little Pellets give the most perfect satisfaction.

SICK HEADACHE,

Bilious Headache, Dizziness, Constipation, Indigestion, Bilious Attacks, and all derangements of the stomach and bowels, are promptly relieved and permanently cured by the use of Dr. Pierce's Pleasant Purgative Pellets. In explanation of the remedial power of these Pellets over so great a variety of diseases, it may truthfully be said that their action upon the system is universal, not a gland or tissue escaping their sanative influence. Sold by druggists, 25 cents a vial. Manufactured at the Chemical Laboratory of WORLD'S DISPENSARY MEDICAL ASSOCIATION, Buffalo, N. Y.

$500 REWARD

is offered by the manufacturers of Dr. Sage's Catarrh Remedy, for a case of Chronic Nasal Catarrh which they cannot cure.

SYMPTOMS OF CATARRH.—Dull, heavy headache, obstruction of the nasal passages, discharges falling from the head into the throat, sometimes profuse, watery, and acrid, at others, thick, tenacious, mucous, purulent, bloody and putrid; the eyes are weak, watery, and inflamed; there is ringing in the ears, deafness, hacking or coughing to clear the throat, expectoration of offensive matter, together with scabs from ulcers; the voice is changed and has a nasal twang; the breath is offensive; smell and taste are impaired; there is a sensation of dizziness, with mental depression, a hacking cough and general debility. Only a few of the above-named symptoms are likely to be present in any one case. Thousands of cases annually, without manifesting half of the above symptoms, result in consumption, and end in the grave. No disease is so common, more deceptive and dangerous, or less understood by physicians.

By its mild, soothing, and healing properties, Dr. Sage's Catarrh Remedy cures the worst cases of Catarrh, "cold in the head," Coryza, and Catarrhal Headache.

Sold by druggists everywhere; 50 cents.

"Untold Agony from Catarrh."

Prof. W. HAUSNER, the famous mesmerist, of Ithaca, N. Y., writes: "Some ten years ago I suffered untold agony from chronic nasal catarrh. My family physician gave me up as incurable, and said I must die. My case was such a bad one, that every day, towards sunset, my voice would become so hoarse I could barely speak above a whisper. In the morning my coughing and clearing of my throat would almost strangle me. By the use of Dr. Sage's Catarrh Remedy, in three months, I was a well man, and the cure has been permanent."

"Constantly Hawking and Spitting."

THOMAS J. RUSHING, Esq., 2901 Pine Street, St. Louis, Mo., writes: "I was a great sufferer from catarrh for three years. At times I could hardly breathe, and was constantly hawking and spitting, and for the last eight months could not breathe through the nostrils. I thought nothing could be done for me. Luckily, I was advised to try Dr. Sage's Catarrh Remedy, and I am now a well man. I believe it to be the only sure remedy for catarrh now manufactured, and one has only to give it a fair trial to experience astounding results and a permanent cure."

Three Bottles Cure Catarrh.

ELI ROBBINS, Runyan P. O., Columbia Co., Pa., says: "My daughter had catarrh when she was five years old, very badly. I saw Dr. Sage's Catarrh Remedy advertised, and procured a bottle for her, and soon saw that it helped her; a third bottle effected a permanent cure. She is now eighteen years old and sound and hearty."

D C N L. 32 87.

Merchants, Butchers,

AND TRADERS GENERALLY,

We want a GOOD MAN in your locality to pick up

CALFSKINS

For us. Cash furnished on satisfactory guaranty. Address C. S. PAGE, Hyde Park, Vermont, U. S

THE LEADING CANADIAN COLLEGE FOR YOUNG WOMEN
ALMA COLLEGE
66 PAGE PAMPHLET FREE
ST. THOMAS, ONT.

CONSUMPTION.

I have a positive remedy for the above disease; by its use thousands of cases of the worst kind and of long standing have been cured. Indeed, so strong is my faith in its efficacy, that I will send TWO BOTTLES FREE, together with a VALUABLE TREATISE on this disease to any sufferer. Give express and P. O address.

DR. T. A. SLOCUM,

Branch Office, 37 Yonge St., Toronto

DUNN'S BAKING POWDER

THE COOK'S BEST FRIEND

I CURE FITS!

When I say cure I do not mean merely to stop them for a time and then have them return again. I mean a radical cure. I have made the disease of FITS, EPILEPSY or FALLING SICKNESS a life-long study. I warrant my remedy to cure the worst cases. Because others have failed is no reason for not now receiving a cure. Send at once for a treatise and a Free Bottle of my Infallible remedy. Give Express and Post Office. It costs you nothing for a trial, and I will cure you. Address DR. H. G. ROOT,

Branch Office, 37 Yonge St., Toronto.

THIS PAPER may be found on file at Geo. P. Rowell & Co's Newspaper Advertising Bureau (10 Spruce St.), where advertising contracts may be made for it IN NEW YORK.

THE ADVANCE.

Is published

Every Thursday,

FROM THE OFFICE,

Collingwood Street, - - Flesherton, Ont.

TERMS OF SUBSCRIPTION:

$1 per annum when paid strictly in advance
$1.50 per annum when not so paid.

A. R. FAWCETT,

Editor and Proprietor.

FLESHERTON:

THURSDAY, AUG. 11, 1887.

EDITORIAL NOTES.

Mr. John Osborne handed us a copy of the Weekly Montreal Witness the other day—dated July 27th—which contained a most horrible account of the system of "baby farming" which has been practiced in that city for many years. Two Witness reporters give a lengthy account of very searching investigations made by them, the result of which is to open the eyes of the public to one of the most gigantic evils that can possibly befal any community. It is headed, "The Murder of the Innocents," and truly the facts presented—as elicited by interviews and careful investigations—fully sustains the strong indictment. The article is too lengthy for publication in our columns, but any of our readers who would like to read it can send to the Witness office, Montreal, for a copy of the paper of the 27th July.

The Durham Chronicle has passed into the hands of Mr. W. J. Mitchell, late of the Hanover Post—that newly fledged disciple of Dr. Landerkin, M.P. for South Grey. It is said, however, that the Chronicle will now become a Conservative paper.

Our friend of the Grey Review—a very respectable newspaper, let us add—makes a distinction between the "town" of Durham and the "village" of Flesherton, which is largely in favor of the former. But when certain circumstances are considered, Flesherton undoubtedly takes the bun. For instance, Durham was quite a "town" when where Flesherton now stands was a howling wilderness; and at this moment the former is not half as large again as the latter! Facts are mighty stubborn things, friend Townsend!

The petition presented to our Township Council on Monday, re additional taxes in case rollers are put in Flesherton flouring mill, was practically rejected by the Fathers. It seemed some of our representatives were afraid of establishing a precedent which might occasion the Township some trouble in the near future. It was urged, that if the prayer of the petitioners were granted, the respective proprietors of Plewe's Mill and the Eugenia Mill might also—with equal justice—ask to be included in the arrangement if at any time they saw fit to put in rollers. It was also set forth that the increase in taxes, consequent upon putting rollers in the Flesherton mill, would be only a trifling amount. The Fathers may by right in the position they have taken, but quite a number of ratepayers do not look at the matter in the same light. They argue that the small increase in taxes should have made it all the easier for the Fathers to have acceded to the request of the petitioners. It is further contended, that the same argument holds with equal force in so far as the other mill owners are concerned. However the matter has been definitely settled—but not to the general satisfaction of the public. In concluding, we might say that the ward system has its defects. We will speak of them again.

FOR DYSPEPSIA and Liver Complaint, you have a printed guarantee on every bottle of Shiloh's Vitalizer. It never fails to cure. Sold at Medical Hall.

THE EDITOR AND HIS CRITICS.

The Editor is a human being. He is ushered into the world much the same as other representatives of that great family. While yet in long garments he is toddled off to the Church and the Sabbath School, where he learns much that is good and a little that is not so good. By and bye he learns verses from the Good Book. Sometimes he has carefully committed them to memory and recited them faithfully to his teacher. At other times the good-natured teacher does the reciting while the embryo Editor follows closely in his wake. His youthful frolics are much the same as those enjoyed by other boys. And he gradually grows up into man's estate—still after the manner of his young companions. Then he becomes an Editor and then his troubles begin.

We have been explicit thus far in order to show that an Editor is much the same as other people. He has his faults and his little weaknesses, and it often strikes him that several others are similarly afflicted. Does he make mistakes? Of course he does, for "to err is human," and have we not said he is human. Does he earn his bread "by the sweat of his brow?" He does: Drop into his office and you will find him tugging with might and main at the ponderous hand press, setting type, or, with sleeves rolled up above his elbows, you may find him writing editorials, locals, or puffs, and slashing pieces out of exchanges, while the devil stands moodily by yelling for copy at the top of his voice.

A man enters the dingy "den" with slow and solemn tread. The printers are still clamoring for "more copy," but this is a "mighty man of Gath" and the Editor suspends operations and passes the time of day. The man solemnly adjusts his spectacles, sits down, pulls a late edition of the paper out of an inside pocket, and placing his index finger on a carefully marked article, exclaims—"Sir, there is a peculiar flippancy about your style of writing, that is positively disagreeable to my feelings. Now, just read that article, sir, it's too bad, really too bad. Of course you're a young man and may improve in time, I hope you will—yes, sir, I frankly say it—I hope you will. You have my best wishes, but try and be more careful." After taking up an hour or more of the Editor's valuable time he stalks solemnly out into the street, and work is resumed.

Another man drops in as though shot from the mouth of a cannon. "Good heavens, sir! what's the matter with your paper. Blank me, Sir, can't you let the preachers talk religion without turning your paper into a wishy-washy religious vat! I tell you, sir, I won't have it—more, if you persist in that sort of thing, you'll have to stop my paper. Do you hear, Sir?" Then he bounces out of the office like a rubber ball.

Some time elapses before the next man calls. He comes in with a merry twinkle in his eyes and a cheerful look overspreading his countenance. Appearances are often deceitful, however, and they are so in this case. The Editor is not deceived—he is too good a judge of human nature for that; and, besides he has met the merry, cheerful gentleman before. "Ah, good morning, sir; preparing editorials for your next issue, I see. Good paper that last. Articles well written, locals spicy, and all the rest. Neatly printed, too." This to make the tired, bored-to-death-Editor feel in good humor, which he does straightway, if we may judge him by that forced grin which passes in a sickly manner over his countenance. Then—"But, now frankly—as between friends, you understand—you spread the flattery on too thickly; you really do, my good fellow. You'll pardon my frankness, of course?" As a matter of fact the Editor is offered no other alternative. "You don't mean half of it, you know—the flattery, I mean—and as a matter of course where all are treated so indiscriminately, the commodity—flattery I mean again, my dear friend—the commodity becomes cheap, if not altogether valueless. You're not offended, I hope?" Of course the Editor is not offended—bored he is but he does not say so. "And then, my dear fellow, you are becoming too oracular—you are now, really—and, besides, there is a tendency in you to reflect your own opinions rather than those of the general public." He also goes away and the Editor once more resumes his work with a heavy sigh—of relief!

Then there are the critics who—

"Damn with faint praise, assent with civil leer,
And without sneering teach the rest to sneer;
Willing to wound and yet afraid to strike,
Just hint a fault, and hesitate dislike."

In fact all the sons and daughters of Adam's race are critics. As Sam Slick would say, it's "human natur'." Go where you will, there are critics and critics. The first see no good in anything under the canopy of high heaven but what is found in themselves; the latter admit faults in common with everybody else, but after all they cannot help thinking they are a little better than their neighbors. Living in such a critical world, the Editor must be prepared to see his faults magnified and his virtues ignored or barely noticed. What matters it that he has been instrumental in doing scores of good turns for the public, when he has hurt some politician's feelings by giving expression to certain sentiments not in harmony with the views entertained by the said politician? Why doesn't he reflect public opinion and keep his own to himself? And so forth, and so forth, ad infinitum.

And yet we never heard of an Editor who ended his days in a lunatic asylum. Everything is favorable in the matter of making him a fit candidate. But he doesn't go—sometimes an odd critic or two does, however. And so the world wags.

BE ON YOUR GUARD!—Don't allow a cold in the head to slowly and surely run into Catarrh, when you can be cured for 25c. by using Dr. Chase's Catarrh Cure. A few applications cure insipient catarrh; 1 to 2 boxes cures ordinary catarrh; 2 to 3 boxes is guaranteed to cure chronic catarrh. Try it. Only 25 cents and sure cure. Sold by all dealers.

The CHILDRENS HEALTH.

One of Natures Kindest Gifts is a Healthy Constitution. Guard it against disease by using

Siamese Worm Powders.

Worms are the fruitful cause of many disorders in Children. SIAMESE WORM POWDERS will expel Worms in every case where they exist, will regulate the Stomach and Bowels at the same time. Use them, you won't regret it.

Peck's Pleasant Pills!

Should always be used for Sick Headache. Their operation is mild and pleasant. They strike home each time when used for a Disordered Liver. Ask for them. Get them. Don't forget the name, Peck's Pleasant Pills.

If your druggist has not the above preparation in Stock, W. W. STEPHEN & CO., of Meaford, will send them to you prepaid on receipt of 25c. for either, 5 of each, or assorted for $1.00.

W. W. STEPHEN & CO.,

Druggists, Wholesale & Retail,

MEAFORD.

A POSITIVE CURE FOR CATARRH. GIVES Immediate Relief FOR Cold in Head, HAY FEVER. EASY TO USE.

Not a Snuff, Powder or Irritating Liquid. Price 50 cts. and $1.00. If not obtainable at your druggists, sent prepaid on receipt of price. Address FULFORD & CO., Brockville, Ont.

WHAT IS IT?

IT IS A FACT AND NO CONTROVERSY THAT

JOHNSON'S

TONIC BITTERS

and NERVINE is the best remedy in the market for nervous diseases of any sort. Hysteria, Loss of Appetite, Debility from loss of fluids or overwork, Paleness of Complexion so often seen in young females and all complaints arising from poverty of blood.

It is a fact and no gainsaying that JOHNSON'S TONIC LIVER PILLS are the very best in the market for diseases caused by Torpid Liver and derrangement of the Stomach or Kidneys.

It is a fact and no one will deny it that JOHNSON'S ALL HEALING WHITE OINTMENT is the best in the market for Burns, Scalds, Chilblains, Salt Rheum, Barbers Itch, Pimples and all Skin Disorders arising from scrofulous taint

W. S. CHRISTOE has been appointed Agent for the above and has them on sale at his Medical Hall, Flesherton. Try for yourselves and be satisfied.

DUNDALK

PUMP WORKS!

C. R. PHILLIP'S,

Manufacturer of all kinds of PUMPS.

Cylinder Check Valve & Cistern Pumps.

Orders Respectfully Solicited and satisfaction guaranteed.

JAMES SULLIVAN,

Tinsmith, AGENT.

FLESHERTON.

One High-Bred Durham Bull,

"KING BILLY,"

The Royal Champion,

Will stand for service for the year 1887, at Lot 16S, 1st Range, W.T. & S.R., Artemesia, at the small sum of 50c. W. C. PARKER.

NOTICE.

GRAY CHAMPION!

A THOROUGH-BRED DURHAM BULL, with good pedigree, will stand for service at Lot 142 West T. & S.R., Artemesia. TERMS, $1 if paid on or before Jan. 1st, 1888; otherwise, $1.25.

Also thorough-bred BERKSHIRE BOAR at same place. JACOB A. LEVER.

James Sullivan,

The Tinsmith, - Flesherton

Repairing, Eavestroughing, and in fact everything in the business will receive my prompt and careful attention at reasonable prices.

THE MARKETS.

FLESHERTON.

Carefully Corrected Each Week.

Flour	$4	00	to 4	20
Fall Wheat	$0	75	to 0	75
Spring Wheat	0	75	0	75
Barley	0	30	0	45
Oats	0	26	0	26
Peas	0	47	0	48
Butter	0	14	0	14
Eggs, fresh	0	14	0	14
Potatoes bush	0	50	0	50
Pork	5	60	5	60
Hay, per ton	10	00	10	00
Hides	6	00	7	00
Wool		29		22
Sheepskins	0	40	0	50
Geese	0	05	0	05
Turkeys	0	8	0	8
Chickens per pair	0	25	0	30
Ducks per pair	0	40	0	50

AT GORDON'S

HARNESS SHOP

FLESHERTON,

You will find an assortment of

Heavy and Light Harness,

Whips, Brushes, Curry Combs, Sweat Pads, and the celebrated "Harness Oil."

COLLARS A SPECIALTY.

Cheap for Cash. Call and Examine.

R. J. SPROUL,

Flesherton. Conveyancer, Appraiser, Valuator and Money lender. Deeds, Mortgages, leases and Wills drawn up and Valuations made on shortest notice. Charges very low. Apply to R. J. SPROULE, Postmaster, Flesherton.

CLAYTON'S

HARNESS SHOP!

FLESHERTON,

Is the place to get your Harness Collars, &c, made up in good style.

Shop in W. Clayton's Boot & Shoe Store, Flesherton.

HARNESS HARNESS.

...If you want Harness, Single or Double, or Horse Blankets, Trunks, Bells, Valises, Curry Combs, Brushes or the celebrated Harness Oil, call & examine before purchasing elsewhere.

R. J. WATSON.

PRICEVILLE.

PHOTOGRAPHY.

MRS. BULMER.

Photographer,

Flesherton - Ont.

Having spent some time in the studio of the famous Toronto Photographer, Mr. S. J. Dixon, where I acquired valuable knowledge in Retouching, I feel assured I can give good general satisfaction. A call respectfully solicited.

MRS. BULMER.

Flesherton, Sept. 17th, 1885.

THE CELEBRATED Dr CHASES MANDRAKE DANDELION LIVER CURE

HAVE YOU

Liver Complaint, Dyspepsia, Indigestion, Biliousness, Jaundice, Headache, Dizziness, Pain in the Back, Costiveness, or any disease arising from a deranged liver, Dr. CHASE'S LIVER CURE will be found a sure and certain remedy.

NATURE'S REMEDY

The unqualified success of Dr. Chase's Liver Cure in Liver Complaint rests solely with the fact that it is compounded from nature's well-known liver regulators, MANDRAKE AND DANDELION, combined with many other invaluable roots, barks and herbs, having a powerful effect on the Kidneys, Stomach, Bowels and Blood.

500,000 SOLD

Over one-half million of Dr. Chase's Recipe Books were sold in Canada alone. We want every man, woman and child who is troubled with Liver Complaint to try this excellent remedy.

SOMETHING NEW. GIVEN AWAY FREE

Wrapped around every bottle of Dr. Chase's Liver Cure is a valuable Household Medical Guide and Recipe Book (84 pages), containing over 800 useful recipes, pronounced by medical men and druggists as invaluable, and worth ten times the price of the medicine.

TRY CHASE'S CATARRH CURE. A safe and positive remedy. Price, 25 cents.

TRY CHASE'S KIDNEY AND LIVER PILLS. 25 cts. per box.

SOLD BY ALL DEALERS

T. EDMANSON & CO., Sole Agents, Bradford.

Flesherton Meat Market.

S. SPIRIT, - - PROPRIETOR.

Cash paid for fat Cattle and Sheep.

Fresh Meats constantly on hand for Cash. Orders promptly filled.

—EUGENIA—

Real Estate Agency

MONEY TO LOAN at lowest rates of interest and on terms of repayment to suit borrower.

FARMS bought and sold.

CONVEYANCES of all kinds properly executed.

COMMISSIONER for taking affidavits in H.C.J., Agent for the Norwich Fire Insurance Society. All business promptly, carefully and confidentially attended to.

Office, Corner of Inkerman and Napoleon Streets.

HENRY MELDRUM,

AGENT.

The First Sign

Of failing health, whether in the form of Night Sweats and Nervousness, or in a sense of General Weariness and Loss of Appetite, should suggest the use of Ayer's Sarsaparilla. This preparation is most effective for giving tone and strength to the enfeebled system, promoting the digestion and assimilation of food, restoring the nervous forces to their normal condition, and for purifying, enriching, and vitalizing the blood.

Failing Health.

Ten years ago my health began to fail. I was troubled with a distressing Cough, Night Sweats, Weakness, and Nervousness. I tried various remedies prescribed by different physicians, but became so weak that I could not go up stairs without stopping to rest. My friends recommended me to try Ayer's Sarsaparilla, which I did, and I am now as healthy and strong as ever.—Mrs. E. L. Williams, Alexandria, Minn.

I have used Ayer's Sarsaparilla in my family, for Scrofula, and know, if it is taken faithfully, that it will thoroughly eradicate this terrible disease. I have also prescribed it as a tonic, as well as an alterative, and must say that I honestly believe it to be the best blood medicine ever compounded.—W. F. Fowler, D. D. S., M. D., Greenville, Tenn.

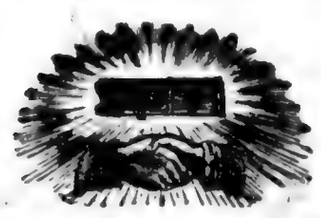
Dyspepsia Cured.

It would be impossible for me to describe what I suffered from Indigestion and Headache up to the time I began taking Ayer's Sarsaparilla. I was under the care of various physicians and tried a great many kinds of medicines, but never obtained more than temporary relief. After taking Ayer's Sarsaparilla for a short time, my headache disappeared, and my stomach performed its duties more perfectly. To-day my health is completely restored.—Mary Harley, Springfield, Mass.

I have been greatly benefited by the prompt use of Ayer's Sarsaparilla. It tones and invigorates the system, regulates the action of the digestive and assimilative organs, and vitalizes the blood. It is, without doubt, the most reliable blood purifier yet discovered.—H. D. Johnson, 383 Atlantic ave., Brooklyn, N. Y.

Ayer's Sarsaparilla,

Prepared by Dr. J. C. Ayer & Co., Lowell, Mass.
Price $1; six bottles, $5.



Publisher's Announcement!

In the matter of

FINE JOB

Printing!

It is generally conceded that the

Flesherton Advance

TAKES THE

BISCUIT!

EVERY TIME!

Posters! Posters!

From an Eighth Sheet to a mammoth Three-Sheeter—plain or in colors—at prices that will arrest your attention and surprise you.

Auction Sale Bills

WHILE YOU WAIT.

DRUGGISTS' LABELS

As cheap and as good as can be obtained in the city.

A. R. FAWCETT,

Editor and Proprietor,

FLESHERTON, ONT.

THE TEACHERS TAUGHT.

Opening of Summer School of Music for Public School Teachers.

For some time past it has been felt that while the general branches of Public school education made great progress under the exceilent Ontario system, the study of music was not being advanced in a corresponding degree. The teachers are all anxious to bring the pupils forward in this as in other branches, but the lack of a means of acquiring a training in this branch, which should be both modern and effective in its principles and application, has made the progress slow. The Ontario Music Teachers' Association has felt the importance of imparting increased energy to this department of instruction, and at both its conventions appointed committees to press the matter upon

THE MINISTER OF EDUCATION,

from whom it met with ready sympathy. Mr. Ross consented to a tentative summer course being held, conditional upon fifty Public school teachers signifying their intention of attending. Mr. S. H. Preston, the instructor of singing at the Normal school, sent out circulars and advertised the course, with the result that over 200 teachers are now in attendance, with an addition of some 20 music teachers. The course, which opened yesterday afternoon at 2 p. m., is free to all music teachers, and others may attend on payment of $5 for the course. Mr. Preston made arrangements which secured the assistance of

EMINENT PROFESSIONAL TALENT.

Mr. H. E. Holt, the celebrated musical educationist of Boston, was secured to teach the pedagogic side of music teaching, covering the establishment of the idea of the scale, its parts, chords, their modulations, followed by relative pitch and time, in fact taking the class well through the Public and High school readers. Mr. H. Guest Colling will deliver practical lectures on the general knowledge of music, embracing sound, melody, musical apparatus, forms of music and the study of music practically and theoretically. Mr. W. Elliott Haslam, will lecture on the culture and developement of the voice. It will be seen by this that the exercises will be eminently practical and fraught with information for the guidance of teachers.

THE PROCEEDINGS YESTERDAY

in the public hall of the Educational Department were opened by Mr. Preston calling on Mr. Holt to deliver his lecture.

Mr. Holt's work partook of the nature of both a lecture and a working class, and won a charm from the concise, practical way he has of putting things. Every principle promulgated, every theory proposed was illustrated by the practical work of the audience singing, and thus firmly implanted in their minds and memories. Mr. Holt began by saying that he came here not as a musician to speak to musicians, but as a teachers to speak to teachers. He claimed that music could be taught by an educational system as thorough as that by which reading or arithmetic may be taught. The idea of a unit of the subject must first be grasped. In music there are two units of study, the first being the unit of pitch, the scale then finding the characteristic quality of each note in relation to the whole. He then said the way to learn is "to do by doing"—(to go through the mental processes of teaching by learning) rather than by seeing another teach. He would not begin by teaching signs, as they will teach themselves while the invisible things themselves are being taught. Mr. Holt took the class through numerous offhand exercises in scale work, modulations and some clever three-part sight singing.

The regular study will last two weeks and will commence at 9 a. m., lasting till 12, during which Mr. Holt, assisted by Mr. Preston, will conduct the class in sight reading. In the afternoon Messrs. Collins and Haslam will lecture, and a choral class is expected to practice oratorio choruses.—Toronto Globe.

Mr. C. J. Sproule of Flesherton, is attending the above named school.

Cracked Before the Accident.

A man recently let a horse and buggy to an Irishman for a funeral trip. The horse was afflicted with a slight spavin on his nigh fore leg, which caused him to limp on starting, but the trouble wore off after travelling a short distance. While returning the horse was driven down a rocky embankment and one of his legs broken. Pat was called to account and accused of breaking the horse's leg. "Sure," said Pat in defense, "the leg was cracked before we started, an' now, begorra, ye want pay for a whole leg."

Not That Kind of a Baby.

It was at the baptismal font, and the clergyman had the baby in his arms.

"What is the name?" he asked the godfather.

"Josephine Newton."

"Joseph E. Newton, I baptise thee in the name—"

"Not Joseph E.—Josephine," interrupted the mother in great alarm. "It's not that kind of a baby."

He Made a Neat Hit.

"Is there any one living here under twenty-one years of age?" inquired a man who rang the door bell to a Bagg street residence the other day.

"No, there is not," rather sharply replied a spinster of eight-and-thirty summers, who answered the ring.

"Why! Is it possible?" was the reply of the apparently astonished man, "don't you live here?"

It was a neat hit, and after a little simpering and a brief chat about the weather, the maiden purchased two copies of a work, entitled "Hints for the Young."

An Unfeeling Remark.

Mrs. Yerger—"I believe I will accompany our daughter Clara to the ball this evening."

Colonel Yerger—"What is your object?"

"When the people see how beautiful she is they will say: "How lovely her mother must have looked when she was young."

"No, that's not what they will say."

"What will they say?"

"When they see you at the ball with Clara they will say: "See how ugly Clara will be when she gets to be as old as her mother."

"Oh, you brute!"

Wouldn't Waste Any More Money.

Farmer's Daughter—"Oh papa, I did want to go to the Sunday-school picnic, but I have lost my bustle and cannot go unless you purchase a new one."

Old Farmer—"Jest as I thought, Mariar. I seed one o' them thar town dudes playin' ball the other day with the blamed thing on his face, and I sez to myself, 'That's Mariar's thingumy.' No, I can't waste any more money in this way, Mariar; you must go without."

He Was a Setter.

A man had a horse who would sit down whenever he was touched in the flank. He would just squat down on his hindquarters like a dog. The man tried to break him of it, but he couldn't, and nobody would buy him. One day a sportsman came along and made his acquaintance and they took a ride together to hunt partridges. When they found a covey the man touched his heels to his horse's flanks and he sat down.

"What makes your horse do that?" said the sportsman.

"Why, he's a setter," said the man. "He sets bird's just like a dog."

So the sportsman thought he was a most wonderful horse, and he swapped for him and gave fifty dollars to boot, and he got on him, and after awhile they came to a creek that was pretty deep, and as the sportsman held up his legs to keep them out of the water his heels touched the horse in the flank and down he sat in the water. When he got up and out and all dripping wet he was as mad as a wet hen, and said:

"Well, sir, what made this horse do that way in the water?"

"I forgot to tell you," said the man, "that he sets fish just as well as he does birds."

The Diary of a Physician.

A diary picked up in one of the streets would seem to indicate from the following that the owner was a medical man:

"Kase 154 Mary An Perkins—Bisnes washerwoman. Sickness in her bed. Fisik sum blu pills a seaperifix; age 52. Ped me 1 doller, 1 kwarter bogas. Mind get good kwarter and make her take more fisik.

"Kase 155 Tummas Krink—Bisnes Nirishman. Lives with Paddy Wolery what keeps a dray. Sickness digs in ribbs and tow black eyes. Fisik to drink my mixter twict a day of sasiperily bear and jellop, and fish ile, with asfedity to make it taste fisiky. Rubbed his face with kart grese liniment, aged 39 years. Drinked the mixter, and wouldn't pay me bekase it tasted nasty; but the mixter'll work his innards, I reckon."

A NASAL INJECTOR free with each bottle of Shiloh's Catarrh Remedy. Price 50 cents. Sold at Medical Hall.

For Toilet Use.

Ayer's Hair Vigor keeps the hair soft and pliant, imparts to it the lustre and freshness of youth, causes it to grow luxuriantly, eradicates Dandruff, cures all scalp diseases, and is the most cleanly of all hair preparations.

AYER'S Hair Vigor has given me perfect satisfaction. I was nearly bald for six years, during which time I used many hair preparations, but without success. Indeed, what little hair I had, was growing thinner, until I tried Ayer's Hair Vigor. I used two bottles of the Vigor, and my head is now well covered with a new growth of hair.—Judson B. Chapel, Peabody, Mass.

HAIR that has become weak, gray, and faded, may have new life and color restored to it by the use of Ayer's Hair Vigor. "My hair was thin, faded, and dry, and fell out in large quantities. Ayer's Hair Vigor stopped the falling, and restored my hair to its original color. As a dressing for the hair, this preparation has no equal.—Mary N. Hammond, Stillwater, Minn.

VIGOR, youth, and beauty, in the appearance of the hair, may be preserved for an indefinite period by the use of Ayer's Hair Vigor. "A disease of the scalp caused my hair to become harsh and dry, and to fall out freely. Nothing I tried seemed to do any good until I commenced using Ayer's Hair Vigor. Three bottles of this preparation restored my hair to a healthy condition, and it is now soft and pliant. My scalp is cured, and it is also free from dandruff.—Mrs. E. R. Foss, Milwaukee, Wis.

Ayer's Hair Vigor,

Sold by Druggists and Perfumers.

PERFECT SAFETY, prompt action, and wonderful curative properties, easily place Ayer's Pills at the head of the list of popular remedies for Sick and Nervous Headaches, Constipation, and all ailments originating in a disordered Liver.

I have been a great sufferer from Headache, and Ayer's Cathartic Pills are the only medicine that has ever given me relief. One dose of these Pills will quickly move my bowels, and free my head from pain.—William L. Page, Richmond Va.

Ayer's Pills,

Prepared by Dr. J. C. Ayer & Co., Lowell, Mass.
Sold by all Dealers in Medicine.

The well-bred Durham Bull,

"DAUNTLESS!"

(Reg. Pedigree)

WILL be for the service of Cows the season of 1887 at his own place, Lot 152, 3rd Range West, T. & S.R., Artemesia.

TERMS:—$1.00 per cow, payable on or before Jan. 1st, 1888. Cows not returned regularly to bull will be charged whether in calf or not.

DONALD McKENZIE, Proprietor.

(3E3317)

TIMBER AND LAND SALE.

CERTAIN lots and the timber thereon situate in the Townships of Allan, Assiginack, Bidwell, Billings, Carnarvon, Campbell, Howland, Shoguandah, Tehkummah and Mills on the Manitoulin Island, in the District of Algoma, in the Province of Ontario, will be offered for Sale at Public Auction in blocks of 200 acres, more or less, on the first day of September next, at 10 o'clock, A.M. at the Indian Land Office in the Village of Manitowaning

Terms of Sale:—Bonus for timber payable in cash, price of land payable in cash, a license fee also payable in cash and dues to be paid accordingly to Tariff upon the timber when cut.

The land on which the timber grows to be sold with the timber without conditions of settlement.

At the same time and place the Merchantable Timber of not less than nine inches in diameter at the butt, on the Spanish River Reserve and French River lower Reserve will be offered for sale for a cash bonus and annual ground rent of $1.00 per square mile, and dues to be paid on the timber as cut, according to Tariff of this Department.

For full particulars please apply to Jas. C. Phipps, Esq., Indian Supt. Manitowaning, or to the undersigned.

No other paper to insert this advertisement without authority through the Queen's Printer

L. VANKOUGHNET,
Deputy of the Supt. Gen'l, of Indian Affairs.

Department of Indian Affairs,
Ottawa, 2nd June, 1887.

GREAT OFFER!

The Advance from now until end of the year for 35 cents.

Agents, Agents!

NOW READY—OUR NEW BOOK.

EARTH, SEA AND SKY

—OR—

Marvels of the Universe

Being a full and graphic description of all that is wonderful in every Continent of the Globe, in the world of waters and the starry Heavens. Containing thrilling adventures on land and sea, renowned discoveries of the world's greatest explorers in all ages, and remarkable phenomena in every realm of nature. Embracing the striking physical features of the earth the peculiar characteristics of the human race, of animals, birds, insects, etc., including a vivid description of the Atlantic, Pacific and Indian Oceans and of the Polar Seas, the monsters of the deep, beautiful seashells and plants, singular fishes and dwellers in the world of waters, remarkable ocean currents, etc., together with the amazing phenomena of the solar and starry systems, by Henry Davenport Northrop, D.D., embellished with over 300 fine engravings. Liberal terms to agents. Oxford Publishing Company, 5 Jordan St., Toronto, Ont.

316-368

Medical.

DR. CARTER,
M.C.P. & S., ONT.
PHYSICIAN, SURGEON, &c.
FLESHERTON.

Office, Strain's block. Residence, Wm. Wright's.

Dentistry.

DENTISTRY.

Thomas Henderson, L.D.S.
SURGEON DENTIST.

Gold Medalist and Honor Graduate of the R.C.D.S.,

Will visit FLESHERTON, (Munshaw's Hotel) 1 and 2 of each month. Teeth extracted, inserted and filled in the highest styles of the art, and at moderate rates.

HEAD OFFICE, 761 YONGE ST., TORONTO

Legal.

J. W. FROST, LL.B.,
Barrister, Solicitor, Conveyancer.
Office,—Strain's Building, FLESHERTON.
A. A. CHESLEY, Solicitor and Conveyancer, Resident Manager.
MR. FROST will be found at the Office on Thursdays as heretofore.

P. McCULLOUGH,
Barrister, Solicitor, &c.
Office, over McFarland's Store, Markdale. Money to Loan.

MASSON & MASSON,
BARRISTERS, SOLICITORS, &c.
OFFICES—Owen Sound, in Vicker's block, Poulett St.; Branch office in Markdale, over McFarland's store, on Friday and Saturday every week.
J. MASSON, Q.C. S. MASSON. W. MASSON.
N.B.—Private & Company's funds to invest at from Six to Eight per cent.

Business Cards.

John W. Armstrong,
FLESHERTON, Co. GREY.
DIVISION COURT CLERK, COMMISSIONER in B. R., Conveyancer, &c. Agent for purchased sale of lands. Appraiser for C. L. C. Com. and F. P. B. & S. Society. Money to Loan on the most reasonable terms. ISSUER OF MARRIAGE LICENSES. NOTARY PUBLIC.

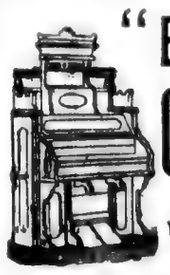
MONEY TO LOAN.
At 6 Per Cent.
On Town or Farm Property,
S. DAMUDE,
Flesherton.

W. J. BELLAMY,
TWP. CLERK ARTEMESIA.
CONVEYANCER, COMMISSIONER, INSURANCE AGT, &C
DEEDS, MORTGAGES, LEASES, &c., prepared and properly executed. Insurance effected in first-class companies. Money to lend at lowest rates.

GET YOUR MEAT
—FROM—
Petch & Mitchell,
GENERAL BUTCHERS,
FLESHERTON!
Cash paid for fat cattle, &c., &c.

NEW LIVERY!
THE undersigned begs to announce that he has started a first-class Livery in the stand opposite Munshaw's Hotel, Flesherton, where the travelling public can be accommodated with good rigs and horses at most reasonable prices. Try me and be convinced.
Respectfully yours,
W. H. JOHNSTON.
Flesherton, Nov. 19th, 1886.

Picture Framing,
Neatly, Cheaply & Quickly Done, by
J. E. MOORE,
Durham St., Opposite Clayton's Harness Shop.



"BELL" ORGANS
Unapproached for Tone and Quality.
CATALOGUES FREE.
BELL & CO., Guelph, Ont.

Safe in Harm's.

(A poetic wail over the escape of Slippery Boodler McGarigle, of Chicago.)

Once there was a boodler
Who thought he'd like to "squeal."
So he told the State's attorney
'Nd talked to others a good deal;
But all he ever told them
They already knew about,
For a boodler will fool ye,
If
You
Don't
Watch
Out!

And one day he told the sheriff
That he longed to take a wash,
And in his own home bath-tub
Have a good old-fashioned plash.
But when the sheriff's back was turned,
He up and hooked it out,
For a boodler will fool ye
If
You
Don't
Watch
Out.

Then the sheriff raised the neighbors,
And seeked him up and down,
In the barn, in tubs and boxes,
And everywhere in town.
But they couldn't find his shadow,
Nor the hole that he went out,
For a boodler fools ye mighty bad
When
You
Don't
Watch
Out.

But there's a dozen other boodlers
Looking pale and far from gay,
That come into court and sit there
Nice and regular every day.
But when the trial's nearer done
And conviction seems more sure,
They may take to looking fondly
At the open court-room door.
And some day they'll turn up missing,
They could do it, never doubt,
For the boodler's mighty slippery
When
You
Don't
Watch
Out.

Nothin' to Say.

Nothin' to say, my daughter! Nothin' at all to say—
Girls that's in love, I've noticed, ginerly has their way
Her mother did, afore you, when her folks objected to me—
Yit here I am, and here you air! and yer mother—where is she?

You look lots like your mother; purty much same in size;
And 'bout the same complected; and favor about the eyes.
Like her, too, about livin' here, because she couldn't stay;
It'll 'most seem like you was dead like her!—but I hain't got nothin' to say!

She left you her little Bible—writ yer name across the page
And she left her ear-bobs for you, of over you come of age.
I've allus kep' 'em and gyaurded 'em, but if yer goin' away—
Nothin' to say, my daughter! Nothin' at all to say!

You don't rikollect her, I reckon? No; you wasn't a year old then!
And now yer—how old air you? Why, child, not "twenty!" When?
And yer nex' birthday's in Aprile? and you want to git married that day?
I wisht yer mother was livin'!—but—I hain't got nothin' to say!

Twenty year! and as good a gyrl as parent ever found!
There's a straw ketched onto yer dress there—I'll brush it off—turn round.
(Her mother was jest twenty when us two run away!)
Nothin' to say, my daughter! Nothin' at all to say!

—James Whitcomb Riley.

Outside the Garden Gate.

Two little forms outside the gate,
Who hour by hour in patience wait;
Four wistful eyes as bright as stars
Peeping with wonder through the bars;
Four little hands that long to hold
Bright flowers, or apples red and gold;
Two shrill young voices that would say,
"Give us some flowers or fruit to-day!"
Only—what little tongue could dare
Ask such a boon from lady fair?

She comes! and down the velvet walk
Moves gently, and with silver talk
Beguiles the time; her comrades glide
In pleasant converse by her side.
They do not see the eager eyes
Who watch them with glad surprise.
To rustic judgment, they must seem
Like white-robed angels in a dream.
So fair, so graceful, and so blest
In such sweet garden bowers to rest,
And no doubt plucking many a gem
Which seems so far away from them!

Alas! how oft our mortal fate
Keeps us outside the garden gate
Almost we feel we might be there,
Wandering amid those scenes so fair;
Almost our fingers seem to clasp
Bright flowers, that still elude our grasp;
Some adverse fortune seems to say,
"'Tis not for thee, so, go thy way!"

—Chambers' Journal.

SIR HUGH'S LOVES

She wanted to feel his arms round her, and sob out all her strangeness; and now an ogre in the shape of the grey-haired butler had shut her up in a great, brilliantly-lighted room, where the tiny, white woman saw herself reflected in the long mirrors.

Fay, standing dejected and pale in the centre of the room, felt like Beauty in the Beast's palace, and was dreaming out the story in her old childish way, when the door was flung suddenly open, and the prince, in the person of Sir Hugh, made his appearance.

She ran towards him with a little cry; but something in his look checked her, and she stood hesitating and coloring as he came up to her and offered his arm.

"Ellerton has announced dinner," he said, quietly; "draw your scarf round you, for the Hall is cold. You look very nice, dear," he continued, kindly, looking at the dainty little bit of loveliness beside him with critically approving eyes; "you should always wear white in the evening, Fay;" and then, as they entered the dining-room, he placed her at the head of the table,

Poor child, it seemed all very solemn and stately, with Ellerton and two other footmen to wait on them; to be devided from her husband by silver epergnes and choice flowers, to have to peep between the ferns and flowers for a sight of the golden-brown beard. No wonder her little talk died away, and she stammered in her replies, and then blushed and felt discomposed. She thought she was playing her part very awkwardly, and was ashamed of herself for Hugh's sake, never dreaming that the very servants who waited on her were wondering at the radiant young creature. Everything comes to an end in this world, and so did this ordeal; for after what seemed to her endless courses, the door closed on the retiring servants, and she and her husband were left alone together; and when Sir Hugh woke up from a brief musing fit he found Fay at his end of the table watching him.

"Why! what brings you here, Wee Wifie?" he asked, smiling; "have you finished your grapes—am I keeping you waiting?"

"Oh! I am in no hurry," she returned, calmly. "I am going to enjoy my grapes here; it is so dull at the other end of the table;" and she chatted merrily to him, while Hugh drank his coffee, and then coaxed him up into the "blue nestie."

Hugh took all her thanks very graciously. He was pleased that her innocent tastes should be gratified; he never imagined for a moment that she thought he had chosen all the pretty nick-nacks round them.

He had said everything suitable to a lady's boudoir was to be provided, and the people had done it very well. He had given them carte blanche, and it was certainly a very pretty little room; and then he watched Fay presiding over her tea-table, and listened placidly to her ecstasy over the lovely old china cups, and the dear little antiquated silver cream jug, and the tiny spoons; and for a little while her brightness infected him. But presently, when she came and nestled against him and told him how happy she was, and how dearly she meant to love her new home, the old look of pain came back on his face; and telling her that he knew his Wee Wifie was tired and must go to bed, he kissed her twice, and then putting her hurriedly from him, went downstairs.

And when he got into his library and saw the lamp lighted, and the fire burning brightly, he gave a sigh of relief at finding himself alone, and threw himself down in his easy-chair.

And that night, long after Fay had prayed that she might be worthy of Hugh's love, and make him happy, and had fallen asleep in the old oak bed with a child's utter weariness, did Hugh sit with his aching head buried on his arms, thinking how he should bear it, and what he would do with his life!

And so the home life began, which was far more tolerable to Sir Hugh than his continental wanderings had been; when he rode over his estate and Fay's—the Wyngate lands adjoining, from morning until late afternoon, planning, building, restoring, or went into Pierrepoint on magisterial business; happy if at night he was so weary with exercise that rest was a pleasure and his little wife's manipulations sweet. All the surrounding gentry for miles round came to call at the Hall, and were loud in their praises of the sweet-faced bride; but the Ferrers were not among them—all those winter months Sir Hugh never saw Margaret. No, though the Grange and the Hall were but two miles apart, they never met; though many a time Sir Hugh had to turn his horse into some miry lane, or across some ploughed field, to escape her as she went to and fro among the wayside cottages.

Neither did they meet at the various entertainments—dinner parties and dances that were given in honor of the bride. That winter Margaret declined all invitations; her brother needed her—and she had never cared much for gaiety—this was her only excuse. But Sir Hugh knew why he never met her—her high sense of honor kept them apart—neither of them had lived down their pain; in the future it might be possible for her to be his friend, and the friend of his wife; but now it could hardly be; and yet Margaret was longing, craving intensely to see the lovely young creature of whom every one was speaking, and whom already she loved by report.

Strange to say, no one spoke about the Ferrers to Fay; people were too well acquainted with the story of Sir Hugh's engagement to Margaret to venture on a hint. Once Fay asked a lady with whom she was driving, who lived in that quaint old house on the Sandycliffe road? and was told briefly that the blind vicar, Mr. Ferrers, lived there with his sister.

Fay would have put some more questions, but Mrs. Sinclair turned the subject rather quickly; but Fay recurred to it that evening.

"Why have not the Ferrers called on us, Hugh?" she asked, suddenly, when she was keeping him company in the library.

Sir Hugh started, and then jumped up to replenish the fire.

"Who told you about them?" he asked, as he tried to break a refractory coal.

"Mrs. Sinclair. I was driving with her this afternoon, and I asked her who lived in that red brick house with the curious garbles, on the Sandycliffe road, and she said it was the blind vicar, Mr. Ferrers, and his sister; don't you like them, Hugh? every one else has called, and it seems rather strange that they should take no notice."

"Well, you see, it is a little awkward," returned her husband, still wrestling with the coal, while Fay watched the process with interest; "they used to be friends of mine, but we have had a misunderstanding, and now, of course, there is a coolness."

"And they are nice people."

"Very nice people; he is a very clever man, but we do not agree—that is all;" and then Hugh disposed of the coal and took up his paper, and Fay did not like to disturb him with any more questions. It seemed a great pity, she thought, it was such a lovely house: and if Mr. Ferrers were a nice clever man———and then she wondered what his sister was like; and as she sat at Hugh's feet basking in the firelight she had no idea that Hugh's forehead was clouded and puckered with pain. Fay's innocent questions had raised a storm in his breast. Would she speak of them again? was there any danger that people would gossip to her? one day he might be obliged to tell her himself, but not now, she seemed so happy, so perfectly contented, and she was such a child.

Yes, Hugh's Wee Wifie was very happy.

At first, to be sure, her position was a little difficult and irksome. The number of servants bewildered her; she wished Mrs. Heron would not interlard her conversation with so many "my ladys," and that Hugh would ride with her oftener instead of that tiresome groom.

But by and by she got used to her dignity, and would drive her grey ponies through the country roads, stopping to speak to any old villager she knew; or she would mount Bonnie Bess at the hour she thought Hugh would be returning from Pierrepoint, and gallop through the lanes to meet him and reign up at his side, startling him from his abstraction with that ringing laugh of hers.

She was seldom idle, and never dull.

When Sir Hugh would have shooting parties, she always carried the luncheon to the sportsmen, driving through the wood in her pony-carriage; when her husband began to return his neighbor's hospitality, she surprised him by making a perfect little hostess, and never seemed too shy to chat in her pretty, modest manner to his guests. All Sir Hugh's masculine friends fell in love with her, and the ladies petted and made much of her.

Fay was very grateful to them for their kindness, but she liked best to be alone in the old Hall.

She had a hundred sources of amusement; she would follow Mrs. Heron from room to room, listening to her stories of many a dead Redmond; or coax her to show the old treasures of tapestry and lace; or she would wander through the gardens and woods with her favorite Nero and Sir Hugh's noble St. Bernard, Pierre.

She made acquaintance with every man, woman and child about the place, and all the animals besides; when the spring came she knew all the calves and lambs by name, all the broods of chickens and ducklings; she visited the stables and the poultry yards till every helper and boy about the premises knew her bright face well, and were ready to vow that a sweeter spoken creature never lived than the young Lady Redmond.

And she would prattle to Hugh all through the long dinner, beguiling him by her quaint bright stories; and when he went into the library—she never could coax him after that first evening into her "blue nestie"—she would follow him and sit herself at his feet with her work or book, perfectly content if he sometimes stroked her hair, or with a sudden feeling of compunction stooped over her and kissed her brow, for he was always very gentle with her, and Fay adored him from the depths of her innocent heart.

CHAPTER XIII.

THAT ROOM OF MRS. WATKINS'.

Soft hair on which light drops a diadem.
GERALD MASSEY.

With hands so flower-like, soft and fair,
She caught at life with words as sweet
As first spring violets.

Ibid.

No, it was not a bad room, that room of Mrs. Watkins', seen just now in the November dusk, with its bright fire and neat hearth, with the kettle gossiping deliciously to itself; there was at once something comfortable and home-like about it; especially as the red curtains were drawn across the two windows that looked down into High street, and the great carts that had been rumbling underneath them since daybreak had given place to the jolting of lighter vehicles which passed and repassed at intervals.

The room was large, though a little low, and was plainly but comfortably furnished; an old-fashioned crimson couch stood in one corner; some stained bookshelves contained a few well-bound books; and one or two simple engravings in cheap frames adorned the wall. In spite of the simplicity of the whole there were evidences of refined taste—there were growing ferns in tall baskets; some red leaves and autumn berries arranged in old china vases; a beautiful head of Clyte, though it was only in plaster of Paris, on the mantelpiece. The pretty tea service on the round table was only white china, hand-painted; and some more red leaves with dark chrysanthemums were tastefully arranged in a low wicker basket in the centre.

One glance would have convinced even a stranger that this room was inhabited by people of cultured taste and small means; and it was so pleasant, so home-like, so warm with ruddy firelight, that grander rooms would have looked comfortless in comparison. There were only two people on this November evening—a girl lying back in a rocking-chair, with her eyes fixed thoughtfully on the dancing flames, and a child of 10, though looking two or three years younger, sitting on a stool before the fire, with a black kitten asleep on her lap, and her arms clasped around her knees.

An odd, weird sort of child, with a head running over with little dark curls, and large wondering eyes—not an ordinary child, and certainly not a pretty one, and looking, at the present moment, with her wrinkled eyebrows and huddle-up figure, like a little old witch in a fairy tale.

"I am that tired," observed the child, apparently apostrophising the kettle, "that not all the monkeys in the Zoological Gardens could make me laugh; no, not if they had the old father baboon at their head. I wish I were a jaguar!"

"Why, Fluff?" exclaimed a pleasant voice from the rocking-chair. "Why, Fluff?"

"I wish I were a jagnar," repeated the child, defiantly "not a bison, because of its humps, nor a camel either. Why, those great spotted cats had their balls to amuse them, and polished ivory bones as well; and the brown bear climbed his pole, and ate buns; no one's mother left in the dark before the fire, with no one to tell its tales, and only a kettle to talk to a person;" and Fluff curled herself up on her stool with an affronted air.

The elder girl made no answer, but only stooped down and smilingly lifted the child and kitten on her lap—she was very light for her age—whereupon Fluff left off sighing, and rubbed her curly head against her sister's shoulder with a contented air.

The sisters were certainly very unlike, being very small and dark, while Fern was tall and fair; without being exactly gifted with her mother's beauty, she had a charming face, soft grey eyes, and hair of that golden-brown that one sees so often in English girls.

There were few people who did not think Fern Tafford decidedly pretty; her features were not exactly regular, but her coloring was lovely, and there was a joyousness and brightness about her that attracted old and young; every one loved Fern, and spoke well of her, she was so simple, so unselfish, so altogether charming, as they said.

Fern never complained of the narrowness of her life, never fretted because their poverty excluded her from the pleasures girls of her age generally enjoyed. From her childhood she had known no other life. There were times when she remembered that she had gone to bed hungry, times when her mother's face looked pinched and miserable—when her father was dying, and they thought Baby Florence would die too. Somehow Fern never cared to think of those days.

Fern was devoted to her mother, she clave to her with innocent love and loyalty. Percy's defection had been the bitterest trouble of her life. The girl nearly broke her heart when Percy left them. She grew thin and pale and large-eyed, as girls will when they are fretting and growing at the same time. Nea's motherly heart was touched with compassion for her child. She wished, if possible, to suffer alone; if it were in her power she would prevent the faintest shadow touching that bright young life.

So she spoke to her in her calm, sensible way, for Nea was always gentle with her children, and Fern was very dear to her—she had her father's eyes, and Maurice's pure upright nature seemed transmitted to his young daughter.

"Fern," she said, one evening when they were sitting together in the twilight, "you must not add to my burthens; it makes me still more unhappy to see you fretting; I miss my little daughter's brightness that used to be such a comfort to me."

"Am I a comfort to you, mother?" asked Fern, wistfully, and something in those earnest grey eyes thrilled the widow's heart with fresh pangs of memory.

"You are my one bit of sunshine," she answered, fondly, taking the girl's face between her hands and kissing it almost passionately. "Keep bright for your poor mother's sake, Fern."

Fern never forgot this little speech. She understood, then, that her mission was to be her mother's comforter; and with the utmost sweetness and unselfishness she put aside her own longings for her brother, and strove to make up for his loss. So Fern bloomed in her poor home like some lovely flower in a cottage garden, growing up to womanhood in those rooms over Mrs. Watkins'.

Fern had long since finished her education, and now gave morning lessons to the vicar's little daughters. In her leisure hours she made her simple gowns and Fluff's frocks, and taught the child the little she could be pursuaded to learn, for Fluff was a spoilt child and very backward for her age; and one or two people, Mrs. Watkins among them, had given it as their opinion that little Florence was not all there, rather odd and uncanny in fact.

Fern was quite contented in her life. She was fond of teaching and very fond of her little pupils. Her pleasures were few and simple; a walk with Crystal or Fluff to look at the shops, perhaps an omnibus journey and an hour or two's ramble in the Park of Kensington Garden, a cosy chat with her mother in the evenings, sometimes, on grand occasions, a shilling seat at the Monday or Saturday Popular.

Fern loved pretty things, but she seemed quite satisfied to look at them through plate glass; a new dress, a few flowers, or a new book were events in her life. She would sing over her work as she sat sewing by the window; the gay young voice made people look up, but they seldom caught a glimpse of the golden-brown head behind the curtain. Fern had her dreams, like other girls; sometimes, she hardly knew what would happen to her some day. There was always a prince in the fairy stories that she told Fluff, but she never described him. "What is he like?" Fluff would ask with childish impatience, but Fern would only blush and smile, and say she did not know. If, sometimes, a handsome boyish face, not dark like Percy, but with fair, budding moustache and laughing eyes, seemed to rise out of the mist and look at her with odd wistfulness, Fern never spoke of it; a sort of golden haze pervaded it. Sometimes those eyes were eloquent, and seemed appealing to her; a strange meaning pervaded the silence; in that poor room blossomed all sorts of sweet fancies and wonderful dreams as Fern's needle flew through the stuff.

As Fluff rubbed her rough head confidingly against her shoulder, Fern gave a musical little laugh that was delicious to hear. "You absurd child," she said, in an amused tone, "I really must tell Mr. Erle not to take you again to the Zoological Gardens; you talk of nothing but bears and jaguars. So you want a story, you are positively insatiable, Fluff; how am I to think of one with my wits all wool-gathering and gone a-wandering like Bopeep's sheep? It must be an old one. Which is it to be? 'The Choclate House,' or 'Princess Dove and the Palace of the Hundred Boys.'"

"Humph," returned Fluff, musingly; "well, I hardly know. The Chocolate House' is very nice, with its pathway paved with white and pink sugar plums, and its barley-sugar chairs; and don't you remember that when Hans was hungry he broke a little brown bit off the roof; but after all, I think I like 'Princess Dove and the Palace of the Hundred Boys' best. Let us go on where you left off."

"Where we left off?" repeated Fern in her clear voice. "Yes, I recollect. Well, when Prince Happy-Thought—"

"Merrydew," corrected the child.

"Ah—true—well, when it came to Prince Merrydew's turn to throw the golden ball, it went right over the moon and came down the other side, so Princess Dove proclaimed him victor, and gave him the sapphire crown; and the hundred boys—and—where was I, Fluff?"

"In the emerald meadow, where the ruby flowers grew," returned Fluff. "Go on, Fern."

"So Princess Dove put on the crown, and it was so heavy that poor Prince Merrydew's head began to ache, and the wicket old fairy Do-nothing, who was looking on, hobbled on her golden crutches to the turquoise pavilion, and—hush! I hear footsteps. Jump off my lap, Fluffy, dear, and let me light the candles." And she had scarcely done so before there was a quick tap at the door, and the next moment two young men entered the room.

Fluff ran to them at once with a pleased exclamation.

"Why, it is Percy and Mr. Erle; oh dear, how glad I am."

"How do you do, Toddlekins," observed her brother, stooping to kiss the child's cheek, and patting her kindly on the head; "how are you, you dark-eyed witch," but as he spoke, his eyes glanced anxiously round the room.

"We never expected to see you to-night, Percy, dear," observed Fern, as she greeted him affectionately, and then gave her hand with a slight blush to the young man who was following him. "Mother will be so sorry to miss you; she was obliged to go out again. One of the girls at Miss Martingale's is ill, and Miss Theresa seems fidgety about her, so mother said she would sit with the invalid for an hour or two."

"I suppose Miss Davenport is out too"—walking to the fireplace to warm his hands.

"Yes, dear; there is a children's party at the Nortons'; it is little Nora's birthday, and nothing would satisfy the child until Crystal promised to go and play with them. It is only an early affair, and she will be back soon, so Fluff and I are waiting tea for her."

"You look very snug here, Miss Trafford," observed the other young man, whom Fluff had called Mr. Erle. By tacit consent his other name was never uttered in that house; it would have been too painful for Mrs. Trafford to hear him addressed as Mr. Huntingdon.

The young men were complete contrasts to each other. Percy Trafford was tall and slight, he had his mother's fine profile and regular features, and was a singularly handsome young man; his face would have been almost perfect, except for the weak, irresolute mouth, hardly hidden by the dark moustache and a somewhat heavily moulded chin that expressed sullenness and perhaps ill-governed passions.

The bright-faced boy, Nea's first-born and darling, had sadly deteriorated during the years that he had lived under his grandfather's roof. His selfishness had taken deeper root; he had become idle and self-indulgent; his one thought was how to amuse himself best. In his heart he had no love for the old man, who had given him the shelter of his roof, and loaded him with kindness; but all the same he was secretly jealous of his cousin Erle, who, as he told himself bitterly, had supplanted him.

Percy's conscience reproached him at times for his desertion of his widowed mother. He knew that it was a shabby thing for him to be living in luxury, while she worked for her daily bread; but after all, he thought it was more her fault than his. She would have none of his gifts; she would not bend her proud spirit to seek a reconciliation with her father, though Percy felt sure that the old man had long ago repented his harshness; and yet, when he had hinted this to his mother, she had absolutely refused to listen to him.

"It is too late, Percy. I have no father now," she had returned in her firm sad voice, and her face had looked marble as she spoke.

Percy was rather in awe of his grandfather. Mr. Huntingdon had grown harder and more tryannical as the years passed on. Neither of the young men ventured to oppose his iron will. He was fond of his grandson, proud of his good looks and aristocratic air, and not disposed to quarrel with him because he was a little wild. "Young men would be young men," was a favorite saying of his; he had used it before in the case of Lord Ronald Gower.

But his nephew Erle was really dearer to the old man's heart. But then every one liked Erle Huntingdon, he was so sweet-tempered and full of life, so honest and frank, and so thoroughly unselfish.

He was somewhat short, at least beside Percy, and his pleasant boyish face had no claims to good looks. He had the ruddy youthful air of a young David, and there was something of an innocence of the sheep-fold about him.

All women liked Erle Huntingdon. He was so gentle and chivalrous in his manner to them; he never seemed to think of himself when he was talking to them; and his bonhomie and gay good humor made him a charming companion.

Erle never understood himself how caressing his manners could be at times. He liked all women, old and young, but only one had really touched his heart. It was strange, then, that more than one hoped that she had found favor in his eyes. Erle's sunshiny nature made him a universal favorite, but it may be doubted whether any of his friends really read him correctly. Now and then an older man told him he wanted ballast, and warned him not to carry that easy good nature too far or it might lead him into mischief; but the spoilt child of fortune only shook his head with a laugh.

But in reality Erle Huntingdon's character wanted blackbone; his will, not a strong one, was likely to be dominated by a stronger. With all his pleasantness and natural good qualities he was vacillating and weak; if any pressure or difficulty should come into his life, it would be likely for him to be weighed in the balance and found wanting.

At present his life had been smooth and uneventful; he had yet to taste the hollowness of human happiness, to learn that the highest sort of life is not merely to be cradled in luxury and to fare sumptuously every day. The purple and fine linen are good enough in their way, and the myrrh and the aloes and the cassia, but what does the wise man say—"Rejoice, O young man, in thy youth; and let thy heart cheer thee in the days of thy youth, and walk in the ways of thine heart, and in the sight of thine eyes; but know thou, that for all these things God will bring thee into judgment . . . for childhood and youth are vanity."

Erle knew that a new interest had lately come into his life; that a certain shabby room, that was yet more home-like to him than any room in Balgrave House, was always before his eyes: that a girl in a brown dress, with sweet wistful eyes, was never absent from his memory.

Neither Fern nor he owned the truth to themselves; they were ignorant as yet that they were commencing the first chapter of their life-idyll. Fern had a vague sense that the room was brighter when Erle was there looking at her with those kindly glances. She never owned to herself that he was her prince, and that she had found favor in his eyes. She was far too humble for that; but she knew the days were somehow glorified and transfigured when she had seen him, and Erle knew that no face was so lovely to him as this girl's face, no voice half so sweet in his ears, and yet people were beginning to connect his name with Miss Selby, Lady Maltravers' beautiful niece.

He was thinking of Miss Selby now as he looked across at Fern. She had taken up her work again, and Percy had thrown himself into the rocking-chair beside her with a discontented expression on his face. He was telling himself that Miss Selby was handsome, of course strikingly handsome; but somehow she lacked this girl's sweet graciousness. Just then Fern raised her eyes, and a quick sensitive color came into her face as she encountered his fixed glance.

"Ah, do you know, Miss Trafford," he said quickly, to put her at her ease, "I have promised to spend Christmas with my cousin, Sir Hugh Redmond. I am rather anxious to see his wife. Report says she is rather a pretty girl."

"I did not know Sir Hugh Redmond was your cousin," returned Fern, without raising her eyes from her work.

(To be continued.)

A WOMAN'S PERFIDY.

A Husband Murdered by the Destroyer of the Peace of His Family.

A Detroit despatch says: Peter W. Bursha, a well-known locomotive engineer on the Michigan Central Railway, occupied with his wife and two children until last evening, a pretty home on Indian avenue. Bursha was a hearty, well-to-do man, and seemed altogether wrapped up in his family. He frequently spent hours playing with his children, a little boy aged 7 years and a little girl about 5, and the happiness and sociability of the Burshas was commented upon in the neighborhood. About a year ago they took to board with them Richard L. Landon, 20 years of age. He is the son of a commercial traveller named Landon, who committed suicide in this city a few months ago, who came from Toronto about a year previous, and being unable to find employment, in a fit of despondency ended his life. The young man was a friend of the family. His business was pedling teas and coffees. There was nothing particularly attractive about him, and it never entered Bursha's mind he would be a cause of trouble in his household. Landon had lived there about six months when the husband coming home one evening entirely unexpected awoke to the realization that a place in the affections of his wife was occupied by Landon when he was away from home. Matters went from bad to worse, until Bursha applied for a divorce. His wife, however, influenced him to withdraw the bill. Landon was dismissed from the house and the husband and wife appeared to live happy again. Landon left the house in January and rented a small cottage about two blocks further up Indian avenue, where he has since lived alone. Though Landon was forbidden to enter the house, subsequent developments show his communication with Mrs. Bursha, though irregular, steadily continued. Bursha returned from a trip at noon yesterday. After dinner he left to collect the rent for a house he owned on Michigan avenue. On returning home about 6 o'clock he met Landon on the common. The men met first near the sidewalk at Vinewood avenue, and had some words. They were evidently quarrelling. Persons were frequently crossing the common, but at this time no one noticed them except an old lady. She was returning from the direction of Michigan avenue, and was quite near the quarrelling men. They did not appear to notice her. Finally Bursha raised his finger warningly and shook it in Landon's face, and the men then parted. Bursha turned and walked toward home. Landon started in the opposite direction, then stopped, hesitated a moment, then ran back towards Bursha. The engineer heard his steps and turned around. Almost simultaneously with his turning about Landon pulled a revolver from his pocket, and taking deliberate aim at Bursha, who was hardly three feet away, fired. The engineer threw up both hands and fell heavily to the ground. Landon looked on him a moment, coolly turned from his prostrate victim and walked away. In three minutes Bursha was dead. Landon was subsequently arrested and locked up. He takes the matter coolly, claims Bursha has threatened him and that he was justified in shooting.

Died from a Sudden Shock.

A car horse was lying dead on a track in Seventh avenue on Monday surrounded by a crowd of men and boys.

"What did he die of?" asked one of the men of a passenger on the horseless car.

"Why you see, he got balky, and the driver, instead of poking the car hook through his ribs, got off the car and spoke kindly to the horse, and the shock proved too great."—New York Evening Sun.

A Use For It.

Proud Father—Welcome back to the old farm, my boy. So you got through college all right?

Farmer's Son—Yes, father.

P. F.—Ye know I told you to study up on chemistry and things so you'd know best what to do with different kinds of land. What do you think of that flat medder there, for instance?

F. S.—Cracky, what a place for a base-ball game!

Fires Love's Flame Won't Kindle.

"I love you," he protested, "better than my life. I would die for you if necessary."

"O, nonsense!" replied the practical girl. "Swear to me that you'll get up and make the fires and I'll consider your proposition."—Judge.

A Novel Idea for Some Husbands.

An article is printed on "How to Treat Your Wife." One good way would be to treat her as well as you did before you married her, but few married men do that.—Somerville Journal.

They Seldom Do.

Judge—The prisoner is discharged.

Prisoner—Well, begorra, I didn't know Oi was loaded!—Burlington Free Press.

The women's Jubilee offering to the Queen somewhat puzzled Burmese ladies who were asked to join in the royal gift. "Why should their sovereign want money," they inquired, "especially so soon after the annexation of Burmah?" "Has she no rice?" and "Can it be that she has no tobacco?" were frequent queries. For, as all Burmese ladies smoke several cheroots daily, they became deeply sympathetic at the idea that their Queen should be without the solace of tobacco amid her State cares.

In this poetic style a California land agency offers job lots of scenery and climate: On this Wednesday afternoon, at 1 o'clock, at Louis' Hall, on Fifth street, we will sell at public outcry to the highest bidder, the Pacific Ocean, draped with a western sky of scarlet and gold; we will sell a bay filled with white-winged ships; we will sell a southern horizon rimmed with a choice collection of purple mountains carved in castles and turrets and domes; we will sell a frostless, breezing, warm, yet unlanguid air, braided in and in with sunshine, and odored with the breath of flowers.

Money, medals and testimonials are pouring in on Arthur Robinson, the rescuer of nine of the Mystery's drowning passengers in Jamaica Bay. The colored hero bears his honors modestly.

The imports of Canadian lumber at the port of Buffalo from January to July amounted to 4,831,330 feet.

SHE STARVED TO DEATH.

The Miserable End of a Miserly Old Maid in Hawkesbury.

Miss Maxwell, daughter of Mr. Maxwell, who taught school in Montreal many years ago, died at Hawkesbury, Ont., last week from sheer want of proper food. She had a good bank account and ample means in the house to make her comfortable, but preferred to starve. The father removed to Hawkesbury many years ago, and opened a school assisted by his daughter, this being continued up to the time of his death. Miss Maxwell has been living alone for several years, carrying on a little business in periodicals, books, newspapers and music.

Miss Maxwell was known to be eccentric and no one was ever seen in the portion used as a dwelling. Last Friday she was missed, and a neighbor ventured in—to find her lying in misery and poverty. The lady brought her something nourishing, but the doctor pronounced her to be dying from want of proper nourishment. A stove was found in the house, but without any pipes, and it is surmised she passed the winter in the same way. A large quantity of wooden blocks were sent her, thinking she was in want, but these are said to be still piled up in the shed. She lingered on until Saturday, and search was made for some clue to her funds—when, much to their surprise, over $100 in cash was found in the leaves of an old book, and various small sums were found in other parts, together with a bank account of over $2,000. The Board of Health had her buried on Monday, and owing to the unsanitary state of the premises with dirt, it was found necessary to board up the house and have it fumigated. Facts have come to light since showing that she must have lived entirely on bread and water for some time. The address of a young man in Philadelphia was found in a letter, and he was telegraphed for, but he replied that there was a nearer relative in Algoma. An inventory was taken of the various sums, which are held by a person appointed by the Board until such time as the heirs are known.—Witness.

She Doted on Bagpipe Music.

It was said of Lady Randolph Churchill that she came to England with the firm intent and purpose of Americanizing the British Empire. The same cannot be said of Mrs. Carnegie, who, though a New Yorker born and bred, has taken to the institutions of Caledonia, "stern and wild," with wonderful readiness. Most of her costumes are of tweed, and bonnie brown heather and broom are her favorite flowers. A few days ago, in an unguarded moment, Mr. Carnegie remarked in public that his wife doted on bagpipe music, and that she had said that the only thing wanting to make her home at Kilgraston a perfect paradise was the presence of a bagpiper. The next morning the glen of Kilgraston was awakened at an early hour by the wail of the pibroch, the weird croon of the coronach and a thunderous notification that the Campbells were coming. By breakfast time there were 104 pipers playing away at Mr. Carnegie's piazza. At last, in desperation, Mr. Carnegie chose one of the McPhersons to be his bagpiper in ordinary, which very much incensed the other Highland musicians, who marched off snorting their dissatisfaction.—Cor. of N. Y. World.

Cure for Ivy Poison.

A correspondent of the Philadelphia Record writes: "I suffered from having been poisoned by ivy twelve years ago. I was completely covered with it, and I tried all of the old and new cures for it without any good resulting from them, until one day a druggist's clerk gave me ten cents' worth of sulphite of soda, dissolved in one pint of water, and told me to bathe with it freely. It acted like magic; it allayed the itching and was very soothing, and I was well in a week. I have told a great many people of it, and those who used it have been invariably cured. I keep a bottle of it constantly mixed, and when I have been among the ivy, which I often am, I always bathe with it, and I am not bothered with poison after using it once or twice. It is not poison, like sugar of lead and some of the other remedies that cannot be kept in the way of children."

His Business Qualifications.

Father—Well, what can you say for the young man? Daughter—He's young and handsome, and has good business qualifications. Father—How do you know anything about his business qualifications? Daughter—Why, he has figured out for me time and again how nicely we could get along if you would make us a present of $50,000.

A Libel on the Sex.

Wife—Can you tell me, my dear, why a widower is like a young baby?

Husband—Er—er—because—because—.

Wife—The first six months he cries a great deal, the second six months he begins to take notice, and he always experiences great difficulty in getting through his second year alone.

Liked the Cockade.

Barber—"Bay rum?" Granger (whose shave has been supplemented by an application of the powder puff-ball)—"No, I'm temp'rance; but, friend, you'd jest 's lieve pass that air cockade over my face agin you'd obleege me."—Tid Bits.

Butter More Approachable.

Butter is being made in such quantities here that the price for the best samples has fallen from 50 to 30 cents a pound.—Saskatchewan Herald.

That Man Baird.

They are nursing the man who has no more right to sit in Parliament than a tramp off the highway. And they ask honest men to endorse this.—Montreal Herald.

A Lost Secret.

Her mother and his mother-in-law—He's a brute, my dear, and don't cry. I gave you to him because he said he knew the secret of making you happy. Daughter—Well, he's kept his secret admirably.

On the occasion of the Queen's Jubilee a baronetcy was offered to Mr. T. C. Lister, a rich silk manufacturer of Bradford, who also happens to be High Sheriff of Yorkshire, but he declined the honor.

In New York, Philadelphia and some other cities the roof in the tenement-house district is a general resort in hot nights. Sometimes whole families camp out.

DOGS IN THE GERMAN ARMY.

How they are Drilled to Act as Messengers for Sentinels.

A correspondent of the New York Tribune writes from Berlin: "Among the thousand and one inventions, appliances and wonderful uses of men and beasts which German genius has devised to defeat France in case of General Boulanger's successor becoming unpleasant, the dog plays a significant role, employed as he is as messenger and sentinel. Experiments have been made for nearly a year now, and have proved highly satisfactory. The dog manœuvre of the Hunter Battalion was decidedly the most interesting of the recent campaign. Several regiments have been furnished with the German shepherd dogs, known for their wisdom the world over. Each one is attached, so to speak, to the person of a soldier, in whom the dog soon recognizes his master, and who conducts his training. While doing duty, the dog is kept with the sentinel, and easily learns the requirements of his post. A few of the experiments performed before Colonel Vonder Goltz Pasha, who represented the Sultan at the 90th birthday of the Emperor, and has since remained to witness the reviews, were surprising. A soldier taking the animal from the sentinel marched off on a reconnoitering expedition. After writing his observations and placing them in a casket about the neck of the brute, the latter was told to return to his master, which he did in an astonishingly short time. One dog employed in this service arrived at his post ten minutes before a mounted Uhlan charged with the same instructions, though the latter rode at desperate speed. But even more than this was accomplished. With a message tied about the neck, as in the former case, the dog was told to seek a distant sentinel and bring a return answer. This he did with great speed, carrying his message directly to his master without fail.

"It is little wonder that Pasha Goltz was surprised at the success of the experiments given in his honor. And they are truly wonderful for the present, though sidding fair to become a commonplace inbtitution in that great machine, the German Army. The consequences and possibilities of the shepherd-dog service are apparent to all who know anything of military science, and make their citation superfluous. One thing is certain, that a future war between Germany and any of its neighbors will not be conducted without its dog regiment, which, though not employed in concerted action, will perform service more valuable than the cats of ancient Egypt."

A Startling Prediction.

Two hundred years ago in China there was just such a craze about natural gas as we have in this country to-day. Gas wells were sunk with as much vim and vigor as the celestials were capable of, but owing to a gas explosion that killed several millions of people and tore up and destroyed a large district of country, leaving a large inland sea, known on the maps as Lake Foo Chang, the boring of any more gas wells was then and there prohibited by law. It seems, according to the Chinese history, that many large and heavy pressure gas wells were struck, and in some districts wells were sunk quite near to each other. Gas was lighted as soon as struck, as is done in this country. It is stated that one well with its unusual pressure, by induction or back draught, pulled down into the earth the burning gas of a smaller well, resulting in a dreadful explosion of a large district, destroying the inhabitants thereof. Lake Foo Chang rests on this district. The same catastrophe is imminent in this country unless the laws restrict further developments in boring so many wells. Should a similar explosion occur there will be such an upheaval as will dwarf the most terrible earthquakes ever known. The country along the gas belt from Toledo through Ohio, Indiana and Kentucky will be ripped up to the depth of 1,200 to 1,500 feet and flopped over like a pancake, leaving a chasm through which the waters of Lake Erie will come howling down, filling the Ohio and Mississippi valleys and blotting them out forever.—Cincinnati Commercial Gazette.

A Trained Left Hand.

Many are the advantages missed by the non-cultivation of the left hand. Occasionally an artisan is seen who is equally able to handle tools with either hand. Such a one has constant advantage over his fellows, not only in the avoidance of fatigue, but in doing nice work and overcoming with ease difficulties that present themselves to those skilled only with one hand. The man who can use a hammer or knife or perform any other feat with the left hand at the same time that the right is busy will find frequent occasion to exercise his skill. Another and important reason for training the left hand to act with as great ease and precision as possible is that if injury occurs to the right hand the left can exercise readily all the functions possible to one hand unaided. By training the left hand in youth one would be spared, in such a case, from spending much valuable time in educating muscles hardened by age and unaccustomed to obey the mandates of the will.

A Faithful Dog.

A faithful little dog saved a young boy called Maher, living in Douglasfield, N.B., the other day, from being gored to death by an infuriated cow. The boy was pretty badly hurt as it was.

A Plea for Vacation.

Ah! how the editor of a daily newspaper would like to be a beloved pastor or a faithful school teacher during this torrid summer.—Dayton Journal.

The Proper Thatch.

Experience and hot weather have at length convinced the bald-headed man that a cabbage-leaf is less irritating than a brick in the hat.—Pittsburg Commercial Gazette.

The Fateful Hammock

Now is the time of year when love's young dream gets jolted all out of shape because the hammock lets go.—Merchant Traveler.

Jacob Seligman, of Michigan, is a millionaire and director of nine banks and four railroads. He is less than five feet and went to Michigan twenty-five years ago with less than $100 in his pocket.

BENEFITS FROM FAIRS.

How Exhibitions Have Helped the Ontario Farmer.

The fifth annual convention of the International Association of Fairs and Expositions was commenced in Toronto on Wednesday. Between 30 and 40 delegates are in attendance.

Mr. Thomas Shaw, of Hamilton, editor of the Live Stock Journal, read a paper on "The Influence of Fairs on the Improvement of Live Stock." He rapidly reviewed the history of exhibitions and the great progress made in stock through them, and laid down the proposition that exhibitions have had a wonderful effect in the improvement of live stock, finding irrefutable demonstration in the facts: (1) Nearly all the substantial progress made in the improvement of live stock in lands where exhibitions prevail has been made since their introduction. (2) That in countries without live stock exhibitions no substantial progress has been made in their improvement. (3) That the progress has been most marked in those countries which have given the most prominence to live stock at their exhibitions. In support of these propositions these interesting facts were mentioned: The average weight of a dressed bullock at 5 years, in the London market in 1719, is given at 370 lbs., an average which is attained by many of our modern breeds sold in the shambles at little more than one year, and there is reason to believe that this advance is equalled in other live stock lines. A letter to Lord Sumerville by Mr. Pitt, of Penderford, in 1799, in respect to Shropshire sheep, said: "It requires eight fleeces and a half to the stone of fourteen pounds," and the weight per quarter of the wether is given at from twelve to eighteen pounds, a weight that is attained by well-fed lambs of this breed now at 9 months, while the average unwashed fleece of good Shropshire sheep is ten pounds. The first Provincial Exhibition in this Province was held in Toronto forty-two years ago. Then there were not a score of men who were possessors of improved cattle. Now there are 443 members in the Dominion Shorthorn Breeders' Association, most of whom are in the Province of Ontario, while there are as many Shorthorn breeders who are not members, making about 800 Shorthorn breeders in Ontario. The first Shorthorn cow on record in Ontario was imported in 1832. The progress is largely due to the exhibitions, of which there are over 500 in this Province. He continued: "Our own Province has given much attention to the live stock departments of our exhibitions, and what are the results? Why, in one of our counties, Ontario, more than 200 pure-bred Clydes are to be found at the present moment, some of them of the first order. In another of them, Brant, from 200 to 300 pure-bred Shorthorns are to be found in one herd; and in another of them, Wentworth, is kept the most famous herd of Jerseys in the world, while we have many breeds of cattle, swine and sheep and other classes of live stock of so high an order that they form a standing temptation to hundreds of our American cousins to come and pay us an annual visit. We are glad to see them come, and hope the day is not far distant when they may come whenever they please and get from us whatever they may choose without having to consult any one along their border. (Applause.) Twenty years ago we had next to no cattle fit for shipping; now we export 600,000 annually to Great Britain and 40,000 annually to our brethren south of Lake Ontario in the face of a restrictive duty of 20 per cent."

A Fight Under Water.

A diver named Quintree, says the London Daily Telegraph, had a remarkable fight with a formidable fish called the boultous or bondro, a kind of shark which infests the Breton coast, at Douarnenez, the other day. According to all accounts Quintree had a narrow escape, and his own report of his terrible submarine encounter reads like a stanza from Schiller's famous poem, or a page from one of Jules Verne's romances. The diver, an old salt, was employed by the Government, and in pursuit of his daily labor duly descended in a diving apparatus off the Douarnenez Pier for the purpose of laying the foundation of an addition to that structure. While he was at the bottom of the sea the men who were working the air pump in the pontoon boat above were suddenly frightened by feeling the alarm signal. They instantly pulled up and brought a large boultous, nearly eight feet long, to the surface. The marine monster's head formed three-quarters of his length and his under jaws were of immense size. Shortly afterward Quintree came up, his hand on the air pipe of his helmet and his diving apparatus somewhat damaged. It appears that when he went down to his work he had scarcely got to the last rung of the ladder when he saw the sea monster lying between two huge lumps of rock. He had in his hand only his stone chisel and a hammer, and he intended to go up for a crowbar at once, but the fish was too fast for him. It came toward him through the green water with its enormous jaws wide open. Without losing a moment Quintree managed to wound the animal in the throat with his chisel, and then held it down on a stone while he drew his knife and made a hole in its body, through which he passed a rope and thus sent the fish to the surface. Had it not been for his quickness and dexterity the diver, owing to the rents which the fish would make in his apparatus, would have been drowned and then devoured. As it happened, it was the boultous that was not only defeated but eaten, for its body was divided among the victor and his comrades, who made a capital bouillabaisse of its prime parts.

Death from a Bee-sting.

A Hartford, Conn., despatch says: Sarah McFarland, aged 19, daughter of the overseer of the Rockville woollen mills, of Rockville, was stung on the lip by a bumble-bee on Sunday. The poison entered the girl's system and the body swelled to an enormous size. Last night she died in awful agony.

A Stony Glare.

"Pa," inquired Bobby, who was reading the paper, "what is 'a stony glare'?"

"It is the expression which comes over a man's face at church," explained the old gentleman, "when the contribution box is held before him and he has neglected to provide himself with 10 cents in change."

CHRISTINE NILSSON AT HOME.

The Charming Songbird's Bridal Bower in the Fashionable District of London.

(Olive Logan in the New York Mail and Express.)

The home of Christine Nilsson in Kensington court is one of the most luxurious bonbonieres in London. It may really be looked upon as her bridal bower, for previously she occupied a house in Belgravia which, though very fine and expensive, was not half so charming as the beautiful nest in which the nightingale now reposes. I made one of the diva's company at her last reception and passed an hour or two of that unalloyed enjoyment which it is occasionally given us mortals to experience. The world-renowned songstress received me with engaging and hospitable warmth at the door of her drawing-room, an apartment crowded with artistic furniture, richly carved and gilded, embroidered draperies and an almost indescribable quantity of rare bibelots. A gilded cabinet bearing her monogram is quite filled with exquisite ancient fans, several of which are historic, having belonged to queens and princesses; a Chickering concert grand piano is partially covered with an unusually fine China crape shawl embroidered in colors, trimmed with a multi-colored fringe and looped up here and there with rare old silver clasps. Sculptured ivories, burnished enamels, an ancient ormolu clock with its face set round with costly crystals, which sparkle almost like diamonds, a marble bust of the diva standing on a buhl table under the graceful foliage of a palm, and at least a score of photographs of crowned heads, whose sovereign fingers have offered these tributes, with their autographs, to Christine Nilsson, are a few of the many interesting objects upon which the charmed eye of the visitor falls. The lovely Queen Mercedes of Spain, the Empresses of Russia and Austria, the Queens of Greece, Sweden and Norway, the Princess of Wales, the Duchess of Edinburgh and many other great ladies have given their photos with autographs and phrases of admiration to the celebrated singer. Right well and happy does the celebrated songtress look to-day in her dark blue gown of satin-faced surah made without train, high neck and with the elbow sleeves which show to such advantage the white shapely arms. A touch of pink ribbon and a voluminous cascade of fine old point lace form an admirable background for the wonderful parure of sapphires and diamonds with which her ears, neck, fingers and arms are adorned. She looks handsomer now than she did a score of years ago when Cavanel painted that exquisite full length of her as Ophelia which hangs yonder.

"I was young and poor then," she says, stroking her now plump cheeks, and by the use of the word "poor" in the sense of "thin" showing how great an influence her American connection has had in forming her English speech, for in England "poor" and "lean" are not considered identical in meaning. With a hearty admiration that has truth ringing in every syllable, Christine speaks of her fondness for America, and her gratification in the knowledge that she belongs to the Scandinavian race, a people, who, more perhaps than any other, assimilate well with our native-born population; and one can quite easily believe that if she were but one of the many Swedish women who inhabit America, instead of being one of the greatest prima donnas who ever lived, she would like, even almost as much as now she does, the free air and the socially noble institution of the United States.

The fair Christine is now the Countess Casa de Miranda, and I was interested in the personality of her happy spouse. The Count is a slender man of middle age, of about Nilsson's own height, with dark complexion, and eyes which require a rimless glass stuck in one of them only. Immeasurably proud, and naturally so, the good gentleman seems to be of his renowned and fascinating wife; and the pleasant little daughter, who has brought them together, flits from one parent to the other, as joyous as a bird in the sunshine. She is quite Spanish in her coloring, and though she has fine black eyes would scarcely be called a beauty. With the joy of happy motherhood and wifehood gleaming brightly from her sapphire eyes, Nilsson herself is a beauty; and her voice is the angel's prayer it ever was. Am I not to be envied? I who write to you, sitting on a golden divan, by Nilsson's side as she sings Schubert's Serenade, Nettie Carpenter accompanying her on the violin and Gans at the piano! I will hear no lesser vocalizing after that exquisite dream of melody, and so departs down the Gobelin-tapestried oak staircase, past the dining-room in claret velvet, the dining-room in Spanish leather, the quaint hall with stained glass windows, in which stand three men servants in livery, and then out into the prosaic world of spoken speech, the Queen's highways of Piccadilly, Bond street and the Strand.

False Economy.

To do part of to-morrow's work to-day.

Living cheaply so that you can dress well.

Going to law about anything that you can compromise.

To employ a botch because he doesn't charge much.

Sitting in the twilight doing nothing in order to save oil.

Buying things you don't want just because they are cheap.

Marrying your daughter to an adventurer so as to have her off your hands.

To take your money out of the bank and invest it in a wild-cat scheme.

Taking your boy from school and allowing him to grow up in ignorance for the sake of two dollars a week he can earn.

A Social Event.

Chicago Lady (to caller)—Did you know that Mrs. S. has obtained her divorce?

Caller—O yes; we received cards yesterday.

"The best art patrons in Kansas City," the veracious Chicago News credits a Kansas City artist with saying, "pay so much a foot for pictures. A good picture—one with plenty of red in it and desirably located—will bring $20 per front foot; the average price is $12 per front foot. Our pictures are divided into two classes—improved and unimproved; the one framed and the other unframed. When a gentleman fancies a picture we let him cut off a sample of it (just as they do dress goods) to take home with him to see if his wife likes the pattern."

Tit-Bits.

Continued from First Page.

Get your Flour, Biscuits and Apples at KEEFER'S.

A party of Gypsies struck our town on Monday last.

Mr. Thos. Manders, of this place, got his hand badly cut one day last week.

Our Baptist friends have purchased eighteen feet more of land adjoining their Church.

Mr. Robt. Trimble has purchased from Mr. W. K. Flesher, two lots on Beechel street.

Asthma cured by the double treatment of Southern Asthma Cure, is a common remark.

A total eclipse of the sun—visible only in Europe and Asia—takes place on Saturday next.

A Hanover hen laid four eggs in one day recently, and then wound up the remarkable feat by dying on the nest. So says the Post.

TENDERS WANTED.—For building a fence around a lot on Sydenham street, Flesherton. Full particulars on application at the ADVANCE Office.

Mr. Wm. W. Strain has returned to Flesherton. It seemed quite natural to see him occupying his old seat in the Methodist church last Sunday. He looks as hearty as ever.

Mr. John Scott, son of Robert Scott, Esq., Hopeville, had a narrow escape from being seriously if not fatally injured on Monday of last week. He was at work with a mowing machine when the horses took fright and ran away. Mr. Scott was thrown on the ground in front of the machine which passed over his body. His clothes were torn into shreds and he was so badly bruised that he was unable to resume work for several days.—Dundalk Herald.

While working on a scaffold at Woodland's building on Tuesday last, Mr. Jas. Laidlaw met with what might have been a very serious accident. It appears the scaffold gave way and precipitated Mr. Laidlaw among a lot of stones some of which fell on him, bruising and scratching him in many places and also spraining his ancle. We are pleased to learn that he will be around again in a day or two.—Grey Review.

Flesherton and the Station Junior Baseball teams tried conclusions on the grounds of the latter last Friday afternoon. The game was very keenly contested throughout. The boys on both sides manifested a most kindly and manly spirit towards each other, and respected the decisions of the umpire like little men—a little better, in fact. The teams were well matched and played an honest game of ball throughout. At the end of the game the scores stood—Flesherton 29 runs, and the Station 28 runs. It is just possible the scoring may be reversed when the next game is played. A. R. Fawcett, of THE ADVANCE, umpired. At the conclusion of the game, the usual cheers were given, when the Station boys invited the Flesherton team to an excellent supper at the Temperance House, which was accepted and ample justice done thereto.

Some months ago the Editor of THE ADVANCE and his wife had their first-born daughter christened. "How to name the baby" was a question easily solved, as a very pretty name suggested itself, after reading Rev. E. P. Roe's charming Highland story, "Near to Nature's Heart," in which is to be found one of the most beautiful characters in the domain of pure and elevating fiction, viz., "Vera." Accordingly the child was christened "Vera" by the Rev. W. Ayers, late pastor of the Methodist church here. Shortly afterwards it occurred to the Editor to write to the Rev. Mr. Roe, acquainting him of the fact, which was done. The letter was sent to the great author's address, but he being away from home, it (the letter) travelled across the continent to California, where it was safely delivered. Mr. Roe very graciously wrote the Editor an elegantly worded letter, which it is needless to add is prized very highly by the parents of the child.

SLEEPLESS NIGHTS, made miserable by that terrible cough. Shiloh's Cure is the remedy for you. Sold at Medical Hall.

ARE YOU MADE miserable by Indigestion, Constipation, Dizziness, Loss of appetite, Yellow Skin? Shiloh's Vitalizer is a positive cure. Sold at Medical Hall.

Died.

STEWART.—At the Ross House, Owen Sound, on Tuesday, Aug. 2, Daniel Stewart, son of Mr. Alexander Stewart, Artemesia, aged 23 years, 11 months, and 17 days.

["Dan," as he was familiarly called, was well-known in this neighborhood as a most genial, whole-souled young man. He was very popular. Wherever he went he scattered the sunshine of a generous and kindly nature. His early death has fallen like a deep shadow on the entire community. He has gone into the presence of the Great King, who is as merciful as he is just. The body was brought to the home of the grief-stricken family on Tuesday evening, amid tears and universal sorrow and sympathy. On Wednesday afternoon the remains were followed to their last resting place in the Flesherton cemetery by a large concourse of friends and neighbors, and lead by our band, which played several sweet and mournful airs. The last sad rites were conducted by the Foresters, of Owen Sound, of whom deceased had been a member. "Earth to earth, and ashes to ashes." And so we all pass away to that bourne "from whence no traveller e'er returns."—ED. ADVANCE.]

MURDOCK.—Died while on a visit, at her son's residence, Bournemouth, England, Margaret Meldrum, wife of Wm. Murdock, Kent Road, Glasgow, Scotland.

[Deceased was sister to H. Meldrum, Esq., Eugenia. This is the first death in the family in fifty-three years.—ED.]

Our Township Fathers.

Artemesia Council met in the Town Hall here, on Monday, Aug. 8th, 1887.

Present: Messrs. Christoe, McArthur, Boland, Sharp and Cairns. Reeve in the chair.

Minutes of last meeting read and confirmed.

Rev. Mr. Watson waited upon Council regarding shed on Beechell street in this village.

Mr. G. Best waited upon Council re drain on 170 Side Road.

McArthur, Sharp.—That the following accounts be paid:—W. Davidson, 150 loads of gravel at 6c., $7.95. Wm. Devin, 118 loads of gravel at 5c., $5.90; A. R. Fawcett, Printing and advertising, $57.75,—Carried.

By-Laws No's 411, to appoint Collectors; 412, to levy County rates; 414, to levy Police Village rates, Markdale, introduced and read a first, second and third time and passed.

Mr. W. K. Flesher waited upon the Council regarding the taxation of his flour mill.

Mr. Brown waited upon Council re Mrs. McQueen, Indigent.

Boland, McArthur.—That this Council recommend the payment of Markdale Police Trustee Rate amounting to $65.25—Carried.

Cairns, Sharp.—That Mr. Smith be paid for work done on ditch and road when completed.—Carried.

Sharp, Cairns.—That Wm. Hogg be appointed an arbitrator for the Municipality of Artemesia, in the matter of the Valley Road disputes.—Carried.

Sharp, Cairns.—That Samuel Fisher be paid 75 cents for extra work done on the Miller bridge.—Carried.

Council adjourned.

SHILOH'S CURE will immediately relieve Croup, Whooping Cough, and Bronchitis. Sold at Medical Hall.

ADVICE TO MOTHERS.—Are you disturbed at night and broken of your rest by a sick child suffering and crying with pain of Cutting Teeth? If so send at once and get a bottle of "Mrs. Winslow's Soothing Syrup" for Children Teething. Its value is incalculable. It will relieve the poor little sufferer immediately. Depend upon it, mothers; there is no mistake about it. It cures Dysentery and Diarrhœa, regulates the Stomach and Bowels, cures Wind Colic, softens the Gums, reduces Inflammation, and gives tone and energy to the whole system. "Mrs. Winslow's Soothing Syrup" for children teething is pleasant to the taste and is the prescription of one of the oldest and best female physicians and nurses in the United States, and is for sale by all druggists throughout the world. Price twenty-five cents a bottle. Be sure and ask for "MRS. WINSLOW'S SOOTHING SYRUP," and take no other kind.

"HACKMETACK," a lasting and fragrant perfume. Price 25 and 50 cents. Sold by Medical Hall.

THE ADVANCE will be sent to any address in Canada or the United States for $1 per year; and to England, Ireland, or Scotland for $1.50

THE ADVANCE unquestionably has no superior as a live Local and Family newspaper in Simcoe, Grey, or Bruce.

The Critics.

"This is not poetry" says one,
"Too light the words—too old the jest;
There should be deeper flow of thought
That points to wisdom in the breast!"
And then this critic folds his arms,
Thumbs his gold watch-chain o'er and o'er...
Thinks not on his own withered heart,
But spurns the beggar from the door.

"THIS poetry?" another asks,
"This solemn melancholy strain?
Oh no! Give me a brighter theme
With not the shadow of a pain.
Let it be full of earth's own mirth,
But free from every passing strife;
Let every line bespeak a light
That circles round the writer's life."

"I like a mixture," adds a third,
"The serio-comic I prefer,
Where one may either laugh or weep—
Where grief or jest the soul may stir.
This long-faced melancholy strain
Has no especial charm for me;
And yet I'd have it not ALL gay—
I like—ahem! a mixture...See?

Next speaks a learned MEDICIN
"These flights of fancy are not right!
Such passion should be dormant made,"
Saith this phlegmatic erudite.
"Dost think that verse is made by rule,
O most dispassionate critique?
That one can mould sublimest thought
In the cold grooves that YOU would seek?"

. . . . . .

Alas! what can a poet do
Before such critics watchful eyes?
How shall he learn to write for ALL
The poetry that satisfies?
Well, I'd ignore remarks, and lay
Their criticisms on the shelf.
And then, inspired by my own muse,
Just learn to write, and please—myself!

—Edith B. VanDusen.

A WONDERFUL ORGAN. The largest organ and one that plays a controlling part of the health of the body is the liver. If torpid or inactive the whole system becomes diseased. Dr. Chase's Liver Cure is made specially for Liver and Kidney diseases, and is guaranteed to cure. Receipe book and medicine $1. Sold by all dealers.

SHILOH'S CATARRH REMEDY—a positive cure for Catarrh, Diptheria and Canker Mouth. Sold at Medical Hall.

THE REV. GEO. H. THAYER, of Bourbon, Ind., says: "Both myself and wife owe our lives to SHILOH'S CONSUMPTION CURE." Sold at Medical Hall.

NEW ADVERTISEMENTS.

STRAY COW.

Came to the premises of the subscriber Lot 20, Con. 4, Artemesia, on the 23rd inst., a red and white cow. Owner can have same by proving property and paying expenses.

ANTHONY KENNY.

Artemesia, July 30th, 1887.

VOTERS' LIST, 1887.

Municipality of the Township of Osprey, County of Grey.

NOTICE is hereby given that I have transmitted or delivered to the persons mentioned in the third and fourth sections of "THE VOTERS' LIST ACT," the copies required by said sections to be so transmitted or delivered of the list made pursuant to said Act of all persons appearing by the last revised Assessment Roll of the said Municipality to be entitled to vote in the said Municipality at Elections for members of the Legislative Assembly and at Municipal Elections; and that said list was first posted up at my office at Lot 20, Con. 4, Osprey, on the 6th day of August, 1887, and remains there for inspection.

Electors are called upon to examine the said list and if any omissions or any errors are found therein to take immediate proceedings to have the said errors corrected according to law.

WILLIAM MILNE.
Clerk of the said Municipality.

Dated this 6th day of August, A.D., 1887.

VOTERS' LIST, 1887.

Municipality of the Township of Artemesia, County of Grey.

NOTICE is hereby given that I have transmitted or delivered to the persons mentioned in the third and fourth sections of "THE VOTERS' LIST ACT" the copies required by said sections to be so transmitted or delivered of the list made pursuant to said Act of all persons appearing by the last revised Assessment Roll of the said Municipality to be entitled to vote in the said Municipal Elections; and that said list was first posted up at my office at Flesherton, on the 6th day of August, 1887, and remains there for inspection.

Electors are called upon to examine the said list and if any omissions or any errors are found therein to have immediate proceedings to have the said errors corrected according to law.

W. J. BELLAMY.
Clerk of the said Municipality.

Dated this 6th day of August, A.D., 1887.

J. BRANDER

PRICEVILLE,

While returning thanks to his patrons and the public for their valuable support in the past, begs to announce that he is prepared to supply their various needs.

We make it our business to keep a supply of Goods suitable for the needs of our customers, and as

We Buy in Large Quantities Direct from the Manufacturers,

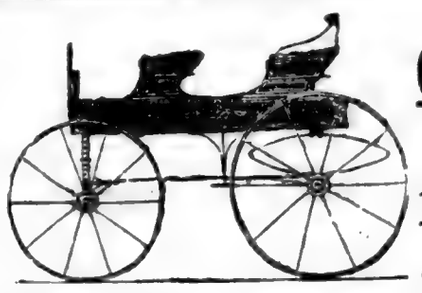
FOR CASH, we are in a position to

Give Extra Value

in every department. Every one should see the immense value we have in FALL GOODS just arriving.

Very Respectfully,
JAS. BRANDER.

Priceville, July 20, 1887.



MAXWELL CARRIAGE WORKS!

LITTLE & BLAKELY,

MANUFACTURERS OF

Carriages, Democrats, Wagons &c.

Repairing, Painting, Horse-Shoeing, and General Jobbing

Done on Short Notice and at Reasonable Prices.

JOHNSON LITTLE, Blacksmith, THOS. A. BLAKELY, Wagon-Maker & Painter.

Maxwell, May 26th, 1887.

BOOTS & SHOES!

Having received large additions to my stock, I have a good supply on hand of Summer Goods.

LADIES' WEAR.—A fine assortment in Prunella, French Kid, Goat, Polish Calf, Buff and Heavy Boots.

MISSES AND BOYS WEAR.—A large variety of Lace & Button Boots, Shoes and Slippers.

CHILDRENS WEAR.—A very large assortment of all sorts and sizes.

MENS WEAR.—I have Buff, Calf and Enamelled Balmorals, Oxford Ties and Strong Lace Boots.

FOR PRICE AND QUALITY, CANNOT BE SURPASSED.

WM. CLAYTON, Flesherton.

CHEAP AND DURABLE!

—THE WELL-KNOWN—

SPEIGHT WAGON!

Call and get Prices, &c. from undersigned.

STOVES, TINWARE, &c. for sale as usual

First-class value in every department.

Agent for VICKER'S EXPRESS. All parcels left with him will be promptly and carefully attended to.

STRAIN'S. FLESHERTON.

FLESHERTON. MARBLE WORKS:

E. VANZANT,

ALL KINDS OF

Marble and Monumental Works,

Such as Monuments, Tomb Tables, Headstones Counter and Table Tops—in American and Italian Marble and Granite, and made on short notice. Also Mantles in Marble and Marbleized Slate, &c., &c.

Flesherton, Aug. 30, 1883.

HEALTH FOR ALL.

HOLLOWAY'S PILLS & OINTMENT

THE PILLS

Purify the Blood, correct all Disorders of the

Liver, Stomach, Kidn'ys, and Bowels.

They invigorate and restore to health Debilitated Constitutions, and are invaluable in all Complaints incidental to Females of all ages. For Children and the aged they are priceless.

THE OINTMENT

Is an infallible remedy for Bad Legs, Bad Breasts, Old Wounds, Sores and Ulcers. It is famous for Gout and Rheumatism. For disorders of the Chest it has no equal.

For SORE THROAT, BRONCHITIS, COUGHS, COLDS

Glandular Swellings, and all Skin Diseases it has no rival; and for contracted and stiff joints it acts like a charm.

Manufactured only at Professor HOLLOWAY'S Establishment,

78, New Oxford Street (late 533, Oxford Street), London.

and are sold at 1s. 1½d., 2s. 9d., 4s. 6d., 11s., 22s., and 33s. each Box or Pot, and may be had of all Medicine Vendors throughout the World.

☞ Purchasers should look to the Label on the Pots and Boxes. If the address is not 533, Oxford Street, London, they are spurious.

FOR SALE.

The undersigned has White Ash Butter Tubs and Churns for sale.

JOS. McCORMICK,
Flesherton.

304-330.

FLAGS AND BANNERS

of superior quality, for Orange and other Societies. Order early.

WM. TEGART,
Thornbury, Ont.

J. W. BATES,

Furniture Dealer and Undertaker,

FLESHERTON, ONT.

Wm Mitchell Library

FLESHERTON ADVANCE.

"TRUTH BEFORE FAVOR."—"PRINCIPLES, NOT MEN."

VOL. VII., NO. 321. FLESHERTON, ONTARIO, THURSDAY, AUGUST 18, 1887. A. R. FAWCETT, EDITOR & PROPRIETOR.

For above fine finished Watches, accurate Hampden's—my name on, and the reliable Waltham and Elgin Watches, in Gold, Filled Gold, and Coin Silver Cases, go to

W. A. BROWN'S

FINELY STOCKED JEWELERY STORE.

I am known as the Reliable Jweller for 20 miles North, South, East and West. I never have misrepresented purposely any goods sold since being in business here. It is easy to sell a 11 Jewelled Watch for "Full Jewelled." It is much easier to sell 8 k. Gold Watches and call them 12 or 14. I don't have to do it. My own name on all warrants, and you will find I can be held responsible if goods are not right.

—|—|342|—|—

WATCHES & CLOCKS

Booked in Repair Book since July 1st, 1886.

SQUARE DEALING.

PRICES CLOSE.

SPECIALTIES:—Fine Watch Repairing, Spec Fitting.

W. A. BROWN,

The People's Jeweller, Markdale.

SAY, HALLO THERE! ADVERTISING PAYS! Of course it does. Just plant an advertisement in THE ADVANCE and see for yourself. Hundreds have done so and were benefitted. Have you a farm you want to sell or rent? Advertise in THE ADVANCE. Have you anything under the sun you want to sell or trade? An advertisement in THE ADVANCE will bring you customers every time. Do you want to buy anything or hire help? Advertise in THE ADVANCE every time. Address or call on A. R. Fawcett, ADVANCE Office, Flesherton, for terms, &c.

CONSUMPTION IN FLESHERTON.

There being good prospects of a fresh quantity of Flour to be consumed in the village and surrounding country the present season, the undersigned has opened out with a good stock of the following lines :—

ROLLER FLOUR!

Best Brands.

Rolled & Granulated Oat-Meal.

Corn Meal,
Cracked Wheat,
Chop,
Shorts,
Bran and Oats,

At Bottom Prices for Cash.

Special Discounts

According to amount of Purchase.

W. W. TRIMBLE,

Next door to Clayton's Shoe Store.

(312-364)

PRINTING! YES, OH, YES! IT WILL PAY all manners of persons who read this advt. to get their Printing done at THE ADVANCE Office, Flesherton. Good work at honest prices every time! A dollar saved is a dollar earned—so the proverb goes. Pamphlets, Posters, Circulars, Progrems, Dodgers, Streamers, Bill Heads, Note Heads, Receipts, Note Forms, Business Cards, Visiting Cards, Labels, Tags, &c., Plain or Colored. Address or call on A. R. Fawcett, ADVANCE Office, Flesherton, for terms.

ADVERTISE in The ADVANCE

Tit - Bits.

Consisting of Local and Other Interesting Items gathered by The Advance Reporters.

PUBLISHER'S NOTICE.

All Church, Society, or other notices of a pecuniary character, inserted in the Advance in future, will be charged for at the rate of 10 cents per line first insertion and 5 cents per line each subsequent insertion, (if any).

Regular advertisers' rates remain unchanged.

Miss Bella Christoe is visiting friends in Markdale.

Miss Ada M. Sproule returned to Pine Grove last week.

Miss DeLeMatter, of Owen Sound, is the guest of S. Damude, Esq.

The ADVANCE until the end of present year for the small sum of 35 cents.

The junior baseball teams of Flesherton and the Station will play the return match on Friday (to-morrow) at Flesherton.

Mr. John Gordon is to be congratulated upon the excellent and much needed attention our sidewalks have been receiving lately.

Mr. Watson, of Toronto, and Mrs. Watson, of Detroit, are guests of the Rev. Mr. Shilton and wife at the Methodist parsonage here.

Two little daughters of Mr. Ed. Fawcett, Heathcote, have been visiting at Mr. Robt. Fawcett's—also at ye Editor's—during the past week or two.

Mr. W. K. Flesher last week tested samples of water from the pond, several village pumps and the spring near the "Boyne Water" bridge. The latter proved to be the purest water in the lot, that taken from the pump near Mr. Wm. Strain's being next best.

Dame rumor has it, that His Royal Highness, Albert Edward, Prince of Wales, once rode in the carriage at present owned by Mr. Leonard, Betts, of Artemesia. We can now understand the pardonable pride with which—on state occasions—Mr. Bett's dashes into town, mounted on the couchman's seat of that supberb vehicle, and driving a magnificent span of bays.

It may be interesting to many of our readers—particularly to those who have never seen it—to know that what is known as "Flesher's pond" covers an area of 8¼ acres. Flesher's Lake, a sheet of water two miles west of this town, covers an area of nearly 40 acres, and is connected with the aforementioned pond by a stream known as "Boyne Water."

Messrs. J. Sullivan and W. P. Crossley, and their children, returned from their trip to Manitoulin Island on Thursday morning last. They had a very pleasant time—most of it being spent in the neighborhood of Lake Manitou and Manitowaning. They had several pleasant boating excursions to points of interest. There are some fine vegetable gardens on the Island, and cranberries are very plentiful. The largest and most remarkable specimen of a pumpkin Mr. Sullivan ever saw in his life was found growing by the water's edge on the farm of Mr. Crossley's father-in-law. Mr. Sullivan says they caught a lot of very large bass and once an enormous pike seized the bait on his hook and made off with it like a flash of lightning, bending the pole nearly double, and finally, coming with full speed, his pikeship leaped out of the water, struck the boat with great force, and broke away. Mr. Sullivan says he did not swear, but he felt mad enough to kick himself.

ARE YOU MADE miserable by Indigestion, Constipation, Dizziness, Loss of appetite, Yellow Skin? Shiloh's Vitalizer is a positive cure. Sold at Medical Hall.

Mrs. Johnson, of Manitoulin Island, is visiting her sister, Mrs. W. P. Crossley, of this place.

Special reductions in every line at J. G. Anderson's, Markdale, to make room for fall goods.

Mr. Will Clayton, jeweller, of Hamilton, is visiting his parents here. Will looks well.

Dr. Christoe had quite a severe attack of sickness this week but we are glad to see he is able to move around town again.

Mr. W. P. Crossley brought some oil in its raw state home with him from the oil springs in the Manitoulin Island.

The Ladies' Aid of the Presbyterian church here will provide dinner for the public on the second day of East Grey exhibition, also a grand concert on the evening of same day in the Town Hall.

Miss Gilliland has leased the shop in Mr. Strain's block, Flesherton—formerly occupied by Miss Lever—and is prepared to receive orders in Dressmaking and give the most prompt attention to the same. Dress trimmings kept in stock.

From the Canada Gazette of Aug. 6th, we clip the following: "31st "Grey" Battalion of Infantry. No. 6Company, Flesherton. To be 2nd Lieutenant, provisionally: Sergeant Casper James Sproul, vice John Henry Palmer, left limits." Accept our congratulations friend Sproul.

Rev. John Cushman, formerly a Roman Catholic, and who has travelled in Bible lands and seen many of the countries of the South is expected to preach in Flesherton Baptist Chapel, on Sunday morning at 11; Priceville at 2, and Flesherton at 6:30. He is a theological student, spending his vacation in Durham.

The Sons of Temperance Mutual relief Society is one of the cheapest, safest, and strongest Mutual Aid Societies in the world. Its Secretary, F. M. Bradley, Esq., Washington, in a letter just to hand says: "The Society is in excellent condition, pecuniarly and otherwise. We are paying all death claims promptly and in full."

Mr. and Mrs. J. W. Henderson, Mr. and Mrs. John Donogh and others of Sherbourne St. Church, Toronto, left last Monday for the sea side, after staying two or three weeks at Old Orchard Beach and other Atlantic Sea Bathing resorts, they intend visiting Portland, Boston, New York, Philadelphia, and Chatauqua.

Rev. Mr. Ward, Incumbent of the English Church of this place, gave his farewell address last Sunday evening to a crowded house, and took his departure on Tuesday for Millbank 17 miles from Stratford, his new field of labor. Mr. Ward has been a faithful, zealous, persevering man, and for about nine years, labored with indomitable energy for the welfare of his church and congregation, building them up from weakness and disorganization to its present prosperous and well organized state.—Markdale Standard.

The story is told of Chaplain Allison, of the Minnesota Legislature, that he prayed one morning: "And now, dear Lord, bless the reporters, whose nimble pens catch our every word almost before it finds utterance. If we take the wings of the morning and fly to the uttermost parts of the earth, they are there. They meet us in the jungles of Africa, they waylay us in the solitary canons of Colorado, and when at length we find the latitude of the magnetic pole, behold, they are there. May their light and goodness be equal to their power, and in the general assembly of heaven let no reporter be excluded."—Phonographic.

SLEEPLESS NIGHTS, made miserable by that terrible cough. Shiloh's Cure is the remedy for you. Sold at Medical Hall.

The following, which we clip from one of the Winnipeg dailies, will show that Flesherton boys usually "get there" abroad as well as at home:—"There was a foot race in Dufferin Park Tuesday evening between Mr. Hamilton, late of New York, and Mr. F. A. Leitch, employees of the C. P. R. offices. The distance was a hundred yards and the race was a picnic for Leitch, who won easily by two yards," Well done, Fred.

A Fleshertonian recently had an autograph album handed to him by a young lady and he wrote the following purely impromptu lines:

In whatsoever station
Thy lot in life is cast,
Still live for full solution,
And win the crown at last.
So he who rules the tempest,
And calms the troubled sea,
Shall give thee on his bosom rest,
And live through life with thee.
For home or friend or husband,
Do thou His council take,
Urge on thy way at his command,
Till Heaven's glad day shall break.

Mr. Wm. Guthrie, shoemaker, Fairmount (Euphrasia Township) was taken suddenly ill a week ago last Monday, while working for Mr. J. B. Winters. He had to be carried from the field to the house. He died on Thursday following and was buried in the English church burying ground, Fairmount, on Friday. For twenty years deceased had held the position of steward of the English church there. He was a member of the Orange society, and, in consequence, the last sad rites were performed by members of that body.

If we are not mistaken an item recently appeared in the Dundalk Herald to the effect that the junior Lacrosse club of that town had challenged a number of clubs, Flesherton included, to play them a match, but that none of them would accept the same. As far as the Flesherton club is concerned, we beg leave to assure the Dundalk juniors that their statement is not correct. If they sent our boys a challenge, it has not been received. Just send along that challenge and see if the Flesherton juniors will not accept it without hesitation.

A special meeting of all members of the Sons of Temperance, Flesherton, will be held on Wednesday evening next the 24th inst., when the following motion will be considered and voted on. That whereas this district does not offer scope for two similar Temperance societies, and whereas the work for which the Flesherton Division was originally organized is now being so efficiently done by our sister society, the Royal Templars of Temperance, we therefore resolve to suspend all meetings for the present except such as are necessary to retain the charter and secure all privileges to insured members. Full attendance particularly requested.

Flesherton is one of the healthiest places in the Dominion, but in some manner diptheria has obtained a foothold even here. Several cases are reported in different parts of the place—some of a mild type and others quite severe. One death is reported, the second youngest daughter of the respected Head Master of our Public Schools having succumbed to the dread disease, so fatal to children. Mr. and Mrs. Irwin are prostrated by the blow, and have the heartfelt sympathy of every man and woman in the community. The little girl was an unusually bright and winsome child. And now let every citizen arise in his might and stay the progress of the disease, before some more of our dear ones are added to the list of victims. Let pestiferous odors from filthy closets, backyards, and other fruitful sources of disease, be eradicated at once and forever. People who neglect these important matters deserve the cat-of-nine-tails.

Don't fill the system with quinine, to prevent or cure Fever and Ague. Ayer's Ague Cure is the specific for this disease, and leaves no poisons to produce dizziness, deafness, headache, or other disorders.

—AT—

RUSSELL'S

NOTED

JEWELRY

STORE,

Flesherton!

Is to be found the finest and most complete stock of

WATCHES, CLOCKS, JEWELRY,

SILVERWARE, and FANCY Goods in this section of country.

Some beautiful designs in ladies' R. Plate Bar Pins and Brooches. Just received, SPECTACLES for the million. In Watches, we keep Waltham, Elgin, Springfield, Illinois, Hampden, Columbus, Swiss, in gold, gold filled, silver and silver-ore cases, 2, 3, 4, & 5 ozs, at from $6.90 to $60, warranted from 2½ to 5 years.

Our Watch Repair Book tells the startling tale of 486 watches repaired from July 1st 1886 to July 1st 1887, which is 140 over and above what any other dealer can show in this section and (We) did not add the watch sales and clock repairs and call them watch repairs to swell the number as some dealers do. Of course our watch repairs increased considerably since last fall on account of so many poor watches being auctioned off around here which needed any amount of repairing and the people are becoming wise to the fact now that for thoroughly good Watches, Clocs, Silverware, etc., and for Fine Watch Repairing, they have of necessity to go to Russell's Not'd Jewelry Store, Flesherton

A Succession of Sad Blows.

"Life has been for me a succession of sad blows," said Mr. Breathar.

"Ah!" said the new pastor, sympathetically.

"Yes, indeed," replied the parishioner. "I've had the asthma twenty-two years."

Shows What He Knows About It.

One of those surly old bachelors that need killing, says that the reason why a woman is called a "duck" is because the dressing is better than the bird.

THE REV. GEO. H. THAYER, of Bourbon, Ind., says: "Both myself and wife owe our lives to SHILOH'S CONSUMPTION CURE." Sold at Medical Hall.

FARMERS!

Don't forget there is good work done at the Flesherton

WOOLEN FACTORY

And we are doing all in our power to please. Customers are finding out it is to their advantage to deal with us as our Prices are Low and Our Goods are Reliable, and notwithstanding price being cut so close on account of hard times, I intend to retain the manufacturing prices in nearly every branch, viz., CARDING, SPINNING, WEAVING, &c., &c. Give us a trial and see for yourself.

W. H. FLESHER.

Flesherton, ...

The Sea Breeze and the Scarf.

Hung on the casement that looked o'er the main
  Fluttered a scarf of blue;
And a gay bold breeze paused to flatter and tease
  This trifle of delicate hue;
"You are lovelier far than the proud skies are,"
  He said with a voice that sighed;
"You are fairer to me than the beautiful sea;
  Oh, why do you stay here and hide?

You are wasting your life in this dull, dark room;"
  And he fondled her silken folds.
"O'er the casement lean but a little, my queen,
  And see what the great world holds;
How the wonderful blue of your matchless hue
  Cheapens both sea and sky!
You are far too bright to be hidden from sight,
  Come, fly with me, darling, fly!"

Tender his whisper and sweet his caress,
  Flattered and pleased was she,
The arms of her lover lifted her over
  The casement out to sea;
Close to his breast she was fondly pressed,
  Kissed once by his laughing mouth;
Then dropped to her grave in the cruel wave,
  While the wind went whistling south.

—Ella Wheeler Wilcox.

SIR HUGH'S LOVES.

"Yes, on my mother's side, but I have not been to Redmond Hall for an age. Old Hugh had rather a disappointment last year; he was engaged to another lady, and she jilted him—at least that is the popular edition of the story; but anyhow the poor old fellow seemed rather badly hit."

"And he has married so soon!" in an incredulous tone.

"Of course, caught at the rebound like many other fellows. Don't you know how the old adage runs, Miss Trafford—

> Shall I wasting with despaire
> Die because a woman's faire.
> If she be not faire for me.
> What care I how faire she be.

That is the right sort of spirit, eh, Percy."

"How should I know?" returned Percy, morosely—he was evidently out of humor about something; and then, as though he feared to bring on himself one of Erle's jesting remarks, he roused himself with an effort. "Well, Toddlekins, how's Flibbertigibbet; come and sit on my knee, and I will tell you the story of Mr. Harlequin Puss-in-the-boots."

"My name is not Toddlekins." returned Fluff, indignantly., "and I don't care about Flibbertigibbet or Puss-in-boots; your stories are stupid, Percy, they never have any end." And then, with the capriciousness of a spoiled child, she sidled up to her chief favorite, Erle, and put her hands confidingly in his.

"When are you going to take me again to the Zoological Gardens, Mr. Erle?" she said in a coaxing voice; "Fern wants to go too, don't you, dear?" but her sister shook her head at her with a faint smile, and went on with her work.

"I don't see my way clear yet awhile, Pussy," replied Erle, as he smoothed Fluff's curls, and here he and Percy exchanged meaning looks; for during his grandfather's absence from town Erle had paid frequent visits to Beulah Place, and on one occasion had actually carried off the child for a day at the Zoological Gardens in spite of Fern's demur that she hardly knew what her mother would say.

"But surely you can do as you like, Mr. Erle," persisted the child, earnestly. "Percy tells us that you are so rich, and ride such beautiful horses in the park, and that you have nothing to do but just enjoy yourself; why can't you take Fern and me to the Zoological Gardens?"

"Oh, Fluff, Fluff!" remonstrated her sister in a distressed tone, "what will Mr. Erle think of you?"

Erle had looked embarrassed at the child's speech, but Percy laughed, and the next minute he rose.

"Do you mind if I leave you for a few minutes, Fern; I have a little business that will take about a quarter of an hour—oh, I will be back in time," as Erle seemed inclined to remonstrate; "you may depend upon it that I will not make you late for dinner, as la Belle Evelyn is to be there," and with a nod at his sister he left the room.

Fern looked a little troubled. "I hope he has not gone to meet ——" and then she flushed up and did not finish her sentence; but Erle understood her in a moment.

"Miss Davenport would not be pleased, I suppose—oh yes, of course he has gone to meet her. What a pity your mother is not here, Miss Trafford; she would have kept him in order?"

"Crystal will be so angry," replied Fern, anxiously, and dropping her voice so that Fluff should not overhear her; but the child, disappointed that her request had been refused, had betaken herself to the farthest corner of the room with her kitten, to whom she was whispering her displeasure. "She never likes Percy to meet her or show her any attention; I have told him over and over again, but he will not listen to me."

"I am afraid he is rather smitten with your friend Miss Davenport—she is wonderfully handsome, certainly. Yes, one cannot be surprised at Percy's infatuation—you are the gainer in one way, Miss Trafford, for Percy never came half so often until Miss Davenport lived with you."

"That makes it all the more wrong," returned Fern, firmly; "it was Percy's duty to come and see mother, and yet he stayed away for months at a time. Crystal has never encouraged him—she never will. I know in her heart she does not like Percy, and yet he will persist in harassing her."

"Faint heart ne'er won fair lady," returned Erle, lightly; and then, as he saw the tears in Fern's eyes, his manner changed. "You must not trouble yourself about it," he said, kindly; "it will be Percy's own fault if he gets baddly bitten; even I, a complete stranger to Miss Davenport—I believe I have not seen her more than three times—can quite endorse what you say; her manner is most repelling to Percy. He must be bewitched, I think."

"I wish he were different," she replied, with a sigh; "I know he makes mother often very unhappy, though she never says so. He seems to find fault with us for our poverty, and says hard things to mother because she will work for us all."

"Yes, I know, and yet Percy is not a bad-hearted fellow," replied Erle, in a sympathising tone; "he is terribly sore, I know, because your mother refuses his help; he has told me over and over again that with his han some allowance he could keep her in comfort, and that he knows his grandfather would not object. It makes him bitter—it does indeed, Miss Trafford, to have his gifts refused."

"How can we help it?" returned Fern, in a chocking voice. "Percy ought to know that we cannot use any of Mr. Huntingdon's money; neither my mother nor I would touch a penny of it. Don't you know," struggling with her tears, "that my poor father died broken-hearted, and he might have saved him."

"Yes, I know," returned Erle, looking kindly at the weeping girl, "and I for one cannot say you are wrong. My uncle has dealt very harshly, and I fear cruelly, by his own flesh and blood—my poor mother often cried as she told me so; but she always said that it was not for us to blame him who lived under his roof and profited by his generosity. He was a benefactor to us in our trouble—for we were poor too." But here Erle checked himself abruptly, for he did not care to tell Fern that his father had been a gambler, and had squandered all his wife's property; but he remembered almost as vividly as though it were yesterday, when he was playing in their miserable lodgings at Naples, after his father's death—how a grave stern-faced man came into the room and sat down beside his mother; and one speech had reached his ears.

"Never mind all that, Beatrice, you are happier as his widow than his wife. Forget the past, and come home with me, and your boy shall be mine."

Erle certainly loved his uncle, and it always pained him to remember his wrongdoing. In his boyish generosity he had once ventured to intercede for the disinherited daughter, and had even gone so far as to implore that his uncle would never put him in Percy's place; but the burst of anger with which his words were received cowed him effectually.

"A Trafford shall never inherit my property," Mr. Huntingdon had said, with a frown so black that the boy positively quailed under it; "I would leave it all to an hospital first—never presume to speak to me of this again. Percy does not require any pity; when he leaves Oxford he will read for the Bar. We have arranged all that; he will have a handsome allowance; and with his capacity—for his tutor tells me he is a clever fellow—he will soon carve his way to fortune;" and after this, Erle certainly held his peace.

CHAPTER XIV.

CRYSTAL.

> I do remember it. 'Twas such a face
> As Guido would have loved to look upon.
> Cornwall.
>
> She was as tender
> As infancy and grace.
> Shakspeare.

Fern looked a little surprised at Erle's speech. "I did not know you had been poor too," she returned, drying her eyes and taking up her work again.

"Yes, but I was very young, and knew little about it; my poor mother was the one to suffer. Well, she wanted for nothing when my uncle took us to Belgrave House; he was very good to her until she died; and," with a slight hesitation in his voice, "he is good to me."

"Yes, and you are right to be fond of him," returned Fern, frankly. "Sometimes I think it is not quite kind of me to speak to you of Percy and our troubles, because it seems to cast a reflection on one you love and ——" but Erle interrupted her.

"I hope you will never withhold your confidence, Miss Trafford; I should not feel that you treated me as a friend if you did not allow me to share some of your troubles. Percy and I are like brothers, and Percy's mother and sister ——" but here he paused, and a flush crossed his face. How could he tell this girl that she should be as a sister to him, when he knew that even to be alone with her for a few minutes made his heart beat with strange thrills of happiness? His sister, never!

Fern felt a little confused at the sudden pause. She wished in a vague sort of way that he would finish his sentence and tell her what he meant; the silence was becoming awkward.

Fern worked on desperately, but her cheeks were burning. Both of them felt relieved when they heard footsteps approaching—Erle especially, for some dim instinct told him that in another minute he should have betrayed himself.

Both of them rose, simultaneously, as the door opened; and at the same moment Fluff, hugging herself among the sofa cushions, whispered into the kitten's ear:

"They don't know that I heard every word. One of these days I shall go and see grandpapa, and ask him why we may not come and live with him as well as Percy. Erle would like it, I know, he is so fond of Fern."

Erle certainly looked a little amused as his friend entered the room accompanied by a tall dark girl, very plainly dressed. But his expression changed as he noticed Percy's moody looks, and the air of haughtiness observable in the manner of his companion.

Miss Davenport was evidently very much annoyed; she shook hands with Erle, without deigning to look at him, and walked straight to the fireplace.

Fern followed her. "I am so glad you have come home so early, Crystal; Fluff and I have waited tea for you, but we hardly expected you yet."

"I am sorry you waited for me," returned the girl, who called herself Crystal Davenport, in a constrained voice; "Mrs. Norton gave me some tea, because she said I must be tired playing with the children."

"Come, we must be going, Erle," interrupted Percy, sharply, "or we shall be late for diuner. Good-bye, Fern; tell my mother I am sorry to miss her. Good evening, Miss Davenport;" but he hesitated, as though he did not venture to offer his hand.

"Good-night, Mr. Trafford," she returned, indifferently; but she did not turn her long neck as she spoke. And Erle contented himself with a bow.

"What is it, Crystal, dear;" asked Fern, anxiously, as the two young men left the room, but Crystal only lifted her eyebrows and glanced at Fluff, whose curly head was distinctly visible; so Fern said cheerfully, "very well, we will have our tea, and then it will be Fluff's bed-time;" and then without another word busied herself with her simple preparations.

But it was not a festive meal. In spite of all her cheery efforts Crystal sat quite silent, with a cloud on her handsome face, and Fluff had turned sulky at the mention of her bed-time. So Fern fell to thinking of Erle's look as he bade her good-night—how kind he had been to her that evening. Yes, she was glad they were friends, and that he cared to hear about their troubles. He was so unselfish, so different to other young men—Fern did not know a single young man except Erle, so her knowledge was not very reliable; and then, with an odd transition of thought, she wondered who Miss Selby could be, and why Percy called her la Belle Evelyn, and looked at Erle so mischievously.

But presently, when Fluff had gone off grumbling with her kitten, and all the pretty tea things had been washed and put away in the big corner cupboard, and the kettle was silent, and only a cricket chirped on the hearth, Fern sat down beside Crystal, and put her arm affectionately round her. "Now you can tell me what has been troubling you, darling;" she said, in a coaxing voice.

It seemed a pity that there was no one to see the two faces, so close together; an artist would have sketched them as Night and Morning. Fern's soft English fairness made a splendid foil to Crystal's olive complexion and dark southern coloring. The girl was superbly handsome, in spite of the bitter lines round the mouth and the hard defiant curve of the lips. As Fern spoke, her dark eyes flashed angrily.

"He has been speaking to me again," she said, in an agitated voice. "He has dared to follow me and persecute me; and he calls it love—love!" with immeasurable contempt in her tone; "and when I tell him it is ungenerous and wrong, he complains that I have robbed him of all peace. Fern, I know he is your brother, and that I ought not to speak against him; but how am I to help hating him?"

"Oh, no!" with a shudder, for Fern's gentle nature was not capable of Crystal's passion; "you must not hate poor Percy—he cannot help loving you."

"A poor sort of love," returned Crystal, scornfully; "a love that partakes too much of the owner's selfishness to be to my taste. Fern, how can he be your mother's son? He has not a grain of her noble frank nature, and from all accounts he does not take after your father."

"But he is very clever, Crystal, and Mr. Erle says he is really kind-hearted," returned Fern, in a troubled tone; "people admire and like him, and there are many and many girls, Mr. Erle says, would be ready to listen to him. He is very handsome, even you must allow that, and it is not the poor boy's fault if he has lost his heart to you."

Crystal smiled at this sisterly defence, but the next moment she said, tenderly:

"You are such a little angel of goodness yourself, Fern, that you never think people are to blame—you would always excuse them if you could; you have so littl knowledge of the world, and have led such a recluse life, that you hardly know how rigid society really is; but I should have thought that even you would have thought it wrong for your brother to come here so often in your mother's absence and bring his friend with him; it is taking advantage of two defenceless girls to intrude himself and Mr. Erle on us in this way."

"But Percy never knows when mother is out," replied Fern, in a puzzled tone.

Crystal was silent; she held a different opinion, but after all she need not put these ideas into Fern's innocent mind. It was her own conviction that Percy in some way was always aware of his mother's absence. At first he had come alone, and now he always brought Erle with him, and she wanted to say a word that might put Fern on her guard; but at the present moment she was too full of her own grievance.

"You know, Fern," she continued, in a very grave voice, "if this goes on and your brother refuses to hear reason, I shall be obliged to seek another home, where I shall be free from his unmanly persecution; yes,"—as Fern uttered an incredulous exclamation—"though I love you all so dearly, and have grown to look upon this as a home, I shall be forced to go a second time into the world,"

"But Percy must hear reason," returned Fern, tearfully. "I will ask mother to talk to him, and I know Mr. Erle has given him hints. We cannot part with you, Crystal. I have never had a companion of my own age before, and mother is so often out."

"Well, well," observed Crystal soothingly, "I have told him the truth to-night, and perhaps he will believe it; but there! we will not talk about your brother any more. And so he left you alone with Mr. Erle, Fern?"

"Oh yes, but we were not long alone," returned the girl, innocetly.

"You and Mr. Erle seem good friends."

"Yes, I suppose so," rather shyly; "he was very kind to me this evening."

"Did he tell you anything about the beautiful Miss Selby who is to dine with her aunt, Lady Maltravers, at Belgrave House to-night? a cousin of Mr. Erle's, Lady Denison, is to act hostess."

"No," returned Fern, rather faintly, but she was conscious of a searp pain as Crystal spoke.

"And yet he meets her very often. Ah, well, young men do not tell all their secrets. Of course Mr. Erle's life is very different from ours; we are working bees, Fern, and he is a butterfly of fashion. When he comes here he makes himself very bright and pleasant, but he knows nothing of his real life."

"No, of course not." But a sort of chill passed over Fern as Crystal spoke. Why did she say these sort of things so often to her? did she think it wrong for her and Mr. Erle to be friends? was she warning her, and against what? Well, it was true she knew nothing of his life except what he choose to tell her. He had never mentioned this Miss Selby, though, according to Percy's account, he met her very often. Few ladies dined at Belgrave House, but to-night she was to be there. For the first time Fern's gentle nature felt jarred and out of tune. The bright little fire had burnt hollow; there was a faint clinging mist from the fog outside; the cricket had ceased to chirp. Fern glanced round her disconsolately; how poor and shabby it must look to him, she thought, after the rooms at Belgrave House!

But the next moment she started up in a conscience-striken way. "There is mother's step, Crystal, and we have neglected the fire; poor mother, and she will be so tired and cold." And Fern drove back her rebellious thoughts bravely, and seized the bellows and manipulated the fire, while Crystal drew up the old easy-chair; and placed a footstool. Mrs Trafford smiled as she saw these preparations for her comfort; her pale face relaxed from its gravity as Fern waited upon her, taking off her bonnet, and smoothing the beautiful grey hair with eager-loving fingers.

"Thank you, dearest," she said, drawing down the girl's face to hers; "and now tell me what you both have been doing."

"Percy and Mr. Erle have been here," was Fern's answer, as she took her place at her mother's feet; "and Percy left his love for you, and was so sorry to miss you."

Mrs. Trafford made no comment on this piece of information, but she glanced quickly at Crystal; perhaps something in the girls face warned her, for she at once changed the subject, to her daughter's surprise, and without asking any questions, began telling them about the invalid.

But after they had chatted for a few minutes, Crystal rose, and, saying she was very tired, bade them both good-night.

Mrs. Trafford looked after the girl anxiously, and then her glance fell on her daughter. Fern was looking into the fire dreamingly, and there was a sort of wistfulness in her eyes; when her mother touched her gently she started.

"My little sunbeam does not look quite so bright to-night," she said tenderly. "I am afraid you have been tiring yourself, Fern, trying to finish Florence's frock."

"Oh, no," returned the girl quickly, and then a frank blush came to her face as she met her mother's, clear searching look. "Well, I will confess, as Fluff says"—laughing a little unsteadily—"I am afraid I was just a little bit discontented."

"You discontented, my pet?" in an incredulous voice, for Fern's sweet unselfishness and bright content made the sunshine of their humble home. There seemed no chord of fretfulness in the girl's nature; her pure health and buoyant spirits found no cause for complaint. Nea lived her youth again in her child, and she often thanked Heaven, even in her desolate moments, for this one blessing that had never disappointed her.

Fern pressed a little closer to her mother and wrapped her arms round her. "But it is true, mother; I had quite a naughty fit. Crystal talked about Percy and Mr. Erle. It was not so much what she said as what she implied that troubled me, but she seemed to think that our life was so different to theirs—that we were poor people and they had nothing in common with us, and that it was better not to be friends. Somehow, it made me feel all at once how shabby and commonplace one's life really was."

Mrs. Trafford sighed, but there was no reproach in her voice. "Yes, dear; I understand, it is quite natural, and I should have felt the same at your age. I wish, for your sake, my darling, that things were different; but Crystal is very wise and right in trying to make you understand the barrier between Erle Huntingdon and us."

"But, mother," with a burning face, "we are gentlefolk; surely it does not matter so much that we are poor."

"The world would not endorse that, Fern," replied her mother gently, "it is apt to turn a cold shoulder to genteel poverty. The hardest lot in life, in my opinion, is the life of a poor gentlewoman."

"But Mr. Erle does not look down upon us," persisted Fern, "or he would not come so often. He always says that no room in Belgrave House is so homelike as this room and that he is happier than in the houses of his grand friends."

A troubled look came to the mother's face and involuntarily she pressed her child closer to her, as though to defend her from some threatened danger, and her voice was not quite so clear as usual as she answered:

"It is Erle's nature to say pleasant things. He is a gentlemanly, kind-hearted fellow, and I am sure that we all like him very much; but I should not care for my little daughter to see too much of him. Erle Huntingdon is not the friend I would choose for you, Fern."

"But, mother"—opening her eyes widely at this—"if we like him, why should we not be friends?"

Mrs. Trafford hesitated; she hardly liked to disturb Fern's mind, and yet she wished to put her on her guard.

"You see, Fern," she answered with assumed lightness, "we are poor people—very poor people; we have to work for our bread and to be content with simple fare; but my young cousin Erle is rich—he will be his uncle's heir one day, and, no doubt, he will marry some rich, handsome girl. All the world is before him; he has only to look round him and choose, like the prince in a fairy story. You may be sure there is some gay young princess waiting for him somewhere. Are you cold, my darling?" for Fern shivered a little.

"We have let the fire get rather low," returned Fern, jumping up to replenish it; but somehow her voice was not quite under her control and her hand was a little unsteady. "Oh, yes, her mother and Crystal were right; these foolish dreams of hers could never come true; she would have to see her prince ride away some day in quest of some dark-haired princess. And yet, in the fairy stories, the real princess was often poor and wore a shabby dress and had golden hair and—" but here Fern banished these thoughts resolutely and came back to her footstool a little pale and drooping.

Mrs. Trafford's keen eyes noted everything, but she wisely forebore to continue the subject. Fern was so docile and humble, she thought so little of herself, that her mother hoped that her words would take effect. She had already given her son a hint that his friend's visits were rather too frequent; she must speak to him seriously on the subject and appeal to his love for his sister.

She changed the subject now by asking Fern what was the matter with Crystal.

"Percy has been speaking to her again, mother. He went to meet her when she was coming back from the Nortons', and Crystal is very, very angry with him."

Mrs. Trafford's face darkened—she looked exceedingly displeased. Was this how Percy protected his sister? leaving her alone with Erle Huntingdon while he carried out his own selfish purposes. This was worse than she had imagined; but Fern misunderstood the reason of her mother's vexation.

"It is very wrong of Percy to worry Crystal in this way, but, poor boy, I do believe he is honestly in love with her. I do wish she could care for him, it would make him so different."

"Crystal will never care for any one, at least"—checking herself as though she had stated a fact erroneously—"she will never care for Percy. I have told him so, and begged him not to persecute her with his attentions, as, if he persisted, she had made up her mind to seek another home. Percy was dreadfully angry when I told him this, and refused to believe me; and then he turned round on me and accused me of want of prudence in taking a stranger under our roof, and asked me how I knew that she was a fit companion for his sister?"

"As though Crystal were not the dearest and best girl in the world," returned Fern indignantly. "Never mind, mother, he only wanted to make you uncomfortable. He is too fond of Crystal to doubt her for a moment. I hope you told him that you were acquainted with her whole history."

"Yes, and I informed him at the same time that you were ignorant of it, though Crystal meant to tell you herself one day. I told him that, to put his mind at rest, I could satisfy him that Crystal came of good parentage; that she had influential friends and protectors if she chose to appeal to them; that though she was apparently a lonely waif, she had in reality good friends and a most comfortable home."

"'Then, I suppose, she has alienated them by that confounded temper of hers,'" he said with a sneer, "but I could see he was surprised and not altogether pleased, but I wished him to knew that she was not without protectors if he drove her from our roof."

"Percy is very selfish," sighed Fern. "Crystal was getting a little happier; she was beginning to look less miserable and to take more interest in things, but this evening she has the old restless look."

"That is because she will not take my advice," returned her mother quickly. "Crystal is a dear girl and I am very fond of her, but I think most of her troubles come from her own undisciplined nature; she is the object of the tenderest love, the most divine forgiveness; there are kind hearts waiting for her if she would only generously respond to them. She has told me her story under the seal of secrecy, as you know well, or she would long ago have been in her right place. My heart bleeds for the friends who love her so, and are seeking her so vainly. No"—rising, as to close the subject—"I am very sorry for Crystal, but I do not pity her as you do. I have known what it is to sin, but I have never been too proud to acknowledge my error. Crystal acknowledges hers with bitter tears and most true penitence, but she will not be forgiven. 'Let me expiate my sin a little longer,' that is all she says."

"Yes, I know," whispered Fern, "she is always telling me that she does not deserve to be happy. Is that true, mother?"

"My child, do any of us deserve it? Happiness is a free gift, like the sunshine that rises alike 'on the evil and the good.' Do you remember your father's dying words?—'I believe in the forgiveness of sins'—ah, it is all forgiven up there. In Heaven one has a Father," and with trembling lips Nea turned away. Her punishment had been great, she told herself; she had deserted her earthly father, and now her son had deserted her. "One sows the wind to reap the whirlwind," she thought, as she mused bitterly over her boy's weakness.

(To be continued.)

How They Direct Strangers in the Country.

Don't know; ask next man.

Third stone house after you cross two roads.

Second house after you pass the cabin with a big black dog.

When you come to a barnyard with a lame duck, halloo to the house. That farmer knows everybody.

It's the second house beyond the one that has a red barn with a big door chalked up. That's Bob Smith's account of his chicken crop.

Take the fork of the road in your left hand; then go on till you come to the big elm. When you get there, if anybody comes along ask them.

It's just three miles and an eighth. There are seven houses on the left and six on the right. That makes it the fourteenth. Go straight ahead.

It is about two looks from here. Go to the top of that hill and take a look. Then go as far as you saw; take another look. When you get there you'll see it.

Turn around the little church to the right. Keep the ridge on your left. Go half a mile, three-quarters, perhaps a mile. If you know the man you're after you'll find him along there.

Take your second right hand road; cross two left hand roads and take your third. Don't go up the first right hand, but take the second. There's a well sweep in the front yard and a wheel pump in the barnyard.

After you pass a barnyard with a red waggon and a white mare with a spavin on her left hind leg you'll see a stone house of one story with roof sunk in. That ain't the house, but if the dog don't bite you you can find out there.

South American Horse Cars.

The longest street car line in the world is in Argentine Republic, South America, and it will also be the only line in the world to run sleeping cars for the accommodation of its patrons. The road has 200 miles of track, connecting a number of towns in the vicinity of Buenos Ayres, and its equipment has been supplied by a Philadelphia car company. Horses are used as motive power instead of steam, because fuel is dear, horses cheap, and the people are slow. Two tons of coal will buy a horse and harness. The sleeping cars are a curiosity. They are four in number, eighteen feet in length, and are furnished with four berths each, which are made to roll up when not in use. The cars are furnished with lavatories, water-coolers, linen presses and other conveniences, and are finished throughout with mahogany. The other cars are four double-decked open cars, twenty platform cars, twenty gondola cars, six refrigerator cars, four poultry cars, furnished with coops, eight cattle cars, two derrick cars for lifting heavy material, and 200 box cars. They are ready for shipment and will be sent to their destination in a few days.—American Manufacturer.

Woman's Unselfishness.

Harry (preparing for the country)—"There ought to be room in one of the trunks for my things. I got you six."

Considerate Wife—"You forget, dear, that my six dresses take a trunk each. But I did not forget you. Here is a nice little satchel you can have all to yourself."—The Judge.

It would be quite in keeping with Stanley's romantic career, if, instead of being dead, he would turn up as a discoverer of Gordon.

Keep Out of the Past.

Keep out of the past! for its highways
  Are damp with malarial gloom.
Its gardens are sere, and its forests are drear,
  And everywhere moulders a tomb.
Who seeks to regain its lost pleasures
  Finds only a rose turned to dust,
And its storehouse of wonderful treasures
  Is covered and coated with dust.

Keep out of the past! It is haunted.
  He who in its avenues gropes
Shall find there the ghost of a joy prized the most,
  And a skeleton throng of dead hopes.
In place of its beautiful rivers
  Lie pools that are stagnant with slime,
And those graves gleaming light in the phosphorous light
  Cover dreams that were slain in their prime.

Keep out of the past! It is lonely
  And barren and bleak to the view.
Its fires have grown cold and its stories are old.
  Turn, turn to the present, the new!
To-day leads you up to the hill tops,
  That are kissed by the radiant sun,
To-day shows no tomb—all life's hopes in bloom—
  And to-day holds a prize to be won.

Up in the Loft.

Out in the barn the children hie,
When the sun is hot in the summer sky!
Out in the barn where the livelong day
The breezes rustle the fragrant hay.
Oh, the balm of the perfumed air!
Oh, the breath of the flowers fair
Which bud and bloom in the meadows wide,
With daisies and buttercups side by side!

"Up to the loft," cries Jack, "we'll go,
For the breeze is cooler up there, you know."
And golden-hair Elsie follows him fast,
Till the top of the ladder is reached at last,
And over their heads, in the rafters strong,
The doves are cooing their sweet love song,
While in and out at the wide barn door
The swallows are teaching their young to soar.

Oh, dear old barn on grandpa's farm,
May winds nor storms ever do you harm;
For grandpa in the "long ago"
Over your rafters climbed, we know;
And grandma, quaint little maiden she,
His chosen playfellow used to be,
And with book and dolly 'midst the hay
Up in the hayloft loved to play.

Fate's Cruelty.

I see two eyes behind her lashes' haze
That hold an amber light within their gloom.
A low, curl-shadowed brow, red lips, whose bloom
  Is like some tropic flower's crimson blaze;
And underneath, the sweetest little chin
That ever dimple found a refuge in.

With interest keen I mark her every grace,
Because my husband loved her long ago,
Before I came, and saw (fate willed it so),
  And won what might have been her honored place.
The memory of it all has power to roll
A flood of bitter waters o'er my soul.

And yet it is not that I doubt his love,
Nor envy her that beauty past compare,
That makes this burning sting of sharp despair,
  Whose pain but women's hearts have knowledge of—
It is because harsh fate did not defer
Our meeting until he had married her!

—Eva Wilder McMasson in Tid-Bits.

Why They Don't Propose.

The popular refrain just now is: "Why don't the men propose?" It is sung in every city in the Union with most pathetic intonation. It is a fact, however, that the dearth of marriages can be counted against woman as well as man. A love of independence has done more to injure the marriage market than lack of gold on either side. What man wants to tie himself to a girl who frankly says she will take care of herself, and hesitates not to do so, whether it be agreeable or otherwise to him? And what girl hungers to mate with a man who gorges himself on cigarettes and runs with the boys night after night? Such unions increase responsibilities, and persons fitted to care for only themselves are not equal to the burden. It is, perhaps, as we that comparatively few venture into the nuptial net while the odds for happiness and contentment are so much against them.—San Francisco Report.

Fooling the Toads.

Some sharp observer has discovered that the electric lights on the more retired streets are demoralizing to the toads. It is asserted that these useful batrachians, attracted by the brilliant light when the streets are quiet, gather by dozens under it and hold high revels. The greatly enlarged shadows of countless insects fluttering around the light fall upon the ground, and the innocent toads, thinking them to be real, hop about in all directions to catch them, making it seem as though they were going through a merry cotillion.

His Dive Broke His Neck.

Four men were drowned while bathing in this city yesterday. The most remarkable case was that of George Gubins, a young man living at One Hundred and Ninety-sixth street and Kingsbridge road. Late in the forenoon he went with some friends to take a dip in the Harlem near the long, low footbridge at Two Hundred and Eighth street. The tide was well out. Gubins dived from the bridge and struck his head so violently that his neck was broken. He died instantly. In the still, shallow water the body was recovered without difficulty. It was carried to the Kingsbridge Police Station.—N. Y. World.

The Latest Coiffure.

Mrs. Young Wife—There, Charlie, how does my hair look?

Well, I must confess, my dear, that it doesn't look as if you had touched it with a brush for a week.

Isn't that lovely! I guess I'm all ready for church then, Charlie!

A Meteorological Investigation.

This is about the size of Humidity these days:

O

And this is about the size of Humanity:

o

We often read that a man has left a fortune to his wife "during life or widowhood." This, however, is a game at which the other sex can now play, and a wealthy lady who recently died at New York has set an example to others who are similarly circumstanced by bequeathing her possessions to trustees for the use of her husband "so long as he shall remain unmarried."

Young folks tell what they do, old ones what they have done and fools what they will do. It may be a reflection on the civilization of the last quarter of the nineteenth century, but those who tell what they "will do" are in a large majority.

A leading tailor makes all his trousers without pockets. His customers have no use for them after paying for the clothes.

SUMMER BEVERAGES.

A Few Simple Recipes for Wholesome and Thirst-Quenching Drinks.

The feverish thirst of summer days is almost unquenchable when the liquid we take to relieve it is unaccompanied by nourishment, for example a cup of tea and very little bread and butter or cracker will do more to allay thirst than three or four cups without.

For this reason the egg lemonade that has been such an attraction at the soda fountain this summer is one of the best beverages ever introduced, as well as the most delicious. Many declare that it is not so good when home-made, and they are generally right. This is the reason: The powerful pressure brought to bear on the lemon while in the squeezing machine forces out the oil from the peel as well as the juice, and this is not done with the ordinary hand squeezer. The juice of lemon has little fragrance; it is the oil that imparts the delicious flavor to it. Make the drink in the following way and it will be quite equal to that made by professionals:

EGG LEMONADE.

Break an egg into a tumbler, rub two lumps of sugar on the rind of a fine lemon, put the sugar into the tumbler, squeeze the lemon into it with a squeezer and half fill the tumbler with ice broken small; fill up with water and with a shaker shake the whole vigorously a few seconds; then grate a little nutmeg over the top. If you have no shaker beat the egg with a fork.

Simple lemonade is greatly improved by rubbing the peel with sugar. When made for patients recovering from fever a far more grateful drink than strong lemonade is made by using one lemon to a quart of water, with one lump of sugar rubbed on the peel; sweeten very little. This, given in teaspoonfuls when the mouth and tongue are parched, is inexpressibly refreshing.

COLD WATER TEA OR RUSSIAN TEA.

Russian summer tea is usually made by steeping tea in boiling water in the usual way and setting it in ice. This gives the astringency that is pleasant when hot, with cream, but to many tastes very unpleasant when cold. The better way to make it is in hot weather, and so made, iced tea is a positive luxury. Four hours before you require the tea for use (or over night if you choose) put four teaspoonfuls of tea into a pitcher, pour on it a quart of cold water, cover and set it in the ice box. It does not sound as if good tea could be made with cold water, but this is the perfection of cold tea, fragrant without the least bitterness, and of a beautiful amber clearness. Sweeten as any other tea. With a little lemon juice and a slice of lemon floating in each glass this makes the fashionable "Russian tea."

EFFERVESCENT SODA-WATER AT HOME.

One may long for a glass of soda or be delighted to offer it to our heated and weary friends, but it is quite too much to go to the druggist for it with the sun high and the thermometer in the nineties; more impossible yet to regale our visitors. And yet nothing is more possible or less expensive than to have the thing always at hand. In Paris, where siphons were first introduced, iced "siphon water" was the thing to have in the house. I often wonder that so little use is made of them in this soda-water-loving country, except under a doctor's direction. Half a dozen siphons of plain soda cost 90 cents, perhaps less in large cities, and if you are known to your druggist you will not be charged for the loan of the siphons. Keep them on ice and you have your soda-water ready. Make and keep bottled a few simple syrups. Vanilla syrup, coffee syrup, ginger syrup—and you can have flavored soda at a moment's notice. In fruit season half fill the glass with fresh fruit syrup and sugar, fill up from the siphon, and you have a drink for the gods.

SODA MILK.

This is an excellent and nourishing drink in hot weather, and will remain on the most delicate stomach when anything but koumiss would be rejected, and is simply soda from the siphon and milk.

CLARET CUP WITH SODA WATER.

This is excellently made from California wine. Pour a bottle of claret into a pitcher, add a sliced orange, leaving out the first and last slice, and a strip of cucumber peel as long as your finger; sweeten with syrup; add, if liked, a wineglass of Santa Cruze rum; set this in crushed ice and just before drinking strain and add the contents of a siphon of soda water; stir and serve at once.

Of all cups except champagne perhaps cider is the best. Pour a quart of cider into a pitcher, slice an orange into it or three slices of lemon; syrup or not according as the cider is sweet or sour, add a glass of sherry and one of brandy with a pint of crushed strawberries if in season, otherwise a cup of chopped pineapple and a few drops of almond flavoring. If champagne cider is used let it be iced before used. Let all stand till chilled. Then strain and add a siphon of soda.

The soda water must always be used the last thing, and when there is time to have the "cup" cold enough without do not add ice to it, as if it stands it gets poor. Sweeten all cups with syrup made thus:

Pour boiling water, a pint, on a pound of white sugar. When dissolved bottle for use. The use of syrup prevents the last of the cup being too sweet.—Philadelphia Press.

Would Send to the Baker's.

"My dear," said a fond father to his fashionable daughter, who is soon to be married, "if George should at some future time meet with reverses, and his fortune should be swept away, which occasionally occurs to silver mine speculators, could you meet the emergency? Could you, for instance, go into the kitchen and make a loaf of bread?" "What a foolish papa!" replied the dear girl, brightly, "why, I would send to the baker's for it!"

Mr. Alexander Moody Stuart, advocate, has been appointed Professor of Scots Law in the University of Glasgow, in room of Mr. Robert Berry, recently appointed sheriff of Lanarkshire.

A Braemar correspondent states that the President of the Royal Braemar Highland Society has received intimation that the Queen desires the annual gathering and games of the society to be held this year at Balmoral. This will be most heartily complied with.

PRACTICAL JOKES.

How One Taught a Lesson Not to be Forgotten.

The conversation had turned upon the perniciousness of practical joking, says the Arkansaw Traveller, when a well known business man said: "Don't speak of practical joking—don't make the merest reference to anything of the kind—for it makes me shudder. You all know Beasley, the commercial traveller. He is an exceedingly good-natured and prankish fellow, so much given to mild joking that on one occasion, only a few weeks ago, a party of us decided to play a joke on him that he would not be likely to forget. We didn't know exactly how to proceed, and were tangled up in those perplexing intricacies which come of numerous suggestions, when a plan suddenly suggested itself. Beasley, having remained in Chicago several days, decided to go to St. Louis, where his wife and little boy lived, stopping for a day at Bloomington to attend to several customers whom he had at that place. My plans were laid as soon as he made known his intentions, but I pretended that I did not want him to go.

"'I must,' said he, 'I wrote my wife several days ago, telling her to address me at Bloomington, and, besides, I have business there that has to be attended to at once.'

"That night we went to the railway station with him, and when the train had gone we hurried up town and set our plans in working order, which were diabolical, I admit—to have Beasley arrested in Bloomington and brought back on the morning train. How we chuckled when the officer assured us that the arrest should be made, and how we gloated over the fact that we would at last get even with our friend.

"'He won't know what in the world to think of it,' said Sam Mayfield. 'I'd like to see his expression of countenance when the officers nab him, and hear his indignant protests.'

"'He'll howl like a wounded animal,' remarked Joe Slummers.

"'And do considerable squealing, too,' I replied.

"Early the next morning he hurried to the station. Shortly after the train rushed in Mayfield exclaimed: 'They've got him! See, yonder they come.'

"When the officers came up with the prisoner we rushed forward and roared with laughter, explaining that it was all a joke. I should have mentioned before that we had brought along a man authorized to release Beasley. Our friend, even after finding out that it was all a joke, did not smile or in the least seem to be relieved. Indeed, his face was deadly pale, and bore such traces of intense suffering that I was deeply stricken with remorse. He sat down with a despairing drop and covered his face with his hands.

"'Beasley,' said I, approaching him, 'you must forgive us, old fellow. Remember that you have played many a joke on me.'

"'Not such an awful joke as this,' he replied. 'Just as the officers arrested me the following telegram from my wife was handed me.'

"He gave me the telegram, and, with a feeling of horror creeping over me, I turned to the boys and read as follows:

"Our little boy is dead. Hurry home.
MARY."

"No," continued the narrator, "you must never ask me to go into a practical joke."

When His Wife is Away.

A married man may feel a certain degree of loneliness at this season while his wife and family are away from home at the sea shore or mountain resort, but with it comes a feeling of freedom and independence that compensate for the absence of loved ones. These are the days which the married man enjoys, notwithstanding the oppressive heat, and when he informs his wife in his daily letter that he is "doing very well" he means all he says. Yes, he is doing very well. He can now spend his evenings in the haunts of his bachelor days; he can come in at the most unseasonable hours and retire without an animated discussion as to the accuracy of the clock or a Caudle lecture. He can leave his place of business and stand on the corner talking politics as long as he feels disposed; he can run up to the Casino and wait at the door until the last auditor has passed out without fear of after consequences; he can smoke in every room in the house, should he so desire, and he dons his Sunday clothes every morning without exciting the slightest suspicion of being called upon to answer pertinent questions. He may tell the neighbors how much he feels the absence of the family, but he does it for the purpose of having his regrets repeated to madam on her return. It is this that accounts for the great number of men to be seen walking the principal thoroughfares in the evening.

A New German Figure.

A popular figure in the "German" line at summer resorts is known as the "railroad." This requires six railroad tickets for the ladies, six placards for the gentlemen and a whistle for the leader. The gentlemen fasten the placards around their necks, while the tickets are distributed among the ladies. Upon the signal from the leader the orchestra plays a railroad galop and the gentlemen march into the room, imitating a train. At the sound of a whistle the train stops, and the leader calls the name of one of the stations upon the placards, when a lady with the corresponding ticket takes her partner, the rest following, according to their destination.

Claret wine is said to be good if poured into a watermelon. It assimilates with the juice of the fruit very nicely. A connoisseur says that one bottle is, perhaps, a sufficiency, and you gain the two flavors—that of the grape and that of the melon. It is done on the principle of making a salad; you must use just enough of the condiments in the dressing so that you may get a smack of each without any one predominating. Therefore one bottle of claret is enough, it is thought. Many people prefer the watermelon without any addition to its taste. Others favor what they call modern improvements. The real requisites for the full enjoyment of this grand fruit is thirst and a hot day. Let the melon under these conditions be taken from its bed of ice and eaten. It is something fit for the gods.

FOUND UNDER THE SOFA.

Mrs. Carney Was Put There by a Burglar, After Being Chloroformed.

When little Mollie Carney returned to her home in White Plains on Monday afternoon she found the heavy sofa in the parlor overturned, and saw a foot protruding from beneath it. With the aid of the neighbors, who came at Mollie's cries, the sofa was removed, and there lay Mrs. Carney, half conscious. When she had completely regained her senses, Mrs. Carney explained the situation. Between 12 and 1 o'clock, as she was lying on the sofa, a strange man entered, and asked for money to pay his fare to Mount Vernon. He was told that he could not have chosen a poorer house in which to ask for money. Thereupon the stranger "gave a great oath," as Mrs. Carney expresses it, and declared that if the money was in the house he would have it. She turned to the window to call for help, when he pressed his hand against her mouth, and she fell back unconscious on the lounge. His hand was wet, presumably with chloroform. The robber then drew the lounge over her, in such a way as to keep her imprisoned without doing her injury. Apparently he was afraid of the effects of the chloroform, for a dipper was found by Mrs. Carney's side and her head was drenched with water. This happened an hour and a half before the woman was found. The man used his time in ransacking every corner of the cottage, opening all the trunks and drawers, but nothing was taken away. The only description of the robber that Mrs. Carney can give is that he was short, thick set, with smoothly shaven face and dressed fairly well. Her cottage and the adjoining houses are owned by an old lady who lives in one of them and is reputed to be wealthy. The man may have intended to enter this lady's house.—New York Sun.

A Practical Summer Girl.

They sat on the upturned bottom of a broken boat. The silvered path of glory stretched across the restless waters up nearly to their feet. They had fallen into silence. No moment was it then to speak of baseball or of scandal. He was overcome with that tender passion which thrives in moonlight. That glorious moonlight that levels all complexions, and makes the freckled girl as pretty as the rosy-cheeked maiden! The happy moonlight under whose mystic influence lovers take bliss in by the pores. He grew fervent. He clasped her hands. She gave him back a gentle pressure.

"Tell me," he whispered, with the hoarseness of emotion, whispered as if he feared the murmuring surf might catch the question and bear it to some other ears. "Tell me, have you ever loved?"

She trembled. She hesitated for a moment, and he thought he felt her blushes glow into his eyes. She trembled, and in a still, soft whisper, gentle as the summer breeze, answered:

"Not this summer."

Salting Hay.

Salt ought never to be sprinkled on hay, but, instead of that, air-slaked lime. Salt attracts moisture, yellows hay and makes it intrinsically poorer. If cattle are made to go short on salt in winter they will eat execrable stuff simply for the salt that is in it, and the farmer argues that he has "saved his hay." But hay ought to stand on its own merits. If hay is poor from some other cause, weather-beaten, for instance, or if one has a lot of oat leavings, good, but coarse, it is well enough to treat it with brine to tempt stock; but to treat good hay when it is being mowed away with salt is a great mistake. On the other hand, air-slaked lime will absorb moisture and thereby preserve hay without any injury to its quality. A writer has often put on lime so thick that it covered his boots with a heavy coating in the winter when it was pitched out; yet the stock never refused or seemed to dislike it on that account.

How She Explained It.

An American mother travelling in France offered a half-fare ticket for her son, who lacked several months of the full-fare age. The collector looked suspiciously at the child and at her. "Your son, is he under 7, madame?" "He is, monsieur." "Your son is very large for his age, madame." "He is, monsieur.'" "Your son is altogether too large for his age, madame," snapped the man, exasperated by the American's coolness. "Oui, monsieur, that may be," retorted the mother, calmly, "he is not French, you see."—The Argonaut.

Went Napoleon One Better.

While the monarch was retired from business on the Island of St. Helena he was attended by a Dr. Warden, of the English navy. This representative of the healing art on that distant coast was not fond of the Emperor, and it is said that the antipathy was mutual.

"How many sick people have you killed in your time, doctor?" asked Napoleon one day in his blunt fashion.

"Not near as many as you have sent well ones to heaven," was the pat reply.—From a Paris Letter.

"One Man's Meat, Etc."

Scene—Licensed grocer's shop in Easter Ross; enter small urchin holding a bottle: Small Urchin—"I say, mister, gie's tuppence 'orth o' whusky." Shopman—"Tuppence worth o' whiskey, my man? Surely you're not going to drink it yourself, are you?" Small Urchin (disdainfully)—"No so vera likely. I'm ga'an tae pushon Sandy Henry's dowg wi't."

The oldest general of the United States army is William Selby Harney. He was born near Nashville, Tenn., in 1800, and entered the army in 1818. He was brevetted Major-General on March 13th, 1865.

The Earl of Mar and Kellie is dissatisfied with the several decisions in his favor, and has presented another petition to the House of Lords for an investigation into the connection between the Mar estates and the ancient Mar dignity, with the view to "obtain an unprejudiced rehearing in a court of law of his rights to the estates of Mar." He has already been awarded both the estates and the title, and he may hereafter find that it would have been better "to let well alone."

NOTE-RAISING EXTRAORDINARY.

Ten Dollar Notes Increased to $100 by a Woman.

A woman who claimed to be Mrs. Matz, living near Lebanon, Pa., bought $19.50 worth of clothing, and tendered a $100 silver note in payment. Mr. Steelman secured change from George W. Imboden, of the Central House. The latter has now discovered that the note is really a $10 bill raised to $100. Over the large figure "10" a slip with "100" has been pasted, while in the centre and four corners the word "ten" has been erased. The work is cleverly done, but easily detected. Mrs. Matz, who casually intimated that she had just inherited $1,500, has disappeared. She is about 45 years of age. The woman was traced to Pine Grove, where it was found her name was Zimmerman. She had passed a similar bill there, and it found its way into the hands of Agent Felty, of the Reading railroad. He deposited it in the Pine Grove bank, and upon the discovery that it was a doctored bill, he made good the amount with $100 in gold. Mrs. Zimmerman heard the officers were after her and fled.—Chicago Times.

Musical and Dramatic.

Aimee has been so unsuccessful the past two seasons that she will find profit in the variety stage.

The coming Jenny Lind is said by a London correspondent to be Mlle. Sigrid Arnoldson, of Sweden. Her soprano voice is said to be perfect, and she is as handsome as was Nilsson twenty years ago.

It is stated authoritatively that all creditors of the National Opera Company will be paid dollar for dollar, and that the company will take the road again next year. Several contracts have been closed with singers of note.

The most elaborate moon ever constructed is being contrived for a farcical melange soon to be brought out at a New York theatre. One of the topics travestied in the piece is mesmerism, in its new form of hypnotism, and in the course of the experiments the full, luminous moon becomes abnormal to the eyes of the characters and the audience. Suddenly it is a huge eye, which winks with solemn humor; then it discloses the man who is supposed to inhabit it, but who turns out to be one of the personages of the play, and after he has stepped out to sing a song, the typical witch is seen to emerge astride a broom, and she, too, is a woman of the farce.

Late despatches from London leave little doubt as to the very strong likelihood of Mme. Christine Nilsson undertaking an American tour next fall. The Swedish prima donna has long been desirous of revisiting the United States, and her return has for years only been a question of terms. When Mme. Nilsson first came hither the Messrs. Strakosch paid her $1,000 a night. When she sang in opera at the Metropolitan under Mr. Abbey's management she received $2,000, and previous to leaving New York she proclaimed that she would not appear again except at an advance of $500 per night. If she comes in the fall to sing in "operatic concerts" under Mr. Abbey's guidance she will certainly not get less than $2,500 per concert.

Old Country Odds and Ends.

J. Douglas, tailor, Auchinblae (aged 86 years), recently walked to Inchmarlo the one day and came back the next—a distance of forty miles—and felt none the worse.

Lieut. Reginald Warren, the champion at Wimbledon this year, is a little over 30 years of age, and is a solicitor in London. He visited Wimbledon Common to shoot for the first time in 1871.

R. Hutton, who played the bassoon in the band of the Seaforth Highlanders, died suddenly on the 15th ult., from an affection of the throat, said to have arisen from playing that instrument.

Alexander Adams, who is performing the novel feat of walking from Dundee to London on stilts, arrived in York on July 16th. He left Dundee on June 25th, and expected to reach London on the 30th ult. He met with a poor reception during his journey.

No Excuse Necessary.

Young wife—Oh, Mr. Jones, I'm so sorry Tom brought you home to dinner to-day. If he had told me you were coming I'd have had something nice, and I haven't a thing in the house fit to eat."

Mr. Jones—Now please don't say a word about it, my dear madam. You needn't worry yourself a particle. I take most of my meals at home myself.

The Latest in Equestrianism.

The Duchess of Cleveland has set the fashion of riding in the Row with a parasol. Of course this requires a perfectly trained horse. The Empress of Austria never went out hunting without her fan, the only thing that seemed strange to English eyes in a very perfect costume and "get-up."—London World.

Flies Misled.

Flies were very troublesome in the dining-room of a seaside cottage, and a trap was set for them. It did its work well, and the room seemed clear of them. But when dinner was served, they were as numerous as ever. The 3-year-old child explained their appearance by saying:

"Papa, I tot dey was in dere long enuf."—The Epoch.

Not a Patriot.

"Excuse me, stranger," he said, "I see you are unfortunate in having a crippled leg." "Yes, sir; I got that during the war of the rebellion." "Ah, indeed! Were you under McClellan?" "No, sir; I was under a beer waggon in Hoboken."—Puck.

As Smart as the Father.

"Yes," said Bobby's father, as he stroked his little boy's head fondly, "Bobby is keeping a bank for his odd pennies and nickles. And how much have you saved up, Bobby?"

"Twelve cents," he replied, "beside the three dollars and a quarter you owe it."—Boston Budget.

An Old Story.

Father of Fair One—We close up here at 10 o'clock.

Brass-headed Beau—That's a good idea. It keeps fellows out who don't know enough to get inside earlier.—Tid Bits.

THIS PAPER may be found on file at Geo. P. Rowell & Co's Newspaper Advertising Bureau (10 Spruce St.), where advertising contracts may be made for it IN NEW YORK.

THE ADVANCE.

Is published

Every Thursday,

FROM THE OFFICE,

Collingwood Street, - - Flesherton, Ont.

TERMS OF SUBSCRIPTION:

$1 per annum when paid strictly in advance
$1.50 per annum when not so paid.

A. R. FAWCETT,
Editor and Proprietor.

FLESHERTON:
THURSDAY, AUG. 18, 1887.

FLESHERTON'S DRAINAGE.

The proper drainage of villages, as well as of towns and cities, is of primary importance. Every man, who has given sanitary matters even passing consideration, must admit the force of this statement. Poor drainage means an increasing death rate in proportion to the increase in population.

Situated on a succession of emmences, or hills, the necessity for careful drainage in Flesherton does not seem to have impressed itself upon the minds of its citizens as a matter of very great importance: otherwise there would be ten drains to every one actually to be found within the limits of the place. There should be large leading drains along the principal streets, which should form the basis for a network of smaller drains leading from every yard. This would carry off all unhealthy excrescences, thereby lessening the danger arising from the use of impure water—the fruitful source of many dangerous contagious diseases. As it is, we find a few drains scattered here and there throughout the village—leading from somewhere to nowhere in particular! The fact of the matter is just this: most of the people fancy, that because the town is situated upon such a "succession of eminences," a drain here and there is all that is necessary. "It drains itself," they say. So it does—particularly after a big freshet—right into the cellars under many of your residences! Go into some of them after a heavy rain storm and you will find sufficient water to float a good sized boat. "Well, let those people drain their cellars properly—its none of our funeral," is the next selfish remark. Alright—Mr. B. proceeds to run a drain as far as the street in compliance with the polite requests of his neighbors. No more water in Mr. B's cellar, but Mr. A, just across the way, finds that Mr. B's drain is a nuisance. Why? Because the water from Mr. B's drain discharges itself on the road and floods Mr. A's premises and cellar! Don't you see, my friend, there must be drains along the streets—provided by the corporation—in order to carry of the water discharged from these branch or private drains. Otherwise Mr. C., and Mr. D., and Mr. E., and so on ad infinitum, will be getting into hot water with each other and raising the mischief generally.

Another fruitful source of danger is that of neglecting to run good deep drains—connecting with the principal ones—between water closets, stables, &c., and wells of water. When we consider how extremely careless most people are in this particular, the marvel to us is that scores of people are not swept off by diptheria and other contagious diseases—even in a town so noted for its cleanliness as is Flesherton.

"What kind of drains are best?" you ask, Why the covered ones certainly. Dig them several feet in depth, fill in the bottoms carefully with cobble stones, place straw or shavings over them, and then cover over with dirt. Surface drains are an abomination—not to be thought of indeed. The poisonous gases arising from them are absorbed by water—however pure—milk, &c. Such a system of drainage, if adopted, would simply be a leap from "the frying pan into the fire."

Now for a brief chat with our readers anent turnpiking our streets. When a heavy rain storm sweeps over the town, it will be observed that numerous little streams of water find their several ways across the streets, where turnpiking has become a "lost art," and discharge their contents into cellars, &c. Not only does this become a nuisance to the owners of said cellars, &c., but in a very short time deep ruts are worn into the road bed by the action of the aforementioned "little streams of water." Were the roads properly turnpiked, the water would find its way along the side of the same, and not into people's "cellars, &c." But the water must find a proper outlet somewhere and herein another important use for drains is to be found.

We think we have shown that a necessity for a complete and effective system of drainage exists in Flesherton—although the necessity is not so great, perhaps, as it is in many surrounding towns and villages less favorably situated. A great deal more might be said on this all-important subject, but as we do not wish to weary our readers with very long articles, we leave the matter with them for the present, hoping they will act promptly on the suggestions thrown out.

EDITORIAL NOTES.

The presence of that contagious and dangerous disease, diptheria, will serve to emphasize our remarks anent the importance of a thorough system of drainage. There has been altogether too much negligence in the past: let us act differently in the future. These remarks apply with equal force to farmers and townspeople.

Over one hundred people were killed and nearly four hundred people wounded in a terrible railway accident in the States the other day. Two engines were rushing along at terrific speed with a very large train of excursionists, when a burning bridge gave way, precipitating the second engine and a number of the coaches into the gully beneath. Strangely enough, the first engine got safely across and took the rails on the other side of the bridge. The cries of the wounded and dying were described as something awful and heartrending. Added to the horrors of the smash-up, was the imminent danger of catching fire from the burning bridge, to which the cars with their human freight of wounded and dying souls were exposed. This latter danger was happily averted after four hours of hard work. There seems to be something radically wrong in the management of Yankee railways, judging from the many terrible railway accidents happening from time to time over there.

A WONDERFUL ORGAN. The largest organ and one that plays a controlling part of the health of the body is the liver. If torpid or inactive the whole system becomes diseased. Dr. Chase's Liver Cure is made specially for Liver and Kidney diseases, and is guaranteed to cure. Receipe book and medicine $1. Sold by all dealers.

My Father.

My God, my Father, blissful name,
Oh may I call Thee mine,
May I with sweet assurance claim,
A portion so divine.

This only can my fears control,
And bid my sorrows fly,
What harm can ever reach my soul,
Beneath my Father's eye?

Whate'er Thy providence denies,
I calmly would resign,
For Thou art good and just and wise,
O bend my will to Thine.

Whate'er Thy sacred will ordain,
Oh give me strength to bear,
And let me know my Father reigns,
And trust his tender care.

Thy Sovereign ways are all unknown
To my weak erring sight,
Yet let my soul adoring own,
That all thy ways are right.

BE ON YOUR GUARD.—Don't allow a cold in the head to slowly and surely run into Catarrh, when you can be cured for 25c. by using Dr. Chase's Catarrh Cure. A few applications cure insipient catarrh; 1 to 5 boxes cures ordinary catarrh; 2 to 5 boxes is guaranteed to cure chronic catarrh. Try it. Only 25 cents and sure cure. Sold by all dealers.

FOR DYSPEPSIA and Liver Complaint, you have a printed guarantee on every bottle of Shiloh's Vitalizer. It never fails to cure. Sold at Medical Hall.

AYER'S PILLS. Sugar-Coated Cathartic

If the Liver becomes torpid, if the bowels are constipated, or if the stomach fails to perform its functions properly, use Ayer's Pills. They are invaluable.

For some years I was a victim to Liver Complaint, in consequence of which I suffered from General Debility and Indigestion. A few boxes of Ayer's Pills restored me to perfect health.—W. T. Brightney, Henderson, W. Va.

For years I have relied more upon Ayer's Pills than anything else, to my bowels. These Pills are mild in action, and do their work thoroughly. I have used them with good effect, in cases of Rheumatism, Kidney Trouble, and Dyspepsia.—G. F. Miller, Attleborough, Mass.

Regulate

Ayer's Pills cured me of Stomach and Liver troubles, from which I had suffered for years. I consider them the best pills made, and would not be without them.—Morris Gates, Downsville, N. Y.

I was attacked with Bilious Fever, which was followed by Jaundice, and was so dangerously ill that my friends despaired of my recovery. I commenced taking Ayer's Pills, and soon regained my customary strength and vigor.—John C. Pattison, Lowell, Nebraska.

Last spring I suffered greatly from a troublesome humor on my side. In spite of every effort to cure this eruption, it increased until the flesh became entirely raw. I was troubled, at the same time, with Indigestion, and distressing pains in

The Bowels.

By the advice of a friend I began taking Ayer's Pills. In a short time I was free from pain, my food digested properly, the sores on my body commenced healing, and, in less than one month, I was cured.—Samuel D. White, Atlanta, Ga.

I have long used Ayer's Pills, in my family, and believe them to be the best pills made.—S. C. Darden, Darden, Miss.

My wife and little girl were taken with Dysentery a few days ago, and I at once began giving them small doses of Ayer's Pills, thinking I would call a doctor if the disease became any worse. In a short time the bloody discharges stopped, all pain went away, and health was restored.—Theodore Esling, Richmond, Va.

Ayer's Pills,

Prepared by Dr. J. C. Ayer & Co, Lowell, Mass.
Sold by all Dealers in Medicine.

The CHILDRENS HEALTH.

One of Natures Kindest Gifts is a Healthy Constitution. Guard it against disease by using

Siamese Worm Powders.

Worms are the fruitful cause of many disorders in Children. SIAMESE WORM POWDERS will expel Worms in every case where they exist, will regulate the Stomach and Bowels at the same time. Use them, you won't regret it.

Peck's Pleasant Pills!

Should always be used for Sick Headache. Their operation is mild and pleasant. They strike home each time when used for a Disordered Liver. Ask for them. Get them. Don't forget the name, Peck's Pleasant Pills.

If your druggist has not the above preparation in Stock, W. W. STEPHEN & CO., of Meaford, will send them to you prepaid on receipt of 25c. for either, 5 of each, or assorted for $1.00.

W. W. STEPHEN & CO.

Druggists, Wholesale & Retail,

MEAFORD.

TAMARAC ELIXIR
NATURE'S REMEDY
FOR COUGHS, COLDS, HOARSENESS
THROAT & LUNG COMPLAINTS
INSTANT RELIEF POSITIVE CURE

SOUTHERN ASTHMA CURE
DOUBLE TREATMENT IN EACH PACKAGE
INSTANT RELIEF FOR
ASTHMA AND BRONCHITIS
BY MAIL ON RECEIPT OF PRICE
SAMPLES, 25c.; REGULAR SIZE, $1.00
ADDRESS FULFORD & CO., BROCKVILLE, ONT.

VOTERS' LIST, 1887.

Municipality of the Township of Artemesia, County of Grey.

NOTICE is hereby given that I have transmitted or delivered to the persons mentioned in the third and fourth sections of "THE VOTERS' LIST ACT" the copies required by said sections to be so transmitted or delivered of the list made pursuant to said Act of all persons appearing by the last revised Assessment Roll of the said Municipality to be entitled to vote in the said Municipality at Elections for members of the Legislative Assembly and at Municipal Elections; and that said list was first posted up at my office at Flesherton, on the 6th day of August, 1887, and remains there for inspection.

Electors are called upon to examine the said list and if any omissions or any errors are found therein to have immediate proceedings to have the said errors corrected according to law.

W. J. BELLAMY,
Clerk of the said Municipality.
Dated this 6th day of August, A.D., 1887.

WHAT IS IT?

IT IS A FACT AND NO CONTROVERSY THAT

JOHNSON'S

TONIC BITTERS

and NERVINE is the best remedy in the market for nervous diseases of any sort. Hysteria, Loss of Appetite, Debility from loss of fluids or overwork, Paleness of Complexion so often seen in young females and all complaints arising from poverty of blood.

It is a fact and no gainsaying that JOHNSON'S TONIC LIVER PILLS are the very best in the market for diseases caused by Torpid Liver and derrangement of the Stomach or Kidneys.

It is a fact and no one will deny it that JOHNSON'S ALL HEALING WHITE OINTMENT is the best in the market for Burns, Scalds, Chilblains, Salt Rheum, Barbers Itch, Pimples and all Skin Disorders arising from scrofulous taint

W. S. CHRISTOE has been appointed Agent for the above and has them on sale at his Medical Hall, Flesherton. Try for yourselves and be satisfied.

DUNDALK
PUMP WORKS!
C. R. PHILLIP'S,
Manufacturer of all kinds of PUMPS.
Cylinder Check Valve & Cistern Pumps.

Orders Respectfully Solicited and satisfaction guaranteed.

JAMES SULLIVAN,
Tin-Smith, AGENT,
FLESHERTON.

One High-Bred Durham Bull,
"KING BILLY,"
The Royal Champion,
Will stand for service for the year 1887, at Lot 162, 1st Range, W.T. & S.R., Artemesia, at the small sum of 50c. W. C. PARKER.

NOTICE.
GRAY CHAMPION!
A THOROUGH-BRED DURHAM BULL, with good pedigree, will stand for service at Lot 142 West T. & S.R., Artemesia. TERMS, $1 if paid on or before Jan. 1st, 1888; otherwise, $1.25.
Also thorough-bred BERKSHIRE BOAR at same place. JACOB A. LEVER.

James Sullivan,
The Tinsmith, - Flesherton
Repairing, Eavetroughing, and in fact everything in the business will receive my prompt and careful attention at reasonable prices.

THE MARKETS.

FLESHERTON.

Carefully Corrected Each Week.

Flour	$4 00 to 4 20
Fall Wheat	$0 75 to 0 75
Spring Wheat	0 75	0 75
Barley	0 30	0 45
Oats	0 28	0 28
Peas	0 47	0 48
Butter	0 15	0 15
Eggs, fresh	0 15	0 15
Potatoes bush	0 50	0 50
Pork	5 60	5 60
Hay, per ton	6 00	6 00
Hides	6 00	7 00
Wool	21	23
Sheepskins	0 40	0 50
Geese	0 05	0 05
Turkeys	0 8	0 8
Chickens per pair	0 25	0 30
Ducks per pair	0 40	0 50

AT GORDON'S
HARNESS SHOP
FLESHERTON,
You will find an assortment of
Heavy and Light Harness,
Whips, Brushes, Curry Combs, Sweat Pads, and the celebrated "Harness Oil."
COLLARS A SPECIALTY.
Cheap for Cash. Call and Examine.

R. J. SPROUL,
Flesherton. Conveyancer, Appraiser, Valuator and Money lender. Deeds, Mortgages, leases and Wills drawn up and Valuations made on shortest notice. Charges very low. Apply to R. J. SPROULE, Postmaster, Flesherton.

CLAYTON'S HARNESS SHOP!
FLESHERTON,
Is the place to get your Harness Collars, &c, made up in good style.
Shop in W. Clayton's Boot & Shoe Store, Flesherton.

HARNESS HARNESS.
...If you want Harness, Single or Double, or Horse Blankets, Trunks, Bells, Valises, Curry Combs, Brushes or the celebrated Harness Oil, call & examine before purchasing elsewhere.
R. J. WATSON,
PRICEVILLE.

PHOTOGRAPHY.
MRS. BULMER,
Photographer,
Flesherton - Ont.
Having spent some time in the studio of the famous Toronto Photographer, Mr. S. J. Dixon where I acquired valuable knowledge in Retouching, I feel assured I can give good general satisfaction. A call respectfully solicited,
MRS. BULMER.
Flesherton, Sept. 17th, 1885.

THE CELEBRATED DR CHASE'S MANDRAKE DANDELION LIVER CURE

HAVE YOU
Liver Complaint, Dyspepsia, Indigestion, Biliousness, Jaundice, Headache, Dizziness, Pain in the Back, Costiveness, or any disease arising from a deranged liver, DR. CHASE'S LIVER CURE will be found a sure and certain remedy.
NATURE'S REMEDY
The unqualified success of Dr Chase's Liver Cure in Liver Complaint rests solely with the fact that it is compounded from nature's well-known liver regulators, MANDRAKE AND DANDELION, combined with many other invaluable roots, barks and herbs, having a powerful effect on the Kidneys, Stomach, Bowels and Blood. 500,000 SOLD
Over one-half million of Dr. Chase's Recipe Books were sold in Canada alone. We want every man, woman and child who is troubled with Liver Complaint to try this excellent remedy.
SOMETHING NEW. GIVEN AWAY FREE
Wrapped around every bottle of Dr. Chase's Liver Cure is a valuable Household Medical Guide and Recipe Book (84 pages), containing over 800 useful recipes, pronounced by medical men and druggists as invaluable, and worth ten times the price of the medicine.
TRY CHASE'S CATARRH CURE. A safe and positive remedy. Price, 25 cents.
TRY CHASE'S KIDNEY AND LIVER PILLS. 25 cts. per box.
SOLD BY ALL DEALERS
T. EDMANSON & CO., Sole Agents, Bradford

Flesherton Meat Market.
S. SPIRIT, - - PROPRIETOR.

Cash paid for fat Cattle and Sheep.
Fresh Meats constantly on hand for Cash. Orders promptly filled.

—EUGENIA—
Real Estate Agency

MONEY TO LOAN at lowest rates of interest and on terms of repayment to suit borrower.
FARMS bought and sold.
CONVEYANCES of all kinds properly executed.
COMMISSIONER for taking affidavits in H.C.J., Agent for the Norwich Fire Insurance Society. All business promptly, carefully and confidentially attended to.
Office, Corner of Inkerman and Napoleon Streets.
HENRY MELDRUM,
AGENT.

THE

Medical Hall!

FLESHERTON,

HAS FOR SALE,

COAL OIL,

TWO GRADES AND TWO PRICES, ONE BETTER AND THE OTHER BEST.

—ALSO—

MAYELL'S BAKING POWDER!

It needs only the name for its recommendation. Any quantity sold from one-fourth of a pound to 20 pounds. Try it.

—ALSO—

MIXED SPICES!

—AND—

Spices Unmixed.

—ALSO—

Chocolate and Cocoa,

With the usual assortment of Cakes and Confectionery.

THEN WE HAVE

BUTTER COLOR!

IN BOTTLES AND BULK.

PREPARED PAINTS!

Linseed Oil!

RAW AND BOILED.

Turpentine and the Best White Lead.

MACHINE OIL,

GOOD AND CHEAP.

We keep Artist's PAINTS and BRUSHES.

Fruit Salt!

An elegant effervesing preparation adapted for summer drinks, fevers, and constipation.

WE ARE INTRODUCING

Steam's & Co's

Non Secret Medicines, Cheaper than the ordinary Proprietory Medicines and we know the drugs of which they are made. Look out for them in a week or so.

Books, Stationery and a Druggists General Make-up.

For The Advance.

In a Far Off Land.

The beauty, the grace of a summer's day
In pearly twilight was fading away,
And over the brightness of Egypt's sand
The darkness lay, and the joyous, grand
Triumphant strain on the night-air fell—
'Twas the victors marching the news to tell.

On the blood-red sand of the battle-plain
There were ghastly faces and cries of pain,—
Voices pleading in broken prayer
For the tender touch of the loved ones, there;
Plaintive longings, with hurried gasp,
For the dear home-faces—the mother's clasp.

There on the stained Egyptian sand,
Dying alone in that far-off Land,
A soldier lay; and he raised his head:
"Tell them at home," he faintly said
While the blood oboed swift, "that it all seems right,
For, comrade, I'm going Home to-night."

"I had fondly thought to view once more
My dear old home on my native shore;
To march with the victors, you understand—
To kiss the loved ones—to press each hand...
But tell them I said that it all seems right,
For I go to a better Home to-night."

"Tell her," he whispered, "I kept her token...
Ah, God! must that loving heart be broken?
Comrade, you'll tell her when all is past,
On my dying lips her name was last.
But comrade, say that it all seems right—
Good-bye—I'm—going Home—to-night!"

In that soldier's home in another land
There are swelling hearts; now they understand
How there on that burning, sandy plain
He bravely fought for his country's gain,
And the aged mother bows low her head
As she vainly prays for the dear lost dead.

A brother comforts a sister there,
And weeping falls on the dreamy air.
What is the sunlight—what the grace
Of the summer day? For a dear one's face
Is missed at home by that loving band
Who mourn their dead in a far-off land.

—Edith B. VanDusen.

Flesherton, Aug. '87.

Jip's First Sermon.

Wessy (his real name is Charles Wesley Haynes) has a little dog Jip. He also has a "minister papa."

"Dippy," he often says, "we must be dood, we's min'ster's chil'ren."

One Sunday afternoon mamma said to papa, "Cant you take Wessy to Church with you to-day? I have a headache, and he has been so noisy all the morning that baby couldn't sleep. You can take him up into the pulpit; surely he can't do any mischief there;" for Wessy was very apt to get into mischief.

"All right, old fellow," said papa, "we'll have a fine time together."

Wessy was very glad, and ran off to find Jip.

"Dippy," he said, "we's doin' to church; we's doin' into the preach-place. Will oo be a dood boy?"

"Wow, wow," said Jip.

Now if papa or mamma had only heard this little talk! But they didn't; so Wessy tucked Jip under his overcoat, for Jip was so small he could easily go into papa's coat-pocket. They got into the sleigh and no one but Wessy and Jip knew that he was there. They were a little late in reaching the church, so papa hurried into the pulpit without taking off Wessy's wraps.

Wessy sat very quiet at first, and looked around. Then when papa began to preach, he grew tired. Jip too, was getting quite uneasy, so he unbuttoned his ulster and took the little fellow out. Papa saw that some of the people were smiling more and more. He began to be afraid Wessy was in mischief. Pretty soon he heard a sharp, quick bark. He turned around, and there, on the sofa, sitting up straight, and looking very sorrowful, was Jip. By his side sat Wessy, his hat on the back of his head, and a lead pencil stuck in his mouth for a cigar. He had fastened a string to papa's coat button, and he and Jip were driving to Boston."

Papa laughed, too, if he was in the pulpit, but he stopped the play very quickly. And Wessy told his mamma that night that the preach-place wasn't nice one bit; he never wanted to go there no more, and Dip didn't never."—Baptist Weekly.

A Great Smeller.

"Cotton burnin' 'round heah summers," said a negro employed at a Little Rock cotton shed; "cotton burnin' summers, fur I smell it."

"I don't smell anything," said the manager of the shed.

"I does, sah, I does. I reckon dat I'm er little de bes' smeller in dis heah country. W'y, sah, I ken smell o' de atmus fere an' tell w'en it's gwine ter rain."

"Then you must be an expert."

"Dat's whut I is, sah; dat's zactly whut I is. Yer know dat railroad accident de udder day? Wall, I knowed dat gwine happen."

"How did you know it?"

"Smelt it."

"You are foolish."

"No, sah, I aint. I wuz standin' talkin' ter Jim Taylor, an' all o' er suddent sez I, 'Jim, thar's suthin' gwine ter happen on dat railroad ober yander.' 'How yer know?' sez he. 'I smell it,' sez I. He flung up his head, hil it up er while and den sez, 'I smell er little trouble merse'f, but I kain't zackly make out whut it is.' Wall, sah, 'bout two hours arter dat dem trains run tugeder. Look heah, boss, I tell yer I smells cotton. Look out—whut's de matter heah? Good Lawd!"

Then he began to snatch off his shirt, which was about ready to blaze. He threw the burning garment on the ground, and as he stamped out the fire remarked: "Ain't no man ken beat me smellin,' lemme tell yer. Knowed dar wuz fire in dis heah neighborhood, an' I do belebe in my soul, sah, dat it has dun burnt er blister on my back."

New Bakery.

The undersigned begs to inform the people of Flesherton and neighborhood generally, that he has leased the Flesherton Bakery for a term of years and respectfully solicits their patronage. Bread, Buns, Cakes and any other kind of Baking that may be required by any of my patrons will receive prompt and careful attention. Liberal estimates for large supplies. I intend shortly to add Home made Confectionery warranted pure and manufactured on the premises.

JACOB STEPHEN.

Flesherton, Aug. 17th 1887.

Why he was Polite.

Two men on a street car. A woman enters and one of the men hastily gives her his seat. The other one looks on in astonishment and when the woman gets off says.

"You are growing strangely polite."

"How so?"

"Why you gave that woman your seat just now. I never saw you do anything of the kind before. You must have been struck on her appearance."

"Oh, no. You see, I owe her husband and she knows who I am.

An Unfortunate Coincidence.

Blumenthal—"Did you hear vat pad luck hash happened to Levi Cohen?"

Rosenburg—"I have noddings heard."

Blumenthal—"Levi had choost completed all his arrangements to fail in pishness at terventy cents on ter tollar ven a rich oncle died in Shermany and left him terventy tousand tollars in his vill. Vat you call dot for pad luck, eh?"

"Too pad! too pad! Vy couldn't dot old oncle have vaited a leedle vile?"

No Gooseberries This Season.

"Waiter," said a gentleman in the dining-car, "have you any gooseberry pie?"

"No, sah; hain't carryin' any dis yeah, sah.

"Why is that?"

"Well, you see, sah, dey's scarce dis season. Las' winter was so cole and stormy dat it was mighty tough on de geese."

Young, old, and middle aged, all experience the wonderfully benificial effects of Ayer's Sarsaparilla. Young children suffering from sore eyes, sore ears, scald head, or with any scrofulous taint, become healthy and strong by the use of this medicine. Six bottles, $5.

Under Protection of a Higher Power.

A darkie, being brought before the magistrate, was asked:

"Haven't you been in jail for stealing chickens, once before.

"No, sah; no indeed, I hain't. Praise de Lawd for his infernit mussy, nobody hain't cotched me yit. It seems as if I wuz pertected by de higher powers."

He Blew His Own Horn.

He was 4 years old, and had received his first trumpet He enjoyed it immensely. When he was put to bed his mother asked him to put the trumpet away and say his prayers. "I tell you what let's do, mamma," said the young man. "You pray, and I'll just keep on blowing."

Physicians.—Are usually averse to proprietary medicines. Nasal Balm is a specific for cold in the head and catarrh, and having faith and evidence that it will cure those troubles, we ask and court a fair trial of the discovery, and a full investigation at their hands.

Ruined By Success.

Some one asked a photographer the other day how he was doing.

"Not any too well," was the reply, "you see the trouble is, now that I've become well-known, people say to themselves, 'That fellow must be overrun with work,' and go somewhere else."

SHILOH'S CATARRH REMEDY—a positive cure for Catarrh, Diptheria and Canker Mouth. Sold at Medical Hall.

Farmers Attention.

If you want to save money buy your Meat from Petch & Mitchell. We are now selling Beef from 4c. up. Always a good stock on hand and the best Meat the country can produce. Special reductions for large quantities for thrashing. Eggs or salt pork taken same as cash. PETCH & MITCHELL, butchers, Flesherton. 2t.

By Dissembling.

"My dear old friend, how were you able to acquire such an immense fortune?"

"By a very simple method."

"What method is that?"

"When I was poor I made out I was rich; and when I got rich I made out that I was poor."

Tamarac.—A cold will often cause an irritation, dryness and soreness inside the throat. The first dose of Tamarac Elixir will afford relief.

SCROFULA

Humors,

Erysipelas,

Canker, and

Catarrh,

Can be cured by purifying the blood with

I do not believe that Ayer's Sarsaparilla has an equal as a remedy for Scrofulous Humors. It is pleasant to take, gives strength and vigor to the body, and produces a more permanent, lasting, result than any medicine I ever used.—E. Haines, No. Lindale, O.

I have used Ayer's Sarsaparilla, in my family, for Scrofula, and know, if it is taken faithfully, it will thoroughly eradicate this terrible disease.—W. F. Fowler, M. D., Greenville, Tenn.

For forty years I have suffered with Erysipelas. I have tried all sorts of remedies for my complaint, but found no relief until I commenced using Ayer's Sarsaparilla. After taking ten bottles of this medicine I am completely cured.—Mary C. Amesbury, Rockport, Me.

I have suffered, for years, from Catarrh, which was so severe that it destroyed my appetite and weakened my system. After trying other remedies, and getting no relief, I began to take Ayer's Sarsaparilla, and, in a few months, was cured.—Susan L. Cook, 909 Albany st., Boston Highlands, Mass.

Ayer's Sarsaparilla is superior to any blood purifier that I have ever tried. I have taken it for Scrofula, Canker, and Salt-Rheum, and received much benefit from it. It is good, also, for a weak stomach.—Millie Jane Peirce, South Bradford, Mass.

Ayer's Sarsaparilla,

Prepared by Dr. J. C. Ayer & Co., Lowell, Mass.
Price $1; six bottles, $5.

TIMBER AND LAND SALE.

CERTAIN lots and the timber thereon situate in the Townships of Allan, Assiginack, Bidwell, Billings, Carnarvon, Campbell, Howland, Shequiandah, Tehkummah and Mills on the Manitoulin Island, in the District of Algoma, in the Province of Ontario, wil be offered for Sale at Public Auction in blocks of 200 acres, more or less, on the first day of September next, at 10 o'clock, A.M. at the Indian Land Office in the Village of Manitowaning.

Terms of Sale:—Bonus for timber payable in cash, price of land payable in cash, a license fee also payable in cash and dues to be paid accordingly to Tarriff upon the timber when cut.

The land on which the timber grows to be sold with the timber without conditions of settlement.

At the same time and place the Merchantable Timber of not less than nine inches in diameter at the butt, on the Spanish River Reserve and French River lower Reserve will be offered for sale for a cash bonus and annual ground rent of $1.00 per square mile, and dues to be paid on the timber as cut, according to Tariff of this Department.

For full particulars please apply to Jas. C. Phipps, Esq., Indian Supt. Manitowaning, or to the undersigned.

No other paper to insert this advertisement without authority through the Queen's Printer

L. VANKOUGHNET,
Deputy of the Supt. Gen'l. of Indian Affairs.

Department of Indian Affairs,
Ottawa, 2nd June, 1887.

Agents, Agents!

Now Ready—New—Our New Book.

EARTH, SEA AND SKY

—OR—

Marvels of the Universe

Being a full and graphic description of all that is wonderful in every Continent of the Globe, in the world of waters and the starry Heavens. Containing thrilling adventures on land and sea, renowned discoveries of the world's greatest explorers in all ages, and remarkable phenomena in every realm of nature. Embracing the striking physical features of the earth the peculiar characteristics of the human race, of animals, birds, insects, etc., including a vivid description of the Atlantic, Pacific and Indian Oceans and of the Polar Seas, the monsters of the deep, beautiful seashells and plants, singular fishes and dwellers in the world of waters, remarkable ocean currents, etc., together with the amazing phenomena of the solar and starry systems, by Henry Davenport Northrop, D.D., embellished with over 300 fine engravings. Liberal terms to agents. Oxford Publishing Company, 5 Jordan St., Toronto, Ont. 316-368

Medical.

DR. CARTER,
M.C.P. & S., Ont.
PHYSICIAN, SURGEON, &c.
FLESHERTON.
Office, Strain's block. Residence, Wm. Wright's

Dentistry.

DENTISTRY.

Thomas Henderson, L.D.S.

SURGEON DENTIST,

Gold Medalist and Honor Graduate of the R.C.D.S.,

Will visit FLESHERTON, (Munshaw's Hotel) 1 and 2 of each month. Teeth extracted, inserted and filled in the highest styles of the art, and at moderate rates.

Head Office, 761 Yonge St., Toronto.

Legal.

J. W. FROST, LL.B.,
Barrister, Solicitor, Conveyancer.
Office,—Strain's Building, Flesherton.
A. A. CHESLEY, Solicitor and Conveyancer, Resident Manager.
MR. FROST will be found at the Office on Thursdays as heretofore.

P. McCULLOUGH,
Barrister, Solicitor, &c.
Office, over McFarland's Store, Markdale. Money to Loan.

MASSON & MASSON,
Barristers, Solicitors, &c.
Offices—Owen Sound, in Vicker's block, Poulett St.; Branch office in Markdale, over McFarland's store, on Friday and Saturday every week.
J. Masson, Q.C. S. Masson. W. Masson.
N.B.—Private & Company's funds to invest at from Six to Eight per cent.

Business Cards.

John W. Armstrong,
Flesherton, Co. Grey.
Division Court Clerk, Commissioner in B. R., Conveyancer, &c. Agent for purchase and sale of lands. Appraiser for C. L. C. Com. and F. P. B. & S. Society. Money to Loan on the most reasonable terms. Issuer of Marriage Licenses. Notary Public.

MONEY TO LOAN.
At 6 Per Cent.
On Town or Farm Property.
S. DAMUDE,
Flesherton.

W. J. BELLAMY.
Twp. Clerk Artemesia.
CONVEYANCER, COMMISSIONER, INSURANCE AGT, &C
Deeds, Mortgages, Leases, &c., prepared and properly executed. Insurance effected in first-class companies. Money to lend at lowest rates.

GET YOUR MEAT

—FROM—

Petch & Mitchell,

GENERAL BUTCHERS,

FLESHERTON!

Cash paid for fat cattle, &c., &c.

NEW LIVERY!

THE undersigned begs to announce that he has started a first-class Livery in the stand opposite Munshaw's Hotel, Flesherton, where the travelling public can be accommodated with good rigs and horses at most reasonable prices Try me and be convinced.

Respectfully yours,
W. H. JOHNSTON.

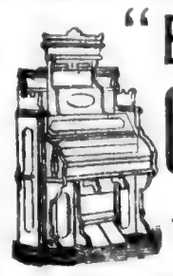
Flesherton, Nov. 10th, 1886.

Picture Framing,

Neatly, Cheaply & Quickly Done, by

J. E. MOORE,

Durham St., Opposite Clayton's Harness Shop



"BELL" ORGANS

Unapproached for Tone and Quality.

CATALOGUES FREE.

BELL & CO., Guelph, Ont.

THE AVENGER MOONEY.

Particulars of the Attempt to Blow Up the National Steamer.

A New York despatch says: An Irishman, whose name the police at first would not disclose, tried to blow up the British steamer Queen, of the National Line, yesterday afternoon. He rowed up in a small boat alongside the Queen and threw a bottle containing some kind of explosive on board. An explosion followed which set fire to the steamer. The flames, however, were soon extinguished. The police went in pursuit of the fellow in a rowboat. He had put out for the Jersey shore, but they captured him and brought him to police headquarters. The broken bottle was also brought to police headquarters. It contained kerosene, naphtha and rags soaked in chemicals. The prisoner took it coolly. "I was thwarted in this," he said, "but there are plenty of others at work who will avenge the insult to American vessels and burn every vessel carrying the British flag." The prisoner gave the name of Conrad J. Mooney, and said he lived at No. 267 Warren street, Brooklyn. He was remanded until this morning. Mooney told the police that he formed one of a gang of men who had determined to burn every vessel entering port carrying the British flag. The seizure of American vessels in Canada and the usurpation of all commerce by the English had induced him to join the band. A long double-edged knife was found in the man's pocket. The steamer was only slightly damaged.

A New York despatch says: Thomas J. Mooney, who threw a bottle containing explosives on the deck of the steamship Queen yesterday afternoon, was arraigned in the Jefferson Market Police Court. In his trunk were found two pieces of gaspipe, packages of powder, sulphur, phosphorus, crystals of chloride of potassium, several glass tubes and some blasting caps for Atlas powder, besides clothes and note books. Several yards of fuse and a box of draughtsmen's instruments completed the list. The pipes were of heavy brass, of unequal lengths, and at about one-third of the distance from one end of each was a cock, which the police did not attempt to turn to-day. The shank of the cock was made of soft metal that could be eaten away by acid and placed in a small chamber and thus explode the contents of the larger. Capt. Gastien, who made the examination, remarked: "Mooney was ready to blow up a fleet." He was remanded until this afternoon. Mooney's room underwent a careful examination and an examination was also made of the bath-room in which Mooney's landlady said he spent much of his time. The paint and tin were eaten by chemicals and the place had undoubtedly been used as a laboratory. The landlady told the officers that her tenant engaged the room last Christmas. He always paid his rent promptly. He said he was a collector for the Irish World. Mooney was brought into court again at 2.30 p.m. Twenty feet of water proof fuse taken from Mooney's trunk, was laid upon the desk in the court, together with many glass tubes. The detectives said these were part of Mooney's infernal machanism. Then Mooney said he was an inventor, that these were part of his experimental materials, that he is now engaged on a torpedo boat and that he had received letters from the Secretary of the Navy about the torpedo boat. He had, he said, also been in communication with the Secretary of the French navy. He had not yet secured a patent and did not want his business exposed. There were also produced in court a package of acid, a box of 100 triple-force 25 calibre blasting caps, a package of sugar and a package of chlorate of potash and a brass faucet machine for filling bombs with acid. "For every blow the English give the American flag I will give another as long as I live," said Mooney. He was locked up to await examination as to his sanity.

STATE-AIDED COLONIZATION.

Proposals Now Before the British Government.

A London cablegram says: The subcommittee appointed by the Committee on State-aided Colonization formed among the members of the House of Commons will present its report to the full committee to-morrow. It is understood that the scheme which they recommend is a combination of the various proposals recently urged by the advocates of assisted emigration. It is proposed to form a Colonization Board, composed of British and Colonial members, who will have charge of the funds; that capital be raised by public subscription, with interest at 3 per cent. guaranteed by the Imperial Government for 30 years; that colonists receiving advances pay 4 per cent. after the first year, the advance being secured by the free grant land given by the colony, the re-payment being extended over 30 years. Even if adopted by the general committee, this scheme is not likely to be accepted by the Imperial Government. In Colonial circles it is considered that 30 years is too long a term, and that provision ought to be made for a Colonial veto on the selection of the colonists to be aided. Lord Lothian has suggested that the Government advance £300,000 to assist Crofters desirous of settling in Canada, the Northwest Land Companies guaranteeing repayment, and undertaking the settlement of the colonists in Canada, with the aid of the Canadian Government.

Psychological Phenomena Explained.

"Have you never felt that vague yet wonderful feeling, Mr. Grimshaw," said the Boston girl ecstatically, "that you are passing through some thrilling experience that you have gone through before, long, long ago, with precisely similar surroundings and environments, and that you anticipate every stage of it before it comes to pass?" "Dozens of times," replied the Milwaukee young man; "there is nothing in this world that will give a fellow such a high old nightmare as a supper of pig's feet and cider."—Chicago Tribune.

The fact is noted that in climates having a difference of 70° in temperature between the hot and cold seasons a railroad track of the length of 400 miles is some 338 yards longer in summer than in winter, that is, though, of course, the length of road remains the same, expansion forces the metal closer together, making an aggregate closing up of space between the rails of nearly a yard in each mile.

ANOTHER NOTORIOUS FLIGHT.

The Ex-Premier of the Sandwich Islands Flies from Justice.

NEW CONSTITUTION FOR THE ISLAND.

A Port Townsend, W.T., cable says: Advices by the barque Colusa, from Honolulu, July 13th, say ex-Premier Gibson escaped on July 13th on the barque John G. Spreckels. On that day he was acquitted of having defrauded the Government. The barque Spreckels was lying near the wharf with everything ready to set sail. A carriage, which was waiting at the rear door of the court-room, conveyed Gibson without a moment's delay to the vessel, which cast off lines and headed for San Francisco. It required less than twenty minutes for Gibson to leave the court-room and get on board the Spreckels. Hazeltine, Gibson's son-in-law, is still in jail awaiting trial for being an accessory to Gibson. Business has been resumed. Capitalists who were holding back are investing money and a general feeling prevails that Hawaii has a stable Government, under which just laws will be enacted. King Kalakaua signed the constitution on July 10th. This deprived him of all power but that of drawing his salaries and granting pardons.

San Francisco, Aug. 6.—William M. Gibson, the deposed Prime Minister of the Hawaiian Kingdom, who was tried and acquitted of the charge of robbing the public treasury, and who escaped from the island after his acquittal, arrived here to-day on board the brig J. G. Spreckels. The Spreckels brought detailed information with regard so the new constitution which King Kalakaua was compelled to sign.

Among the chief clauses of the new constitution are the following: All men may freely speak, write and publish their sentiments on all subjects, being responsible for abuse of that right, and no law shall be enacted to restrain the liberty of open speech or of the press. No subsidy or tax of any description shall be levied unless by consent of the Legislature, except when between sessions, the emergencies of war, invasion, rebellion, pestilence, or other public disaster shall arise, and then not without the concurrence of the entire Cabinet and of a majority of the whole Privy Council; and the Minister of Finance shall render a declared account of such expenditure to the Legislature. The King is commander-in-chief of the army and navy, and of all other military forces of the kingdom by sea and land, but he shall never proclaim war without the consent of the Legislature, and no military nor naval force shall be organized except by the authority of the Legislature. The King cannot be sued nor held to account in any court or tribunal of the kingdom. The Cabinet shall consist of a Minister of Foreign Affairs, a Minister of Finance, and an Attorney-General, and they shall be His Majesty's special advisers in the executive affairs of the kingdom, and they shall be ex-officio members of his council that shall be appointed and combined by the King and shall be removed by him upon a vote of want of confidence passed by a majority of all the elective members of the Legislature, or upon conviction of felony, and no removal shall have effect unless it is countersigned by a member of the Cabinet, who, by that signature, makes himself responsible. The legislative power of the kingdom is vested in the King and Legislature which shall consist of nobles and representatives sitting together. The remainder of the Constitution, which contains 82 sections, provides for the organization of the Legislative Assembly.

Gibson said to a representative of the Associated Press this morning concerning the affairs at Hawaii: "The new constitution has many admirable features about it, still it is what might be termed a shotgun or rifle constitution. The King only proclaimed it through fear of his life. Whether it will last or not I cannot, of course, tell. Those people," said Mr. Gibson, "undoubtedly meant to take my life, but the new Cabinet evidently thought that it would be a dangerous expedient, as they knew how long I was with the native party, and my death by violence might have occasioned very serious trouble." In further conversation Mr. Gibson said the United States Government had designs in the Pacific which would probably be revealed shortly. He said this Government would not like the course affairs had taken od the island. He would not give an explanation beyond this remark.

BISMARCK ON THE WATCH.

Germany Ready to Interfere as Soon as Holland's King Expires.

A London cablegram says: It is feared that serious troubles will result in connection with the succession of William III., King of Holland, who is now old and very seriously ill. He recently visited Carlsbad for treatment, but derived no benefit whatever therefrom. He is now 71 years of age and cannot live much longer. He is the last of the male descendants of the House of Orange. After his death, if there is no outside interferences, Holland will be governed by a Council of Regents. It is, however, asserted that Prince Bismarck will interfere and will put forward the hereditary Duke of Nassau, who is the heir presumptive to the Grand Duchy of Luxenburg, now held by the King of Holland, chief of the Orange Nassau family. The old Duke of Nassau, his father, is one of the German Princes deposed by Prussia in 1866, and was one of the first of these petty sovereigns who afterwards became reconciled to their conqueror. The young Duke married last year a Princess of Baden, who is a granddaughter of Emperor William. The German authorities have for some time past been building forts along the Dutch frontier. There are now 50,000 German soldiers so disposed that they can be moved into Holland at a few days' notice.

The other day a lovely young woman of decidedly Puritanic associations received a visit from an Italian professor, who came to pay his respects before departing for Europe. As she rose to greet him he grasped her hand and exclaimed in anguished accents: "Oh! madame, es it not so hot as hell damn? Es yat not what you say, madame in Amerique?"—Boston Herald.

—At the seashore they call it hum-idity, and attribute it to the mosquitoes.

FORGER BIDWELL'S STORY.

His Statement in the New York Police Court Secures Him His Liberty.

A New York despatch says: George Bidwell, the noted forger, was arrested yesterday by order of Inspector Byrnes as he landed from a European steamer. Bidwell was recently pardoned by the British Government on account of ill-health. When the accused reached the Central Office he had to be carried into the inspector's office. Bidwell's sister and a female friend accompanied him to police headquarters. Later Bidwell was taken before Justice Duffy, at the Jefferson Market Police Court, and there being no affidavit or complaint against him, was arraigned as a "suspicious character." In giving an account of himself, in response to the charge, he told the justice that he was now a reformed man. He had changed his mode of life, and the remainder of his days would be spent in an endeavor to redeem the wrongs he had done to society and to his family. It was painful for him to recall his misdeeds, but when compelled to do so he felt it but just to say that in regard to the forgeries upon the Bank of England, the institution had recovered the $5,000,000 which he had got from it, and he had served fourteen years in Dartmoor Prison, five years of the time being passed in a locked cell, shut out from the sunlight or the sight of the earth. For five years he was shut up in a dark cell because his keepers professed to believe that he was shamming sickness. It had taken Great Britain eight years to find out that he was sick. In prison he had learned to read and write French, German, Italian, Latin and Greek. He had passed away some of his time in writing verses. His wife had been true to him all this time. She was a noble woman and he now puts himself wholly under her care and guidance. He had a son who was now wealthy and who had the largest house in the State where he lived. Bidwell did not care to name the State.

Justice Duffy asked the detectives if they had any charge to make. They said they had none, and the justice, saying that he was always ready to help any man to reform, discharged Bidwell, who departed a free man.

Bidwell was taken by his wife, his sister and his son to their home in Brooklyn. He is partially paralyzed below the waist, and it is said that his mind has been weakened by the effects of illness and confinement. He told Inspector Byrnes that he was born in Medina, N. Y., and first came to New York in 1871, soon after which he went to England and committed his extensive forgeries. His brother is still serving a life sentence in an English prison.

NINE PEOPLE MURDERED.

A Whole Family Knocked on the Head and their Throats Cut.

A Macon, Ga., despatch says: Information has just been received of a most horrible tragedy occurring on Saturday night about twelve miles from here, in this county. The report says that Capt. Richard Woolfolk, a well-known farmer, his wife, four children and Mrs. West, an aunt of Mrs. Woolfolk, were found murdered in the house this morning, having been knocked in the head and their throats cut. Tom G. Woolfolk, son of Capt. Woolfolk by his first wife, is suspected of the crime and was arrested. The deputy sheriff and coroner went out to the scene of the murder. Later and fuller details from the scene of the Woolfolk tragedy develop the fact that there were nine victims instead of seven, as reported—Capt. and Mrs. R. F. Woolfolk, the six children, ranging in ages from 16 months to 20 years, and Mrs. West, an aunt of Mrs. Woolfolk, aged 60. The coroner's jury found a verdict of murder against Thos. G. Woolfolk, son of the captain's first wife, who was sleeping in the house. The evidence before the jury was circumstantial throughout. The crowd continued to grow in size and the indications pointed strongly to lynching. Sheriff Westcott told the jury to withhold their verdict until he could get the prisoner away, and then, making all arrangements, slipped Woolfolk out of the house in a hurry and drove away so rapidly that the crowd had hardly time to realize the departure. The prisoner was brought to Macon and safely lodged in jail, where he talked of the crime coolly, but made no admissions. His motive is said to be the desire to gain possession of his father's property for himself and two sisters, children of the first wife.

Macon, Ga., Aug. — The funeral of the nine victims of Thos. G. Woolfolk took place here to-day at Rose's Hill Cemetery in the presence of 3,000 people. The services were brought to an abrupt termination by the arrival of Mrs. Edward's, sister of the murderer, who was in Athens, Ga., at the time of the commission of the crime. Heartrending scenes followed. Woolfolk was carried to Atlanta early this morning for safe keeping. He continues to deny his guilt.

Rather Fancied the Jail.

Apropos of going to jail a suggestive story is told of a local contractor who hired a man to work on the trenches the other day. "Seems to me, John," said he, "that you are looking quite hearty. Where have you been?" John cast his eyes to the east and lit his pipe toward the west and said: "I've been to jail, sir, and, begery, there isn't any reason why a man shouldn't be hearty. They call it a jail, do they! Well, sir, I should call it a mighty fine boardin'-house, with nothin' to do but eat and drink and sit down and rest your bones. It is a favorite summer resort, and very crol in these slatherin' hot days." John wooked four or five days, and a common complaint of his was that he was out of jail.

The Englishman and the Guide Book.

When an Englishman travels on the continent he relies entirely on his guide book for information. He regards Baedeker as absolutely infallible.

A couple of travelling Britons were observed to be studying, Baedeker in hand, a landscape on the Rhine. One of them said, reading from the book:

"A tall tower is to be seen on the right of the ruins of the old castle."

"But, 'Arry, me boy, there's no tower there."

"That's so, by Jove; the landscape must be wrong."—Texas Siftings.

If a single Texas highwayman can rob two stages, how many passengers would it take to defend a railroad train?

A FATAL LAUNCH.

Disastrous Launching of a New Milwaukee Steamer.

A Milwaukee despatch says: By a peculiar accident at the launching of the huge steamer Wm. A. Wolf, at Wolf & Davidson's shipyard on Saturday afternoon, three persons were killed outright, several others fatally injured, about twenty seriously hurt and a number of others less seriously injured. About 1,000 people had gathered to watch the launch. The docks were lined, vessels were crowded and every available scow and lumber pile was black with spectators. Directly opposite the cradled vessel was the large coal dock of the Northwestern Fuel Company. Upon the roof of this coal shed a large number of people had assembled. As the Wolf struck the water her port bilge was buried in the black water of the slip. Then she recovered and rolled heavily to port. The water displaced by her hull rose like a tidal wave and swept over the coal dock and up towards its roof, causing a cloud of coal dust and spray. The supports of the docks were insufficient to stand the force of the wave, and about forty feet of the shed went down with its living freight. Instantly there was wild excitement. On the deck of the steamer a scene of indescribable confusion ensued, but a few cool-headed people at once set to work to rescue the people thrown into the river and those buried in the debris of the platform. Owing to the fact that many cases of injuries were not reported, the unfortunates being hurried home in carriages, it is impossible to ascertain the full extent of the accident. As far as known the list of dead and badly hurt embraces the following:

Dead—Ed. Zero, aged 15; Charles Walwig, 22; Thomas Slevister, 20.

The injured—Kenneth McKay, aged 20, injured internally, fatally; Mrs. Marley, scalp torn off the back of the head and spine injured, fatally; F. Althoffer, hurt internally, probably fatally; John Knack, boat-builder, badly hurt internally; T. L. Barrow, book-keeper; A. D. Whitcome, limbs broken; H. Ehlers, badly injured about the back and shoulders, but may recover; Wm. Knack, a moulder, badly hurt about the hips and severely cut about the head and face.

Latest Ladies' Fashion Notes.

Small bonnets of sheer white organdie, made with many fine pleatings, are worn to church in the country, trimmed with big bows of pure white ribbon.

Ecru embroidered muslins are made with ruffled skirts, apron drapery and shirred waists, which are held in place by a broad, heavy white belt. The shoulders are ornamented with epaulets of thick, soft white ribbon bows.

The latest black lace dresses are made by sewing alternate strips of lace inserting two inches wide and black moire ribbon of the same width. The fabric formed in this way is draped diagonally across the moire underdress in front and straight in the back. The waist is shirred across the shoulders and about the neck over a tight silk lining and gathered to a point at the belt line.

Similar lace dresses are made in white and draped over either white moire or white surah. In these white costumes the white drapery of the waist is crossed over in surplice fashion and held at the waist with a wide moire sash. The sleeves of the striped lace and ribbon are in leg-o'-mutton shape and have no lining, short moire cuffs confining them below the elbow.

Dressing sacones of exquisitely delicate mull, trimmed profusely with lace and covered with a multitude of loops of the very narrowest ribbon, are worn to the breakfast table with old silk skirts that are past the prime. The ribbons are run through narrow inserting set between the mull and the lace ruffles. Under them are worn white corset covers, tied with ribbons of the same color as those in the sacque, which are prettiest when of clear, buttercup yellow.

The most sensible and coolest morning gown for those obliged to remain in the city during the warm weather is a full plain skirt of pongee with a deep hem. The waist has a basque back and gathered surplice fronts, leaving the throat unhampered by a collar. The sleeves are flared at the wrist and turned back in Pilgrim fashion with a contrasting color. The fronts are tied in loosely with long ribbon bows. Dull green, pale heliotrope or dark wine tints are pretty in contrast.

A pretty evening gown is of white silk mull. It is made over a skirt of cheap white silk and has three narrow flounces of the mull edged with two rows of narrow white satin ribbon. The long drapery is edged with four rows of ribbon and is nowhere draped high enough above the flounces to expose the silk underskirt. The waist is a low-necked, sleeveless, white silk basque over which the mull is gathered high in the throat, held there by three rows of ribbon. There are no sleeves, and the gloves are white.

An Octogenarian.

Captain John Ericsson, the inventor, celebrated his 84th birthday at New York on Sunday. The World says it found him "as active and vigorous and apparently about as young as when he launched the Monitor, a quarter of a century ago." His regular habits and health regimen are credited with doing much to keep him so fresh and vigorous. Like the late Wm. Cullen Bryant, he takes a cold bath every morning on rising and indulges in plenty of exercise as well as plenty of work. The advantage of a cold sponge bath every morning, summer and winter, on rising cannot be over estimated. It cleanses the pores of the system and equalizes the circulation as nothing else will, and, if followed by a vigorous grooming, will start one out for the day in splendid condition. This, with temperance in diet and drink and sufficient sleep, will add years to one's life if no organic trouble or accident cuts it short.

A Moral Hero.

The man who can pass the warning notice, "Paint," without testing the matter with his finger to see if it is dry, has sufficient will-power to give up drinking.—Puck.

A Main street mother was whipping her boy yesterday, and as she applied the rod she shouted: "Will you behave?" "Yes," blubbered the throbbing boy: "I will you will."

THE MIND CURE.

Imaginary Therapeutics a Lucrative Fad in New York.

There are any number of people making a living out of the mind cure in New York, says a writer in the Graphic, despite the fact that any one who wanted to could have them arrested on the very serious charge of illegally practicing medicine. Of course they would claim that they have nothing to do with the practice of medicine, but as long as they are taking money for healing people it would make a very pretty case. Most of the mind curers are women, however, and some of them ladies, and as long as they can do so little harm, no one is likely to disturb them. It takes very little trouble to become a mind curer. All of them teach the art or science, or whatever they call it, and it only takes twenty lessons or so to be able to practice it, so that one would think that every man might soon become his own mind curer; but every one is not successful either in doing or in making himself or others believe that he is successful in doing what he wants to, and so comes about a survival of the fittest in the business. The observer knows, and knew before she assumed her present mysterious importance, one of the largest practitioners in this field; she is a handsome, well-bred woman, with considerable sense of humor, and her accounts of her patients are very funny. It is one of the peculiarities of the mind cure that it cures everything from original sin to corns, and Mrs. B. has as many patients come to her for ailments not physical as for those that are. Women come to be made to love their husbands, and men come—for the patients are by no means all "silly women"—to be kept from fretting about their business; children are sent to have their tempers improved, and drunkards to have their appetites changed. It is easy to see that in all such cases as these the attitude of seeking a cure, not to mention the fact of paying for it, does a great deal to produce it, and this sort of influence may be an excellent thing. A prominent physician said the other day that if the hypochondriacs could be gotten to patronize the mind cure it would be the greatest blessing both for them and their poor, worn-out doctors in the world, for hypochondria is practically banished by the mind curists as a mere preliminary to treatment, but this doctor said that so far as he could learn no professional invalids of the class, whose invalidism constitutes their only reason for being, could be persuaded to try a system whose first requirement is that the patient shall cease to talk about his ailments. Their practice on this point ought to give a hint to the regular physicians; why in the name of mercy to mankind can't they all adopt enough of mind cure philosophy to follow in their footsteps in this one particular and stop all patients from talking about their ailments and sensations? If that could be accomplished the mind cure would richly have justified its existence.

A Popular Novelist on "Love."

Love is like a flower in the desert.

It is like the aloe of Arabia that blooms but once and dies; it blooms in the salt emptiness of life, and the brightness of its beauty is set upon the waste as a star is set upon a storm.

It hath the sun above that is the spirit, and about it blows the air of its own divinity.

At the echoing of a step Love blooms, I say; I say Love blooms, and bends her beauty down to him who passeth by.

He plucketh it, yea, he plucketh the red cup that is full of honey, and beareth it away—away across the desert—away till the flower be withered—away till the desert be done.

There is only one perfect flower in the wilderness of life. That flower is Love!

There is only one fixed star in the midst of our wandering. That star is Love.

There is only one hope in our despairing night. That hope is Love.

All else is false. All else is shadow moving upon water. All else is wind and vanity.

Who shall say what is the weight or the measure of Love? It is born of the flesh, it dwelleth in the spirit. From each does it draw its comfort.

For beauty it is as a star.

Many are its shapes, but all are beautiful; and none know where the star rose, or the horizon where it shall set.—H. Rider Haggard, in "She."

A Simple Question.

A certain learned judge, when attempting to be clear, is at times rather perplexing. "My good woman," he is reported to have said to a witness, "you must give an answer in the fewest possible words of which you are capable, to the the plain and simple question whether, when you were crossing the street with the baby on your arm and the omnibus was coming down on the right side and the cab on the left side and the brougham was trying to pass the omnibus, you saw the plaintiff between the brougham and the cab, or between the omnibus and the cab, or whether and when you saw him at all, and whether or not near the brougham, cab and omnibus, or either, or any two, and which of them respectively—or how was it?"—New York Telegram.

Story of Emperor William.

The Kreuz Zeitung relates a pretty incident of the Emperor's late visit to Kiel. When steaming past the ironclads which were anchored in parade order, on his return from Holtenau to Kiel, His Majesty came abreast of the Swedish war vessel Edda, of which the crew were also manning the yards and cheering lustily. At the same time Prince Oscar of Sweden, as the commander of this vessel, which had brought him to Kiel, advanced and saluted the Emperor, on which His Majesty took the star of the Black Eagle from his breast, and with a few gracious words pinned it on to the uniform of his royal Swedish guest.

Petty larceny may be expected to flourish in all the departments of a business founded upon grand larceny, and to be taken by its practitioners to be the same thing as business ability.—New York Times.

The famine which is raging at Anticoguia is at its height. In San Vincente two children in one family have died of starvation. Twenty thousand dollars have been raised in Medellin, but the sum is not enough. A relief committee in Rio Negro has 200 families to support.

DRESS OF THE FUTURE.

When Women Will Wear no Drapery Below the Knee.

The first time I ever saw Mrs. Miller on a Massachusetts lecture platform she wore an ultra-fashionable gown, writes a New York correspondent. It was small wonder then that I said to her recently: "And how came you of all women in the dress reform field?"

"That is easily told," she replied. "I never wore corsets, have inveighed against them, indeed, all my life. But I did what is worse, after all. I liked to look as my neighbors did and I wore the conventional gown without any protection of corset underneath. By and by my back ached. Then it ached a little more. I had a horror of being an invalid and went to a doctor, who told me I was well enough if I would only stop loading myself down with heavy gowns. I went home and weighed a new velvet costume—I had worn it but once and it cost me $350—it tipped the beam at twenty-five pounds. I never wore it again, but try as I might, I could not find a dressmaker who would take the trouble to devise for me what I was coming to see was the only healthful sort of dress. They told me I was too young a woman to be a crank, and that was all the satisfaction I got.

"I could use needle and thread myself and with my maid's help I manufactured in time what I wanted for my own wear. I had no intention of making the matter public in any way. But one or two Washington society women took to my gowns. Mrs. Breckinridge, the wife of the Kentucky Senator, had some like them, and Mrs. James, the wife of the Brooklyn Congressman, liked the idea, too. One day I woke up and found myself a column and a-half long in the paper. Then I began to have letters, such funny letters, too, from cranks, a good many of them, and in the end they pushed me forward to setting my scheme before the women of the land."

"You say people wrote to you; what did they say?"

"Oh, they came to me as well as wrote. There was a Kentuckian, a man and a perfect stranger, who posed on my parlor carpet and told me he had a sick wife and he wasn't going home till I cut him some patterns of dresses that would make her well. 'But, my good man,' said I, 'I never cut a paper pattern in my life and I don't know how big your wife is nor how to begin.' It was of no use. He kept coming till my sister and I, in desperation at his persistence, spread out some gowns on the floor and cut patterns for him as well as we could.

"Then there was a woman out west who said she was one of the original wearers of the bloomer; she was old and infirm now, and if I really sympathized with women she was sure I would send her money enough to build her a frame house to live in in her old age. I was besieged with letters, and my mail ran up so that I got a secretary to attend to it for me. I think I have had correspondents in every English-speaking country of the globe. Everybody asked me what to do, and I was amazed at the amount of rebellion that seemed smoldering against corsets and long skirts. Women don't really like them, you know, but they don't want to be odd and they don't know what else to put on."

"And what do you think of the prospect of final success?"

"Of course I can't tell, but they look bright just now. Nothing was ever less sought than the prominence this has thrust me into. I was satisfied with clothing myself so as not to be a burden to myself and husband, but if it is to be a public work, I may do some real good to a few other women at least."

"And have you any ultimate ideas beyond those you advocate now?"

"Yes; but it would not do to advance them. One must win people, not repulse them. For my own part, I believe the dress of the future woman will be a very beautiful and a very graceful dress, but not altogether to our present ideas. I believe our limbs were made for practical use, and that in a couple of centuries or so women will wear no drapery, at least below the knee. But that is wholly a thing of the future. I shouldn't think of advocating it, because it wouldn't be practicable now."

All in the Family.

A romantic marriage took place recently in Jeffersonville, Ky., before Esquire Ware. Wm. Brown and Mary Sanders were the contracting parties. They claim their home in Nelson county, fourteen miles from Bardstown. The groom is about 30 years of age, and the bride is sweet 16. Brown wore jean pants that struck him about the knees. His coat looked like the remnant of a soldier coat. The bride's dress was of a bright red, but looked as if it had been worn many years. On her bosom she wore a sunflower of the largest size. It appears that Brown's brother Sam and Mary were to have eloped at the same time as William and her sister. In order to throw off suspicion the girls were exchanged. Mary went with William, and her sister went with Sam. They eloped on Wednesday night. They had got but a short distance from the home of the girls when their father learned of their departure. He started in pursuit on horseback and overtook them about four miles from home. They were in buggies, and the old man grabbed the horse in the rear buggy by the head. Seeing the predicament they were in, the foremost couple gave whip to the horse and were soon out of sight. They could not go back to hunt the other pair, so, after talking the matter over, they concluded that they would get married and make it all right with the other party when they got back.

They did not seem to be bothered about it, and when asked if there would be trouble when they went home, the groom said:

"No, I guess not. Both girls are about alike, but I never went to see this one. I will make it all right with Sam when I get home."—St. Louis Globe-Democrat.

At the Fourth of July celebration in Danville, Ill., the wife of a Methodist minister won twenty-five yards of carpet by exhibiting a family of thirteen children, eleven of them under 21 years of age, and Miss Maggie Lingenfelter won a fine dress pattern by harnessing a horse and hitching him to a buggy in less than two minutes.

A Pittsburg paper advertises for "a boy to do heavy work." Boys who would be caught by an advertisement like that are very scarce in this section

PROVING HIS LOVE.

"I oughtn't to be listenin' to ye, sir, at all," said the pretty Irish girl, tossing her head. "You know, sir, well enough that I'm to marry Dennis Regan."

"And you would rather marry him than me?" asked Earl Talbot, drawing himself up to his full height. He was a splendid specimen of manhood and a handsome one, and he loved Kitty as he had never loved a woman before. The peasant girl pleased him more than any drawing-room belle.

"And why should I be ashamed of Dennis?" she asked. "Faith, he's good enough for the likes o' me," with a proud smile on her face.

"But did you know that spies are on his track for having murdered Harry Douns," said the young Englishman.

"My Denny is no murderer. It's all a lie got up by them that hates him. He's been a wild lad, I know, but none the worse for it. He has a good heart and I'll stand by him!"

Earl Talbot looked at her beautiful face and sighed. He had had his way all his life and he could hardly understand what defeat meant.

"I am sorry, Kitty, that you will not have me—very sorry. I hope some day you will give me a better answer."

"It can never be anything else, sir. You're kind to ax me, but my heart's wid Denny," and she turned her face away.

So there was nothing left for Earl Talbot to do but ride away, a very much disappointed man.

A few days later the fugitive Dennis Regan was captured, and in twenty-four hours had been condemned to die on the scaffold.

The terrible days sped away. When only two nights remained Kitty, sitting alone with her sorrow, heard her cabin door open, and in a minute Earl Talbot stood before her.

The young man was amazed.

Hardly a trace remained of the dainty physical beauty which had charmed him so. Lovely she still was, but it was the ethereal sweetness of an angel, disciplined by mortal sorrow.

"Why, Kitty! my poor little girl! Don't look so, I beg of you. You make me wretched. Your eyes, that were like two purple pansies, are put out by the tears."

"They will soon leave off tears, sir," said Kitty, with woful calmness. "My heart is clean broken, and if they hang Dennis I'll not be long following him."

The young man sat a little while in silence. Presently he said:

"On your soul, Kitty, do you believe Dennis to be ignorant of this crime?"

"As there is a hope for mercy, sir, I do."

Another silence and then Earl Talbot rose.

"Kitty, I'm going to show you how generous a lover and a gentleman can be. When you are happy you must think of me sometimes."

A tender kiss was left on her cheek, and Kitty was alone, her heart strangely full of joy and hope.

At length the awful day arrived and the market place at Lanark was crowded with people to see a strong man die. Dennis Regan came out of his prison surrounded by a cordon of soldiers with drawn bayonets. His face was pale but calm.

Father Reilly proceeded to shrive him; and while this was going on the sobbing in the crowd grew more vehement.

The ceremony over, the father was seen to embrace the prisoner most tenderly, and then, when all was over that he could do, he turned to descend the rude steps.

Half-way down he stumbled. Was it this attracted the attention of the soldiers?

The next instant—before a musket could be levelled—Dennis Regan was seen to leap sheer over the heads of the guard, and with a thundering shout the crowd opened to receive him.

In a breath he was hustled along till he reached a clear space, and then he sprang upon the splendid horse that Earl Talbot had provided, and steed and rider were away like the wind.

Pursuit was in vain. Dennis hid among the hills till he could make his way to a seaport, where his mother and Kitty joined him. There the happy lovers were wedded, and together they crossed to America.

Two years afterward Lanark was astonished by the sight of Harry Douns, just home from Wales, where he went in a fit of pique because Kitty frowned upon him.

An Intelligent Official.

In one of the Dakota cities where the post-office free-delivery system went into effect the men appointed carriers were somewhat inexperienced. One of them seemed to get over his route in a remarkably short space of time. Long before the others returned he was back with an empty poutch looking for another load. The postmaster questioned him a little, but he insisted that he knew what he was doing and didn't need any instructions. The fourth day he came back with about half the letters he took out.

"What is the matter?" asked the postmaster.

"The boxes on my route are all full."

"What boxes?"

"Them little iron boxes that you put up around on the lamp posts that say 'U. S. Mail' on the end. I've been putting the mail into them every day, and have left them unlocked, too, but I don't believe the big fools around the neighborhood know enough to go to them and get out their letters. I caught one man to-day putting letters he wanted to mail into one of them, though I know there are half a dozen for him in it now. I threatened to lick him if I caught him trying it again, and he said he was going to report me." — Dakota Bell.

The Bumblebees and the Clover.

An Indiana farmer, who told his boys to burn every bumblebees' nest they found on his farm, and was complaining of the failure of his cloverseed crop, was surprised when Maurice Thompson, the naturalist, said: "That is why your clover seed fails you. Bumblebees make your clover seed." It is a fact that a strong nest of bumblebees in a big clover field is worth $20 to the owner, for these insects are the chief agents in fertilizing the blossoms, thereby insuring a heavy crop of seed. In Australia there were no bumblebees of our kind, and they could not raise clover seed until they imported some of our kind.

In these days of "progressive" all sorts of things it would be quite in keeping to call the tramp a progressive parasite.

CURRENT TOPICS.

Watchmaking in France is a great business. According to M. Saunier the yearly production of watches in France is as follows, by centres of manufacture: Besancon, 24,000,000; Paris, 23,000,000; some small centres of production, such as Trois Fontains, 1,500,000; Morex and neighborhood, 4,000,000; Saint Nicholas d'Allormont, 1,500,000; Beaucourt, Monteliard-Selincourt, 9,000,000; Cluses, 1,500,000; total, 64,500,000. Where do they all go?

The foundation stone of the Woman's Jubilee offering in England—the Prince Consort's equestrian statue—was laid with an historical mallet. The Queen used the same mallet which George III. handled to lay the first stone of the gateway between the York and Lancaster towers at Windsor Castle in August, 1824. Since then it has been used by the German Crown Princess for All Saints', Windsor, in 1763, and by Prince Christian at the Albert Institute, Windsor, in 1879.

In Paris the other day an Austrian invention was tested for automatically lowering coffins into graves without ropes. A coffin was placed on a kind of platform, and surrounded with funeral drapery, which concealed the grave. When a spring was pressed the platform, with its lugubrious burden, descended slowly into the earth. The price of the apparatus is 80 lire, and the inventor states that it is used in Vienna and Milan, the rate payable being six francs for each burial. The prefecture of the Seine has asked for some modifications in the machinery before taking it into use.

According to a social note in the Hartford Times it is the fashion for the most ultra fashionable women nowadays to retain their maiden instead of their "middle name." Some of these ladies have been astonished to hear that the innovation was first started and became widely used by suffrage women of this country, who thought it best to retain this slight hold upon their identity. The shocked and surprised fashionables are of the class that are unconsciously using and utilizing many of the changes that have been slowly brought about by their indefatigable "sisters" of stronger views.

In freezing ice cream, the cream is put first into a tin vessel and surrounded by ice. Tin is used because it is a good conductor of heat and the warmth of the cream is drawn through it easily and absorbed into the ice. This tin vessel and the ice surrounding it are placed in a wooden vessel, wood being selected because it is a poor conductor, and the outside heat cannot readily pass through it to the cream. Salt is sprinkled on the ice because salt has the property of melting ice, and while melting ice absorbs heat, thus making an additional draft on the warmth in the cream.

The New York World reports the seizure of 5,000 gallons of the soakings of dried peaches and unsalable raisins which were to have been converted into "pure wines." The New York Tribune tells of the arrival of 150 casks of cherry juice from Hamburg, to be used in making California wine. The juice contained a large quantity of poisonous aniline dye. And the Druggists' Circular adds the following contribution to the subject: It is more the rule than the exception for port wine to be composed of cider, syrup, gum kino and tartaric acid, and for claret to be made from a decoction of orris root, water, raspberry juice, syrup and cochineal, while most of the sherry wine on the market is a combination of cheap materials colored with alkanet root. To bring up "flat" wine a common practice is to drop a few rats into a cask through the bung hole. The rat flavor is said to be "perfectly delicious," but the sellers are careful not to sample it, leaving that delightful privilege for the innocent buyers.

The other day an experiment was made in running a car over one of the street railways of Philadelphia by means of a storage battery. There are no railways in this country which employ this system, although it is used in London, Vienna and Berlin and is claimed by the expert brought over from Europe to construct the car to be cheaper by 50 per cent. than the employment of horses. The car was fitted with eighty-four cells, each weighing about forty pounds. These will drive it about four hours, and it takes about the same length of time to charge them. Each car would be fitted with two sets of cells and the one exhausted could be replaced with the one charged in about four minutes. In the trial the car ran up heavy grades and over sharp curves easily. It got off the track twice, but was easily backed on again. The expert said that a speed of twelve miles an hour was attainable. The railway men expressed themselves as well satisfied with the experiment. The car was provided with an electric light of almost the volume of an electric headlight, with four incandescent burners, with a loud gong, which was sounded by touching a button, and with electric bells, which connected the two platforms.

Things One Doesn't Like to Hear.

"No, Mr. Smyth; but I will be a sister to you."

"Good morning. I am introducing a work which should be in every library."

"Sorry, dear boy, but I can't let you have the amount, for I'm dead broke myself."

"Charles, it is half-past 3 o'clock. Where have you been until this hour?"

"Mr. De Browne, your services will not be required after Saturday next."

"You want to marry my daughter, eh? Well, young man, what are your expectations?"

"Here is the milliner's bill, Algy—only $75."

"I say, Jenkins, I heard a good story to-day, and I must tell it to you."

"Oh, Alfred, what do you think! I received a letter from dear mamma this morning, and she's coming to spend a month with us."

"When will you be ready to return that $10, Robinson? This is the fifth time I've asked you for it."

"If ye plaze, sorr, Miss Heavyswell tould me to tell you she's not at home."

"And fifthly, dear brethren—"

"You are a moderate drinker, eh? Now, my dear sir, let me direct your attention to a few statistics."

Ten thousand Italian troops will be sent o Massowah in the autumn.

WASHED BY A TIDAL WAVE.

A Wall of Water Strikes the Umbria—A [illegible] Steerage Passenger Hurt.

"A tidal wave! Look! It's bound to strike us!"

The speaker was Third Officer Bennett, of the Cunard steamer Umbria, and he addressed Second Officer King, who was standing with him on the bridge. It was last Wednesday morning at about half-past 3 o'clock, and the Umbria was steaming west by north. She was about 1,500 miles from Sandy Hook and the wind was blowing stiff from the west. A mass of angry water like a huge wall was rushing from the westward toward the Umbria. It seemed to tower high above the vessel and looked formidable enough to crush the huge ship. Officer King quickly turned the signal lever to slow the vessel, and the Umbria was brought up to face the huge wave. On it came, striking the steamer over the port bow. The huge volume of water toppled over on the vessel, actually burying her in brine. The ship seemed almost to stand still for a moment, then she rose from the blow and the water poured from her decks in huge streams. Some sailors who had been making their way forward were half drowned and would have been carried overboard had they not clung to the guard rails. The two officers on the bridge were drenched and the port wing of that structure was torn away and the stout brass railing turned and twisted as if made of brush wire. The port light was carried away. The stout forward hatch was torn from its fastenings and dashed against the saloon cabin, a mass of splinters. The water rushed below and nearly drowned the sailors and firemen, whose bunks were on the haul-up deck. Barrels of brine rushed down into the steerage room, forward, where the single men were sleeping. One young Englishman was struck by a splinter and a gash made in his left leg above the knee. His head was also slightly bruised, but he was not seriously injured. He was the only man hurt by the wave. The ship's surgeon attended to his injuries, and when the Umbria arrived in port he was able to walk around. The rail on the promenade deck forward was laid flat on the deck and a stout iron stanchion near the forward whaleback was bent nearly double. The lookout bridge forward of the foremast was also broken, but the man stationed there escaped uninjured. After the wave had subsided the weather moderated, but a dense fog came up, and this and the wave caused the Umbria to be delayed about twenty hours. The escape of the vessel from more serious injury is considered remarkable by her officers, who say the wave was the largest they ever saw. Many of the steerage passengers were awakened by the shock, and some donned life-belts.—N. Y. Herald.

Nature as Man Fixes It.

Philanthropist—My dear little children, you should not play in these dirty alleys. Don't you like the public parks?

Child—Oh, yes; they are beautiful.

"Yes, indeed, and you should go to them as often as possible, breathe the fresh air and learn to love the beauties of nature."

"Yes, sir."

"Remember, my dear little ones, that God made the country, but man made the town. Now, my good little girl, tell me what you first observe when you visit these delightful homes of nature?"

"Keep off the grass."—Omaha World.

"What Drug Will Scour These English Hence?"

Wicked Macbeth, who murdered good King Duncan, asked this question in his despair. Thousands of victims of disease are daily asking, "What will scour the impurities from my blood and bring me health?" Dr. Pierce's Golden Medical Discovery will do it. When the purple life-tide is sluggish, causing drowsiness, headache and loss of appetite, use this wonderful vitalizer, which never fails. It forces the liver into perfect action, drives out superfluous bile, brings the glow of health to the cheek and the natural sparkle to the eye. All druggists.

Sarah Bernhardt has been coining money in London. Her receipts have averaged over $2,500 for each performance.

Like Lightning.

The rapid action of the "great pain cure," Polson's Nerviline, in relieving the most intense pain, is a matter of wonder to all who have used it. There is nothing surprising in its results; for it is made of the strongest, purest and most efficient remedies known in medicine. Nerviline cures toothache instantly; cramps in five minutes; neuralgia after two applications; rheumatism is at once relieved by its use; and the same may be said of all kinds of pain. Sample bottles, costing only 10 cts. at any drug store. The large bottle only 25 cents. Polson's Nerviline sold by druggists and country dealers.

Lady Li Departs from Custom.

The wife of the Viceroy Li of China recently paid a visit to the foreign hospital for women at Tientsin and showed much sympathy with the poor patients. When she came out her chair was surrounded by crowds of wretched-looking women and girls who begged for alms. Lady Li ordered her attendants to distribute money to all alike. The incident is regarded as noteworthy, as Chinese dignitaries heretofore have paid little heed to charity.—Harper's Weekly.

When everything else fails, Dr. Sage's Catarrh Remedy cures.

The Caledonian ball, in London, held the other evening, was a great success. There was a large and brilliant company, including the Prince of Wales and his sons, and several of the Indian visitors were present in gorgeous costumes. The Royalties were all in full Highland dress, and the Prince of Wales danced most vigorously, and took part in several reels. Lady Saltoun's Highland quadrille of twenty-four couples was very pretty, the ladies wearing white dresses with tartan sashes of their respective clans. Lady Airlie's fancy quadrille of twelve was confined to the 10th Hussars and the ladies wore poudre dresses of the last century.

One day recently five children were poisoned by eating bi-arseniate of soda from some empty barrels near a cooperage at Pollokshaws. Two, Elizabeth Campbell and David Armstrong, died.

A Pleasure Shared by Women Only.

Malherbe, the gifted French author, declared that of all things that man possesses women alone take pleasure in being possessed. This seems generally true of the sweeter sex. Like the ivy plant, she longs for an object to cling to and love—to look to for protection. This being her prerogative, ought she not to be told that Dr. Pierce's Favorite Prescription is the physical salvation of her sex? It banishes those distressing maladies that make her life a burden, curing all painful irregularities, uterine disorders, inflammation and ulceration, prolapsus and kindred weaknesses. As a nervine, it cures nervous exhaustion, prostration, debility, relieves mental anxiety and hypochondria, and promotes refreshing sleep.

Summer pelerines with peplum fronts are exhibited made of white or black lace n exquisitely fine and beautiful designs.

The treatment of many thousands of cases of those chronic weaknesses and distressing ailments peculiar to females, at the Invalids' Hotel and Surgical Institute, Buffalo, N. Y., has afforded a vast experience in nicely adapting and thoroughly testing remedies for the cure of woman's peculiar maladies.

Dr. Pierce's Favorite Prescription is the outgrowth, or result, of this great and valuable experience. Thousands of testimonials, received from patients and from physicians who have tested it in the more aggravated and obstinate cases which had baffled their skill, prove it to be the most wonderful remedy ever devised for the relief and cure of suffering women. It is not recommended as a "cure-all," but as a most perfect Specific for woman's peculiar ailments.

As a powerful, invigorating tonic, it imparts strength to the whole system, and to the womb and its appendages in particular. For overworked, "worn-out," "run-down," debilitated teachers, milliners, dressmakers, seamstresses, "shop-girls," housekeepers, nursing mothers, and feeble women generally, Dr. Pierce's Favorite Prescription is the greatest earthly boon, being unequaled as an appetizing cordial and restorative tonic.

As a soothing and strengthening nervine, "Favorite Prescription" is unequaled and is invaluable in allaying and subduing nervous excitability, irritability, exhaustion, prostration, hysteria, spasms and other distressing, nervous symptoms commonly attendant upon functional and organic disease of the womb. It induces refreshing sleep and relieves mental anxiety and despondency.

Dr. Pierce's Favorite Prescription is a legitimate medicine, carefully compounded by an experienced and skillful physician, and adapted to woman's delicate organization. It is purely vegetable in its composition and perfectly harmless in its effects in any condition of the system. For weakness, nervousness, from whatever cause arising, weak stomach, indigestion, dyspepsia and kindred symptoms, its use, in small doses, will prove very beneficial.

"Favorite Prescription" is a positive cure for the most complicated and obstinate cases of leucorrhea, excessive flowing, painful menstruation, unnatural suppressions, prolapsus, or falling of the womb, weak back, "female weakness," anteversion, retroversion, bearing-down sensations, chronic congestion, inflammation and ulceration of the womb, inflammation, pain and tenderness in ovaries, accompanied with "internal heat."

As a regulator and promoter of functional action, at that critical period of change from girlhood to womanhood, "Favorite Prescription" is a perfectly safe remedial agent, and can produce only good results. It is equally efficacious and valuable in its effects when taken for those disorders and derangements incident to that later and most critical period, known as "The Change of Life."

"Favorite Prescription," when taken in connection with the use of Dr. Pierce's Golden Medical Discovery, and small laxative doses of Dr. Pierce's Purgative Pellets (Little Liver Pills), cures Liver, Kidney and Bladder diseases. Their combined use also removes blood taints, and abolishes cancerous and scrofulous humors from the system.

"Favorite Prescription" is the only medicine for women, sold by druggists, under a positive guarantee, from the manufacturers, that it will give satisfaction in every case, or money will be refunded. This guarantee has been printed on the bottle-wrapper, and faithfully carried out for many years.

Large bottles (100 doses) $1.00, or six bottles for $5.00.

For large, illustrated Treatise on Diseases of Women (160 pages, paper-covered), send ten cents in stamps. Address,

World's Dispensary Medical Association,
663 Main St., BUFFALO, N. Y.

D O N L. 33 87.

I CURE FITS!

When I say I cure I do not mean merely to stop them for a time and then have them return again. I mean a radical cure. I have made the disease of FITS, EPILEPSY or FALLING SICKNESS a life-long study. I warrant my remedy to cure the worst cases. Because others have failed is no reason for not now receiving a cure. Send at once for a treatise and a Free Bottle of my Infallible remedy. Give Express and Post Office. It costs you nothing for a trial and I will cure you. Address DR. H. G. ROOT,
Branch Office, 37 Yonge St., Toronto.

DUNN'S BAKING POWDER
THE COOK'S BEST FRIEND

CONSUMPTION.

I have a positive remedy for the above disease; by its use thousands of cases of the worst kind and of long standing have been cured. Indeed, so strong is my faith in its efficacy, that I will send TWO BOTTLES FREE, together with a VALUABLE TREATISE on this disease to any sufferer. Give express and P. O. address
DR. T. A. SLOCUM,
Branch Office, 37 Yonge St., Toronto.

Tit-Bits.

Continued from First Page.

Mr. J. G. Anderson, of Markdale, was in town on Monday.

Mr. C. J. Sproule returned home from Toronto on Saturday last.

Mr. W. C. Henrick has been on a visit to friends in Flesherton lately.

Don't forget to get 15 yds. nice Dress Goods for $1.50 at J. G. Anderson's.

Read Medical Hall's interesting column announcement in another part of this week's ADVANCE.

The Owen Sound Collegiate Institute will open on the 29th inst. See advt. for particulars in another column.

Miss Fanny Hibbitt and her younger sister, Edie, of Toronto are the guests of Mr. Jos. LeGard, of this neighborhood.

Teas, Teas, Teas, a special offer for 20 days, 5 lbs. for $1. Good heavy Mitts taken in trade at regular discount prices at J. G. Anderson's, Markdale.

Mr. Williamson, of the old Durham Road, undertook to haul a load of cheese from the Flesherton factory to the station one day last week. He started forth with a good big load, but unfortunately for Mr. W., he forgot to put the iron rod through the end board of his wagon. Consequently when he reached the hill near the photograph gallery, he came to grief. The end board gracefully flew out on the road, and ten "rolls" of cheese as gracefully followed suit, spreading themselves negligently in various attitudes of repose—suggesting Grip's pumpkin picture. "History does not tell us, my friends," what Mr. Williamson said on the trying occasion. Such a big fall in cheese—not in the price thereof—would be trying to any man's feelings.

The Pastor of the Flesherton Baptist Church, under a misapprehension concerning an unopened street, caused a driving shed to be partly constructed on it. Certain individuals observing that the shed would obstruct the view down what may sometime be an important street, made objections to its remaining there. It was therefore decided at once to purchase a site from Mr. R. Trimble for the shed and move it onto it. That the objection was not made on any personal, sectarian or religious ground will appear from the fact the following have very cheerfully subscribed to the expenses involved in the removal, viz., W. K. Flesher, Esq., Mr. G. Anderson, Dr. Christoe, Squire Armstrong. Mr. M. Richardson, Mr. Trimble, Mr. W. Strain, Mr. G. Glassford and Mr. S. Kingston.

Two weeks ago we drew attention to the nuisance in the rear of the lot on which this office is built. It has been the worst nuisance in town during the whole summer, and yet we have been severely censured because we alluded to that disease-breeding spot in the ADVANCE. One young man went so far as to state that it "was nobody's business what a man put on his own place." We differ very materially with that smart young man, and take this opportunity to assure him, that a man can only do what he likes on his own place when he doesn't interfere with the rights of his neighbors. And if throwing heads and entrails of animals in such an exposed place is not interfering with the rights of others, we would like to know what it really does amount to. All decaying vegetable or animal substances should be buried at least six feet under ground.

Some of Our Readers Say That

"The article on the Editor and his critics is very interesting, and evidently written in a fair honest spirit."

That "the ADVANCE is worth all it costs, amongst many other reasons, for the privilege of criticising the Editor."

That "while we may not agree with all he says we will stand by the Editor as long as he runs his paper which, we hope will be many years."

That "evidently the Fighting Editor takes a holiday occasionally and then there is a splendid chance for getting matter inserted, which though indicating the most loving intent had better never have seen the light."

That "some readers are more tyrannical in their demands than the Egyptian taskmaster who wanted bricks made without straw. They want the Editor to supply constant flow of weekly local news when very often nothing new transpires. They want him to make his bricks without either straw or clay."

Mr. J. D. Clarke, of the Hamilton Times, is in town on his annual holiday trip. He is the guest of Squire Armstrong.

Thornbury junior Lacross team challenged the Flesherton juniors to play them a match on the grounds of the latter last Monday. Our boys accepted the challenge and made every preparation to give the expected visitors a hearty welcome. Dodgers were printed and scattered broadcast announcing the match, a splendid dinner was ordered—in short, everything possible was done in order to make the Thornbury boys feel perfectly at home during their visit. Preparations were never made on a more complete scale in this town before. Monday came, and in the afternoon nearly all the young people in the place left off work in order to go to see the expected match. There were people from Markdale and elsewhere present. The day passed but the Thornbury juniors failed to put in an appearance. A telegram was sent from here which elicited the following answer—received at 4,15 p. m.—: "Owing to the absence of our captain we will play you on the 19th." Of course our boys will not have anything more to do with the Thornbury juniors—their transparent telegram to the contrary notwithstanding.

A NASAL INJECTOR free with each bottle of Shiloh's Catarrh Remedy. Price 50 cents. Sold at Medical Hall.

SHILOH'S CURE will immediately relieve Croup, Whooping Cough, and Bronchitis. Sold at Medical Hall.

ADVICE TO MOTHERS.—Are you disturbed at night and broken of your rest by a sick child suffering and crying with pain of Cutting Teeth? If so send at once and get a bottle of "Mrs. Winslow's Soothing Syrup" for Children Teething. Its value is incalculable. It will relieve the poor little sufferer immediately. Depend upon it, mothers; there is no mistake about it. It cures Dysentery and Diarrhœa, regulates the Stomach and Bowels, cures Wind Colic, softens the Gums, reduces Inflammation, and gives tone and energy to the whole system. "Mrs. Winslow's Soothing Syrup" for children teething is pleasant to the taste and is the prescription of one of the oldest and best female physicians and nurses in the United States, and is for sale by all druggists throughout the world. Price twenty-five cents a bottle. Be sure and ask for "MRS. WINSLOW'S SOOTHING SYRUP," and take no other kind.

"HACKMETACK," a lasting and fragrant perfume. Price 25 and 50 cents. Sold by Medical Hall.

The Short System of Milling.

Editor Mechanical and Milling News.

Perhaps there is no subject that affects the milling interest of to-day so much as how to produce the best results at the least expense. In the United States, where the different methods and systems are given practical tests, they have discovered that the goal has not yet been reached in milling. They are now beginning to see that millions of dollars have been expended that might have been saved. The change from stones to rolls was an essential one—the benefits were clear to all intelligent millers. Most of them thought seven breaks were necessary to produce the best results, and that no mill was complete without this number. To carry out a system of this kind required a large outlay in the varied machinery necessary to its adoption, and many millers have been financially ruined in trying to reach this goal.

The time has now come when competition in business will not allow of any defective system or defective machinery, and because of this the inventive energies of the world are turned in this direction. Some of the best mills in the United States are now running on what is known to them as the short system of milling, using three or four breaks in the reduction of the wheat where they had been using seven or more, and the results are much better.

Three breaks have been selected by some as producing better results than any other number, but some advocate but two. I have been carefully watching the results of some of the mills that have adopted the short system, and have given the results careful examination in comparison with mills working on the long system, and in every test made the short system showed superior results in the quality and color of the flour. These results led me to enquire for the cause. Why did the short system of grinding and bolting produce whiter flour than that made on the long system? After carefully considering the composition of the wheat berry, it was not difficult to find the reason. The starch and gluten which compose the flour in the wheat are pure in themselves. These two elements are by nature provided with three distinct coverings, which in a dry condition, will pulverize as readily as the gluten and starch which we call bran. If this becomes mixed with the flour, it is impossible to remove it by any process now used. We may attempt to remove it by purifying and rebolting, and to some extent succeed, but the finest parts will remain in the flour. Ninety per cent. of the whole should be absolutely pure flour if the milling is properly done. Now let us see why this is not the case, and why it cannot be done in the long system of milling.

The first reason we give is that every time the wheat passes through the rolls, it is subject to a rasping process, which pulverized the hair fibre more or less, and when once pulverised, it can never be properly separated. The purifier and bolts may help it some, but they do not take out the injurious material that has been put there by grinding. The same rule holds good in the reduction of middlings. Middlings should be well purified, then reduced at once. The idea of gradual reduction in middlings is out of date, and is fatal to the color of the flour as well as the gradual reduction of the wheat. Any miller who wishes to prove these statements can do so by carefully examining the product of each break. Make the examination thorough by sifting and grading the material, then apply the water test, which will show the color of each break.

To prove this theory correct, weigh a given quantity of wheat, let it remain twenty-four hours, then grind it; grind also at the same time wheat without being wet and you will discover that the flour is much whiter from the wet wheat than the other that was not wet. The reason is is that the bran was not in a condition to pulverize. This is the reason why so many devices have been invented for steaming and heating wheat before grinding.

It is right here where the advantage of the short system of milling comes in, by reducing the wheat with one or two reductions. This, with the proper separations at the beginning, will prevent the pulverizing process (providing the proper machines are used to accomplish this). And it is this question of the best machine to do this work that will form the main feature of future discussions on this subject. Some have decided that a roller disc mill with proper corrugations is the best for the first operation, to be followed by a pair of corrugated rolls to finish. Other are seeking to accomplish the results by other means. Whatever means are used the object should be to accomplish it in the shortest way possible.

Those millers who have not changed their mills will have the satisfaction of knowing that their mills can be changed for less than half the cost it required four years ago, and the results will be better.

PROGRESS.

NEW ADVERTISEMENTS.

OWEN SOUND

COLLEGIATE INSTITUTE

WILL open on MONDAY, 29TH AUGUST, 1887. Excellent Staff of Teachers. Inspector officially reports it the BEST EQUIPPED SCHOOL IN THE PROVINCE. Classes for First, Second and Third Class Certificates, Junior and Senior Matriculation with honors, and Law and Medical Examinations. At the Examinations in July last, all the Matriculation Candidates and a large percentage of Second and Third Class were successful. Fees $3.00 for the Term—payable at entrance.

Apply to
F. W. MERCHANT, M. A., Principal.
or D. R. DOBIE, Sec. Board of Education.
Owen Sound, Aug. 15, 1887.

STRAY COW.

Came to the premises of the subscriber Lot 29, Con 4, Artemesia, on the 23rd inst., a red and white cow. Owner can have same by proving property and paying expenses.

ANTHONY KENNY.
Artemesia, July 20th, 1887.

J. BRANDER

PRICEVILLE,

While returning thanks to his patrons and the public for their valuable support in the past, begs to announce that he is prepared to supply their various needs

We make it our business to keep a supply of Goods suitable for the needs of our customers, and as

We Buy in Large Quantities Direct from the Manufacturers,

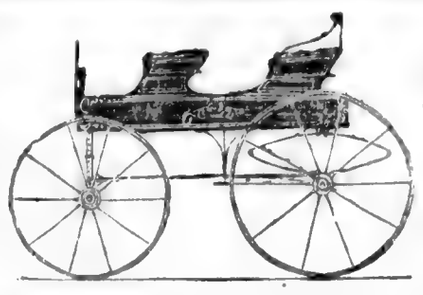
FOR CASH, we are in a position to

Give Extra Value

in every department. Every one should see the immense value we have in FALL GOODS just arriving

Very Respectfully,
JAS. BRANDER.

Priceville, July 26, 1887.



MAXWELL

CARRIAGE WORKS!

LITTLE & BLAKELY,

MANUFACTURERS OF
Carriages, Democrats, Wagons &c.

Repairing, Painting, Horse-Shoeing, and General Jobbing.

Done on Short Notice and at Reasonable Prices.

JOHNSON LITTLE. Blacksmith,
THOS. A. BLAKELY, Wagon-Maker & Painter.

Maxwell, May 26th, 1887.

BOOTS & SHOES!

Having received large additions to my Stock, I have a good supply on hand of Summer Goods.

LADIES' WEAR.—A fine assortment in Prunella, French Kid, Goat, Polish Calf, Buff and Heavy Boots.

MISSES AND BOYS WEAR.—A large variety of Lace & Button Boots, Shoes and Slippers.

CHILDRENS WEAR.—A very large assortment of all sorts and sizes.

MENS WEAR.—I have Buff, Calf and Enamelled Balmorals, Oxford Ties and Strong Lace Boots.

FOR PRICE AND QUALITY, CANNOT BE SURPASSED.

WM. CLAYTON, . Flesherton.

CHEAP ❋ AND ❋ DURABLE!

—THE WELL-KNOWN—

SPEIGHT WAGON!

Call and get Prices, &c. from undersigned.

STOVES, TINWARE, &c. for sale as usual

First-class value in every department.

Agent for VICKER'S EXPRESS. All parcels left with him will be promptly and carefully attended to.

STRAIN'S. - FLESHERTON.

FLESHERTON.

MARBLE WORKS:

E. VANZANT,

ALL KINDS OF

Marble and Monumental Works,

Such as Monuments, Tomb Tables, Headstones Counter and Table Tops—in American and Italian Marble and Granite, and made on short notice. Also Mantles in Marble and Marbleized Slate, &c., &c.

Flesherton, Aug. 30, 1883.

HEALTH FOR ALL.

HOLLOWAY'S PILLS & OINTMENT

THE PILLS

Purify the Blood, correct all Disorders of the

Liver, Stomach, Kidn'ys, and Bowels.

They invigorate and restore to health Debilitated Constitutions, and are invaluable in all Complaints Incidental to Females of all ages. For Children and the aged they are priceless.

THE OINTMENT

Is an infallible remedy for Bad Legs, Bad Breasts, Old Wounds, Sores and Ulcers. It is famous for Gout and Rheumatism. For disorders of the Chest it has no equal.

For SORE THROAT, BRONCHITIS, COUGHS, COLDS

Glandular Swellings, and all Skin Diseases it has no rival; and for contracted and stiff joints it acts like a charm.

Manufactured only at Professor HOLLOWAY'S Establishment,

78, New Oxford Street (late 533, Oxford Street), London.

and are sold at 1s. 1½d., 2s. 9d., 4s. 6d., 11s., 22s., and 33s. each Box or Pot, and may be had of all Medicine Vendors throughout the World.

Purchasers should look to the Label on the Pots and Boxes. If the address is not 533, Oxford Street, London, they are spurious.

FOR SALE.

The undersigned has White Ash Butter Tubs and Churns for sale.

JOS. McCOLMICK,
304-320, Flesherton.

FLAGS AND BANNERS

of superior quality, for Orange and other Societies. Order early.

W M. TEGART,
Thornbury, Ont.

J. W. BATES,

Furniture Dealer and Undertaker,

FLESHERTON, - ONT.

FLESHERTON ADVANCE.

"TRUTH BEFORE FAVOR."—"PRINCIPLES, NOT MEN."

VOL. VII., NO. 322. FLESHERTON, ONTARIO, THURSDAY, AUGUST 25, 1887. A. R. FAWCETT, EDITOR & PROPRIETOR

For above fine finished Watches, accurate Hampden's—my name on, and the reliable Waltham and Elgin Watches, in Gold, Filled Gold, and Coin Silver Cases, go to

W. A. BROWN'S

FINELY STOCKED

JEWELERY STORE.

I am known as the Reliable Jeweller for 20 miles North, South, East and West. I never have misrepresented purposely any goods sold since being in business here. It is easy to sell a 11 Jewelled Watch for "Full Jewelled." It is much easier to sell 8 k. Gold Watches and call them 12 or 14. I don't have to do it. My own name on all warrants, and you will find I can be held responsible if goods are not right.

—|—|342|—|—

WATCHES & CLOCKS

Booked in Repair Book since July 1st, 1886.

SQUARE DEALING,

PRICES CLOSE.

SPECIALTIES:—Fine Watch Repairing, Spex Fitting.

W. A. BROWN,

The People's Jeweller, Markdale.

SAY, HALLO THERE! ADVERTISING PAYS! Of course it does. Just plant an advertisement in THE ADVANCE and see for yourself. Hundreds have done so and were benefitted. Have you a farm you want to sell or rent? Advertise in THE ADVANCE. Have you anything under the sun you want to sell or trade? An advertisement in THE ADVANCE will bring you customers every time. Do you want to buy anything or hire help? Advertise in THE ADVANCE every time. Address or call on A. R. Fawcett, ADVANCE Office, Flesherton, for terms, &c.

CONSUMPTION IN FLESHERTON.

There being good prospects of a fresh quantity of Flour to be consumed in the village and surrounding country the present season, the undersigned has opened out with a good stock of the following lines :—

ROLLER FLOUR!

Best Brands.

Rolled & Granulated Oat-Meal.

Corn Meal,
Cracked Wheat,
Chop,
Shorts,
Bran and Oats,

At Bottom Prices for Cash.

Special Discounts

According to amount of Purchase.

W. W. TRIMBLE,

Next door to Clayton's Shoe Store.

(312-364)

PRINTING! YES, OH, YES! IT WILL PAY all manners of persons who read this advt. to get their Printing done at THE ADVANCE Office, Flesherton. Good work at honest prices every time! A dollar saved is a dollar earned—so the proverb goes. Pamphlets, Posters, Circulars, Programs, Dodgers, Streamers, Bill Heads, Note Heads, Receipts, Note Forms, Business Cards, Visiting Cards, Labels, Tags, &c., Plain or Colored. Address or call on A. R. Fawcett, ADVANCE Office, Flesherton, for terms.

ADVERTISE in The ADVANCE

Tit-Bits.

Consisting of Local and Other Interesting Items gathered by The Advance Reporters.

PUBLISHER'S NOTICE.

All Church, Society, or other notices of a pecuniary character, inserted in the Advance in future, will be charged for at the rate of 10 cents per line first insertion and 5 cents per line each subsequent insertion, (if any).

Regular advertisers' rates remain unchanged.

Get your Lemons at KEEFER'S.

They all talk about it. The immense value they get in everything at Branders's.

Mrs. E. Clark and youngest son, of Orangeville, are the guests of Mrs. A. R. Fawcett.

Garden thieves, take warning! I have a black dog that spits fire and lead! So be careful or take the consequences.—THOMAS MANDERS, Flesherton.

Mrs. W. H. Thurston, of Toronto, has been visiting friends in Kimberley for some time. She returned to the city Tuesday afternoon.

Just opened to-day, at Brander's a wagon load of Boots and Shoes from a first class manufacturer, bought at close prices. Everybody should see them.

Messrs. Fisher & Pulford, Walkerton, give a special prize of one Root Cutter, valued at $10, for best collection of grain at Artemesia Agricultural Society's fall show this year.

The Ladies' Aid of the Presbyterian church here will provide dinner for the public on the second day of East Grey exhibition, also a grand concert on the evening of same day in the Town Hall.

Messrs. M. Richardson & Co., Flesherton, will give five pounds of their recently imported Japan Tea to anyone who will read a letter received by them from Japan.

A box of beautiful plums from Mrs. J. R. Fawcett, Kimberley, shows what a great fruit growing district the "Coo-coo" valley is likely to be in the near future,

Rev. T. Watson preached last Sabbath morning and evening in the Baptist church, Durham, while, at the the same time, his place was ably filled here by Rev. Mr. Cushman.

Master Eddie Thompson, of the Thornbury Standard, paid a brief visit to his mother, Mrs. A. Thompson here on Saturday and Sunday. Eddie is getting along nicely in the office of our old friend Farewell.

We congratulate Master E. K. Richardson—son of M. Richardson, Esq., Flesherton—on having passed the recent examination for third class non-professional teachers at Owen Sound so successfully.

Dundalk and Markdale baseball teams tried conclusions on the grounds of the former Monday of last week. The latter team won by one run, after some sharp playing. On account of darkness coming on, only five innings were played.

The Dominion and Industrial Exhibition, to be held in Toronto, Sept. 5th to 17th, (next month) promises greater attractions than ever to the thousands that annually visit the "Queen City" every fall. The Exhibition will be formally opened by His Excellency, Lord Landsdowne, Governor-General of Canada, at 2 o'clock p. m. on Tuesday, Sept. 6th. Reduced fares on all railways. See bills, programs, &c., for full particulars.

REMOVES THE CAUSE.—Many persons suffer from a symptom of Catarrh that causes nausea, more especially after eating in the morning. Nasal Balm will cure by removing the cause.

25 yds. of Grey Cotton at Brander's for $1. Also the best makes of white Cotton from 8c. up.

Fine samples of apples, plums, and other fruit, have been left with the Agricultural Editor of THE ADVANCE lately, by Mrs. J. Dinwoody, of Flesherton, Mrs. A. Down, and Miss Davis, all of Artemesia, which proves conclusively to us, at least, that this is a good fruit growing Township. The donors will please accept our thanks.

Our thanks are due to the the Secretary of the A. O. F. Demonstration Committee for complimentary badge and invitation to attend the grand demonstration to be held in the city of Brantford, Wednesday, Aug. 24th, in honor of the sixth meeting of the Subsidiary High Court Ancient Order of Foresters of Canada.

A few nights ago the residence of Mr. Uriah Curtis, just North of Hanover, was entered and a quantity of side meat and hams carried off. On going to get some meat for breakfast next morning the theft was discovered. Keep an eye on your cellars, as the irrepressible tramp and others will at times help themselves.—Post.

It is our painful duty again to record a sad accident which occurred on Tuesday last week. Mr. Robert Badger was adjusting a fly cover on one of his horses the day previous when the animal kicked him in the abdomen. The injury was lightly regarded at the time, but the next day serious symptoms were noticeable and the unfortunate man died on Tuesday.—Thornbury News.

Tuesday afternoon Aubrey Foy (better known as Tony), son of Mr. Jas. Foy, merchant, while playing on the street near his own home was attacked and severely bitten about the neck and face by a strange dog which has been hanging around Mr. D. Fisher's residence. One of the dog's teeth went completely through the little boy's lower lip. The animal will be destroyed.—Shelburne Economist.

Two distinguished newspaper men are sojourning in Flesherton just now, namely, Mr. J. D. Clark, of the Hamilton Times, and Mr. McGuire of the Quebec Mercury. The former is the guest of Squire Armstrong while the latter is the guest of Mr. Samuel Kingston. Flesherton extends to both gentlemen—representatives of our two great political parties—a hearty welcome and the right hand of fellowship.

Sunday evening last—just before the people came out of the churches here—some boys were noticed in Mr. W. W. Trimble's flour and feed store by a lady who chanced to be passing at the time. They were making quite free with some cigars and candies. Proceedings have been taken against them, but we have not yet learned with what result. The parents of the boys should give the young rascals a sound flogging and let the law take its course.

A number of lads from this village went to a spring of water owned by Mr. Thos. Graham, near this town, and breaking open a box took therefrom a cream can containing milk which was left there for the purpose of keeping it cool to let the cream rise. They were chased, however, and the can was secured and a few of the boys caught, who were made to divulge the names of their accomplices, otherwise the owner intended to publish their names in the ADVANCE.

For Sale Cheap.

One new Buggy for sale cheap for cash or good paper, or will exchange for a good horse and give the difference.—J. W. WHITTEN, Flesherton. 2t.

The best medical authorities acknowledge the value of Ayer's Pills, and prescribe them with the utmost confidence, as the most effectual remedy for diseases caused by derangements of the stomach, liver, and bowels.

A whole suit of clothes for five dollars at Brander's, Priceville, large enough to fit a muckle loon maist as big as his Faether.

The East Grey Prize List pamphlets have been mailed by Secretary-Treasurer Damude. Besides the large array of premiums offered to competitors in the various departments, extra efforts are now being made to present a goodly number of special attractions in connection therewith. These specialties will be announced in the large posters to be issued shortly, as well as in the columns of THE ADVANCE. Arrangements could not be made in time to have them inserted in the prize list pamphlets.

Mr. John Flesher and child, and Mrs. J. M. Ansley and child, of Parry Sound, are the guests of W. K. Flesher, Esq. It is ten years since the first named was in Flesherton, and it is needless to add, he observed a great change in the place in that time.

"The old schoolhouse is altered now
The benches are replaced" &c.

Yes, and Father Time has brought many changes in other respects, new faces, new buildings, and all the rest of it. "Jack," as he is familiarly called by his old friends, is as genial and jolly as in days of yore. May long life and prosperity attend him.

The Dufferin Advertiser—a most welcome ADVANCE exchange—has arisen from the ashes and comes to hand with an elegant new dressing of newspaper and display type. The headgear is neat, attractive, and can be easily read without calling into requisition the services of an interpreter—a somewhat difficult task as far as many other newspapers are concerned. As usual the Advertiser is well and carefully edited. It has opinions of its own and gives utterance to them fearlessly and honestly. Brother Kennedy has the best wishes of THE ADVANCE.

We had the pleasure of meeting Mr. Wm. McGuire, the genial Editor and Proprietor of the Quebec Daily Mercury, on Saturday evening last. He and some friends, who accompanied him on the trip, were the guests of Mr. and Mrs. Samuel Kingston during their brief stay in Flesherton. Mr. McGuire is a keen, sharp and ready-witted gentleman, of Irish extraction, and one of the best conversationalists we ever came in contact with. Possessed with an inexhaustible fund of good humor the hours glide swiftly by in his company. The Mercury is the oldest daily newspaper published in Canada that has been issued continuously Long may it flourish! There are no less than seven dailies published in Quebec, with its population of scarcely 60,000 souls, four being in French and the rest in English. Mr. McGuire and his friends returned to Quebec on Monday.

The following is an extract from a letter addressed to Messrs. M. Richardson & Co., Flesherton, and dated at Yokohama, Japan, July 1st, 1887:—"Dear Sir: We have the pleasure to advise shipment, as per memo below, of the Teas kindly ordered through our agents Messrs. A Schilling & Co. which go forward to San Francisco to their care on through bill-lading. You will find the tea to answer your expectations in every respect, and to be, as you desired, the best possible value for the money. With your usual enterprise we trust you will have no difficulty in demonstrating to the trade the peculiar merits of your brand, and that the teas which we export in Perfection Tea cans, and which have been cured by the Perfection Process, are superior in every way to other Japan teas whether pan or basket-fired.—Respectfully yours, THE JAPAN TEA SYNDICATE." The tea has come to hand in prime condition and is selling like hot cakes.

ASTHMA.—Persons who have suffered for years with Asthma will find a quick relief and cure in the double treatment of Southern Asthma Cure.

—AT—

RUSSELL'S

NOTED

JEWELRY

STORE,

Flesherton!

Is to be found the finest and most complete stock of

WATCHES, CLOCKS, JEWELRY,

SILVERWARE, and FANCY Goods in this section of country.

Some beautiful designs in ladies' R. Plate Bar Pins and Brooches. Just received, SPECTACLES for the million. In Watches, we keep Waltham, Elgin, Springfield, Illinois, Hampden, Columbus, Swiss, in gold, gold filled, silver and silver-ore cases, 2, 3, 4, & 5 ozs. at from $6.90 to $60, warranted from 2½ to 5 years.

Our Watch Repair Book tells the startling tale of 4[illegible]6 watches repaired from July 1st 1886 to July 1st 1887, which is 140 over and above what any other dealer can show in this section and (We) did not add the watch sales and clock repairs and call them watch repairs to swell the number as some dealers do. Of course our watch repairs increased considerably since last fall on account of so many poor watches being auctioned off around here which needed any amount of repairing and the people are becoming wise to the fact now that for thoroughly good Watches, Clocks, Silverware, etc., and for Fine Watch Repairing, they have of necessity to go to Russell's Not'd Jewelry Store, Flesherton

Wednesday night thieves broke into the shop of D. McLeod, Hopeville, evidently after money. They tried to break open his trunk, which he kept in the shop, but lest in doing so they might make too much noise they took the trunk and contents away. The trunk contained most of Mr. McLeod's personal effects and some valuable tools and will be quite a loss. Strong suspicion rest on some parties, but as yet no arrests have been made. There was a quantity of boots and shoes in the shop which were not touched.—Dundalk Herald.

—FARMERS!—

Don't forget that we are good customers at the Flesherton WOOLEN FACTORY

And we are doing all in our power to please. Customers are finding out it is to their advantage to deal with us as our Prices are Low and Quality Good as any Delaware, and notwithstanding price being cut so close on the cost of hard times, we are nearly every branch, &c., of [illegible] &c., &c. Give us a trial and see for yourself.

W. H. FLESHER.

Flesherton, May 5th, 1887.

The Corn Home from the Mill.

'Twas a low brown cabin, astif grown up from the ground,
For the chinks were filled with mortar, and green moss had grown around.
All the air was filled with murmurs of the summer bird's last thrill,
For the autumn leaves had fallen and the corn had gone to mill,
On the rail-fence seven urchins at once had chanced to light,
Perched up like so many ravens, only all their ~~raven~~ heads were white;
Laughing, chattering—it were thraldom if they passed one moment still,
They were very, very hungry, for their "Pap" had gone to mill.

All at once they heard the clatter of the waggon on the bridge,
Where the winding waves of Mill Creek drained the ditches of the ridge;
Then their glad shouts of "Hooray" all creation seemed to fill,
When they ran to tell their mother, "Pap" was coming from the mill.
All in time the blind old sorrel reined up at the cabin door,
And the meal with glad assistance safely landed on the floor;
And the good wife sweetly smiling, all the cake-pans went to fill,
For the heart was very thankful that the corn had left the mill.

Supper over, every urchin with a piece of Johnny cake,
Went to eat it by the roadside, and the echoes there to wake;
And the solemn Judge just passing, from the house upon the hill,
Smiled to hear the information that the "corn was home from mill."
Then a vision flashed across him of the days of long ago,
When he, too, through all the summer had to plough and plant and mow;
When he made the dreadful scarecrow from the clothes he could not fill
When, across the back of "Jerry" he had packed the corn to mill

Then he thought of one bright being who had wandered at his side,
Dropping golden grains in furrows that he followed on to hide,
And upon the horse behind him, laughing, chattering, never still,
With her golden curls all flying, he had carried her to mill.
And throughout the next long summer how his heart was full of pain,
With the thought of all the beauty he could not see again;
With the thought of pale hands folded, as he covered up the hills,
With the thought of golden ringlets as he rode off to the mill.

But the children, laughing, playing, nor the Judge with solemn brow,
Knew the scene just then enacted in the great house down below;
Where the miller, white and dusty, busy with the grinding still,
Smiled when Bess, the cottage maiden, brought his supper to the mill,
How they, seated close together—watched the wheels go to and fro,
And the water dance and sparkle in the mill race down below;
How he clasped her tight and closely, while she listened very still,
Listened to the "old, old story," in the shadow of the mill.

Thus our lives flow on forever, echoes of each act and word,
Will with joy and sad remembrance in the coming years be heard.
Life is like a false thread winding through the mystic future still,
We must work an unknown mission, like the waters at the mill.

SIR HUGH'S LOVES.

CHAPTER XV.

ERLE ARRIVES AT REDMOND HALL.

"She hath a natural wise sincerity,
A simple truthfulness, and these have lent her
A dignity as nameless as the centre."
—Lowell.

"What thou bidd'st
Unargued I obey; so God ordains;
God is thy law; thou mine; to know more
Is woman's happiest knowledge, and her praise."
—Milton

Lady Redmond sat in her "blue nestie," but this bright winter's morning she was not alone. A better companion than her white kitten, or her favorite Nero, or even her faithful friend Pierre, the St. Bernard, occupied the other velvet rocking-chair.

Outside the snow lay deep and unbroken on the terrace, the little lake was a sheet of blue ice and the sunshine broke on its crisp surface in sparkles of light.

The avenue itself looked like the glade of some enchanted forest, with snow and icicles pendant from every bough; while above stretched the pure blue winter's sky, blue-grey, shadowless, tenderly indicative of softness without warmth and color without radiance.

Fay in her dark ruby dress looked almost as brilliant as the morning itself as she sat by the fire talking to her husband's cousin, Erle Huntingdon, who had come down to while away an idle week or two at the old Hall.

He had been there for ten days now, and he and Fay had become very intimate. Erle had been much struck by the singular beauty of Hugh's child-wife, and he very soon felt almost a brotherly fondness for the gentle little creature, with her soft vivacity and innocent mirth.

It had been a very pleasant ten days to both of them, to Fay especially, who led rather a lonely life.

Erle was such a pleasant companion; he was never too tired or too busy to talk to her. He was so good-natured, so frank and affectionate, so eager to wait on her and do her any little service, that Fay wondered what she would do without him.

Hugh smiled at them indulgently. It always pleased him to see his wee wife happy and amused; but he thought they were like two children together, and secretly marvelled at the scraps of conversation that reached his ears. He thought it was a good thing that Fay should have a companion for her rides and drives when he was too busy to go with her himself, and somehow Hugh was always too busy now.

So Fay and Erle scoured the country together, and when the frost came they skated for hours on the little lake.

Sir Hugh stood and watched them once, and they came skimming across the ice to meet him, hand-in-hand, Fay looking like a bright-eyed bird in her furs.

It was delicious, Fay said, and would not Hugh join them? But her husband shook his head. When other people came to skate, too, and Fay poured out tea for her friends in the damask drawing-room, he always kept near her, as in duty bound; but he took no active part in the festivities, and people wondered why Sir Hugh seemed so grave and unlike himself, and then they glanced at Fay's happy face and seemed mystified.

Erle in his heart was mystified, too. He had always liked his cousin and had looked up at him, thinking him a fine fellow; but he noticed a great change in him when he came down to the old Hall to pay his respects to the little bride. He thought Hugh looked moody and ill; that he was often irritable about trifles. He had never noticed that sharp tone in his voice before. His cheerfulness, too, seemed forced; and he had grown strangely unsociable in his habits. Of course, he was very busy, with his own estate and his wife's to look after; but he wondered why Fay did not accompany him when he rode to some distant farm, and why he shut himself up so much in his study. The old Hugh, he remembered, had been the most genial of companions, with a hearty laugh and a fund of humor; but he had never heard him laugh once in all these ten days.

Erle felt vaguely troubled in his kind-hearted way when he watched Hugh and his little wife together. Hugh's manners did not satisfy Erle's chivalrous enthusiasm. He thought he treated Fay too much like a child. He was gentle with her, he humored her and petted her; but he never asked her opinion or seemed to take pleasure in her society.

"Why on earth has he married her?" he said once to himself as he paced his comfortable room rather indignantly. "He is not a bit in love with her—one sees that in a moment, and yet the poor little thing adores him. It makes one feel miserable to see her gazing at him as though she were worshipping him; and he hardly looks at her, and yet she is the prettiest little creature I have seen for a long time. How Percy would rave about her if he saw her; but I forgot, Percy's idol is a dark-haired goddess."

"All the same," went on Erle restlessly "no man has any right to treat his wife as a child. Hugh never seems to want to know what Fay wishes about anything. He settles everything off-hand and expects her to be satisfied with what he has done; and she is such a dear, gentle little thing that she never objects. It is 'Yes, dear Hugh,' or 'Certainly, if you wish it, Hugh,' from morning to night. Somehow that sickens a fellow. I daresay she is a little childish and crude in her ideas; that aunt of hers must be a duffer to have brought her up like a little nun; but she is sensible in her way. Hugh had no idea that she was reading the paper for an hour yesterday, that she might talk to him about that case in which he is so interested, or he would hardly have snubbed her as he did, by telling her she knew nothing about it. She looked so disappointed, poor little thing, there were tears in her eyes; but Hugh never saw them, he never does see if she is a little tired or dull, and I don't call that treating a wife well."

Erle was working himself up into quite a virtuous fit of indignation on Fay's behalf; but presently he became secretly anxious. Before the end of his visit he grew afraid that more was amiss with Hugh than he at first guessed. He had often stayed with him before and Hugh had visited them at Belgrave House, but he had never noticed any sign of self-indulgence.

He thought Hugh was beginning to take more wine than was good for him. He complained of sleeping badly, and had recourse to narcotics. He was reckless of his health, too, and worked often far into the night, and when Erle remonstrated with him he only said he could not sleep, and he might as well occupy himself.

But in reality he never guessed, except in a vague way, the real reason for this change in his cousin. He would have been shocked and startled if he had known the strange, morbid fever that was robbing Hugh of all rest.

He was hungering and thirsting for the sight of a face that, he said to himself, he had better never look on again; his very nearness to Margaret kept him restless and made his life intolerable.

What a fool he had been to marry, he told himself; to let that child bind him down to this sort of life. If he could only break away for a time—if he could travel and try what change would do for him; but this quiet existence was maddening.

He was trying his fine constitution terribly and he knew it. He would tire himself out riding over his estate, and then sit up over his letters and accounts half the night, till his brain seemed stupefied, and yet he had no wish for sleep.

Erle told him he looked haggard and ill, but Sir Hugh only laughed at him; there was nothing the matter, he said carelessly; he was tough, like all the Redmonds, and he had never been ill in his life. If he only slept better he should be all right, but want of sleep plays the very deuce with a man, and so on.

"If I were you I should not touch spirits or narcotics," observed Erle quietly, "your nerves are a little out of order. You should take things more easily and not sit up so late; one can form the habit of sleep."

But Hugh only scoffed at the notion o nerves, and during his long visit Erle saw little improvement.

He was thankful, and yet puzzled, to see hat Fay did not notice the sad change in her husband. Now and then she would say to him rather timidly, as though she feared a rebuff, "You are not quite well to-day, are you, Hugh? Your hand is so hot and dry; do stay quietly with me this morning and I will read you to sleep," but Hugh only laughed at her anxious face.

"Run away my pet, for I am busy," he would answer. "If you want a companion, here is this idle fellow, Erle, who never did a stroke of work in his life, I believe," and Fay would go away reluctantly.

Erle had already grown very confidential with Fay. In her gentle way she took him to task for his desultory life. Erle owned his faults very frankly. It was quite true he said, that he had not distinguished himself at the university and had been chiefly known there as a boating man; but he had been extremely popular in his college. "It is all very well," he grumbled, as he sat in Fay's boudoir that morning, talking to her in his usual idle fashion. "What is a fellow to do with his life? Perhaps you can tell me that. Uncle ought to have let me make the grand tour, and then I could have enlarged my mind. Ah, yes! every fellow wants change," as Fay smiled at this, "what does a little salmon-fishing in Norway signify; or a month at the Norfolk Broads? That is all I had last year. Uncle talks of the Engadine and the Austrian Tyrol next summer, but he travels en grand seigneur, and that is such a bore."

Erle was perfectly willing to describe his life at Belgrave House to Fay. She was a shrewd little person in her way, and her quaint remarks were very refreshing. He even thought that he would confide in her after a fashion, and hint at a certain difficulty and complication that had come into his life; he was rather desirous of knowing her opinion; but he began in such a roundabout fashion that Fay was quite perplexed. She understood at last that he was talking about two girls, who both seemed to influence him, and for whom he had special liking; but for a long time she could not find out which was the chief favorite.

She grew impatient at last, in her pretty, imperious way, and put a stop to his unsatisfactory rambling style of talk, by asking him a few downright questions.

"You are terribly vague," she said, wrinkling her forehead in a wise way and folding her little white hands on her lap; they looked absurdly dimpled and babyish in spite of the brilliant diamond and emerald rings that loaded them. "How is a person to understand all that rigmarole? Perhaps I am stupid, but you talk so fast, you silly boy, and now tell me exactly what this Miss Selby is like. I think you said her name was Evelyn."

"Oh, I am not good at descriptions," returned Erle, pulling Nero's long, glossy ears. "She is an awfully jolly girl, plenty of go in her, lights up well of an evening and knows exactly what to say to a fellow—keeps him alive, you know; the sort of a girl who will dance like a bird half the night and get up early the next morning and have an hour's canter in the Park before breakfast."

"Ah," in a mystified tone, "she seems a very active young person; but you have not made me see her. Is she tall or short, Erle?"

"Well, she is not the tall, scraggy sort, neither is she a diminutive creature, like your ladyship. Miss Selby is medium height and has a good figure."

"Yes, and her face?" demanded Fay with a baby frown, "you are very bad at description, Erle, very bad, indeed."

"Well, she is not dark," returned Erle desperately, "not a brunette, I mean; and she is not fair, like the other one, she has brown hair—yes, I am sure it is brown—and good features. Well, I suppose people call her exceedingly handsome, and she dresses well and holds herself well and is altogether a pleasant sort of young woman."

Fay's lip curled disdainfully. "I do not think I admire your description much, sir. Plenty of go in her; well, who cares for that? And lights up well of an evening, as though she were a ball-room decoration. I think she seems a frivolous sort of creature."

"Oh, no," replied Erle eagerly, for this would not do at all. Fay's little satire fell very short of the truth. "You have not hit it off exactly. Lady Maltravers is frivolous, if you like—a mild edition of the renowned Mrs. Skewton—thinks of nothing but diamonds and settlements and all the vanities for which your worldly woman sells her soul. It is a great wonder that, with such an example before her eyes, Miss Selby is not as bad herself; but she is a wonderfully sensible girl and never talks that sort of nonsense. Why, she goes to early service and looks after some poor people; not that she ever mentions these facts, for she is not a goody-goody sort at all."

"Oh, no, she has too much go in her," returned Fay calmly. "I was quite right when I said that she was an active young person. And now, about the other one, Erle?"

"Well," Erle began again, but this time he utterly broke down; for how was he to describe this girl with her beautiful frank mouth and her soft smiling eyes. He had never found out their color at all. Would Fay understand if he told her of the sprightliness and sweetness that, in his opinion, made Fern so peculiarly attractive to him. But, to his astonishment, Fay grasped the whole situation in a moment.

"Oh, you need not tell me, you poor boo," she said, with a knowing nod of her head, "so it is not the young lady with the go in her, though she does dance like a bird; it is this other one with the fair hair and pretty smile."

"How do you know, you little witch?" returned Erle, staring at her with an honest boyish blush on his face. "Do you know that Miss Trafford is poor; that she makes her own gowns and teaches the vicar's little girls; and that Miss Selby, of whom you speak so rudely, is niece to a countess?"

"Well, what of that?" responded Fay scornfully, "if your lady love be poor, Erle, you are rich enough for both;" but he interrupted her with an alarmed air.

"That is the worst of chattering to a woman," he said, in a lofty way. "If you give them an inch, they take an ell. Who said I was in love with either of them? Do you know my uncle has spoken to me about Miss Selby? He says she is a fine girl and after his own heart, and he has given me a strong hint that an engagement with her will be greatly for my interest."

But Fay turned a deaf ear to all this.

"And the fair-haired girl with the pretty smile; if you marry her, Erle?"

"In that case my uncle would refuse to have anything more to do with me. No doubt he would disinherit me, as he did his own daughter, and Percy would be his heir. Ah, it is all very well talking, Fay," and here Erle looked at her rather gloomily. "I have never learnt to work, and I should make a pretty mess of my life. It would be poor Mrs. Trafford's experience over again. And he shook his head when Fay suggested that Hugh should let him have one of his farms. He knew nothing about farming; a little Latin and Greek, a smattering of French and German were his chief acquirements. "I should have to turn boatman, or starve. No, no, Fay; I must not swamp my own prospects for a mere sentimental idea. And, after all, Miss Selby is very nice."

Fay was very angry with him when he said this, for she had taken a curious fancy to this Fern Trafford, but Erle would not listen to her; he got up and shook himself and walked to the window, and then very gravely proposed a game of snowballing in the avenue.

Fay thought he was serious and expressed herself much shocked at the idea. Hugh would not like it, she was sure; one of the gardeners might see them. As it was, Hugh had told her he was afraid the servants were not sufficiently in awe of her ever since they saw her playing hide-and-seek in the hall with Nero.

She confessed that she was very fond of it, though, and had snowballed Nero last year in the Daintree Garden, and Aunt Griselda had not been shocked at all.

"Don't you sometimes wish you were back at Daintree?" asked Erle, turning round from the window and contemplating the pretty flushed face rather curiously.

"Oh, no," she returned quickly, "how can you ask me such a question, Erle? I could not imagine life without Hugh. Does it not seem strange?" she continued seriously, "I have only been married about five months, and yet I find it impossible to imagine myself back at the cottage without Hugh."

"Do you know," observed Erle carelessly, as he sauntered back to the fireplace, "that I have been here ten days and must begin to think of my return? If there is one thing I hate, it is to outstay my welcome. I should be afraid of boring you both if I stayed much longer. Well, what now?" breaking off in some surprise.

"Ah, Erle!" exclaimed Fay sorrowfully, the smiles and the dimples disappearing in a moment, "you are surely not going away yet. What shall I do without you?" continued the poor child. "Who will ride and drive and skate with me when you are gone?"

"Why, your husband, to be sure," returned Erle lightly, watching her as he spoke. "You have not forgotten your husband, you naughty woman!"

Fay never knew why a sudden sharp pang shot through her at Erle's careless remark.

It had never occurred to her simple mind to question her husband's right to keep so entirely aloof from her and to give her such fragments of his time. But now, as Erle spoke, a dim unconscious feeling came over her that another was usurping his rightful place; that it was her husband who ought to be riding and driving with her, and not his young cousin, but in her wifely loyalty she stifled the feeling, and spoke firmly, though with crimsoned cheeks, like the brave little woman she really was.

"Why, you extremely foolish boy," she said, "don't you know that Hugh has something better to do with his time than to waste it on me? You see," she continued, with much dignity, "he has my estate to look after as well as his own, and it is a large one, and he has no reliable bailiff."

"Dear, dear," replied Erle, with much solemnity.

"And he has to ride over to Pierrepoint on magisterial business ever so often," and here Fay stammered slightly over the long world, but recovered herself in an instant; "and he visits the infirmary, and looks after any of his people who are ill there."

Here Erle again said, "Dear, dear;" but his provoking smile died away after a glance at her face.

"And," continued Fay, her mouth quivering a little, "you must see how proud I am of being his wife, and must not think that I am sorry that he is able to spend so little of his time with me, for I would not have him neglect his duty for the world; no, no, he is far too good and noble and useful to waste his time on me;" and Fay's face wore such a sweet tremulous smile as she spoke that Erle whispered under his breath, "You are a darling," and went out silently, and perhaps for the first time in his life forgot to hum as he put on his furlined coat.

And Fay, standing alone in her little room, whispered softly, "No, no, my bonnie Hugh, your Wee Wifie loves you far too well to keep you all to herself," but during the remainder of the day she was a little quieter than usual; and Erle missed the gentle fun that rippled into such a stream of girlish talk. He had no idea that every now and then his words came back to her with a little throb of pain, "You have your husband, Fay."

Yes, she had her husband; but would the time ever come to the girl-wife when she should know she had him, but that she could not hold him, when she should learn that he had given her everything but his heart, and cry out against him in that bitter waking that all was worthless to her but that?

CHAPTER XVI.

FAY'S DILEMMA.

Blessing she is; God made her so;
And deeds of week-day holiness
Fall from her noiseless as the snow;
Nor hath she ever chanced to know
That aught were easier than to bless.
Lowell.

And through the windows of her eyes
We often saw her saintly soul,
Serene, and sad, and sorrowful,
Go sorrowing for lost Paradise.
Gerald Massey.

A few days after that Fay met with a slight accident.

The snow had been falling very heavily all night, and when Fay went to the window the next morning, she looked out on a white world, and not a vestige of the blue ice could be seen for the drifts that lay heaped on the little lake.

She called Hugh to look out with her. "What a pity," she said, sorrowfully; "for we had asked the Romney girls and the Spooners to come up and skate this afternoon. Erle is so fond of young ladies, and he admires Dora Spooner immensely, and now I suppose there will be no skating."

"Of course the men could sweep the snow away fast enough," returned Hugh, with a hasty glance at the glorious prospect outside; there were tiny bird tracks on the white surface, some brown sparrows and a robin were hopping across the snow. Not a breath stirred the laden branches, though they drooped under their snowy festoons. "I daresay the ice would be right enough for a little while; but the air feels milder, and there is danger of a thaw."

"Never mind, we will see how it is to-morrow, and Erle shall take me for a walk instead. I suppose," a little plaintively, "you will be too busy to come too?"

"Oh, yes, far too busy," Hugh assured her, as he seated himself at the breakfast table and commenced opening his letters. Fay read hers—a few notes—and then sat silent behind her silver urn until Erle sauntered lazily into the room, and then she brightened up and began to talk.

"I think I will send off a note to the Vicarage, and ask Dora and the others to come all the same, and we will have a nice walk this morning—that is, if you do not mind, Hugh," looking at the handsome abstracted face bent over the paper; but she had to repeat her question before it reached Hugh's ear.

"Oh, no! it does not matter to me," he answered, indifferently. "Ask whom you like, Fay. The Spooners and Romneys, did you say? Oh! by all means, if you want them;" but it may be doubted whether he ever heard her thanks as he buried himself in his paper again.

The dogs were delighted at the prospect of a walk, when Fay consulted them; so a merry party started down the avenue—Fay in her furs and little sealskin hat, which made her look more a child than ever, and Erle in that wonderful coat of his, lined with sable, and the two big dogs racing on before them, and ploughing with their noses in the deep cold snow.

They had walked about two miles, and were thoroughly enjoying themselves, when all at once Fay slipped.

How it happened neither of them had any idea. Fay was sure-footed, she skimmed over the frozen snow as lightly as a bird. Erle never had to offer her any assistance—he would as soon have thought of helping a robin. It must have been orange-peel, as Fay suggested—only neither of them saw any—but all the same, just as Erle was walking calmly along, striking carelessly at the branches with his dandy cane, and Fay chattering and laughing in her usual fashion, all at once she slipped, and her foot seemed to double up under her, and she sank down comfortably on the snow, only with rather a pale face.

It was very awkward and embarrassing, a most unfortunate circumstance, as they were two miles from Redmond Hall, and there was Fay protesting that she did not think she could stand, much less walk; and when Erle knelt down to examine the dainty little foot, and touched it lightly, Fay turned still paler, and uttered a little cry, but the next moment she laughed.

"I am afraid I have sprained my ankle. It was very silly and awkward of me, and I cannot think how it happened. No, it is not so very painful, unless I try to move. What are we to do, Erle?"

"That is just what I don't know," he returned, disconsolately, looking down the lane, while the two dogs gazed wistfully into his face, as though they were quite aware of the dilemma, and felt very sorry for their little mistress. "I suppose you could not ride on Pierre's back, you are hardly small enough for that; and with all my goodwill I am afraid I should not succeed in carrying you two miles—these furs are heavy, Fay—and yet how am I to leave you sitting in the snow while I go in search of help. I suppose," with another look, that only landed him in ploughed fields, "there is not a house near, and yet this is one of the Sandycliffe lanes."

"I don't think we are far from the Grange—the curious old red-brick house we passed the other day. This lane leads to the Sandycliffe road, and I expect we are not a quarter of a mile from the village."

"All right," responded Erle, cheerfully; "I can carry you as far as that easily."

"Oh! but we must not go to the Grange," returned Fay, in rather a regretful voice. She was suffering a good deal of pain with her foot, her boot hurt her so, but she would not make a fuss. "The Ferrers are the only people who have not called on us, and Hugh would not like me to go there."

"Nonsense," replied Erle, impatiently; "what does that matter in a case like this. I suppose you think that good Samaritan ought to have left his card first before he helped that poor traveller?"

Fay tried to laugh, but it was rather an effort. "You do not understand," she said, gently; "Hugh used to know the Ferrers, and he says they are very nice people; he is the blind vicar of Sandycliffe, and his sister lives with him. I do not know whether they are old or young; but Hugh said that he had had a misunderstanding with them, and that it would be very awkward to renew the acquaintance; he does not wish me to visit them."

"Perhaps not. I daresay the Samaritan and the unfortunate traveller were not on visiting terms afterwards, but under the present agreeable circumstances we must certainly avail ourselves of the first shelter that offers itself. Hugh would quite approve of my advice, and in his absence you must allow me to judge for you;" and there was a slight peremptoriness in Erle's voice, to which Fay yielded for she offered no resistance when he lifted her from the ground with his old playful smile.

Fay was very small and light, but her furs were heavy; still, Erle was strong and wiry, and he carried her easy enough—he actually had breath to joke too—while the two dogs bounded before him barking joyously, and actually turning in at the Grange gates of their own accord—at least Pierre did, and Nero followed him.

Erle looked up curiously at the old red-brick house, with its picturesque gables and mullioned windows, and then, as he deposited Fay on the stone seat inside the porch, and was just raising his hand to the knocker, the door opened, and a very tall man in clerical dress appeared suddenly on the threshold. Erle's hand fell to his side, and he and Fay exchanged puzzled glances; it must be Mr. Ferrers, they thought, and of course he did not know any one was there. He stood with his face turned to the wintry sunshine, and his grand massive-looking head bowed a little. The next moment Pierre jumped up and licked his hands, and tried to put his huge paws on his shoulder, whining with delight. Mr. Ferrers started slightly. "Why, Pierre, my fine fellow, I ought to know that rough greeting of yours by this time; it is a long time since you have called at the Grange; whom have you brought with you, Pierre?" stroking the dog's noble head.

Erle came forward at once. "My cousin, Lady Redmond, has met with rather an awkward accident in one of the lanes—she has sprained her ankle, and is in great pain; may I lift her on that comfortable oak-settle by the hall fire while I go in search of help. I am Sir Hugh's cousin, Erle Huntingdon."

"Lady Redmond," ejaculated Mr. Ferrers; and Fay wondered at the sudden shadow that passed over her host's fine face. "Oh, yes, bring her in, Mr. Huntingdon, but we must find a softer couch than the oak-settle. Margaret—where are you, Margaret?" and the next moment a clear, pleasant voice answered, "I am here, Raby;" and a tall, graceful-looking woman, with dead-brown hair and calm beautiful face, crossed the long hall. Fay seemed to see her coming through a sort of haze, and she put out her hands involuntarily; Margaret's voice changed as she took them. "Ah, poor child, she is faint. Will you bring her into my morning room, Mr. Huntingdon, there is an easy couch there, and a nice fire?" and Margaret led the way to a pleasant room with an old-fashioned bay window overlooking the sunny lawn and yew-tree walk; and then took off the little sealskin hat with hand that trembled slightly, and laid the pretty head with its softly ruffled hair on the cushions, and then put some wine to Fay's lips. Fay roused herself and drank some obediently, and a little color came back to her face. "It is my foot, the boot hurts it so," she said, faintly.

(To be continued.)

Fifty thousand soldiers guard the railroad when the Czar travels. But even this great army cannot keep off the train boy.

IRISH LAND BILL.

Its Clauses Discussed by the Lord in Session.

AMENDMENTS MADE TO THE BILL.

A last (Friday) night's London cable says: In the House of Lords this evening, on motion to consider the House of Commons amendments to the Land Bill, the Duke of Argyll warned the House that the Bill in its present form was an immense development of the Gladstone Land Act of 1881, and one that in the future would lead to the development of some defection. The Bill, he declared, would foster among the Irish not industry, but laziness, making tenants more unthrifty. It would give tenants the privilege of regulating rents to such an extent as to enable them, however lazy or ignorant, to remain on their holdings. The Bill was a violation of recognized truths. If political reasons forced the House to accept some of the amendments he hoped that the members would have the courage to reject others which simply proposed the robbery of land-owners.

Earl Granville admitted that the Bill was imperfect, but it was a compromise measure and the best obtainable under the circumstances, and it was therefore advisable that the House approve it. Nothing could be gained by discussing the Bill on abstract economic principles.

Lord Salisbury said he felt the justice of the Duke of Argyll's criticism. The Bill was undoubtedly a consequence of the Liberal Government's land legislation, in which a departure was made from the principle of freedom of contract. But it was only a temporary measure, preceding larger proposals, by means of which the Government would try to mitigate the evils of previous legislation. The Government had not accepted the amendments without anxious consideration as to what the result of their rejection would be. The abandonment of the Bill was the alternative, and the Government could not accept that responsibility. Therefore he urged the House to recognize the difficulties of the position and accede to the amendments.

Lord Selborne (Liberal) said he thought the Government would have been unwise to throw up the Bill. He would rather have cut off his right hand than have been a party to the passing of the Act of 1881 if he had thought for a moment that its author had entered upon a course that would lead to such a disastrous development of the Irish policy as was now troubling the peace and prosperity of the country.

Baron Howth, Liberal, said that the Government appeared to entertain the idea that they should reduce the value of land [illegible] as much as possible before proceeding [illegible] and purchase scheme.

The Earl of Dunraven proposed to amend the fifth clause by providing that the court revising judicial rents shall state the scale of prices of produce affecting the holding.

Lord Salisbury objected, saying that the publication of such information would multiply discontent and encourage agitation.

The amendment was withdrawn.

The Earl of Dunraven next proposed the rejection of the House of Commons amendment relating to town parks.

On Lord Salisbury's advice the proposal of Earl Dunraven was accepted.

Earl Cadogan, Lord Privy Seal, moved that revision of rents be based upon the difference in prices in 1887 as compared with prices from 1881 to 1885.

Earl Spencer and Earl Kimberley opposed the motion, but it was carried—29 to 17. The remaining House of Commons amendments were adopted.

PLEURO-PNEUMONIA IN DETROIT.

The Meat Inspector Reports Many Fatal Cases in the City.

A Detroit despatch says: The existence in Detroit of pleuro-pneumonia will prove a surprise to citizens generally. On Monday last George Kantzler, Meat Inspector for the Western District, was apprised of the fact that a number of milch cows in the vicinity of King's Cattle Yards, were suffering from the malady. Mr. Kantzler at once drove to the locality and says that as nearly as can be ascertained five fatal cases of the disease have occurred, and that upwards of twenty-five cattle in the first stages of the contagion have been butchered and sold to the public for food. The first fatal case, the Meat Inspector says, was in the herd of a milkman whose stables are on Twelfth street, near King's Cattle Yards, and occurred on Monday last. On Tuesday two more cows died, and one is at present in the last stages of the malady. In another herd near by, one cow died on Wednesday and one last night. A neighbor of another milk dealer asserts positively that she saw two of the latter's cows lying dead several days ago but this is denied by the owner. It is asserted by Meat Inspector Kantzler, however, that the milk dealer had a herd of nineteen head only a short time ago and had disposed of them all to a butcher near by. On Tuesday he reported the matter to Health Officer Duffield, and that official, recognizing the importance of the matter, at once hastened to make a thorough investigation. He came to the conclusion that it was the genuine Texas lung plague, which has wrought such terrible ravages in other localities and is believed to have been communicated to local stocks by Texas cattle on their way East, which have been unloaded for food and water.

Locked up His Boy and Starved Him.

Savino Vinceno was arrested by the Tenth Precinct police yesterday for neglect and cruelty to his child Joseph, 9 years old. The father has been in the habit of locking his boy in the room while both parents were at work without furnishing him food or water. The key was turned on the unwilling prisoner at 6 o'clock yesterday morning, and an hour and a half later the lad attempted to make his escape. He crawled from the fourth story window to the fire escape at No. 21 Spring street, and, on attempting to descend, became dizzy and fell headlong to the yard. He was so badly battered about the head and body that his recovery is doubtful. He had been deprived of food for twenty-four hours and attempted his perilous descent in search of something to eat.—N. Y. World.

—It is after a man has attained a ripe old age that he begins to fall off.

CONTEMPT OF COURT.

A Senator Ridicules the Court, is Fined, Jailed and Released by a Mob.

A Winchester (Va.) despatch says: United States Senator Riddleberger, who was sentenced on Saturday at Woodstock by Judge Newman, of the County Court, to pay a fine of $25 and be imprisoned for five days for contempt of court, was released from jail last night by a mob. The circumstances leading up to his arrest are related as follows by an eye-witness: On Thursday W. W. Jones was tried for larceny and the jury found that he was insane. Jones was a client of Senator Riddleberger's and the verdict made the Senator angry. He was accused of writing a placard and giving a boy $2 to haul Jones up and down the town, the latter displaying the placard meanwhile which had written on it: "Verdict, Bill Jones Not Guilty, But Insane, Jury Insane, Lawyers Insane, Court Insane in the Main." The noise occasioned by this display disturbed the proceedings of the court then in session and the Commonwealth's Attorney, J. C. Baker, had the Judge issue an order for Senator Riddleberger to appear before Judge Newman and show cause why he (Riddleberger) should not be fined and imprisoned for ridiculing the Judge and jury and disturbing the court. At 5 o'clock Senator Riddleberger appeared before the court and defended himself. He said that Judge Newman had no jurisdiction in the case, which the Judge denied, and asked Senator Riddleberger to sit down until the evidence could be taken to prove that he (the Senator) was the one who instigated the ridicule, and then, he said, the court could hear the argument. Senator Riddleberger would not sit down, and the court fined him $25. He then defied the court and said: "This court shall not send me to jail." Judge Newman then told the Sheriff to take the Senator to jail for five days. Senator Riddleberger said he would like to see the man who could take him to jail, and Sheriff Whitman at once arrested the Senator and locked him up. This action caused much excitement, and this morning at 2 o'clock a mob of 200 men, supposed to be from Edinburg, in this county, scaled the walls of the jail yard and took the Senator out on ladders.

POISONED CONFECTIONERY.

Over Twenty Pittsburg People Sick Eating Sweetmeats.

A Pittsburg (Pa.) despatch says: Yellow chrome or some other equally deadly compound seems to have become an active ingredient of Pittsburg confectionery, as no fewer than twenty-three persons living in the Seventeenth Ward are lying more or less ill from the effects of poison. A little daughter of Charles Baker, a contractor, who lives on Forty-sixth street, bought a custard cake at the grocery store of L. J. Logue, corner Centre and Forty-fifth streets yesterday. This cake was partaken of at the morning meal by the entire Baker family and one or two boarders. By noon all who had eaten of the confection were suffering violent pains, coupled with nausea. Emetics, under medical aid, were promptly administered, and, although for a while it was doubtful if any would recover, at a late hour last night the patients were supposed to be out of danger. Besides Mr. and Mrs. Baker and their three children, Lizzie McCarthy, servant, William and Robert Rice and John Craig, boarders, were the other victims. Mrs. Logan and Minnie Caudeller, nurse girl, who had eaten some of the grocer's cake the night previous, were also very sick, with indications of poison. Mr. J. J. Shafer, a grocer, and family, who lives on Forty-fifth street, also bought and ate a quantity of the cake and are more or less ill. Besides the Shafers, two sisters of Mrs. Shafer and a niece constitute the family. They are all affected to a greater or less extent. A butcher named Simon, who lives in the same locality, his wife and four children ate of the deadly cake and are yet very sick. L. J. Logue, the grocer who sold the cake, alleges he purchased it at a baker shop in the East End.

FIGHT FOR A CHILD.

A Mother Charged with Kidnapping her Own Daughter.

A London despatch says: A somewhat exciting incident took place on Saturday at the Grand Trunk station. It seems that about a year ago Mr. and Mrs. George White, of Oil City, Pa., who formerly lived in London, agreed to separate, and placed their children with different parties, their girl Nettie, 10 years old, being sent to live with Mrs. Daniel Gales, of this city. Subsequently the couple became reconciled and decided to gather their children around them and start housekeeping again. Mrs. White's mother came to London for the girl Nettie, but Mrs. Gales refused to let the child go, so Mrs. White came herself, arriving yesterday morning. Driving to Mrs. Gales' house on Richmond street, the mother chanced to see her child playing in the yard, got her into the cab and drove back to the station, Nettie screaming and fighting all the way. At the station the mother procured tickets for Oil City and was about starting away on the Wabash Atlantic express, when Nettie's boisterous conduct attracted the attention of the passengers, who imagined that the child was being kidnapped. The result was that both mother and child were taken to the police station, where Mrs. Gales also appeared. A hot dispute between mother and guardian ensued, in which, however, the former finally triumphed and obtained permission to take her child home.

Not the Place for Him.

"You'll find this a very quiet house," said Miss Poundsteak. "Most of the boarders are single ladies and members of a sewing circle."

"Any poker going on?" asked Reed.

"Good gracious, no!" exclaimed the pious landlady, horrified.

"Well," returned Reed, "if that's the case I guess it wouldn't pay me to board here."—The Epoch.

An Esquimaux will eat twenty pounds of meat per diem, lubricating the mass with as much oil as he can swallow; yet a Tongouse will go twenty pounds better, for he can get away with forty pounds of reindeer meat in the same space of time. Both of them blush for their feeble powers when they see three Yakutes demolish a whole reindeer at one sitting and rise apparently none the worse for the feed.

THE SECRET OF THE SOUL.

A Fragment by T. Gautier Giving a Glimpse of Hindoo Belief.

The following weird incident is from Gautier's "Tales Before Supper": A priest of the temple of Tirunamalay, to whom I disclosed my intentions, told me of a yogi who dwelt in one of the grottoes of the isle of Elephanta, and who had reached the highest degree of sanctity. I found him propped up against the wall of the cavern. Robed in sackcloth, his knees drawn up to his chin, his fingers clasped around his legs, he crouched there motionless. His upturned pupils left visible only the whites of his eyes; his drawn lips exposed his teeth; his skin clung to his cheek bones; his hair, thrown back, hung in stiff locks like over-hanging plants; his beard, divided in two floods, nearly touched the ground, and his nails curved inward like an eagle's claw. His skin, naturally brown, had been dried and darkened by the sun till it resembled basalt, and, thus seated, he looked both in form and color like a Canopic vase. At first I thought him dead. His arms, that were anchylosed in a cataleptic immobility, I shook in vain; in his ear I shouted the most powerful of the sacramental words which were to reveal me to him as initiate, but he heeded them not, nor did his eyelids quiver. In my despair of arousing him I was about to leave, when suddenly I heard a singular rustle; swift as a lightning spark a bluish flash passed before my eyes, hovered for a second on the half-open lips of the penitent, and disappeared. Brahma-Logum (such was the name of this holy personage) seemed to awake from a lethargy. He opened his eyes, gazed at me in a natural manner, and answered my questions. "Your wish is fulfilled," he said; "you have seen a soul. I have succeeded in freeing mine from my body whenever it so pleases me. It goes and returns like luminous bee, perceptible only to the eyes of the adept. I have fasted, I have prayed, I have meditated so long, I have dominated the flesh so rigorously, that I have been able to loosen the terrestrial bonds. Vishnu, the god of the tenfold incarnations, has revealed to me the mysterious syllable that guides the soul in its avatars. If, after making the consecrated gestures, I were to pronounce that word your soul would fly away and animate whatever man or beast I might designate. I bequeath you this secret, which of the whole world I am now the sole possessor. I am glad you have come, for I long to disappear in the bosom of the increate as does the drop of water that falls in the sea." And therewith the penitent whispered feebly but very distinctly a few syllables which made a shudder run down my back.

SPURGEON AND THE BAPTISTS.

The Great Preacher on the Broadening of Dissent.

A London cable says: Mr. Spurgeon is reported to be at variance with the Baptist Union, and it is said will consider himself in nowise bound by the decision of the coming conference between the Baptists and the Congregationalists. In a remarkable article on "The Broadening of Dissent," Mr. Spurgeon writes: "A new religion has been initiated which is no more like Christianity than chalk is like cheese. A religion, destitute of moral honesty, palms itself off as the old faith with slight improvements, and on this plea usurps pulpits erected for the purpose of preaching the Gospel. At the back of this doctrinal falsehood comes the natural doctrine of spiritual life, which, while it is wanting among certain Dissenters, is becoming fuller of zeal and force in the Episcopal Church, where the Gospel is fully preached. With the Holy Ghost sent down from Heaven, our churches not only hold their own but win converts, but their strength is gone when the Gospel is concealed and the life of prayers slighted, the whole thing becoming a mere form and fiction and for this our heart is sorely grieved." The article is aimed at the preaching of the Congregationalists, and not at their character, which, in the main, Mr. Spurgeon approves. The fact that it makes no mention of Dr Parker, of the City Temple, is somewhat commented upon.

Culinary Mysteries.

How true it is that few of us know what we are really eating. The manner in which a cultured appetite can be deceived with a plebeian morsel is thus related: A bet was recently made by two French gourmands, one of which asserted that he could detect the component parts of any dish that was set before him, the other betting at great odds that he would not be able to tell the material wherewith his cook would prepare a "savory dish" for them. The cook, a Frenchman, of course, exerted all his talents and surpassed all praise. The dish was placed before the knowing epicure. He tastes, smacks his lips, tastes again, smells it, tastes again. Alas! it is redolent of all rich odors; such gravy, such solids—so soft, so tender! What can it be? A wondrous prepared tripe? No! Calf's head in a new shape? No, no, no, a thousand noes. Our epicure gives it up. "It is old white kid gloves!" is the cool explanation when the bet is resigned as lost. —Boston Traveller.

Asking Too Much.

The party from the Buccaneer House started at 3 a.m. to go to a peak from which a $10 view of the sunrise could be obtained. They wandered around until 12.30 trying to find the peak; then they wandered around until 5 p.m. trying to find the hotel. Then they became hungry and weary and impatient, as summer boarders will sometimes become, and the boldest of them—a dark-browed, silent man, who seemed to be perfectly devoid of fear, and who, it was reported, had once committed a murder, and, as some said, had even asked the waiter not to change his seat at the table during the meal—now asked the guide timidly: "Do you know in which direction is the hotel?" The indignant guide turned on him like a lion at bay: "Gaul slam it, no! I dun't know nawthin about wher we be; I ain't never guided in these parts till this summer. Dew ye 'xpect a man to learn the hull State of Maine in one trip."—Brooklyn Eagle.

It has been conjectured that the extraordinary heat this summer may be due to these laced-in tailor-made gowns, as they raise a wearer's temperature about ten degrees. It is an idea.

NEW YORK EXPECTATIONS

Of Catching up to London in the Race for Population.

On the basis of the number of names in the new city directory, the population of New York, from the Southern boundary of Yonkers to the Battery, is not less than 1,600,000. The population of Brooklyn is probably over 750,000, and, taking into account other communities immediately dependent on, and geographically united to, the port of New York, the present population of the Metropolitan district is more than 2,500,000. At the present moment the population of the area known as the Registration District of London is about 4,250,000, so that there is a long interval to be covered before we can begin to rival the populousness of the great English "province in brick and mortar." But if New York keeps up its accelerated rate of growth the difference before another generation is over may be wiped out. London is growing at the rate of about 66,000 a year, while New York's growth is about 60,000. But in the ten years between 1870 and 1880 the average annual addition to our city population was less than 27,000, so that we have already more than doubled the annual increment of the decade preceding last census, and have for the last six years established an average of 58,000. This kind of geometrical progression has only to be maintained to make the size of New York as unexampled as its growth.—New York Epoch.

Connected With the Road.

"I have met with queer characters in my day," remarked a conductor on one of the city roads last evening. "All sorts of excuses are given and all old fakes are worked to get a ride. One of the nerviest men it has been my luck to meet was a well-to-do old skinflint that used to ride frequently when I first came on the line. The first time I attempted to collect his fare he smiled knowingly and in an off hand manner said: 'Oh, that's all right.' I was young in the 'biz' and passed him by. He worked the 'way' to death. Not only did he ride himself but frequently invited some friends to accompany him. At last I tumbled and made some inquiries at headquarters touching his right to ride free. The very next morning, which was one of the hottest of a hot July day, he boarded the car. 'Fare!' I yelled in his ear. 'Oh, that's all right,' he placidly replied. 'No, it isn't all right; you can't play me any longer,' was my answer. Assuming an air of injured dignity the old fraud said: 'Connected with the road.' 'In what capacity?' 'My son drove the snow-plough on your road last winter.' That man never rode with me again unless he had the dust."—Syracuse Courier.

How to Grow Plump.

The famous Mr. Banting, who reduced his weight by more than fifty pounds in one year, found that sugar was the most fattening thing he could eat. Hence, to increase your weight eat cakes, puddings, syrup, honey, candy and pastry, always taking care that it be crisp and digestible, for indigestible food is a chief cause of leanness. New England pie-crust is probably responsible for the appearance of the typical gaunt Yankee. Other fattening articles of food are tender lamb, salmon and eels, milk and cream, corn bread and butter, and those vegetables which grow underground and of which sugar is made—beets, turnips, etc. Boiled or baked potatoes, mashed on the plate and seasoned with salt and fresh butter, make a delicious dish, rapidly fattening. Eat often and very slowly, for it is not the quantity that is eaten but the amount that is thoroughly digested that nourishes the system and rounds the bodily contour.—The Epoch.

In an Off-hand Way.

"Dan," said a contractor to one of his trusted employees, "when you are down seeing about that line this morning, I wish you would mention to Dempsey that I would like to have that little bill paid. You needn't press it, you know, but just mention it to him in an off-hand manner."

"Yes, sorr."

"I got the money from Dempsey, sorr," said Dan on his return.

"I'm very glad; you merely alluded to it in an off-hand way I suppose."

"Yes, sorr, I handed him the bill and towld him if he didn't pay it, I would let off me hand and give him a wipe in the jaw that he wouldn't forgot for a while, and he paid it at wanst."

Superstition Dies Hard.

The following note appears in the agricultural department of the New York Tribune without a word of comment, or anything to show that the editor is aware that the age of astrology has passed: "I always build my fence when the horns of the moon point up, and stake and rider it when the horns point down; the two draw together, and my fence never falls. The moon should govern us in all our operations. Our school house, contrary to my advice, was roofed in the light of the moon, and last winter nearly all the children had the measles, and now the roof is leaking badly."

Squeezed Up Froo' Her Dress.

A London paper tells a good story of a lady who, all dressed for a ball, went to the nursery to kiss her little daughter good night. The child looked at her mother in astonishment, and a moment after the tears came into her big, blue eyes, and she sobbed out, "Poo' mamma! Poo' Nellie's mamma!" "What's the matter with your mamma?" asked her father, who was standing by. "Poo' mamma's all squeezed up froo' e top of her dress!"—Albany Journal.

In cutting a new street at Buffalo all of one man's land except a nine-inch strip was taken, and on this amount he has to pay taxes. The law is so strict that no more land can be taken in such a case than the notice of intention calls for.

During the recent visit of Mr. Chamberlain and Mr. Jesse Collings to Scotland, two Skye crofters were discussing the political situation. Quoth one—"Weel, Angus, and what do you think of this Maister Chamberlain that's to be here the morn?" To which the other replied—"Weel, Donald, he maun be a very bad man, travelling about wi' a woman wi' a different name!" "Wi' a woman! Eh, mon, some one has been foolin' ye." "Na, na! its true. They telled me she's one Jessie Collings."

A SUN DANCE.

The editor of the Fort Macleod Gazette has been attending a sun dance at the Blood Reserve near that town, and has come back to his sanctum considerably disgusted. He says "it was the same old thing, the same old song and the same old tune." The worst feature connected with this heathenish ceremony is the "making of braves." On this occasion there did not appear to have been any candidates; but the whites present, greatly to their discredit be it said, got a victim for the torture by the payment of $3. Lying on his back on the ground, three or four Indians got about this man, and the operating began. Pinching the flesh between two fingers, it was pulled out, and the knife run through it. A small stick, about two inches long, was run into the incision, and that was done. The same operation was repeated on the back. To the latter a shield was fastened. A raw hide lariat, doubled, hung from the top of the centre pole, and one of these ends was fastened to the stick in each breast. Taking one in each hand, the candidate for honors yanked at them all his might. Then leaning backwards, he threw his full weight on the ropes, and suspending by the sticks in his breast, danced backward and forward around the pole. Finally the flesh gave way, and he fell on the ground and lay there, a full-fledged brave. Before the operation began, an old party got out and counted the young man's coups. The list was not a very long one. He stole a gun, and he stole some horses, and he stole some arrows and probably regretted that he had not stolen more while he was about it. The old party did not relate how many clothes-lines or hen-roosts he had robbed. The young man then blessed the old fellow, threw his arms around the medicine pole and prayed to the sun. This evidently put him in better spirits and the show related above proceeded. Then, tired out, every one rushed for the waggons and said good-bye to the sun dance of 1887, each one vowing secretly that it was the last one they would ever go to. But they all said the same last year." Such an exhibition was certainly pitiable enough, so far as the poor Indians were concerned, but it was utterly disgraceful in view of the fact that it was prompted by whites.

How to Eat Corn.

The head of one of the biggest restaurants in Chicago came very near losing a customer the other day by asking him if he knew how to eat corn in the ear. The customer, Yankee-like, spunked up with this query: "Do you take me for a hog?" After a reconciliation the restaurant man talked as follows: "No one man in fifty knows how to eat corn in the ear so as to get at the good of it. In the first place, I admit that no man or woman looks very pretty with an ear of corn in his or her mouth. The fact is there is no artistic way to eat it. Take your ear of corn and lay it across your plate, or leave it on the side dish. Hold it with your fork in your left hand. Take your knife and run it over the row of kernels, cutting them or lancing them. Take the next row, and so on until you cut all the rows. Put on your salt and pepper and butter and then eat. My word for it, if the corn is not too old, you will relish the corn as you never did before. The husks remain on the cob. And you can then see what sort of indigestible stuff has escaped your stomach."

Affectionate Relations of Three Royal Sisters.

It is well known how attached the three daughters of the King of Denmark are to each other. His Majesty is fond of relating an instance of this attachment. While the Princess Thyra was still unmarried, the Princess of Wales and the Czarina with their children came on a visit to Fredensborg. One morning the King was going out on a very early expedition and determined to go to his daughters' rooms to bid them "good-bye." When the father tapped at the Princess of Wales' bedroom door he got no answer, and opening it found her room empty, and on going to the Czarina's he knocked with the same result. On arriving at Princess Thyra's simple bedchamber he found his two elder married daughters had each taken a mattrass from her own splendid guest chamber and established herself thereon in the young girl's room. They were all chatting merrily, but were girlishly anxious to conceal the escapade from their ladies-in-waiting.—Modern Society.

European Dress in Japan.

The Court of the Mikado is being gradually stripped of every vestige of its Oriental coloring. It was only the other day that the Empress made the European fashion of female attire obligatory on the Japanese ladies admitted to the Court receptions, and the domestics of the palace are now to be rigged out in liveries imitated from those worn by the servants of the Imperial household in Austria. Prince Komatsu, who has spent the last few months in Vienna, was so taken with the appearance of the Court servants that he asked permission to have copies made of the different liveries. This was, of course, readily granted, and the models are now on their way to Japan, where powdered periwigs and silk stockings will no doubt before long be as regular a feature in the economy not only of the Court, but of every household which respects itself, as they are in our own part of the world.—Japanese Herald.

At Fotheringay.

The Mary Queen of Scots tercentenary, besides the exhibition of relics more or less connected with her at Peterborough, has had a quaint dramatic recognition. At the little North Hants village of Fotheringay, the scene of her execution, the other day many hundred visitors witnessed a series of tableaux vivants done by ladies of the neighborhood, under the direction of London experts, depicting the chief scenes in the Queen's life, from her marriage with the dauphin to her execution. One of the results of the Peterborough Exhibition will be the erection of a home memorial of her in the cathedral there, where she was buried originally.

A man weighing 154 pounds contains 97 pounds of oxygen, the volume of which, at ordinary temperature, would exceed 980 cubic feet. The hydrogen is much less in quantity, there being less than 15 pounds, but which, in a free state, would occupy a volume of 2,800 cubic feet. The three other gases are nitrogen, nearly 4 pounds; chloride, about 26 ounces, and fluorine 3¼ ounces.

THIS PAPER may be found on file at Geo. P. Rowell & Co's Newspaper Advertising Bureau (10 Spruce St.), where advertising contracts may be made for it IN NEW YORK.

THE ADVANCE.

Is published

Every Thursday,

FROM THE OFFICE,

Collingwood Street, - - Flesherton, Ont.

TERMS OF SUBSCRIPTION:

$1 per annum when paid strictly in advance
$1.50 per annum when not so paid.

A. R. FAWCETT,
Editor and Proprietor.

FLESHERTON:
THURSDAY, AUG. 25, 1887.

EDITORIAL NOTES.

The Durham Chronicle has resumed its long-lost position in the ranks of respectable journalism.

Durham has not got a public cemetery yet: Flesherton has—and it is one of the best in the County, too.

Concerning the railway war in Manitoba, Premier Norquay is reported as having said: "We are going to get to the boundary line, and that's all there is about it."

The Review is trying to "shake up the dry bones" around Durham in the direction of bonusing manufacturing industries. It is easy enough to shake them, but to do it effectually is another question.

The Bank of London (Ont.) has suspended business and closed its doors. It is thought the bill-holders and depositors will be paid in full. The bank had only been running four years. Banks can no more claim immutability from failure than lesser institutions or private individuals.

A paper published in Toronto, called The Canada Citizen, says the FLESHERTON ADVANCE is an anti-prohibition newspaper, simply because we ventured to say that the country was not yet ripe for prohibition. Neither it is, nor is it likely to be for many years—unless several hot-headed Temperance cranks are choked off or thrust into the background. A great cause is always endangered by fanatics.

This craze for bonusing manufacturing industries seems to have taken complete possession of the inhabitants of many towns and villages in Ontario. The idea is wrong in theory and worse in practice—generally speaking. What right have ratepayers to burden themselves with taxes by bonusing wealthy corporations? And how much worse it is to bonus tottering, milk-and-water concerns—for which there is no opening, perhaps, in the community—and which, sooner or later, must come to grief? If there is an opening in a certain place for a certain manufacturing industry, it will pay capitalists to invest their money therein: but not otherwise. In many instances bonusing simply puts a premium on rascality and boodleism. It is only in isolated and particular cases that the people get anything like a fair return for their money.

New Bakery.

The undersigned begs to inform the people of Flesherton and neighborhood generally, that he has leased the Flesherton Bakery for a term of years and respectfully solicits their patronage. Bread, Buns, Cakes and any other kind of Baking that may be required by any of my patrons will receive prompt and careful attention. Liberal estimates for large supplies. I intend shortly to add Home made Confectionery warranted pure and manufactured on the premises.

JACOB STEPHEN.

Flesherton, Aug. 17th 1887.

BE ON YOUR GUARD.—Don't allow a cold in the head to slowly and surely run into Catarrh, when you can be cured for 25c. by using Dr. Chase's Catarrh Cure. A few applications cure incipient catarrh; 1 to 2 boxes cures ordinary catarrh; 2 to 5 boxes is guaranteed to cure chronic catarrh. Try it. Only 25 cents and sure cure. Sold by all dealers.

The Origin of Diphtheria.

Of the many diseases to which mankind are subject one of the most mysterious, in many respects, is diphtheria. Although known long before, it did not become prevalent until some thirty years ago. Its ravages since have been dreadful. In numberless cases all the children of a family have been carried off within a few days.

Much has been learned concerning the conditions favoring the spread of this fell disease, and something of the influences fostering its virulence, such as overcrowded, badly trapped drains or want of drainage, damp walls and floors. Dr. George Turner, in a report to the local (London) Government Board, says that in his experience saturation of the soil under the dwelling with fœtal matter, or with water contaminated by excrement, is a condition especially favorably to development of diphtheria in its most fatal forms.

It is known also that the earliest cases in an epidemic of diphtheria are generally very mild; that children who die of it in such cases are often supposed to die of croup, and that the disease is spread by personal communication, especially by association of children at school. Observation has proved that the disease is often spread in its most fatal form by persons who were slightly attacked and who had recovered. Convalescent children do not seem to do much harm in their own families, but it often happens that when they return to school diphtheria attacks other pupils with great virulence.

But almost nothing is known with certainty of the beginning of diphtheria. Cases occur for which neither personal communication nor unwholesome surroundings can be assigned as the cause.

Dr. Turner suggests that in such cases the disease is communicated to human beings by the lower animals, and he quotes in support of this theory several remarkable cases which came under his own observation. It has long been believed that scarlatina, diphtheria and enteric fever are frequently communicated from man to man through the medium of milk, and Dr. Klein, as recently set forth in the Globe, has demostrated that a disease of a cow, which apparently causes it little discomfort, is reproduced as scarlatina in those who use its milk. But in the cases given by Dr. Turner diphtheria appears to have been communicated directly from man to the lower animals or from the lower animals to man.

In 1882 he found in the throat of a pigeon supposed to have died from strongles a membrane which hung loosely in the tube. In other pigeons inoculated in the fauces with this membrane a disease of a similar character occurred.

In 1883 an epidemic of diphtheria occurred in the village of Braughing. The disease appeared first on a farm on which the fowls were dying of a disease such as affected the pigeons. On other farms the disease was preceded by a similar affection amongst the fowls. So in 1885 he found that at Farnham, at Aldershot, at Ash and other places in which diphtheria was epidemic the fowls were affected by the disease. At a place in Surrey it caused great havoc amongst chickens and pheasants. All the appearances presented by the sick fowl were those of diphtheria. At Tongham a man bought a chicken at an infected farm and took it home. Diphtheria—the first case at the village—broke out in his house shortly after.

Dr. Turner observed also that horses and swine suffered from throat diseases soon after diphtheria had become epidemic amongst human beings.

In 1886 several cats died at Brent Pelham, (Herts.), when diphtheria prevailed there. Their necks were swelled, there was a foul discharge from the nostrils, and "running at the eyes" in all cases. Similar diseases were observed amongst the cats at Aldershot, Farnham and other places. The evidence was very strong that at Petersfield, Sussex, the disease was communicated by children to the cats. Several other instances are given, and it is stated that in 1885 Dr. Renshaw succeeded in inoculating cats with diphtheria. Instances are also given in which strongles attacked horses at the same time that diphtheria prevailed in the neighborhood, and Dr. Ogle is named as authority for the statement that diphtheria occurred in a shepherd's family shortly after throat disease had appeared amongst the sheep.

These observations, if they as yet lead to no positive conclusion, open a large field for inquiry as to the connection between diphtheria in man and throat affections among animals. Dr. Turner says:—

"It is a question of great importance, and demonstration of such connection would help to explain the occurrence of cases of diphtheria in isolated positions where human communication is very restricted. As, for instance, in the Australian bush, where (as I am informed by a friend residing there) diphtheria sometimes makes its appearance under circumstances which almost preclude any conveyance of infection by human beings or by prevailing winds.

"It might explain, too, the great difference we notice in the severity of diphtheria in different epidemics, and make clear other facts concerning which we are at present totally in the dark."—Globe, Aug. 18th.

If you desire to posses a beautiful complexion take Ayer's Sarsaparilla. It cleanses and purifies the blood, and removes blotches and pimples, making the skin smooth and clear, and giving it a bright and healthy appearance. Take it this month.

Mr. John McBride, of Amaranth, has a three year old heifer which had been giving milk since April last, although she never had a calf. It is said that she gives more milk than any of the other cows.—Shelburne Free Press.

A WONDERFUL ORGAN. The largest organ and one that plays a controlling part of the health of the body is the liver. If torpid or inactive the whole system becomes diseased. Dr. Chase's Liver Cure is made specially for Liver and Kidney diseases, and is guaranteed to cure. Receipe book and medicine $1. Sold by all dealers.

ADVICE TO MOTHERS.—Are you disturbed at night and broken of your rest by a sick child suffering and crying with pain of Cutting Teeth? If so send at once and get a bottle of "Mrs. Winslow's Soothing Syrup" for Children Teething. Its value is incalculable. It will relieve the poor little sufferer immediately. Depend upon it, mothers; there is no mistake about it. It cures Dysentery and Diarrhœa, regulates the stomach and Bowels, cures Wind Colic, softens the Gums, reduces Inflammation, and gives tone and energy to the whole system. "Mrs. Winslow's Soothing Syrup" for children teething is pleasant to the taste and is the prescription of one of the oldest and best female physicians and nurses in the United States, and is for sale by all druggists throughout the world. Price twenty five cents a bottle. Be sure and ask for "Mrs. Winslow's Soothing Syrup," and take no other kind.

The CHILDRENS
HEALTH.

One of Natures Kindest Gifts is a Healthy Constitution. Guard it against disease by using

Siamese Worm Powders.

Worms are the fruitful cause of many disorders in Children. SIAMESE WORM POWDERS will expel Worms in every case where they exist, will regulate the Stomach and Bowels at the same time. Use them, you won't regret it.

Peck's
Pleasant
Pills!

Should always be used for Sick Headache. Their operation is mild and pleasant. They strike home each time when used for a Disordered Liver. Ask for them. Get them. Don't forget the name, Peck's Pleasant Pills.

If your druggist has not the above preparation in Stock, W. W. STEPHEN & CO., of Meaford, will send them to you prepaid on receipt of 25c. for either, 5 of each, or assorted for $1.00.

W. W. STEPHEN & CO.
Druggists, Wholesale & Retail,
MEAFORD.

WHAT IS IT?

IT IS A FACT AND NO CONTROVERSY THAT

JOHNSON'S
TONIC BITTERS

and NERVINE is the best remedy in the market for nervous diseases of any sort. Hysteria, Loss of Appetite, Debility from loss of fluids or overwork, Paleness of Complexion so often seen in young females and all complaints arising from poverty of blood.

It is a fact and no gainsaying that JOHNSON'S TONIC LIVER PILLS are the very best in the market for diseases caused by Torpid Liver and derrangement of the Stomach or Kidneys.

It is a fact and no one will deny it that JOHNSON'S ALL HEALING WHITE OINTMENT is the best in the market for Burns, Scalds, Chilblains, Salt Rheum, Barbers Itch, Pimples and all Skin Disorders arising from scrofulous taint

W. S. CHRISTOE has been appointed Agent for the above and has them on sale at his Medical Hall, Flesherton. Try for yourselves and be satisfied.

NOTICE.

GRAY CHAMPION!

A THOROUGH-BRED DURHAM BULL, with good pedigree, will stand for service at Lot 142 West T. & S.R., Artemesia. TERMS, $1 if paid on or before Jan. 1st, 1888; otherwise, $1.25

Also thorough-bred BERKSHIRE BOAR at same place. JACOB A. LEVER

Day and Night

During an acute attack of Bronchitis, a ceaseless tickling in the throat, and an exhausting, dry, hacking cough, afflict the sufferer. Sleep is banished, and great prostration follows. This disease is also attended with Hoarseness, and sometimes Loss of Voice. It is liable to become chronic, involve the lungs, and terminate fatally. Ayer's Cherry Pectoral affords speedy relief and cure in cases of Bronchitis. It controls the disposition to cough, and induces refreshing sleep.

I have been a practicing physician for twenty-four years, and, for the past twelve, have suffered from annual attacks of Bronchitis. After exhausting all the usual remedies

Without Relief,

I tried Ayer's Cherry Pectoral. It helped me immediately, and effected a speedy cure.—G. Stoveall, M. D., Carrollton, Miss.

Ayer's Cherry Pectoral is decidedly the best remedy, within my knowledge, for chronic Bronchitis, and all lung diseases. —M. A. Rust, M. D., South Paris, Me.

I was attacked, last winter, with a severe Cold, which, from exposure, grew worse and finally settled on my Lungs. By night sweats I was reduced almost to a skeleton. My Cough was incessant, and I frequently spit blood. My physician told me to give up business, or I would not live a month. After taking various remedies without relief, I was finally two bottles of Ayer's Cherry Pectoral. I am now in perfect health, and able to resume business, after having been pronounced incurable with Consumption.—S. P. Henderson, Saulsburgh, Penn.

Cured By Using

For years I was in a decline. I had weak lungs, and suffered from Bronchitis and Catarrh. Ayer's Cherry Pectoral restored me to health, and I have been for a long time comparatively vigorous. In case of a sudden cold I always resort to the Pectoral, and find speedy relief.—Edward E. Curtis, Rutland, Vt.

Two years ago I suffered from a severe Bronchitis. The physician attending me became fearful that the disease would terminate in Pneumonia. After trying various medicines, without benefit, he finally prescribed Ayer's Cherry Pectoral, which relieved me at once. I continued to take this medicine a short time, and was cured. —Ernest Colton, Logansport, Ind.

Ayer's Cherry Pectoral,

Prepared by Dr. J. C. Ayer & Co., Lowell, Mass. Sold by all Druggists. Price $1; six bottles, $5.

James Sullivan,
The Tinsmith, - Flesherton

Repairing, Eavestroughing, and in fact everything in the business will receive my prompt and careful attention at reasonable prices.

STRAY COW.

Came to the premises of the subscriber Lot 29, Con. 4, Artemesia, on the 23rd inst., a red and white cow. Owner can have same by proving property and paying expenses.

ANTHONY KENNY.

Artemesia, July 29th, 1887

THE MARKETS.
FLESHERTON.

Carefully Corrected Each Week.

Flour	$4	00	to 4	20
Fall Wheat	$0	75	to 0	75
Spring Wheat	0	75	0	75
Barley	0	30	0	45
Oats	0	28	0	28
Peas	0	47	0	48
Butter	0	15	0	16
Eggs, fresh	0	15	0	15
Potatoes bush	0	50	0	50
Pork	5	60	5	60
Hay, per ton	6	00	6	00
Hides	6	00	7	00
Wool		22		23
Sheepskins	0	40	0	56
Geese	0	05	0	05
Turkeys	0	8	0	8
Chickens per pair	0	25	0	30
Ducks per pair	0	40	0	50

AT GORDON'S
HARNESS SHOP
FLESHERTON,

You will find an assortment of

Heavy and Light Harness,

Whips, Brushes, Curry Combs, Sweat Pads, and the celebrated "Harness Oil."

COLLARS A SPECIALTY.

Cheap for Cash. Call and Examine.

R. J. SPROUL,

Flesherton. Conveyancer, Appraiser, Valuator and Money lender. Deeds, Mortgages, leases and Wills drawn up and Valuations made on shortest notice. Charges very low. Apply to R. J. SPROULE, Postmaster, Flesherton.

CLAYTON'S
HARNESS SHOP!
FLESHERTON,

Is the place to get your Harness Collars, &c, made up in good style.

Shop in W. Clayton's Boot & Shoe Store, Flesherton.

DUNDALK
PUMP WORKS!
C. R. PHILLIP'S,

Manufacturer of all kinds of PUMPS.

Cylinder Check Valve &
Cistern Pumps

Orders Respectfully Solicited and satisfaction guaranteed.

JAMES SULLIVAN,
Tin-Smith, AGENT,
FLESHERTON

PHOTOGRAPHY.

MRS. BULMER,
Photographer,
Flesherton - Ont.

Having spent some time in the studio of the famous Toronto Photographer, Mr S. J. Dixon, where I acquired valuable knowledge in Retouching, I feel assured I can give good general satisfaction. A call respectfully solicited.

MRS. BULMER.

Flesherton, Sept. 17th, 1885.

THE CELEBRATED DR CHASE'S MANDRAKE & DANDELION LIVER CURE

HAVE YOU

Liver Complaint, Dyspepsia, Indigestion, Biliousness, Jaundice, Headache, Dizziness, Pain in the Back, Costiveness, or any disease arising from a deranged liver, Dr. Chase's Liver Cure will be found a sure and certain remedy.

NATURE'S REMEDY

The unqualified success of Dr Chase's Liver Cure in Liver Complaint rests entirely with the fact that it is compounded from nature's well-known liver regulators, MANDRAKE AND DANDELION, combined with many other invaluable roots, barks and herbs, having a powerful effect on the Kidneys, Stomach, Bowels and Blood. 500,000 SOLD

Over one-half million of Dr. Chase's Recipe Books were sold in Canada alone. We want every man, woman and child who is troubled with Liver Complaint to try this excellent remedy.

SOMETHING NEW. GIVEN AWAY FREE

Wrapped around every bottle of Dr. Chase's Liver Cure is a valuable Household Medical Guide and Recipe Book (84 pages), containing over 800 useful recipes, pronounced by medical men and druggists as invaluable, and worth ten times the price of the medicine.

TRY CHASE'S CATARRH CURE. A safe and positive remedy. Price, 25 cents.

TRY CHASE'S KIDNEY AND LIVER PILLS 25 cts. per box.

SOLD BY ALL DEALERS

T. EDMANSON & CO., Sole Agents, Bradford

Flesherton
Meat Market.
S. SPIRIT, - - PROPRIETOR.

Cash paid for fat Cattle and Sheep.

Fresh Meats constantly on hand for Cash. Orders promptly filled.

—EUGENIA—
Real Estate Agency

MONEY TO LOAN at lowest rates of interest and on terms of repayment to suit borrower.

FARMS bought and sold.

CONVEYANCES of all kinds properly executed.

COMMISSIONER for taking affidavits in H.C.J., Agent for the Norwich Fire Insurance Society. All business promptly, carefully and confidentially attended to.

Office, Corner of Inkerman and Napoleon Streets.

HENRY MELDRUM,
AGENT.

For The Advance.]

AN ABOMINABLE FLIRT.

By E. B. VanDusen, Owen Sound.

"One, two, three,—mind F sharp there! F, not G! I wonder at your mistakes this morning. Did you practice this lesson, Miss Herbert?"

The young girl raised her head crowned with its graceful nodding plumes, and looked confusedly up into her master's face. But something besides confusion expressed itself in her eyes, which she dropped immediately after one swift glance.

"I did" she said, gently striking a few chords, "and at five o'clock this morning I could master it entirely."

"Five o'clock! You must be an early riser."

"Well, such glorious mornings as these, how can one rest while the birds sing and the sun shines so brightly?"

"And why can you not play as well now as then?" queried he, ignoring her remark. Perhaps that early-rising don't agree with you; and we see the effects of it over this music lesson—eh?"

"If you are insinuating that I am sleepy—"

"Oh no, I assure you not," he interrupted, laughing. "I was only suggesting a cause for all these blunders. Not in earnest at all - because I think that is not the reason you make such mistakes."

"Perhaps I am a little tired," she confessed, looking sharply at him. But he was only smiling in his own pleasant way, and answered doubtingly, "Perhaps."

"Well, I must finish." And Miss Herbert went madly striking the keys again. I say madly, for never did she make such wild mistakes or appear more agitated.

"That will do, Miss Herbert. You will take this lesson over again." She looked up quickly. He was regarding her attentively, and a mischievous smile lurked about his mouth. This time she did not appear in the least embarrassed, though her heart was beating loudly.

"I will try to do better next time," she said simply. Closing her book, she rose and moved towards the door. With innate courtesy he opened it for her and then closed it suddenly, with an alertness which surprised the girl.

"On consideration you need not take that lesson again I believe you do know it thoroughly. Allow me—you have dropped your glove." In stooping to restore it to her, a photograph fell from his breast-pocket to the floor, and face upward. The portrait was that of an exceedingly beautiful young girl. Miss Herbert only observed that one snowy hand was laid caressingly upon the head of a noble-looking dog, and the other closed round a formidable gun. Professor Strander raised the photo at once, remarking pleasantly upon his awkwardness, and giving Miss Herbert her glove. But why did the color surge into his face?

He assigned her a new lesson, and having said good-morning, the door was shut once more. Kathie Herbert turned from it and walked thoughtfully away. Thoughtfully—yes, her mind went back to the very first time Professor Strander had opened that door for her; his courteous manner and pleasant address; all his little gayeties of speech; and was it all to end here?

"From the very beginning I have loved you!" she cried inwardly. "Lately I feel as though I dare not venture into his presence lest he should guess the truth. Oh for a little release! A few weeks or months sojourn in the city; anything, anything so that I forget him!"

Once in her own home, the swelling heart of the proud little beauty found relief in tears. "I will go—I must. For oh, I dare not stay now. I only trust he has no suspicion that I care for him. O mamma, my heart is breaking and you can never help me! Why did I ever go to Professor Strander?"

The tears fell fast and unchecked for some moments. Then rising, she took a small album from her table, hastily turning the leaves until she came to what she wished to see. O vanity! It was her own fair face. Fair indeed, and in no manner insipid. There was such a grave trustful look in the glorious dark eyes; and yet, behold the pretty—one might almost say saucy—but expressive mouth! It was as though one might have communicated some undesirable news to her, and the lips had assumed that charming half-pout. Dark curly hair clung about the open brow; the chin was firm and rounded....A face one would wish to look at more than once.... .and longer than a moment.

"Hundreds, yes hundreds—more magnetic, more enchanting than mine!" she said to herself. "And that may have been his sister—a cousin—or a mere lady friend. How foolish I am to think about it. After a while it can make little difference to me. Only I must go away now for a time."

But in her heart and brain the one thought burned all that day, "I love you—I love you!"—till the birds seemed to sing it, the flowing brook to keep time to the passionate words. Everywhere, everywhere was it written. On the leaves of her magazine—on the blue sunny sky—wherever she looked. And later when the sky shone out in the midnight sky, they seemed to hurl down at her the undeniable accusation, "You love him." At a late hour the young girl found rest. "Tired Nature's sweet restorer" closed the weary eyelids and Kathie was in dreamland. At breakfast next morning, Miss Herbert abruptly remarked upon her intended visit.

"My dear Kathie," began her father gravely "you wouldn't be an American if you didn't want to run around." And then he pinched his daughter's cheek, while Kathie laughed, for from his serious tone she imagined he might really urge an objection.

"Aunt Charlotte will be so glad to see you" said Mrs. Herbert, who had given her full consent to her daughter's proposal.

"You'll enjoy yourself, no doubt," Mr. Herbert remarked. "Only don't let any young gentleman run off with your heart—we can't spare such a jewel just yet."

"Oh papa! Surely I'm not so very precious. Why what do I do from morning till night, but please myself?"

"And that is what best pleases us, Kathie. I am never afraid of you doing wrong."

So it was arranged that Kathie should visit her cousin in St. Louis. That week she would see Professor Strander once more. This time, Kathie assured herself, there must be no cause for correction, no embarrassing questions to ask. She would tell him in an indifferent manner that she would be gone for some time—would promise to practice faithfully whilst away. And then—then in the gay city life she would learn to forget him. There were her determinations; and all the while her rebellious spirit cried out against it. "Kismet! It is fate, but oh, how bitter! I must not allow myself to even think of his name. Let me see . . . what was I going to do .....oh yes—inspect my dress for Mrs. James' party. He will be there, possibly; but I am not going to mar an evening's enjoyment by remaining home. After all, he is not a great slave to society—he may not go . . . He may be detained. How I shrink from meeting him!"

Mrs. James' parties were something to be talked of. The elite assembled within her spacious halls; there amidst flowers and perfume and light, the passionate waltz had often lured fond hearts into its magic measures. But sitting in the stillness of her own room, Kathie pictured for herself an evening unmarked by any deeper sense of pain that that she now felt. And when at last she found herself in the dazzling rooms of her hostess, she resolutely forced away all sombre thoughts, entering into conversation with unwonted fervor.

Mrs. James, urbane as usual, welcomed them all . . . . Kathie had returned several recognitions, when she heard a familiar voice behind her saying: "Professor Strander? Oh, he may not come at all. An important business engagement—" And then the last words were lost to Kathie's ear, amid the hum of salutations and laughter. She was quite relieved.

The hours flew by with lively conversation and repartee. In the wild waltz many sought forgetfulness of misery or care, and Kathie, with the arm of her friend Mr. Mason about her, forgot the one face which haunted her. Her companion led her away to the cool balcony afterwards, and after some moments' quiet talk, she sent him off to bring her a glass of water. "Just for five moments alone!" she exclaimed mentally. "There are so many delightful nooks in this charming mansion, I must appropriate one Mr. Mason can search till he discovers me." So thinking, she entered a side-room off the conservatory, and smiled satisfactorily as she seated herself behind the tall oleanders and geraniums. "All that's wanting now to make it like a novel," she mused, "is for a lover to discover my whereabouts and disclose his tender passion . . . Or for me to overhear some startling plot . . . . Leaning her head upon the flower-stand, she fell into a reverie.

Harry Mason, rushing from room to room with a brimming glass of ice-water in his hand, was accosted near the library door by Geoff Strander.

"Cicero greets thee!" cried the Professor gaily, touching his friend upon the shoulder, and assuming an expression of mock-gravity.

"You there, Geoff?" said Mason. "I thought you couldn't stay away. Is this not a glorious affair? Mine hostess is a jewel. Listen! Are they dancing again?"

"Do you wish to go?" asked the other, "Or are you paid by the minute to hold aloft that symbol of purity?" pointing to the glass from which the water now flowed as Mason assumed an oblique attitude against the door-case.

"Not so, most gracious Professor. This water was brought expressly for my friend Miss Herbert, who was on the balcony five minutes ago, and is not there now. And I have been meandering all over in search of her," answered Mr. Mason, going toward the conservatory.

"We will likely find her with the dancers, though I did not observe her as I came through. How splendid the girls all appear to-night. . . . And Miss Herbert is, in your eyes, the "bright particular star"—eh, Mason?

"Quite mistaken. She is only one of my friends—my dear friend, if you like—nothing more. Say, the thought just strikes me that I'm tired. Let us sit down here for a while. That is, unless you prefer the mazy waltz—to enter into the delicious whirl, encircling your lady love,—if you have one."

"Haven't I, though," said Strander with emphasis. Shall I show you a likeness of the beauty at whose shrine I worship?"

"Do, there's a good fellow."

Poor Kathie, with her shawl wrapped closely about her, shivered as these words fell upon her ear. It was quite true, then, that somewhere in the wide world the man she loved had found a face to attract him. . . She measured his devotion by the fact that he must needs carry her photo with him always. From her position behind the array of flowers she could see Strander's hand pass the picture to his friend, but could not observe his face.

"Why it—surely that is Miss Herbert?" cried Mason, after a glance.

"Oh no," answered his companion, "I guess not. But you see a resemblance, do you?"

"A remarkable resemblance! Though now on closer examination the face is not shaped like Kathie's; but the expression is hers. One often finds faces alike in this wide world. . . . Quite an Amazon with that dog and gun. Dangerous-looking, you know. And you'll be marrying her soon, shall we say?" drawled Harry Mason comically.

"I think not."

"You didn't jilt her, I hope."

"Not at all."

"Vice Versa, then?"

"Oh no."

"Hang it all! Don't keep me in suspense after rousing my curiosity. I take it you haven't proposed yet. By-the-bye, the original of this photo don't live here I suppose?"

"Hardly," said Strander laughing, but with a far-away look in his dark eyes. "That is a Des Moines photo."

"Let me see. . . . You were at Des Moines this winter, were you not?" mused Mason.

Yes, I was." There was a slight twinkle in his eye as he waited for Mason's next remark.

"Then the Fates have pity upon you if you are compelled to travel so far to greet thy adored one! You never told me before that Des Moines held an attraction for you."

"And I have not said so yet," replied Strander with an amused smile.

"This might be taken for Kathie's sister, if she had one. Or a cousin."

It might be—only that is the portrait of a young lady who, I believe, is neither."

"You are a fraud to-night, Geoff. . . . a puzzler, but nevertheless a dear old fellow. Some time you tell me all about this affair. I only speak the desire to dance at your wedding."

"Yes, I will explain everything to you soon, I trust. Just now I don't care to reveal all my weaknesses to thee, O most unsophisticated youth!"

"Yes, unsophisticated in heart-matters."

"Destined to be a veritable bachelor, perhaps," said Strander.

"Which I thought of you too, till to-night," rejoined Mason, returning the photo.

"What will Miss Herbert think of you, anyway? But I'm a witness that I found you in search of her. Come, let us join the dancers. That music is enough to melt a stoic, and I long to be among the sportive throng." So spoke the Professor, and the two passed on out into the dazzling light of the spacious rooms.

Poor Kathie had heard every word, and now rose to her feet. She moved two or three steps . . . A faintness came over her, and she sank wearily down again.

"Shall I call," she asked herself, "or wait. Perhaps someone may come."

Mrs. James had missed Kathie's bright face among her guests. No one seemed to know where she had flown to. "I will look for her," said Bertha Welland, Miss Herbert's confidential friend.

After peering into numerous alcoves and nooks where one might seek seclusion, Miss Bertha entered the dimly-lighted conservatory, calling merrily, "Kathie, where ever are you?"

"I am here," answered a trembling voice. "I feel so ill, Bertha—I must go home at once. Pray ask Mrs. James to come, and tell no one where you found me."

"Why, you are as pale as a ghost! The dancing was too much. Take my arm, and lie down in the room across here. I will bring Mrs. James."

That good lady hastened to Kathie at once.

"My carriage was not ordered so early, but pray ask Mr. Mason to see to it immediately," she said faintly, clasping her white hands impatiently. And Mr. Mason came shortly after to offer his arm and assist Kathie to her carriage. She felt secure with her friend, and thankful for his sympathy; but adroitly evaded his query as to her sudden disappearance from the balcony.

"We will miss you to-night," he said, as he assisted her from the carriage. A few words of explanation to her mother—an assurance that he would call next day and earnest "good-bye,"—and Kathie was alone.

But to return to the ball-room which Kathie had just left....Everyone expressed surprised to hear of her sudden departure. "She never looked better, certainly!" remarked the heiress, Miss Ruyter, in a tone which meant, "I believe she was pretending?"

"I say she looked quite well," she persisted, with an unpleasant little laught, "don't you think so, Professor Strander?"

"Indeed Miss Ruyter," he said rather curtly, "I am unable to express an opinion....It was late when I came, and I did not see Miss Herbert." His face now assumed an expression as if his thoughts were far away. Were they away in Des Moines, perhaps, and not centered on poor little Kathie! One thing was quite evident to the people of Devonport, and that was that Professor Strander was not the man to win a girls affection for his personal gratification; to boast at having done so, and then fling away forever all serious thoughts of the pain of a tender and loving heart. He had not showed marked attentions to any young lady in Davenport, though many a fair beauty turned her admiring eyes upon him.

"He is certainly handsome," thought Miss Ruyter, as she regarded him while he spoke. "Now if he were only vain enough, what a flirt—a successful flirt, he would make! But Professor Strander is'nt vain," and this ambitious heiress sighed, as though she wished he were. In truth, it was her one desire to captivate the gallant gentleman. (In vain, Miss Ruyter, were all those hours spent on an elaborate toilet! Thy precise crimps and costly adornment were admired by the eye, but found no place in the heart of the man now beside you.)

Miss Herbert was not well enough to go to her music-master on the usual day. But the next morning she took her music-roll in a decided manner, and adjusting her richly-plumed hat, stood for a moment before her mirror ere she went. How much she longed to scrutinize that photo so much resembling her! The hope (which Kathie did not acknowledge to herself) of ever possessing Geoffroy Strander's love, had died out...That was all over now...She could face him, perhaps, with even cordiality, knowing how utterly his love was beyond her.

(Concluded next week.)

Agents, Agents!

NOW READY- - | --OUR NEW BOOK.

EARTH, SEA AND SKY

OR

Marvels of the Universe

Being a full and graphic description of all that is wonderful in every Continent of the Globe, in the world of waters and the starry Heavens. Containing thrilling adventures on land and sea, renowned discoveries of the world's greatest explorers in all ages, and remarkable phenomena in every realm of nature. Embracing the striking physical features of the earth the peculiar characteristics of the human race, of animals, birds, insects, etc., including a vivid description of the Atlantic, Pacific and Indian Oceans and of the Polar Seas, the monsters of the deep, beautiful seashells and plants, singular fishes and dwellers in the world of waters, remarkable ocean currents, etc., together with the amazing phenomena of the solar and starry systems, by Henry Davenport Northrop, D.D., embellished with over 300 fine engravings. Liberal terms to agents. Oxford Publishing Company, 5 Jordan St., Toronto, Ont. 36-38.

Medical.

DR. CARTER,
M.C.P. & S., ONT.
PHYSICIAN, SURGEON, &c.
FLESHERTON.
Office, Strain's block. Residence, Wm. Wright's

Dentistry.

DENTISTRY.

Thomas Henderson, L.D.S.

SURGEON DENTIST,

Gold Medalist and Honor Graduate of the R.C.D.S.,

Will visit FLESHERTON, (Munshaw's Hotel) 1 and 2 of each month. Teeth extracted, inserted and filled in the highest styles of the art, and at moderate rates.

HEAD OFFICE, 761 YONGE ST., TORONTO.

Legal.

J. W. FROST, LL.B.,
Barrister, Solicitor, Conveyancer.
Office,—Strain's Building, FLESHERTON.
A. A. CHESLEY, Solicitor and Conveyancer, Resident Manager.
MR. FROST will be found at the Office on Thursdays as heretofore.

P. McCULLOUGH,
Barrister, Solicitor, &c.
Office, over McFarland's Store, Markdale. Money to Loan.

MASSON & MASSON,
BARRISTERS, SOLICITORS, &c.
OFFICES—Owen Sound, in Vicker's block Poulett St.; Branch office in Markdale, over McFarland's store, on Friday and Saturday every week.
J. MASSON, Q.C. S. MASSON. W. MASSON
N.B.—Private & Company's funds to invest at from Six to Eight per cent.

Business Cards.

John W. Armstrong,
FLESHERTON, CO. GREY.
DIVISION COURT CLERK, COMMISSIONER in B. R., Conveyancer, &c. Agent for purchased sale of lands. Appraiser for C. L. C. Co., and F. P. B. & S. Society. Money to Loan on the most reasonable terms. ISSUER OF MARRIAGE LICENSES. NOTARY PUBLIC.

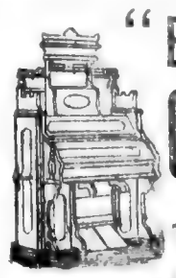
MONEY TO LOAN.
At 6 Per Cent.
On Town or Farm Property.
S. DAMUDE,
Flesherton.

W. J. BELLAMY.
TWP. CLERK ARTEMESIA.
CONVEYANCER, COMMISSIONER INSURANCE AGT, &C
DEEDS, MORTGAGES, LEASES, &c., prepared and properly executed. Insurance effected in first-class companies. Money to lend at lowest rates.

GET YOUR MEAT
—:FROM:—
Petch & Mitchell,
GENERAL BUTCHERS,
FLESHERTON!
Cash paid for fat cattle, &c., &c.

NEW LIVERY!
THE undersigned begs to announce that he has started a first-class livery in the stand opposite Munshaw's Hotel, Flesherton, where the travelling public can be accommodated with good rigs and horses at most reasonable prices Try me and be convinced.
Respectfully yours,
W. H. JOHNSTON.
Flesherton, Nov 19th, 1886.

Picture Framing,
Neatly, Cheaply & Quickly Done, by
J. E. MOORE,
Durham St., Opposite Clayton's Harness Shop



"BELL" ORGANS
Unapproached for Tone and Quality.
CATALOGUES FREE.
BELL & CO., Guelph, Ont.

DOWN TO DEATH.

Over 100 Excursionists Hurled Into Eternity.

FOUR HUNDRED BADLY INJURED.

The Crowded Train Crashes Through a Burning Bridge.

THRILLING AND SICKENING SIGHTS.

Human Ghouls Plunder and Rob the Dead and Dying.

A Chicago special from Forest, Ill., gives the following fuller particulars of the great railway catastrophe: All railway horrors in the history of this country were surpassed three miles east of Chatsworth Wednesday night, when an excursion train on the Toledo, Peoria & Warsaw Road dropped through a burning bridge and over 100 people were killed and four times that number were more or less badly injured. The train was composed of six sleeping cars, six day coaches and chair cars and three baggage. It was carrying 960 passengers, all excursionists, and was bound for Niagara Falls. The train had been made up all along the line of the Toledo, Peoria & Warsaw Road, and the excursionists hailed from various points in Central Illinois, the bulk of them, however, coming from Peoria. Some of the passengers came from Canton, Elpaso, Washington, and in fact all the stations along the line, some as far west as Burlington and Keokuk, Iowa. A special and cheap rate had been made for the excursion, and all sorts of people took advantage of it.

START OF THE ILL-FATED TRAIN.

When the train drew out of Peoria at 8 o'clock Wednesday evening it was loaded to its utmost capacity. Every berth in the six sleepers was taken, and the day cars carried sixty people each. The train was so heavy that two engines were hitched to it, and when it passed this place it was an hour and a half behind time. Chatsworth, the next station east of here, is six miles off, and the run there was made in seven minutes, so the terrible momentum of those fifteen coaches and two engines shooting through space at the rate of a mile a minute can be understood. The train did not stop at Chatsworth, and sped by the small station with lightning speed. Three miles east of Chatsworth is a little slough, and here the railroad crosses a dry run about ten feet deep and fifteen feet wide. Over this was stretched an ordinary wooden trestle bridge, and as the excursion train came thundering down on it what was the horror of the engineer on the front engine when he saw that

THE BRIDGE WAS ON FIRE!

Right up before his eyes leaped the bright flames, and the next instant he was among them. There was no chance to stop. Had there been warning it would have taken half a mile to stop that on-rushing mass of wood, iron and human lives, and the train was within one hundred yards of the red-tongued messengers of death before they flashed their fatal signals into the engineer's face. But he passed over in safety, the first engine keeping the rails. As it went over the bridge fell beneath it, and it could only have been the terrific speed of the train which saved the lives of the engineer and his fireman. But the next engine went down, and instantly

THE DEED OF DEATH WAS DONE.

Car crushed into car, coaches piled one on top of another, and in the twinkling of an eye nearly 100 people found an instant death and fifty more were so hurt that they could not live. As for the wounded they were everywhere. Only the sleeping coaches escaped, and as the startled and half-dressed passengers came tumbling out of them they found such a scene of death as is rarely witnessed, and such work to do that it seemed as if human hands were utterly incapable. It lacked but five minutes of midnight. Down in the ditch lay the second engine, Engineer McClintock dead and Fireman Applegate badly injured. On top were piled the three baggage cars, one on top of another like a child's card house after he has swept it with his hand. Then came the six day coaches. They were telescoped as cars never were before, and three of them were pressed into just space enough for one. The second car had mounted off the trucks, crashed through the car ahead of it, crushing the woodwork aside like tinder, and lay there resting on the tops of the car seats, while every passenger in the front car was

LYING DEAD AND DYING UNDERNEATH.

Out of that car but four people came alive. On top of the second car lay the third and its bottom was smeared with the blood of the victims. The other three cars were not so badly crushed, but they were broken and twisted in every conceivable shape, and every crushed timber and beam represented a crushed human frame and a broken bone. Instantly the air was filled with the cries of the wounded and the shrieks of those about to die. The groans of men and the screams of women aided to make an appalling sound, and above all could be heard the agonizing cries of little children, as in some instances they lay pinned alongside their dead parents. And there was another terrible danger yet to be met. The bridge was still burning, and the wrecked cars were lying on and around the fiercely burning embers. Everywhere in the wreck were wounded and unhurt men, women and children, whose lives could be saved if they could be gotten out, but whose death, and was certain, if the twisted wood of the broken cars caught fire. And to fight the fire there was not a drop of water, and only some fifty able-bodied men who still had presence of mind and nerve enough to do their duty. The only light was the light of the burning bridge, and with so much of its aid the fifty men went to work to fight the flames. For four hours they fought like fiends, and for hours the victory hung in the balance. Earth was the only weapon with which the foe could be fought, and so the attempt was made to smother it out. There was no pick or shovel to dig it up, no baskets or barrows to carry it, and so desperate were they that they dug their fingers down into the earth, which a long drought had baked almost as hard as stone, and heaped the precious handfuls thus hardly won upon the encroaching flame. And with this earthwork, built handful by handful,

DEATH IN A MOST HORRIBLE FORM

THEY KEPT BACK THE FOE.

While this was going on, other brave men crept underneath wrecked cars, beneath the fire and the wooden bars which held as prisoners so many precious lives, and with pieces of boards, sometimes their hands, beat back the flames when they flashed up alongside some unfortunate wretch, who, pinned down by a heavy beam, looked on hopelessly while it seemed as if his death by fire was certain. And while the fight was thus going on with the workers the cars were filled with groans of dying men, the anguished entreaties of those whose death seemed certain unless the terrible blaze could be extinguished, and the cries of those too badly hurt to care in what manner the end were brought about so only it could be quick; so they dug up the earth with their hands, reckless of the blood streaming out from under finger nails, and heaping it up in little mounds, while all the while came heartrending cries

"FOR GOD'S SAKE DON'T LET US BURN TO DEATH!"

But finally the victory was won; the fire was put out after four hours of endeavor, and as its last sparks died away a light came up in the east to take their place, and dawn came upon a scene of horror.

While the fight had been going on men had been dying, and there was not so many wounded to take out of the wreck as there had been four hours before. But in the meantime the country had been aroused, help had come from Chatsworth, Forest and Piper City, and as the dead were laid reverently alongside of each other out in the cornfield there were ready hands to take them to Chatsworth, while some of the wounded were carried to Piper City. One hundred and eighteen was while the wounded number four times that many. The full tale of the dead cannot, however, be told yet for days.

THE AWFUL ROLL OF THE DEAD,

Chatsworth was turned into a morgue to-day. The town hall, the engine-house, the depot, were all full of dead bodies, while every house in the little village has its quota of the wounded. There were over one hundred corpses lying in the extemporized dead houses, and every man and woman was turned into an amateur but zealous nurse. Even in a lumber yard the noise of hammers and saws rung out on the air, and busy carpenters were making rough coffins to carry to their homes the dead bodies of the excursionists who twelve hours before had left their homes full of pleasure, with expectations of the enjoyment they were going to have during the vacation which had just begun.

AID FOR THE SUFFERERS.

When the news of the disaster first flashed over the wires prompt aid was at once sent. Dr. Steele, chief surgeon of the Toledo, Peoria & Warsaw road, had come on a special train, and with him were two other surgeons and their assistants. From Peoria also came Drs. Martin, Baker, Fleugler and Johnson, and from every city whence the unfortunate excursionists had come their physicians and friends hurried out to help them. From Peoria had also come delegations of the Redmen and the Ancient Order of United Workmen, members of both societies being on the ill-fated train, and so after 8 o'clock in the morning there were plenty of people to do the work that needed such prompt attention. In the town hall was the main hospital, and in it anxious relatives and sorrowing friends sat fanning gently the sufferers' faces. Down in the deadhouses fathers, husbands, brothers, sisters, wives and children tearfully inspected each face as it was uncovered, and sighed as the features were unknown, or cried out in anguish when the well-known face—sometimes fearfully mangled but yet recognizable—was uncovered. The entire capacity of the little village was tried, and kind-hearted women drove in from miles to give their gentle ministrations to the sufferers.

STATEMENT OF A PASSENGER.

Dr. Hazen, of Fort Madison, Iowa, says the train was running about thirty miles an hour when the accident occurred. He felt a sudden jar, and found himself and wife fastened under the seats. He pulled the backs off of two seats before he could get his wife out. She was bruised on the body, and both of her feet were crushed. His shoulder was dislocated, and he had it pulled into place as soon as he could get out of the wreck. There were nine persons in his party, and he can only hear of three of them so far. He says he saw Ed. Stoddard throw his boy out to a lady while he crawled back to get his wife, who was killed.

DIABOLICAL DEPRAVITY.

No sooner had the wreck occurred than a scene of robbery commenced. Some bands of unspeakable miscreants, heartless, and with only animal instincts, were on hand, and like guerillas who throng a battlefield at night after the conflict and filch from the dead the money which they received for their meagre pay, stealing even the bronze medals, and robbing from the children of heroes the otherwise worthless emblems of their father's bravery, so last night did these human hyenas plunder the dead from the terrible accident, and take even the shoes which covered their feet. Who these wretches are is not known. Whether they were a band of pickpockets who accompanied the train, who were lurking in the vicinity, cannot be said. The horrible suspicion, however, exists, and there are many who give it credence, that the accident was a deliberately that the bridge was set on fire by miscreants, who hoped to profit by the opportunity offered; and the fact that the bridge was so far consumed at the time the train came along, and the added fact that the train was an hour and a half late, are pointed out as evidence of a careful conspiracy. It seems hardly possible that man could be so lost to all the ordinary feeling which animates the breast of the human race. But still men who will rob dead men, who will steal from the dying and will plunder the wounded, held down by the broken beams of a wrecked car, whose death by fire seemed imminent, can do almost anything which is base, and that is what these fiends in human form did. They went into the cars when the fire was burning fiercely underneath, and when the poor wretches who were pinned there begged them

PLANNED CASE OF TRAIN WRECKING,

"FOR GOD'S SAKE TO HELP THEM OUT," stripped them of their watches and jewellery and searched their pockets for money. When the dead bodies were laid out in the cornfield these hyenas turned them over in their search for valuables, and that the plundering was done by an organized gang was proven by the fact that next morning out in the cornfield several purses all empty were found in one heap. It was a ghastly plundering, and had the plunderers been caught this afternoon they would have been lynched. There was one incident of the accident which stood out more horrible than all of those horrible scenes. In the second coach was a man, his wife and little child. His name could not be learned to-day, but it is said he got on at Peoria. When the accident occurred

THE ENTIRE FAMILY OF THREE

was caught and held down by broken wood work. Finally, when relief came, the man turned to the friend and feebly said, "Take my wife first. I'm afraid the child is dead!" So they carried out the mother, and as a broken seat was taken off her crushed breast the blood which welled from her lips told how badly she was hurt. They carried the child, a fair-haired, blue-eyed girl of 3, and laid her in the cornfield, dead, alongside of her mother. Then they went back for the father and brought him out. Both his legs were broken, but he crawled through the corn to the side of his wife and feeling her loved features in the darkness, pressed some brandy to her lips and asked her how she felt. A feeble groan was the only answer, and the next instant she died. The man felt the forms of his dead wife and child and cried out

"MY GOD, THERE IS NOTHING MORE FOR ME TO LIVE FOR NOW,"

and taking a pistol out of his pocket pulled the trigger. The bullet went surely through his brain, and the three dead bodies of that little family are now lying side by side in Chatsworth waiting to be identified. There have been many guesses as to the origin of the fire which weakened the bridge and caused the accident, but so far they are nothing but guesses. The most probable one is that a spark from the furnace of the engine of a train which passed two hours before caused the blaze. The season has been very dry hereabouts for a long time, almost no rain having fallen, and so the woodwork of the bridge was like tinder. A live coal dropped on it would fire it at once, and the result, accident, soon follow. Another and startling theory

IS THE ONE OF TRAIN WRECKING.

This is an awful one to contemplate, but it has its adherents. They point to the fact that there were a lot of thieves about and to the additional fact that they seemed to be members of an organization working together, and the diabolical heartlessness with which they went about their work indicated devilishness which would stop at nothing. The news of the disaster was brought to Chatsworth by one of the passengers about midnight. As fast as the corpses were taken from the wreck they were laid out on the side of the track. Before daylight the work of recovering the dead and moving them to Chatsworth had begun. The residents of the town threw open their houses for the reception of the dead and wounded, but the former were taken to improvised morgues. The where bodies lay were heartrending. The majority of the bodies were mangled in a most frightful manner, many of them having their faces entirely torn away, leaving their brains exposed, while their jaws, fingers and limbs had been torn off. About 5 o'clock one of the Chicago Times staff visited the scene. The sleeping car Tunis was at the end of the train. It was jacked in the air, supported by trestles. The front end of the car was directly over the place where the bridge stood. To the right lay a coach broken into kindling wood, and directly on the road was piled up what was left of six or seven coaches turned bottom up and broken beyond recognition. Beyond were two tenders and one engine. They were turned bottom side up, and were scarcely recognizable. Along the hedges there were valises, shoes, boots, hats, all manner of articles of wearing apparel, broken lanterns and seats from cars. It was an awful sight. Hats of men and women broken and smeared with blood, coats reeking with gore, and ladies' underwear smeared with life blood. It was plain to be seen from the baggage that the travellers were well-to-do people.

SCENES IN THE DIFFERENT PLACES

"IT WAS SIMPLY HORRIBLE,"

said Mr. E. A. VanZandt, of Peoria, to a reporter. "No words of mine can describe the awfulness of the scene. I was in the rear sleeper and was in no danger, as no one in the six sleepers was more than shaken up, but even there we got a bad shake. I felt three distinct bumps and then rushed out of the car and ran forward to the wreck. The scene was horrible. The only light was the flames of the burning bridge, and above the day coaches were piled on top of one another in a heterogeneous mass. The engines were buried in the ditch, and the

HEADLESS BODY OF ENGINEER M'CLINTOCK

was underneath. From all sides came cries for aid, so we went to work, and we worked hard, too. If the wreck ever caught fire 300 people would have been burned to death. The only thing we could do was to smother the fire with dirt. It was hard and slow work, and took us four hours, but we did it, and when the fire was out and other help came, we got the dead and wounded out during the morning and carried them to Chatsworth."

There was an incident in the affair which was not only remarkable in its way, but shows how terribly those six coaches were jammed and mashed together. When the accident occurred, Andy Mooney, of Peoria, and Conductor Stillwell, who was in charge of the train, were three cars from each other. Mooney was in the second car and Stillwell in the fifth. The next instant they found themselves literally in each other's arms, the car in which the conductor was riding having been carried over the two in front and dropped on top of the one in which Mooney sat. The strange part of it was that neither man was hurt.

The most horrible death of all was that of Eugene McClintock, engineer of the second engine.

THE LATEST PARTICULARS.

Charnel houses and hospitals made up to-night what has been the peaceful village of Chatsworth. Of 800 merry excursionists, journeying by rail to the Falls of Niagara twenty-four hours ago, fully half that number have since passed through a maelstrom more fearful than all the whirling waters that they were travelling far to see. Eighty-four of their blackened and mangled corpses are scattered in the depot, schools and engine houses here and at Piper City, or are being carried on trains in all directions to their homes. One hundred and thirteen cripples are stretched on all available mattrasses, beds, chairs and floors in this vicinity struggling for a little lease of life. The streets are filled with crowds of anxious seekers for friends and relations, and with other crowds of bustling people hurrying medicines, slowly bearing rude pine coffins to the trains or talking earnestly of the horror.

AN EYE WITNESS' STORY

P. C. Church, commercial traveller arrived from Peoria this morning and related many incidents of the disaster. "We didn't hear about it until yesterday morning," said he, "and the first report was that several hundred had been killed. There were 750 excursionists from Peoria alone, and a special train was at once made up to go over to the scene of the accident, about sixty miles distant. When we reached the place where the accident occurred the first thing we saw was a pile of mashed-up coaches as high as a telegraph pole. The top of the second chair car shot up on top of this, standing like a monument, at least fifteen feet higher. We arrived just in time to see Mr. Murphy, a hotel-keeper from Galesburg, climb out of a hole in the top of the first chair car, which was just in view upon a pile of broken timbers at the top of the heap. He pulled out his wife and baby uninjured, but almost exhausted from having been penned up for nearly twelve hours. It was with great difficulty they were assisted to the ground. Mr. Murphy then went back into the hole and brought out alive a little baby. He had torn it from the arms of a dead mother. After that he helped out an aged woman, whose back had been injured. These five, together with two others, were all that were rescued from the car. When Murphy came down I asked him how it happened that he was not killed. He replied that when the crash came his wife was sitting in one seat and himself and the baby were in the one just behind and near the front of the car. The baby was knocked off the seat and he stooped to pick her up as they shot into the mass of ruins ahead. Just at that moment he said a timber penetrated the car, shooting across the place where he had been sitting and struck a young lady who sat opposite in the neck. He was thus pinned down by the timber, which also protected him from being smashed and saved his life. He looked across the aisle and saw the young lady's head had fallen over on the back of her seat and hung only by the skin. The sight of the dead and wounded lying in the fields was horrible. A friend who was with me counted ninety-seven dead bodies at noon yesterday, and the wreck was not nearly cleared away. They were lying in little heaps of about a dozen, all having been killed in a different manner. The entire side of one man's face would be smashed in, while a hole as large as your fist in the forehead of another would show where the timber had penetrated. Three-fourths of the dead never knew what killed them. It was a sight I never want to look upon again. There were young ladies in picnic dress, with their white skirts saturated with blood and the front of their faces mashed beyond recognition. One young-looking mother had held her baby in her arms, when a timber striking the child in the back impaled both victims in instant death. The mother's face did not bear a scratch, but the expression on it will haunt me to the grave. I was sick when I returned from the catastrophe last night. It would make any man sick. The depot at Peoria was surrounded by 5,000 people, all waiting for news from the wreck."

A BABY'S MIRACULOUS ESCAPE.

Mr. Arch. Croswell and wife, of Peoria, were on their way to visit their parents in Kankakee with their six weeks' old baby. Mrs. Croswell occupied a seat in the front end of the car, next to the door. Mr. Croswell, being unable to get a seat with his wife, took another position a few yards back. When the concussion came the front end of the car was crushed in, and Mrs. Croswell killed. The baby was found in the centre of the car with but slight injuries. It was taken to a farm house near by and cared for.

FRIGHTFUL SCENES OF SUFFERING.

A special from Forest to the Times says: "As fast as the wounded were brought into Chatsworth from the wreck they were taken directly to the town hall, which had been turned into a temporary hospital. Beds and cots were brought in from neighboring houses with necessary bedding, and the sufferers were cared for by loving hands. Torn and bleeding human beings in all stages of suffering lay around the rooms, moaning and crying with agony, while doctors and nurses were binding up their wounds. Bloody clothing, torn and covered with mud, lay around on the floors in heaps, with car cushions or mattresses and blankets on which they had been brought from the wreck. Many patients were under the influence of ether or chloroform, while their faces, gastly white, and teeth tightly clenched, showed the suffering which they were undergoing while partially obvious of the fact. Blood was everywhere—on the floors, walls, clothing and hands of the wounded, as well as those who were caring for them. As the day wore away and the afternoon shadows lengthened into the evening the scenes changed somewhat. The wounded had been dressed and bandaged, and most of them rested quietly enough, overcome by mental and physical sufferings. Lamps were placed around the halls, their lights carefully shaded and the scene was strongly suggestive of the interior of an hospital on the field of battle. In the depot at Chatsworth and in the unoccupied store used as a morgue the scene was suggestive of a slaughter house. Stretched out on the floor in different directions were corpses of men, women and children, dressed in the clothing in which they had met their death. In the empty storeroom were counted twenty-seven corpses at one time. Their clothing was torn and dishevelled and their stiffened hands and arms, in the majority of instances, were crossed over their breasts. The heads of the dead were generally mangled in the most frightful manner and were always covered by some article of clothing. The face of a young woman who was lying on the floor of the depot had been so beaten in by the cruel car timbers that recognition was out of the question, and her brains and the flesh of her face were a pulpy mass, in which dabbled her long red hair. She was not identified. A man with a heavy dark moustache, and who was apparently 35 years of age, had been struck in the face by some object that had torn away the jaw and left the side of his face exposed. A 5-year-old boy, with chubby face and curly hair, looked contented and smiling. His legs were alone broken, but the flesh was so mangled that it bore the appearance of raw beef. His chest was also crushed in. Nearly every corpse was mangled or disfigured. The faces of some of the dead were black, as though they had died from suffocation, while others were a deadly white.

The pecuniary loss arising from the accident is simply enormous. Under the laws of Illinois the relatives of those killed in the diaster will, if they have any claim at all, deplete the treasury of the Toledo, Peoria & Western of something like $350,000, and those injured would receive at least a quarter of a million more.

THIEVES AND PICKPOCKETS.

Rowdyism by Canadian Toughs on a Detroit Steamer—Passengers Beaten and Robbed—Most of the Gang Arrested.

A Detroit despatch says: A gang of thirteen pickpockets and general thieves went to Put-in-Bay yesterday morning on the steamer City of Cleveland. Their conduct on the way was such that the officers of the boat put them ashore and refused to let them return on board. As a result they took the steamer Alaska on her return trip. During the voyage pandemonium reigned, in some cases pistols being drawn. Peaceable men were robbed, insulted and threatened with violence. The women passengers were greatly alarmed, and although the officers of the boat did all in their power to restore order the riotous conduct lasted during the whole trip. When the steamer reached Detroit she stopped in midstream and sent two yawl boats ashore. In fifteen minutes two patrol waggons filled with detectives came down to the dock. The officers got into the boats and rowed out to the Alaska. A thorough search of the boat was made, and when she came alongside the dock an hour later eleven persons were brought off and taken to police headquarters. Among those arrested were: Martin Forbes, of Toronto; John Byers, of London, Ont.; Robert S. Rodgers, of Hamilton, Ont., and Thos. Mullen, Windsor, Ont. Two of the gang, on the approach of the police, jumped overboard. One, said to be the ringleader, reached shore and escaped. The other was taken off one of the blades of the paddle wheel. Ex-Deputy Sheriff Downs and George Campbell, of this city, were badly beaten by the gang. A large amount of cash was found in the pocket of one of the gang.

THE ACTOR AND HIS WIFE.

De Bensaude Arrested for Ringing His Wife's Door Bell.

A London cable says: Mr. De Bensaude was on Wednesday arrested for violently, wilfully and persistently ringing the front door bell of Miss Violet Cameron's villa in that part of London known as St. John's Wood. He was hauled up before a magistrate at the Marylebone Police Court, and much of the dirty linen which was so copiously aired last fall at the Tombs in New York was relaundried. The only new thing which appeared during the course of the proceedings was the remarkable statement made by Miss Violet Cameron's lawyer to the effect that she had already paid her unsavory husband a sum of $5,000 in the hope of getting a little peace and quietness, and that the reason of De Bensaude's continued ringing of the front door bell was with the object of extorting further payments. To this De Bensaude retorted that the $5,000 in question had been paid him in consideration of his signing a statement to the effect that he saw nothing damaging to Miss Cameron as a wife in the purely business relations which she had maintained with the Earl of Lonsdale. De Bensaude added that he now regretted having made the statement above mentioned. By way of compromise he offered to undertake never to ring the front door bell again if he were furnished with a pass key. This was indignantly refused by Miss Cameron's counsel, and the case was then adjourned for further hearing.

Poverty Among Plenty.

A New York despatch says: One year ago Joseph Waldman, a Polish Jew, arrived in this country with his young and pretty wife Elizabeth. The couple began housekeeping in Fifth street, and Joseph secured employment in a manufacturing house. He was dissipated, however, and lost his situation, and to make matters worse his wife was taken ill. They then moved to Orchard street, and lived on charity for several months. Joseph again obtained work, but spent his money and abused his wife and infant. Three weeks ago he disappeared and over a week the mother has lived on ten cents worth of dry bread and what little else her poor neighbors could spare. Yesterday she gave up in despair. Last night the neighbors sent notice to the police headquarters that Mrs. Waldman was starving and that if something was not done immediately she would die. Another poor family residing in Orchard street shared half a loaf of bread and two cents' worth of milk with the starving woman and her child that morning.

At the village of Liss, in Hampshire England, an ox was boiled whole on Jubilee Day. A huge tank was placed in a hole in the ground, and was bricked all round. The whole carcase was lowered into the tank, with quantities of vegetables, and, after boiling seven hours, the resulting soup and the meat were served o the people of the village.

This is the sort of stories that they publish for fact in Saratoga: "A clergyman, calling on a Washington street family, was ushered into the parlor, where Miss Betty was seated at the pianoforte. He asked the young lady, a member of his Bible class, to 'play one of her favorites.' 'I'm not playng favorites any more,' she said. 'I'll take he field against them every time.'

The Baby's Dilemma.

My 4-year-old baby sat on my lap,
In the dusk of the fading day—
So helpless he seemed as he nestled there,
So dependent on mother and mother-care,
That I asked, as I kissed the golden head,
'What would you do, dear, if mamma were dead?"

The eyes met mine with a steadfast look,
That showed neither sadness nor fear;
The lips still smiled in a careless way,
As though my death were a new-found play;
Not a tear in the eye or the voice as he said,
"I would live wiv grandma if you was dead."

"But grandma is old and feeble, you know,
And not able to care for you;
You couldn't stay there." The face grew grave,
One quick, scared look at my face he gave,
Then, still half defiant, he slowly said,
"I tould live wiv Auntie if you was dead."

"But Auntie has boys of her own, you know,
And she wouldn't want any more.
No; you couldn't live there." The brown eyes fell;
Life looks pretty gloomy just now. But still,
With a quiver of the lip and chin, he said,
"Touldn't I live wiv Uncle Tom if you was dead?"

"Uncle Tom has no wife or home, you know,
And a man couldn't care for you."
The little breast heaved with its weight of woe—
Was there nowhere, then, for a boy to go?
And he sobbed as his arms around my neck he threw,
"I would want to die and go with you."

—Mary Rebecca Hart.

THE JUDGE'S WIFE.

Her name was Nita Dominique; she was an Italian by birth and just 17. Friendless and alone in her own country, she had come to America to seek the assistance of an uncle who had emigrated to try his fortunes some time previously. But instead of being met at the steamer's dock by her uncle she was greeted by the sad news of his death, and found herself utterly alone in a land of strangers.

This is the story Lucy Keene told to Judge Devereux when he called.

"But she did not give up," said Lucy, growing more earnest as she narrated Nita's simple story to the judge. "She was determined to earn her livelihood somehow, and as they all told her New York was already crowded with applicants for every sort of work she resolved on keeping on to the country. But her money was spent and the storm came on, and, poor creature, she was worn and wearied out, and, when night came on, she fell fainting at our door and we found her there.

"She is very intelligent," added Mrs. Keene, "and has, she tells me, been educated in an Italian convent. I wish we could find her a situation as governess or resident instructress in some seminary or school."

Judge Devereux listened quietly, without expressing any opinion. He was a hale, handsome man, somewhere about 40, a rich widower, with two or three little children, and report spoke favorably as to the possibility of Miss Lucy Keene being some day promoted to the dignity of Mrs. Devereux, of Devereux Terrace.

Lucy herself, a modest little rosebud of a creature, scarcely dared to think of this distinction in store for her, yet Judge Devereux's daily visits shed a sort of subdued sunshine on her life. For it was a quiet, monotonous sort of existence, boasting of little variety and less excitement, as most lives are when spent within the precincts of a country village.

To this humdrum succession of days and nights Nita Dominique came like the gorgeous bloom of a fire-hearted cactus in a sober bed of daisies, or a tropic dream, or a meteor glowing athwart the midsummer starlight, or aught else that is new and strange and lovely. Her broken English, like the lispings of a child first learning to talk; her pretty surprise at the manners and customs of the western world; the strong attachment she manifested toward Lucy Keene and her eagerness to assist the widow and her daughter in each and every one of their household tasks very soon endeared her to them.

And even Judge Devereux, the staid, grave, stately man, grew to notice Nita, and chat with her, and be amused with her innocent talk.

"Yes," he said, one night after he had gravely sat and watched her for some time, "she is beautiful; and it is no ordinary type of loveliness, either."

Lucy Keene looked up from her sewing and for a moment, one moment only, the crimson rushed to her cheek and a keen pang seemed to pierce through her heart.

"Am I growing jealous?" she questioned herself, hurrying away to the solitude of her own room. "Jealous! and of poor, friendless, solitary Nita! Oh, surely, surely I am not so base as that!"

But, nevertheless, Lucy Keene drooped a little after this, as a white lily droops when some unseen worm is gnawing at its roots.

It was a week or two after this when Judge Devereux came into the sitting-room of the Keene cottage just at dusk. The doors and windows stood wide open to admit the perfumed air and scent of early June, but there was no one in the apartment, and, although the judge could hear the silvery voice of Nita Dominique thrilling soft Italian barcaroles down in the garden as she wandered by herself he did not turn in that direction, but threw himself on the sofa in the bay window, where the fluttering muslin curtain half concealed him, and, with his hands crossed beneath his head, fell into a dreamy sort of reverie.

Probably it was succeeded by something very like slumber, for when he came back to a consciousness of the world around him, there were voices by the opposite window—Lucy and her mother, enjoying the quiet twilight together.

"Hark!" said Lucy, softly, after a moment or two of silence; "don't you hear Nita singing in the garden? What a thrush-like voice she has! Mamma, Nita is growing restless; she thinks she ought to have something to do."

"Lucy," said Mrs. Keene, "did it never strike you that—that Judge Devereux was beginning to notice Nita Dominique a deal?"

"Yes, mamma." Lucy's voice was changed and constrained now.

"Do you think he is in love with her, Lucy?"

"I think he is, mamma."

"But, Lucy," said Mrs. Keene, with a disturbed tone, "it is not right. I thought—I hoped—Judge Devereux was growing fond of you."

"Mamma, darling"—and by the sound of Lucy's voice the judge knew that she had left her seat and was nestling close to her mother's shoulder—"it is right. Judge Devereux has been most kind to us, but we must never presume on his kindness. He has never given us real reason to suppose him aught but a warm friend and generous neighbor, and if he does love Nita Dominique she will have gained a true and noble husband."

"I shall never endure the sight of Nita again if she is to take the brightness out of your life, Lucy," faltered the mother.

"Mamma, darling, hush!" coaxed Lucy. "Ought I to grudge poor Nita the one drop of sweetness in her bitter cup? Come, mamma; don't let us talk of this any more. The piano is open in the back room and I have not sung you the Italian canzonet that Nita taught me last night."

The mother and daughter went away, and when they returned, half an hour later, with candles lighted, the room was empty.

"Lucy," said Judge Devereux, a day or two afterward: "I have been thinking of a nice situation for Nita."

"What is it?"

There was no bitter jealousy in the soft eyes she turned up toward his face, only the sweet, friendly interest one young girl might feel in the welfare of another.

"What do you think of her as a companion and instructress to my little girls?" he asked.

"I think Nita Dominique's companionship would ennoble and improve any one."

"Lucy!"

"Yes, Judge Devereux," she rejoined.

"Nita has promised!"

"I congratulate you!" she said, with choked accents.

"And I think I deserve congratulations, now that I have secured a good governess. I am not yet content, however want a wife."

"A wife, Judge Devereux?"

"Yes, a wife, Lucy, and no one but yourself will answer my expectations in that respect. My little treasure, I have loved you long and truly—will you trust me with your heart?"

And Lucy Keene's protestations were drowned in the tender accents of her lover's voice.

How to Catch Cold.

Go to an evening party in a dress suit without putting on heavy underwear to compensate for the lightness of the cloth.

Sit in a street car next to an open window.

Leave off your heavy underclothing on a mild day.

Take a hot drink before going out into the cold or damp air.

Let the boys romp at school during recess time without their hats.

Sit in the passage or near an entry after dancing for half an hour.

Sit in a barber shop in your shirt sleeves while waiting to be shaved.

Put on a pair of thin shoes in the evening when you go to call upon your girl.

Fail to change your shoes and stockings after coming in on a rainy day.

Have your hair cut and shampooed just as a change takes place in the weather.

Wear one of the ladies' new cutaway coats without a chamois or flannel vest underneath.

Throw your overcoat open on a blustering winter day to show off your nice new necktie.

Send the children out in autumn for exercise in short, thin stockings and short skirts.

Take a hot bath in the evening and sit up in your room to finish the last pagesof an exciting novel.

Throw off your heavy coat when you reach the office in a great hurry and put on your thin knockabout.

Go down to breakfast without a wrap on a chilly morning before the fires have got fully started.

Put the window of your sleeping-room up before you go to bed, especially if the window is near the bed.

Run a square to catch a street car and take off your hat for a few minutes, to cool off, when you catch it.

Go out into the lobby during a theatrical performance and promenade around without your overcoat.

Do your back hair up high when you have been accustomed to wear it low and go out on a windy day.

Take a long bicycle ride and stand for a while describing and showing off the beauties of your machine.

Come in from a rapid gallop on horseback and stand talking in the open air to a friend for five or ten minutes.

If you are bald-headed or have a very susceptible back, sit during grand opera near one of the side doors.

A Marrying Market for 100 Girls.

The Panhandle of Texas is a body of territory running up at the extreme northwest corner of the State between the Indian Territory and New Mexico. It is now filling up with people, and in Crosby county, where the largest gathering of population is, there is a town which has taken the name of Panhandle. Somebody has started a newspaper there, and in a recent issue of it appeared the following: "Wanted—Immediately, 100 single young women who are prepared to rough it for a time to come to the Panhandle and marry our thrifty young men who have located on 640 acres of land and are now living in dugouts, tents and cabins. We can speak a good word for every one of the boys; they are all noble American citizens except one, and he is a little unfortunate in being the son of an English lord. Girls, this is a good chance. Besides this, married life will beat single blessedness every time. In a few months' time the dugouts will be turned into cellars and comfortable houses erected when the railroads bring in lumber." There is no place like a new country for the fair sex. There every woman is a belle and every good woman is little less than an angel. The rough men of the frontier know how to appreciate the intrinsic excellence of the sex.—New Orleans Picayune.

The artesian well at Pesth, the deepest one in the world, supplies hot water for public baths and other purposes. It is 3,120 feet deep, and supplies daily 176,000 gallons of water heated to 150 degrees Fahrenheit.

The Princess Pignatale is now a waiter girl in a second-class Vienna cafe. She quarrelled with her relatives last winter and tried life in a London music hall for a brief period.

THE "PUNCH PHOTOGRAPH."

Loud Complaints When the Conductor Takes a Poor Photograph.

Much complaint has been made in consequence of the introduction of a new ticket system on overland roads to California, says the San Francisco Chronicle. The trouble all arises from the fact that the ticket given at the Missouri river by the overland agents contains what is called a "punch photograph" of the holder. This is supposed to be a complete description of the passenger. Along the margin of the ticket is printed, in a straight column, the following words in small, black type:

Male—Female.
Slim—Medium—Stout.
Young—Middle-aged—Elderly.
Eye.—Light—Dark.
Hair.—Light—Dark.
Beard—Moustache—Chin—Side—None.

The passenger is photographed on the ticket bearing his signature by punching out all the words that are not descriptive of him. If for a male, the word "female" is cut out by the punch; if he is slim, the words "medium" and "stout" are punched; if his eyes are light, the word "dark" is stricken out; and if he wears no beard, the word "none" is left standing, while "moustache," "chin" and "side" are punched. Now, it is readily seen how a train agent passing hurriedly through a crowded car is likely to make errors in describing his passengers on their tickets, and so far from being a "photograph" of the holder, the marginal sketch often becomes a rank caricature. Even where the punch-marks faithfully portray the features and figure, the female passenger cannot always preserve her good temper on looking at the picture drawn for her. A well-developed lady of an uncertain age is not likely to consider it a compliment to be labelled in cold type as "stout" and "elderly." That, however, is nothing to the treatment received by a Boston girl on her way to California, who was "photographed" as being a "female" of medium build, middle-aged, dark eyes and hair, and a side beard. This description, while containing evidences of careless, free-hand portraiture, is not, however, as bad as that of an olive-complexioned young lady who was punched as an elderly "male," slim and with light eyes and hair and a chin beard. Tourist passengers on the overland trains often derive great amusement from a comparison of notes or, rather, of tickets, but their fun is turned to disgust when they are told that they cannot secure return passage on the tickets when they have been wrongly portrayed by the train agent.—San Francisco Chronicle.

Beautiful Women as a Bane.

The tendency of the present day is the laxity of conversation permitted by many ladies in society in their male friends. This latter evil is one of very rapid growth, and has spread in many cases from the married women even to the girls, who think that they can make themselves as agreeable to the men as their successful rivals, by adopting the same style and allowing the same freedom of conversation. This, to a great extent, is attributable to the rage for beautiful women, which for some time now has been dominant in London society; for now a woman, if she is extremely lovely, and can get an introduction, is sure to be a star in society for a time, no matter what her position may be, and whether it entitles her to be feted and made much of by the great ones in the land, and wishing to make her reign as successful as possible until a brighter star arises and eclipses her, permits and encourages that loose kind of conversation that is so attractive to many men. This rage for beauty has been a great bane in London society for some time, and has rightly been a source of annoyance to the younger unmarried members of families who hold their position by right, for it is an undoubted hardship for them to feel themselves shelved and neglected by the men in favor of the fashionable beauties, and some of the sillier of them think that they can improve their position by copying the ways, manners and conversation of these piratical craft. Society has lately advanced a stage further, and the beauties of London society whose "face is their fortune" are now finding rivals in successful showmen, whose merits as pets of the fashionable world are not properly appreciated in their own country. This same worship of a successful showman is in close analogy to the latter and more rotten days of the Roman Empire, when the gladiators were the favored ones and pets of the Roman ladies. Society, again, is open to all who have the golden key; and if any aspirant who does not happen to have a beautiful face, or to be a successful showman, with flowing locks and wild appearance, can judiciously get taken up, and is willing to spend unlimited money, his or her success is also ensured—London Saturday Review.

Printers' Pie.

A respected clergyman of the Church of England in this city writes: Are you aware of the origin of the word "pie" as used by you printers, I believe for confusion in your types. The term is derived either from pinatz, a tablet, or from pica, a magpie. The allusion in the latter is to the varying colors in which the directions or calendar of the Church's service books were set forth. The directions of the calendar, which in its simplified form now precedes the Book of Common Prayer, were so complicated that one of the first duties of the Service Books Revision Committee in Edward VI.'s time was to simplify them. So involved were the rules that the title by which the body of directions was designated has become a very symbol of perplexity and confusion. Hence perplexity and confusion in printed matter has become known as 'pie'—an equivalent originally to "calendar." Archbishop Cranmer said before the Revision Committee: "The number and hardness of the rules called the 'Pie,' and the manifold changings of the service, was the cause that to turn the book only was so hard and intricate a matter that many times there was more business to find out what should be read than to read it when it was found ut."

The income of Archbishop Corrigan is estimated at $40,000 a year. This is gathered from the cathedraticum, a tax of $200 a year on each church in the archdiocese, $5,000 salary from the cathedral, his palace and expenses, and a tax of $1 on each burial in Calvary cemetery.

A MONKEY SUSPENSION BRIDGE.

How the Jolly Jackos Cross a Running Stream in Safety.

(Capt. Reid's Adventures in South America.)

"They are coming toward the bridge; they will most likely cross by the rocks yonder," observed Raoul.

"How, swim it?" I asked. "It is a torrent there."

"Oh, no!" answered the Frenchman. "Monkeys would rather go through fire than water. If they cannot leap the stream they will bridge it."

"Bridge it!—and how?"

"You will see in a moment," my companion replied.

Presently the monkeys appeared upon the opposite bank, headed by an old gray chieftain, officered like so many soldiers. One, an aide-de-camp, or chief pioneer, perhaps, ran out upon a projecting rock, and after looking across the stream, as if calculating the distance, scampered back and appeared to communicate with the leader. This produced a movement in the troops. Meanwhile several of the monkeys (engineers, no doubt) ran along the bank, examining the trees on both sides of the arrayo. At length they all collected around a tall cottonwood that grew over the narrowest part of the stream, and twenty or thirty of them scampered up its trunk. On reaching a high point the foremost, a strong fellow, ran out upon a limb, and taking several turns of his tail around it, slipped off and hung head downwards. The next on the limb, also a stout one, climbed down the body of the first, and whipped his tail tightly round the neck and forearm of the latter, dropping off in his turn, and hung head down. The third repeated this manœuvre upon the second, and the fourth upon the string resting his forepaws upon the ground. The living chain now commenced swinging backward and forward like the pendulum of a clock. The motion was slight at first, but gradually increased, the lowermost monkey striking his hands violently on the earth as he passed the tangent of the oscillating curve. Several others upon the limbs above aided the movement. This continued till the monkey at the end of the chain was thrown among the branches of a tree on the opposite bank. Here, after two or three vibrations, he clutched a limb and held fast. This movement was executed adroitly, just at the culmination point of the oscillation, in order to save the intermediate links from too sudden a jerk. The chain was now fast at both ends, forming a complete suspension bridge, over which the whole troop to the number of four or five hundred passed. It was a comical sight to witness the quizzical expression of countenance along that living chain.

After the troops had passed one monkey attached his tail to the lowest on the bridge, another girded him in the same manner, and another until a dozen more were added to the string. These last were powerful fellows, and running up to a high limb they lifted the bridge into a position almost horizontal. Then a scream from the last monkey of the new formation warned the tail end that all was ready, and the next moment the whole chain was swung over and landed safely on the opposite bank. The lowermost links now dropped off like a melting candle, while the higher ones leaped to the branches and came down by the trunk. The whole troop then scampered off into the chapparal and disappeared.

How to Select a Wife.

Good health, good morals, good sense and good temper are the four essentials for a good wife. These are the indispensables. After them come the minor advantages of good looks, accomplishments, family position, etc. With the first four married life will be comfortable and happy. Lacking either it will be in more or less degree a failure. Upon good health depends largely good temper and good looks, and to some extent good sense also, as the best mind must be affected more or less by the weaknesses and whims attendant on frail health. Young man, if your wife is falling into a state of invalidism, first of all things try to restore her health. If she is troubled with debilitating female weaknesses, buy Dr. Pierce's Favorite Prescription. It will cure her.

To the novel colors invented for women's clothes of "crushed strawberry" and "whipped cream" has been added the color of "slapped baby."

An ugly complexion made Nellie a fright,
Her face was all pimply and red.
Though her features were good, and her blue eyes were bright
"What a plain girl is Nellie!" they said.

But now, as by magic, plain Nellie has grown
As fair as an artist's bright dream;
Her face is as sweet as a flower new blown,
Her cheeks are like peaches and cream.

As Nellie walks out in the fair morning light,
Her beauty attracts every eye,
And as for the people who called her a fright,
"Why, Nellie is handsome," they cry.

And the reason of the change is that Nellie took Dr. Pierce's Golden Medical Discovery, which regulated her liver, cleared her complexion, made her blood pure, her breath sweet, her face fair and rosy, and removed the defects that had obscured her beauty. Sold by druggists.

An expert clergyman at marrying could make about four knots an hour with favorable wind.

The Moon's Influence

Upon the weather is accepted by some as real, by others it is disputed. The moon never attracts corns from the tender, aching spot. Putnam's Painless Corn Extractor removes the most painful corns in three days. This great remedy makes no sore spots, doesn't go fooling around a man's foot, but gets to business at once, and effects a cure. Don' be imposed upon by substitutes and imitations. Get "Putnam's" and no other.

Mrs. Dr. Ellis, an American lady, is physician to the Queen of Corea. She has apartments in the royal palace at Seoul, and receives a yearly salary which is equal to $18,000. She is obliged to visit the Queen daily, and remains in call when her Majesty is indisposed.

The modern-improved bird cage has a roller at one side upon which is fixed a long strip of waterproof paper, to be drawn across the floor of the cage. When the bird takes his bath the wetted paper is pulled through on the other side, so that a dry, clean strip of flooring is left in the cage.

Pierce's Pleasant Purgative Pellets Possess Powerful Potency, Pass Painlessly, Promote Physical Prosperity.

The walls of a ruined Mexican church at Grand Quievera, N.M., are three feet thicker at the top than at the base. It is matter of tradition that when the Franciscan friars abandoned the pueblo during the revolution of 1680 they buried the bells and the church treasure, and up to this time they continue concealed from the eye of the treasure-hunter and the archæological fiend.

WHAT AILS YOU?

Do you feel dull, languid, low-spirited, lifeless, and indescribably miserable, both physically and mentally; experience a sense of fullness or bloating after eating, or of "goneness," or emptiness of stomach in the morning, tongue coated, bitter or bad taste in mouth, irregular appetite, dizziness, frequent headaches, blurred eyesight, "floating specks" before the eyes, nervous prostration or exhaustion, irritability of temper, hot flushes, alternating with chilly sensations, sharp, biting, transient pains here and there, cold feet, drowsiness after meals, wakefulness, or disturbed and unrefreshing sleep, constant, indescribable feeling of dread, or of impending calamity?

If you have all, or any considerable number of these symptoms, you are suffering from that most common of American maladies—Bilious Dyspepsia, or Torpid Liver, associated with Dyspepsia, or Indigestion. The more complicated your disease has become, the greater the number and diversity of symptoms. No matter what stage it has reached, Dr. Pierce's Golden Medical Discovery will subdue it, if taken according to directions for a reasonable length of time. If not cured, complications multiply and Consumption of the Lungs, Skin Diseases, Heart Disease, Rheumatism, Kidney Disease, or other grave maladies are quite liable to set in and, sooner or later, induce a fatal termination.

Dr. Pierce's Golden Medical Discovery acts powerfully upon the Liver, and through that great blood-purifying organ, cleanses the system of all blood-taints and impurities, from whatever cause arising. It is equally efficacious in acting upon the Kidneys, and other excretory organs, cleansing, strengthening, and healing their diseases. As an appetizing, restorative tonic, it promotes digestion and nutrition, thereby building up both flesh and strength. In malarial districts, this wonderful medicine has gained great celebrity in curing Fever and Ague, Chills and Fever, Dumb Ague, and kindred diseases.

Dr. Pierce's Golden Medical Discovery

CURES ALL HUMORS,

from a common Blotch, or Eruption, to the worst Scrofula. Salt-rheum, "Fever-sores," Scaly or Rough Skin, in short, all diseases caused by bad blood are conquered by this powerful, purifying, and invigorating medicine. Great Eating Ulcers rapidly heal under its benign influence. Especially has it manifested its potency in curing Tetter, Eczema, Erysipelas, Boils, Carbuncles, Sore Eyes, Scrofulous Sores and Swellings, Hip-joint Disease, "White Swellings," Goitre, or Thick Neck, and Enlarged Glands. Send ten cents in stamps for a large Treatise, with colored plates, on Skin Diseases, or the same amount for a Treatise on Scrofulous Affections.

"FOR THE BLOOD IS THE LIFE."

Thoroughly cleanse it by using Dr. Pierce's Golden Medical Discovery, and good digestion, a fair skin, buoyant spirits, vital strength and bodily health will be established.

CONSUMPTION,

which is Scrofula of the Lungs, is arrested and cured by this remedy, if taken in the earlier stages of the disease. From its marvelous power over this terribly fatal disease, when first offering this now world-famed remedy to the public, Dr. Pierce thought seriously of calling it his "Consumption Cure," but abandoned that name as too restrictive for a medicine which, from its wonderful combination of tonic, or strengthening, alterative, or blood-cleansing, anti-bilious, pectoral, and nutritive properties, is unequaled, not only as a remedy for Consumption, but for all Chronic Diseases of the Liver, Blood, and Lungs.

For Weak Lungs, Spitting of Blood, Shortness of Breath, Chronic Nasal Catarrh, Bronchitis, Asthma, Severe Coughs, and kindred affections, it is an efficient remedy.

Sold by Druggists, at $1.00, or Six Bottles for $5.00.

Send ten cents in stamps for Dr. Pierce's book on Consumption. Address,

World's Dispensary Medical Association,
663 Main St., BUFFALO, N. Y.

D C N L. 34 87.

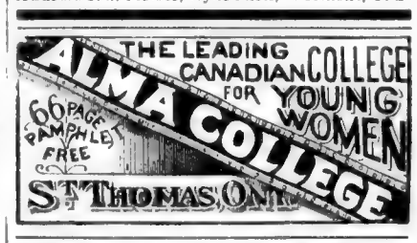
Merchants, Butchers,

AND TRADERS GENERALLY,

We want a good man in your locality to pick up

CALFSKINS

For us. Cash furnished on satisfactory guaranty. Address C. S. PAGE, Hyde Park, Vermont, U. S



CONSUMPTION.

I have a positive remedy for the above disease; by its use thousands of cases of the worst kind and of long standing have been cured. Indeed, so strong is my faith in its efficacy, that I will send TWO BOTTLES FREE, together with a VALUABLE TREATISE on this disease to any sufferer. Give express and P. O. address.

DR. T. SLOCUM,
Branch Office, 37 Yonge St., Toronto

DUNN'S BAKING POWDER

THE COOK'S BEST FRIEND

I CURE FITS!

When I say cure I do not mean merely to stop them for a time and then have them return again. I mean a radical cure. I have made the disease of FITS, EPILEPSY or FALLING SICKNESS a life-long study. I warrant my remedy to cure the worst cases. Because others have failed is no reason for not now receiving a cure. Send at once for a treatise and a Free Bottle of my infallible remedy. Give Express and Post Office. It costs you nothing for a trial and I will cure you. Address DR. H. G. ROOT,
Branch Office, 37 Yonge St., Toronto.

Tit-Bits.

Continued from First Page.

Try a barrel of Keefer's Cheap Flour.

Mr. James Carson, of Durham, has been a County Constable for 35 years.

Call at KEEFER'S and get a barrel of Choice ROLLER FLOUR.

There are now over 2,000,000 bushels of grain in the C.P.R. elevator at Owen Sound.

Just in at Brander's a large shipment of Teas direct from Japan, noted for good quality.

Mr. F. T. Carr and Mr. Wm. Pedlar of Eugenia, one day last week drew in four large loads of peas into the barn in four hours, the distance from the field to the barn being half a mile.

Racing on our streets is strictly forbidden, and we are requested to state that if anything of the kind occurs again the guilty parties will be prosecuted according to law.

Sneak thieves broke into the cellar of Mr. Geo. Swanton's unfinished brick residence the other night and stole a lot of preserves, Certain parties are suspected but no arrests have been made as yet.

Notwithstanding the rise in Sugar, Brander, taking advantage of the drop in the New York market, has secured another large consignment of those splendid values—he still sells 22 lbs. for $1 cash,

One day last week, while wading around the river a little son of James Cummings stepped upon a broken bottle with his bare feet, cutting one of his toes nearly off.—Mt. Forest Confed

We learn that our townsman, Dr. John Barnhart, sold his fine house and grounds on the corner of Bay and Russel streets last week, for a very handsome sum of money, to a gentleman from Port Arthur. While we congratulate the old Doctor upon the receipt of thousands of dollars for his property, we must express our regret at his intended removal from town to the city of Hamilton. From his long residence here, and the prominent position he has always occupied socially and in his profession, as one of our most reliable and experienced physicians, his departure from his accustomed field of practice in town and country, will be seriously felt by his old friends and patrons. We wish the Doctor many more years of health and prosperity in the new home to which he purposes going, and can only add that Owen Sound's loss will be Hamilton's gain of a worthy citizen and an excellent physician.—Owen Sound Times.

Eugenia Happenings.

From our own Correspondent.

One day recently, it so happened that two berry pickers met in a berry patch. Mrs. Duncan, of Eugenia, and Mr. Bruin of wild wood. So soon as Mrs. Duncan of Eugenia, observed bruin on the opposite side of a fallen tree, standing on his hind feet, rudely staring at her. Mrs. D. picked up a stone and hurled it at his bearship which insult he resented by a deep ominous growl. At this turn of affairs each participant to the interview, appeared to suddenly remember they each had urgent business elsewhere, and by widely diverging paths, each made great haste. Bruin crashing into the darker depths of the jungle and Mrs. Duncan with her infant on her arm made the best time home possible, thankful to be relieved from such undesirable company berry picking.

Mr. H. Meldrum has had his house veneered with brick. It looks tasty and comfortable, real home-like. Mr. E. Paul had the job and the finish reflects credit on the workman.

Harvesting in full blast around Eugenia. Many are pretty well through. Mr. Alex. Madill finished on Saturday last.

Crops are fair to good.

Oh Wiggins, Moses Oats, what hot dry weather we are having. For a month past and no let up yet.

Mr. Wm. Garrett and wife of Toronto, have been visiting their friends, Mr. Geo. Lattimer's family, lately.

Mrs. John Bowerman, of Toronto, is home on a visit to her mother, Mrs. Thos. Crowe. What a reprieve from the city's dust and din—to wander in the wild wood or saunter along listening to the murmuring stream.

Villagers nearly all following rural pursuits. Just now business circles dull. The rumble of a roller flour mill here would make more bustle and biz would hustle.

Death of Mrs. Robt. Clark.

Another old resident of Artemesia has joined the "great majority" in the person of Mrs. Robt. Clark, who passed peacefully into the better land, at her late residence, on Thursday afternoon last, the 18th inst. Deceased resided—with her husband and family—many years in Flesherton, and was much respected. She was warm-hearted and kind, and a faithful and consistent member of the Methodist Church. She was a sufferer for many months prior to her decease, and death must have been a relief. She leaves behind her a husband and a large and respectable family who sincerely mourn her loss.

Death of Mr. Wm. Wilson, sr.

WILSON.—At his late residence, Eugenia, on the 21st inst., Wm. Wilson, sr., aged 80 years.

[Deceased was born in the County of Antrim, Ireland, and came to this country some eight years ago. He was familiarly known as "Cash" Wilson. We saw him in town only a few days prior to his death, when he seemed quite hale and hearty. He was honorable and straightforward in his dealings and of a kind and genial disposition. He leaves a family of married children to mourn his loss one of whom,—Mrs. Woodburn of Glenfield Villa, Eugenia—is well and favorably known to ADVANCE readers. Deceased passed quietly away full of years and his loss is regretted by a large circle of friends and acquaintances. —ED.]

Maxwell.

By an Occasional Correspondent.

Dry weather. Harvesting about done.

Nothing has yet been done toward repairing the bridge over the Beaver River, on 10th Sideroad. The contractor having taken the job so low, along with some minor excuses, was obliged to give up the job. The Council should look after this as it is a great disadvantage to the traveling public.

Quite an exciting time occurred here on Tuesday evening. Two of our fair sex engaged in a squabble. Profanity and stone-throwing was indulged in to quite an extent.

We are pleased to see Mr. W. H. Guy, able to go around again on crutches.

Mr. James Buckingham has got his house finished. It is a fine brick residence. The painting was done by our painter, Mr. T. A. Blakely. We understand Mr. Buckingham is well pleased with the job.

Mr. Albert Brownridge's new house is rapidly nearing completion.

[Above items came to hand too late for last week's paper.—ED.]

Sore Eyes

The eyes are always in sympathy with the body, and afford an excellent index of its condition. When the eyes become weak, and the lids inflamed and sore, it is an evidence that the system has become disordered by Scrofula, for which Ayer's Sarsaparilla is the best known remedy.

Scrofula, which produced a painful inflammation in my eyes, caused me much suffering for a number of years. By the advice of a physician I commenced taking Ayer's Sarsaparilla. After using this medicine a short time I was completely

Cured

My eyes are now in a splendid condition, and I am as well and strong as ever.—Mrs. William Gage, Concord, N. H.

For a number of years I was troubled with a humor in my eyes, and was unable to obtain any relief until I commenced using Ayer's Sarsaparilla. This medicine has effected a complete cure, and I believe it to be the best of blood purifiers.—C. E. Upton, Nashua, N. H.

From childhood, and until within a few months, I have been afflicted with Weak and Sore Eyes. I have used for these complaints, with beneficial results, Ayer's Sarsaparilla, and consider it a great blood purifier.—Mrs. C. Phillips, Glover, Vt.

I suffered for a year with inflammation in my left eye. Three ulcers formed on the ball, depriving me of sight, and causing great pain. After trying many other remedies, to no purpose, I was finally induced to use Ayer's Sarsaparilla. And,

By Taking

three bottles of this medicine, have been entirely cured. My sight has been restored, and there is no sign of inflammation, sore, or ulcer in my eye.—Kendal T. Bowen, Sugar Tree Ridge, Ohio.

My daughter, ten years old, was afflicted with Scrofulous Sore Eyes. During the last two years she never saw light of any kind. Physicians of the highest standing exerted their skill, but with no permanent success. On the recommendation of a friend I purchased a bottle of Ayer's Sarsaparilla, which my daughter commenced taking. Before she had used the third bottle her sight was restored, and she can now look steadily at a brilliant light without pain. Her cure is complete.—W. E. Sutherland, Evangelist, Shelby City, Ky.

Ayer's Sarsaparilla,

Prepared by Dr. J. C. Ayer & Co., Lowell, Mass. Sold by all Druggists. Price $1; six bottles, $5.

Inistioge.

From our own Correspondent.

Very dry weather here now, and some people complain of a scarcity of water.

A great many of the farmers complain of the grain not filling and say that the yield to the acre will not be as large as anticipated.

Miss E. Armstrong, of Toronto, has been visiting here.

There has been quite a panic for harvest hands here, but the great hurry is about over.

Mr. S. Clemis, has returned to his duties at S.S. No. 4.

At the Anniversary of the Methodist church opening on the 14th inst., the Rev. G. Buggins preached impressive sermons morning and evening and the Rev. Mr. Shilton occupied the pulpit at 2:30 with a very able discourse. On the following Monday evening there was a tea-meeting held in the church which proved to be a success. Addresses were delivered by the Rev. G. Buggins, Chairman; Rev. Dr. Strongman, Rev. Mr. Shilton and the Rev. R. C. Burton. The music and singing was of the choicest kind; we must also say that the edibles got up by the Ladies' Aid were most excellent. The proceeds of the two days were $85.00 which wiped off all the incurred debt of the Church. MAUD.

NEW ADVERTISEMENTS.

Tenders

WILL be received up to the 17th Day of September, for the repairing of Church and Shed at Mount Zion. The lowest or any tender not necessarily accepted. Specifications of work to be seen at the house of

SAMUEL SHEARDOWN.

STRAY STEER.

CAME to the premises of the undersigned, Lot 18, Con. 11, Artemesia, about one month ago, a yearling Steer. Owner can have same by proving property and paying expenses.

DAVID JOHNSTON.

August 24th, 1887.

OWEN SOUND COLLEGIATE INSTITUTE

WILL open on MONDAY, 29TH AUGUST, 1887. Excellent Staff of Teachers. Inspector officially reports it the BEST EQUIPPED SCHOOL IN THE PROVINCE. Classes for First, Second and Third Class Certificates, Junior and Senior Matriculation with honors, and Law and Medical Examinations. At the Examinations in July last, all the Matriculation Candidates were successful, one of them obtaining a proficiency scholarship of one hundred dollars, and eighty-five obtained Teacher's non professional certificates. Fees $4.00 per Term payable at entrance.

Apply to

F. W. MERCHANT, M.A., Principal.
or D. R. DORIE, Sec. Board of Education.

Owen Sound, Aug. 15, 1887.

J. BRANDER PRICEVILLE,

While returning thanks to his patrons and the public for their valuable support in the past, begs to announce that he is prepared to supply their various needs

We make it our business to keep a supply of Goods suitable for the needs of our customers, and as

We Buy in Large Quantities Direct from the Manufacturers,

FOR CASH, we are in a position to

Give Extra Value

in every department. Every one should see the immense value we have in FALL GOODS just arriving.

Very Respectfully,
JAS. BRANDER.

Priceville, July 26, 1887.

TIMBER AND LAND SALE.

CERTAIN lots and the timber thereon situate in the Townships of Allan, Assiginack, Bidwell, Billings, Carnarvon, Campbell, Howland, Shegiandah, Tehkummah and Mills on the Manitoulin Island, in the District of Algoma, in the Province of Ontario, will be offered for Sale at Public Auction in blocks of 200 acres, more or less, on the first day of September next, at 10 o'clock, A.M. at the Indian Land Office in the Village of Manitowaning.

Terms of Sale:—Bonus for timber payable in cash, price of land payable in cash, a license fee also payable in cash and dues to be paid accordingly to Tariff upon the timber when cut.

The land on which the timber grows to be sold with the timber without conditions of settlement.

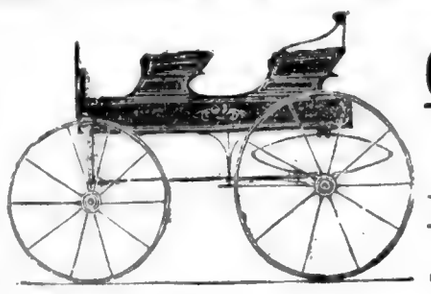
At the same time and place the Merchantable Timber of not less than nine inches in diameter at the butt, on the Spanish River Reserve and French River lower Reserve will be offered for sale for a cash bonus and annual ground rent of $1.00 per square mile, and dues to be paid on the timber as cut, according to Tariff of this Department.

For full particulars please apply to Jas. C. Phipps, Esq., Indian Supt. Manitowaning, or to the undersigned.

No other paper to insert this advertisement without authority through the Queen's Printer

L. VANKOUGHNET,
Deputy of the Supt. Gen'l. of Indian Affairs.

Department of Indian Affairs,
Ottawa, 2nd June, 1887.



MAXWELL
CARRIAGE WORKS!

LITTLE & BLAKELY,

MANUFACTURERS OF
Carriages, Democrats, Wagons &c.

Repairing, Painting, Horse-Shoeing, and General Jobbing

Done on Short Notice and at Reasonable Prices.

JOHNSON LITTLE, Blacksmith,
THOS. A. BLAKELY, Wagon-Maker & Painter.

Maxwell, May 26th, 1887.

BOOTS & SHOES!

Having received large additions to my Stock, I have a good supply on hand of Summer Goods.

LADIES' WEAR.—A fine assortment in Prunella, French Kid, Goat, Polish Calf, Buff and Heavy Boots.

MISSES AND BOYS WEAR.—A large variety of Lace & Button Boots, Shoes and Slippers.

CHILDRENS WEAR.—A very large assortment of all sorts and sizes.

MENS WEAR.—I have Buff, Calf and Enamelled Balmorals, Oxford Ties and Strong Lace Boots.

FOR PRICE AND QUALITY, CANNOT BE SURPASSED.

WM. CLAYTON, . Flesherton.

CHEAP * AND * DURABLE!

—THE WELL-KNOWN—

SPEIGHT WAGON!

Call and get Prices, &c. from undersigned.

STOVES, TINWARE, &c. for sale as usual

First-class value in every department.

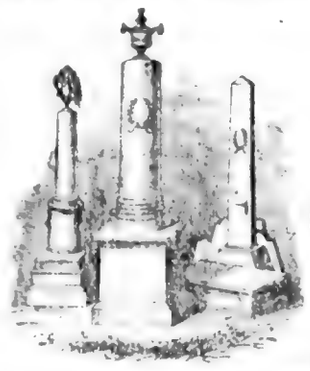
Agent for VICKER'S EXPRESS. All parcels left with him will be promptly and carefully attended to.

STRAIN'S, - FLESHERTON.

FLESHERTON.

MARBLE WORKS:

E. VANZANT,



ALL KINDS OF

Marble and Monumental Works,

Such as Monuments, Tomb Tables, Headstones Counter and Table Tops—in American and Italian Marble and Granite, and made on short notice. Also Mantles in Marble and Marbleized Slate, &c., &c.

Flesherton, Aug. 30, 1883

HEALTH FOR ALL.

HOLLOWAY'S PILLS & OINTMENT

THE PILLS

Purify the Blood, correct all Disorders of the

Liver, Stomach, Kidn'ys, and Bowels.

They invigorate and restore to health Debilitated Constitutions, and are invaluable in all Complaints incidental to Females of all ages. For Children and the aged they are priceless.

THE OINTMENT

Is an infallible remedy for Bad Legs, Bad Breasts, Old Wounds, Sores and Ulcers. It is famous for Gout and Rheumatism. For disorders of the Chest it has no equal.

For SORE THROAT, BRONCHITIS, COUGHS, COLDS

Glandular Swellings, and all Skin Diseases it has no rival; and for contracted and stiff joints it acts like a charm.

Manufactured only at Professor HOLLOWAY'S Establishment,

78, New Oxford Street (late 533, Oxford Street), London,

and are sold at 1s. 1½d., 2s. 9d., 4s. 6d., 11s., 22s., and 33s. each Box or Pot, and may be had of all Medicine Vendors throughout the World.

☞ Purchasers should look to the Label on the Pots and Boxes. If the address is not 533, Oxford Street, London, they are spurious.

A POSITIVE CURE FOR CATARRH. GIVES Immediate Relief FOR Cold in Head, HAY FEVER. EASY TO USE.

Not a Snuff, Powder or Irritating Liquid. Price 50 cts. and $1.00. If not obtainable at your druggists, sent prepaid on receipt of price. Address FULFORD & CO., Brockville, Ont.

J. W. BATES,

Furniture Dealer and Undertaker,

FLESHERTON, - ONT.

FLESHERTON ADVANCE.

"TRUTH BEFORE FAVOR."—"PRINCIPLES, NOT MEN."

VOL. VII., NO. 323. FLESHERTON, ONTARIO, THURSDAY, SEPTEMBER 1, 1887. A. R. FAWCETT, EDITOR & PROPRIETOR

Everybody

Wait.

Don't buy any Watches, Clocks, or Plateware from me or any other Jeweller 'till you see my Lines and Prices at the Flesherton Fall Fair!

I intend making, without exception the FINEST DISPLAY ever shown at that Fair, and will clear some

Staple Lines

—at—

"YOUR OWN PRICES."

Be Prepared to Buy.

FOR 5 YEARS

The People's Jeweller.

W. A. BROWN,

Markdale.

SAY, HALLO THERE! ADVERTISING PAYS! Of course it does. Just plant an advertisement in THE ADVANCE and see for yourself. Hundreds have done so and were benefitted. Have you a farm you want to sell or rent? Advertise in THE ADVANCE. Have you anything under the sun you want to sell or trade? An advertisement in THE ADVANCE will bring you customers every time. Do you want to buy anything or hire help? Advertise in THE ADVANCE every time. Address or call on A. R. Fawcett, ADVANCE Office, Flesherton, for terms, &c.

CONSUMPTION IN FLESHERTON.

There being good prospects of a fresh quantity of Flour to be consumed in the village and surrounding country the present season, the undersigned has opened out with a good stock of the following lines :—

ROLLER FLOUR!

Best Brands.

Rolled & Granulated Oat-Meal.

Corn Meal,
Cracked Wheat,
Chop,
Shorts,
Bran and Oats,

At Bottom Prices for Cash.

Special Discounts

According to amount of Purchase.

W. W. TRIMBLE,

Next door to Clayton's Shoe Store.

(312-364)

PRINTING! YES, OH, YES! IT WILL PAY all manners of persons who read this advt. to get their Printing done at THE ADVANCE Office, Flesherton. Good work at honest prices every time! A dollar saved is a dollar earned—so the proverb goes. Pamphlets, Posters, Circulars, Programs, Dodgers, Streamers, Bill Heads, Note Heads, Receipts, Note Forms, Business Cards, Visiting Cards, Labels, Tags, &c., Plain or Colored. Address or call on A. R. Fawcett, ADVANCE Office, Flesherton, for terms.

ADVERTISE in The ADVANCE

Tit-Bits.

Consisting of Local and Other Interesting Items gathered by The Advance Reporters.

Try a barrel of Keefer's Cheap Flour.

W. K. Flesher, Esq., left for England on Tuesday last.

Miss Luke, of Oshawa, is the guest of Mr. M. Richardson of this town.

Mr. Mock, wife and child, of Montreal, are the guests of Mr. Wm. Barnhouse.

Mr. Jos. Blackburne returned from a pleasant holiday trip this week, looking fresh and hearty.

During the first half of the present year three Artemesia mothers gave birth to twins.

Notice the farms advertised for sale in this week's ADVANCE under heading of "New Advertisements."

Mr. S. Damude contemplates making improvements, both inside and out, in his residence on Collingwood street.

Every one should attend the Gospel Temperance meeting in the Town Hall, Flesherton, on Monday evening next.

Miss Fleuty, daughter of the Editor of the Wingham Advance, is the guest of Mr. and Mrs. Fred. Ryder here.

Mrs. E. Fawcett, of Heathcote, and Mrs. T. Loucks, of Clarksburg, paid a brief visit to friends in Flesherton on Monday last.

The United States trade dollar will, on September 1st cease to be legal currency, and after that date it will simply be worth the amount of silver it contains.

Considerable internal and external improvements have been made in Dr. Christoe's residence on Toronto street which adds very much to its appearance.

Mr. W. M. Clark, of Toronto, is at work on the new schoolhouse. He looks hale and hearty. It is needless to say his many friends here were delighted to see him.

The Editor of this paper is building a brick printing office, as well as a brick residence, on Sydenham street—both on the same lot, and to be completed by Nov. 1st.

The Ladies' Aid of the Presbyterian church here will provide dinner for the public on the second day of East Grey exhibition, also a grand concert on the evening of same day in the Town Hall.

People visiting the great Toronto Exhibition should not forget to visit the Zoological Gardens—one of the chief attractions in the city. Splendid collection of animals, reptiles, &c., &c.

The well-known and popular Flesherton Harness Maker, Mr. D. Clayton, has removed to Johnston's Livery office—nearly opposite Munshaw's Hotel—where he will be glad to meet all his old customers and as many new ones as will favor him with their patronage.

The District Council of Grey will meet in the village of Maxwell on Tuesday, 6th September at 2 p.m. A large attendance is expected as the principle business of the meeting will be to prepare for the submission of the Scott Act in this Co.

We were mistaken in supposing that the late Wm. Wilson, sr., ever went by the name of "Cash" Wilson. We also hasten to assure friends of deceased that the name was not disrespectfully applied, as gentlemen are often known by familiar appelations which cling to them through life.

REDEEMING POINTS.—Nasal Balm does not irratate or cause sneezing, does not require any instrument for its use, does not have any ill effects, relieves from the first, and one 50 cent bottle will cure an ordinary case, with no other expense attached.

Next Monday will be Cattle Fair day in Flesherton and Smith, the Markdale barber will be in town that day attending to his numerous customers. He will be found in the stand next door to W. W. Trimble's flour and feed store.

An anniversary sermon will be preached by the Rev. Mr. Shilton next Sunday evening in the Methodist church, to the members of Fountain Council, No. 146, R. T. of T. The Council will assemble at their Hall at 6 p.m., sharp, and proceed to the service in a body.

Our enterprising contractor, Mr. John Whitten, purposes erecting a neat brick residence on his lot adjoining Mr. Piper's brick cottage this autumn. When completed this will make the fourth brick residence erected by that gentleman in Flesherton within the past four years. Next!

A St. Catherines paper says that the peach crop this year will be one of the heaviest ever known. Very many trees are so laden with luscious fruit that the owners are compelled to prop up the branches, and even then the trees are breaking down. There will also be a large crop of pears and plums.

A correspondent writes:—The largest day's threshing of the season was done on the farm of Gerard Irwin, first line west, Toronto township, one day last week. The day consisted of 9 hours and during that time 450 bushels of wheat, 525 bushels of barley, and 165 bushels of oats were turned out.—Streetsville Review.

Rev. John Cashman, of Durham, will preach in the Baptist Chapel, Flesherton, on Sunday morning next at 11 o'clock, and in Priceville at 1 p.m. The same gentleman will lecture in Priceville on Monday evening following, 5th inst., on "Life in India," to commence at 8 o'clock sharp. See dodgers for particulars.

Mr. Thos. Henderson, L.D. S., of Toronto, will be at Munshaw's Hotel, Flesherton, to-day (Thursday) and to-morrow, for the practice of his profession. Mr Henderson is an excellent dentist, and—as will be seen by card advertisement in another column—will visit Flesherton professionally the first and second days in each month.

Mr. Armstrong, the Clerk of the Peace, writes to us that he has received for distribution to qualified Justices of the Peace for this county the Statues of the last session of the Ontario Legislation as also the compilation of the Criminal laws of 1887, to be delivered personally or upon the written order of the Justice entitled thereto.

On Friday last Sergeant Reabourn of the Toronto police force, arrested Henry Hunt, storekeeper of Balaclava, who had sold to a merchant of this town 100 silk handkerchiefs, which were supposek to have been part of a stock of goods stolen recently from Olgilvie & Alexander. He was taken to Toronto for trial.—Owen Sound Times.

The boys who were discovered in Mr. W. W. Trimble's flour and feed store, Sunday before last, appeared before Squires Armstrong and Flesher on Wednesday afternoon of last week. They pleaded guilty to the charge of having unlawfully entered the store, with intent to commit larceny, but denied having taken anything. The parents of the boys were held in bonds for their future good behavior. Out of respect for the parents, we have not published the names of the boys, who it is to be hoped, will carefully avoid treading in such dangerous paths in future. The best advice we can give them is to "shun every appearance of evil and cleave to that which is good." Honesty is always the best polity.

TAMARAC.—To effectually cure a bad Cough or Cold, and do it quick, use Tamarac Elixir. It strikes at the root of the trouble and gives immediate relief.

The Roller Mill.

We are more than pleased to be able to inform our readers this week, that the Flesherton Roller Mill is a reality. A fine new water wheel is being placed in position, after which the roller machinery will be put in as expeditiously as possible. The bare announcement of this fact has already created a decidedly favorable impression in town and community. The outlook is bright and reassuring for Flesherton's future beyond the shadow of a doubt.

When all the results are summed up, Grey county has reason to be proud of its Collegiate Institute, which this year stands first in the province—the Departmental Examinations being the test. We congratulate Mr. Merchant and his excellent staff of Teachers.

A Gospel Temperance meeting will be held in the Town Hall, Flesherton, on Monday evening 5th inst. Besides local clergymen and singers there will be present Grand Councillor Steele, of Guelph, Miss Burgess, of Listowel, and Miss Mills, of Hamilton, as a musical trio. Come one and all, A good time is expected. A silver collection will be taken in aid of the Temperance Propogation fund.

There has been registered with W. J. Bellamy, Esq., Division Registrar for Township of Artemesia, during the half year ending 30 June, 1887, 41 birth, 14 marriages, and 28 death. Of the deaths, the following are the causes: Old age 3, inflammation 8, consumption 4, not given 2, and one each of the following: scarlet fever, measles, cancer, quinsy, liver complaint, Bright's disease, brain fever.

Bush fires were raging west of this village during the latter part of this week. Mr. Joshua Reid, of Orangeville, who owns what used to be called the Railroad Farm, had 60 tons of hay burnt. It was stacked in the field. Considerable damage was done to fences in the same vicinity. Mr. Jelly's buildings on the farm west of the railway and north of the station were at one time in considerable danger.—Shelburne Free Press.

On Saturday of last week a Chicago Detective arrived at Owen Sound and immediately proceeded to Presque Isle, it having been reported at the headquarters of the great Chicago Detective Agency that McGarigle, or someone looking very much like him was at Presque Isle camping. On his arrival at this place he found the only man that looked like McGarigle was a hardware man of Owen Sound.—Wiarton Echo.

A Tuesday morning despatch from Port Arthur states that the Mark's hotel was burned and a young man named Ketchum was injured by falling timbers. Shortly afterwards Mrs. Ketchum received a telegram stating that Seneca G. Ketchum, late of the Orangeville Post, but now editor of the Port Arthur Herald was the unfortunate Ketchum referred to in the despatch. How serious his injuries are is not yet known, but it is hoped they are not so bad as reported. Later despatches say that Seneca is being well cared for in the Port Arthur hospital.—Dufferin Advertiser.

Disorders of the stomach, liver and kidneys, can be cured by restoring the blood to a healthful condition, through the vitalizing and cleansing action of Ayer's Sarsaparilla. It is the safest, most powerful, and most highly concentrated alterative available to the public.

For Sale Cheap.

One new Buggy for sale cheap for cash or good paper, or will exchange for a good horse and give the difference.—J. W. WHITTEN, Flesherton. 2t.

—AT—

RUSSELL'S

NOTED

JEWELRY

STORE,

Flesherton!

Is to be found the finest and most complete stock of

WATCHES, CLOCKS, JEWELRY,

SILVERWARE, and FANCY Goods in this section of country.

Some beautiful designs in ladies' R. Plate Bar Pins and Brooches. Just received, SPECTACLES for the million. In Watches, we keep Waltham, Elgin, Springfield, Illinois, Hampden, Columbus, Swiss, in gold, gold-filled, silver and silver-ore cases, 2, 3, 4, & 5 ozs. at from $6.90 to $60, warranted from 2½ to 5 years.

☞ Our Watch Repair Book tells the startling tale of 486 watches repaired from July 1st 1886 to July 1st 1887, which is 140 over and above what any other dealer can show in this section and (We) did not add the watch sales and clock repairs and call them watch repairs to swell the number as some dealers do. Of course our watch repairs increased considerably since last fall on account of so many poor watches being auctioned off around here which needed any amount of repairing and the people are becoming wise to the fact now that for thoroughly good Watches, Clocks, Silverware, etc., and for Fine Watch Repairing, they have of necessity to go to Russell's Not'd Jewelry Store, Flesherton

He had Made Provision.

A country cousin who had come to the city had outstayed his welcome at the house of a friend, and, as he showed no symptoms of departing, his host a morning or two ago said to him:

"Well, I don't wish to hurry you, old fellow, but don't you think it is time you saw your wife and children again, eh? Why, they will be growing inconsolable for the loss of you."

"That is strange, now," replied the countryman. "I was thinking just the same thing myself yesterday, and I wrote off only last night to tell the missus and the young ones to come up to me here at once."

FARMERS!

WOOLEN FACTORY

Don't forget there is good work done at the Flesherton

And we are doing all in our power to please. Customers are finding out it is to their advantage to deal with us as our Prices are Low and Our Goods are Reliable, and notwithstanding price being cut so close on account of hard times, I intend to keep my business, viz., CARDING, ROLL CARDING, SPINNING, WEAVING, &c., &c. Give us a trial and see for yourself.

W. H. FLESHER.

Flesherton, May 26th, 1887.

In Arcadia.

Because I choose to keep my seat,
Nor join the giddy dancers' whirl,
I pray you do not laugh, my girl,
Nor ask me why I find it sweet
In my old age to watch your glee—
I, too, have been in Arcady.

And though full well I know I seem
Quite out of place in scenes like this,
You can't imagine how much bliss
It gives me just to sit and dream,
As you flit by me gracefully,
How I, too, dwelt in Arcady.

For sweetheart, in your merry eyes
A vanished summer buds and flows,
And with the same bright cheeks of rose
I see your mother's image rise
And o'er a long and weary track
My buried boyhood wanders back.

And as with tear-dimmed eyes I cast
On your sweet form my swimming glance,
I think your mother used to dance
Just as you do, in that dead past,
Long years ago—yes, fifty-three—
When I, too, dwelt in Arcady.

And in the music's laughing notes
I seem to hear old voices ring
That have been hushed, ah! many a spring.
The echo of a melody
I used to hear in Arcady.

And yonder youth—nay, do not blush—
The boy's his father o'er again;
And hark ye, miss, I was not plain
When at his age—what! must I hush?
He's coming this way? Yes, I see,
You two yet dwell in Arcady.

SIR HUGH'S LOVES.

"Yes, because it is so swelled," returned Miss Ferrers, in a sympathising voice. "Mr. Huntingdon, if you will ring the bell I will ask my maid for some hot water. I think that will relieve Lady Redmond; and if you will kindly join my brother, you will find him outside. Ruth and I will soon make your cousin more comfortable;" and Erle at once took the hint.

The dainty little boot was sadly mangled before they could get it off, and Miss Ferrers uttered a pitying exclamation at the sight of the inflamed and swollen ankle. The hot fomentation was deliciously soothing, and Miss Ferrers' manipulations so soft and skilful that Fay was not sorry that her little protest was made without success.

"Don't you think your maid could do this. I do not like to trouble you so much," she said once in a deprecating voice.

"It is no trouble," returned Margaret, fixing her beautiful eyes for a moment on Fay's pale face; "I like to do it for you, Lady Redmond." Yes, she liked to do it; it gave her a strange pleasure to minister to her innocent rival, Hugh's wife. As Fay's little white foot rested in her hand, all at once a scene arose before her mind—an upper chamber, where a mild majestic Figure rose from among His wondering disciples and "girded Himself with a towel."

Ineffable condescension, divine humility, uniting for all ages the law of service and kindly ministration; bidding men to do likewise, and to wash the feet of sinners.

Margaret had stolen many a look at the pale little face resting on the cushions. What a baby face it was, she thought, and yet wonderfully pretty too; and then, as she bent over her work again, a quick throbbing pain that was almost agony, and that made her look as pale as Fay, seemed to stifle her. Hugh, her Hugh; ah, heavens! what was she thinking? another woman's husband could be nothing to her!

"Men are all alike," she thought, sadly; "even the best of them forget. Well, he is content with her now—with this little piece of innocent baby-faced loveliness. "Yes," interrupting herself, sternly, "and I ought to thank God on my knees that he is content—my own Hugh, whom I love better than myself;" and she looked so gently and kindly at Fay that the little thing was quite pleased and grateful.

"Oh, how good you are to me," exclaimed Fay, gratefully; "and how beautifully you have bandaged my foot. It feels so much more comfortable. What a sweet old room this is, Miss Ferrers. I do like that cushioned window-seat running round the bay; and oh, what lovely work," raising herself to look at an ecclesiastical carpet that was laid on the ground, perfectly strewn with the most beautiful colors, like a delicate piece of mosaic work. Mr. Ferrers who had entered the room that moment, smiled at the sound of the enthusiastic young voice.

"What colors," cried Fay, delightedly; "what purples, and crimson, and violets. They look like clusters of jewels, or stars on a deep-blue ground."

Mr. Ferrers stooped down and touched the carpet with his large white hand.

"It is for our little church, and by all accounts it must be gorgeous. The description makes me fancy it like the robe of office that Aaron wore. It has a border of pomegranates I know. Ah, color is one of my sister's hobbies. She agrees with Ruskin in connecting brilliant coloring with purity of mind and nobility of thought. I believe if she had her way she would wear those same crimsons and emeralds herself."

Margaret smiled indulgently. "You must not believe my brother, Lady Redmond. I am very simple in my tastes, but I love to see them on others;" and she looked at Fay's ruby dress. She had removed the heavy furred mantle, and she thought Lady Redmond looked more like a lovely child than ever in her little closely-fitting gown.

"Where is my cousin, Mr. Ferrers?" she asked with some surprise, as he placed himself in a carved arm-chair that stood near the couch.

"Mr. Huntingdon has started off for Redmond Hall. He was afraid your husband might have returned and would be feeling anxious. He will come back in the carriage to fetch you; but as is rather a long way by the road, and the snow is very deep, you must not look for him for another two hours. Margaret, luncheon is ready; I am going to tell Ruth to bring some up for Lady Redmond."

Fay was not sorry to have a little longer rest. She was very comfortable lying in this pleasant sunny room, and she had fallen in love with Miss Ferrers.

When they had left her to partake of the dainty little luncheon brought to her, she thought a great deal about the beautiful face that looked so pale and sad, and yet so kind. Had she known trouble, she wondered; she was quite young, and yet there was no look of youth about her. One would never speak of her as a girl, for example—she was much too grave and staid for that; but what a sweet voice she had, very low and harmonious, and yet so clear.

Fay had forgotten her husband for the moment. Erle would explain everything to him, and of course he could not be vexed. What a tiresome thing that this misunderstanding had arisen. She must coax Hugh to put it right. She liked Miss Ferrers better than any of her neighbors. It made her feel good only to look at her.

She wondered if she could venture to hint about the estrangement, or to say how sorry she was that anything should keep them apart. She had not quite made up her mind about it when the brother and sister returned, and Mr. Ferrers asked her playfully if she meant to take a nap, or whether they should stay and talk to her.

"Oh, I would rather talk, please," with a wistful look at Margaret, who had taken up her work, and placed herself near the window. She wished she would not go so far away; but perhaps she wanted more light. But Mr. Ferrers had taken possession of the arm-chair again and seemed quite at her service, so Fay began chatting to him in her usual fashion.

"I have always admired this old house so," she said, brightly; "but I was afraid I should never see the inside, because—" but here she hesitated and hurried on. "Redmond Hall is grander and larger of course, but this seems more homelike. I liked the all so when the door opened, and Erle carried me in. It seemed like church, with that great painted window so still and solemn, and full of scented darkness."

Margaret listened silently, but her brother answered rather sadly,

"It is always full of scented darkness to me, Lady Redmond, and a darkness that may be felt; but of course I know what you mean, for the whole house is full of the perfume of Margaret's flowers. Sometimes our friends declare that they can smell them half-way down the road, but that is nonsense. Still flowers are my sister's hobby; she cannot live without having them about her."

"A very harmless hobby, Raby!"

"Oh, it is a pretty fancy enough," he answered, smiling. "If you could walk, Lady Redmond, Margaret would show you our winter garden; the gallery upstairs is a perfect conservatory, and we walk up and down there on wet days, and call it our indoor garden."

"What a nice idea, and you live together in this dear old house; how delightful!"

Raby's smile grew perceptibly sadder.

"We were not always alone. What is it Longfellow says?

> There is no fireside, howsoe'er defended,
> But has one vacant chair.

But, as you say, we live together, the old bachelor and old maiden brother and sister."

"Miss Ferrers is not an old maid," returned Fay, indignantly, on whom Margaret's stately presence had made a deep impression. "You ought not to speak so of your sister."

"Do you like the name of unappropriated blessing better, as I heard an unmarried lady called once," he asked, in an amused voice; "but, no, that would not be true in Margaret's case, for her brother has appropriated her."

A gentle smile passed over Margaret's face. "I shall be here as long as you want me, Raby," and then, as though she would turn the subject, she asked Fay if she read much, and which were her favorite books. But she soon saw her mistake.

"I am afraid I am very stupid," returned Fay, blushing a little, "but I do not care to read very much. Aunt Griselda—she was the aunt with whom I lived until I was married—did not like me to read novels, and heavy books send me to sleep."

"I daresay you are too busy to read," interposed Raby rather hastily; "with such a household as yours to manage, you must be sufficiently employed."

"Oh, but I have not so much to do after all," replied Fay, frankly. "When I married I was terribly afraid that I should never know how to manage properly; the thoughts of accounts especially frightened me, because I knew my sums would not ever come right if I added them up a dozen times."

"Ladies generally hate accounts."

"Oh, but I have none to make up," returned Fay, with a merry laugh; "Hugh, I mean my husband, attends to them. If I have bills I just give them to him. And Mrs. Heron manages everything else; if there are any orders she goes to Sir Hugh. He says I am so young to be troubled about things, and that I don't understand how to regulate a large household. We lived in such a tiny cottage, you see, and Aunt Griselda never taught me anything about housekeeping."

"Yes, I see," observed Raby rather absently; he was wondering what Margaret would say to all this.

"I never thought things would be quite so easy," went on Fay, gaily. "Now if Hugh, I mean my husband, says two or three gentlemen are coming to dinner, I just tell Mrs. Heron so, and she tells Ellerton, and then everything is all right. Even when things go wrong, as they will sometimes, Sir Hugh does all the scolding; he says I am such a little thing that they might only laugh at me; but I tell him I shall never be taller if I live to be an old woman."

Mr. Ferrers kept his thoughts to himself, but he said kindly, "I daresay you find plenty of little duties for yourself, Lady Redmond."

"Oh, yes, I am always busy," returned Fay, seriously; "Mrs. Heron says that she is sure that I shall grow thin with so much running about, but unless I am driving or riding, or Erle is talking to me, I do believe I am never still for many minutes at a time. Oh, I do work sometimes, only one cannot work alone, and I go to the poultry-yards and the stables. Bonnie Bess always has a feed of corn from my hand once a day, and there are all the animals to visit, and the green-houses and the hot-houses, for I do like a chat with old Morison; and there is Catharine's dear little baby at the lodge, and the children at the Parkers' cottage; and I like to help Janet feed and clean my birds, because the dear little things know me. Oh, yes, the day is not half long enough for all I have to do," finished Fay, contentedly.

CHAPTER XVII.

"I AM ONLY WEE WIFIE."

> This would plant sore trouble
> In that breast now clear,
> And with meaning shadows
> Mar the sun-bright face.
> See that no earth poison
> To thy soul come near!
> Watch! for like a serpant
> Glides that heart disgrace.
>
> Ask to be found worthy
> Of God's choicest gift,
> Not by wealth made reckless,
> Nor by want unkind;
> Since on thee dependeth
> That no secret rift
> Mar the deep life-music
> Of her guileless mind.
>
> Philip Stanhope.

Raby felt as though he were listening to a child's innocent prattle as Fay chattered on in her light-hearted way. In spite of his deep knowledge of human nature he found himself unaccountably perplexed. Margaret had spoken to him, as they sat together over their luncheon, of the flower-like loveliness of the little bride, and yet he found himself unable to understand Hugh Redmond's choice; his thoughtful, prematurely saddened nature could not conceive how any man of Hugh's age could choose such a child for his life-companion, With all her sweet looks and ways he must grow weary of her in time.

Perhaps her freshness and innocence had bewitched him; there was something quaint and original about her naive remarks. The disappointed man might have found her brightness refreshing—her very contrast to Margaret might have been her attraction in his eyes. Well, Raby supposed that it was all right; no doubt she was an idolised little woman. Hugh seemed to keep her in a glass case; nothing was allowed to trouble her. She will be thoroughly spoilt by this sort of injudicious fondness, thought Raby, perfectly unconscious how far he was from grasping the truth.

It was Margaret who began to feel doubtful; her womanly intuition perceived that there was something wanting; she thought Lady Redmond spoke as though she was often alone.

"I suppose you are never dull?" she asked gently.

"Oh, no," returned Fay, with another gay little laugh. "Of course we have plenty of callers; just now the snow has kept them away, but then I have had our cousin Erle. Oh, he is such a pleasant companion, he is so good-natured and full of fun. I shall miss him dreadfully when he goes back to London next week."

"You will have to be content with your husband's society," observed Raby, smiling. It was a pity that neither he nor Margaret saw the lovely look on Fay's face that answered this; it would have spoken to them of the underlying depths of tenderness that there was in that young heart.

"Oh, yes," she returned, simply, "but then, you see, Hugh, I mean my husband is so extremely busy, he never comes in until luncheon has been waiting for ever so long, and very often he has to go out again afterwards. Sometimes, when I know he has gone to Pierrepoint, I ride over there to meet him. He used to ride and drive with me very often when we first came home," she continued, sorrowfully, "but now he has no time. Oh, he does far too much, every one tells him so; he is so tired in the evening that he is hardly fit for anything, and yet he will sit up so late."

Raby's sightless eyes seemed to turn involuntarily to the window where Margaret sat, her pale face bending still lower over her work. This last speech of Lady Redmond's perplexed him still more. The Hugh who had courted Margaret had been a good-natured idler in his eyes; he had heard him talk about his shooting and fishing with something like enthusiasm; he had been eager to tell the number of heads of grouse he had bagged, or to describe the exact weight of the salmon he had taken last year in Scotland, but Raby had never looked upon him as an active man of business. If this were true, Hugh's wife must spend many lonely hours, but there was no discontented chord in her bright voice.

"I feel deadfully as though I want to help him," continued Fay. "I cannot bear to see him so tired. I asked him to let me go and visit some of the poor people who belong to us—he is building new cottages for them, because he says that they are living in tumble-down places only fit for pigs—but he will not hear of it; he says I am too young, and that he cannot allow me to go into such dirty places, and yet he goes himself, though he says it makes him feel quite ill."

Margaret's head drooped still lower, her eyes were full of tears; he had not forgotten then! He had promised to build those cottages when she had begged him to do so. She remembered they had chosen the site together one lovely September evening, and he had told her, laughing, that it should be his marriage gift to her. They had planned it together, and now he was carrying it out alone; for Fay owned the moment afterwards that she did not know where the new cottages were; she must ask Hugh to take her one day to see them, but perhaps he would rather that she waited until they were finished.

Margaret was beginning to feel strangely troubled; a dim but unerring instinct told her that Fay was more petted than beloved. It was evident that Hugh lived his own life separate from her, submerged in his own interests and pursuits, and her heart grew very pitiful over Fay as she realized this. If she could only meet Hugh face to face; if she could only speak to him. She felt instinctively that things were not altogether right with him. Why did he not try to guide and train the childish nature that was so dependent on him; why did he repress all her longings to be useful to him, and to take her share of the duties of life? Surely her extreme youth was no excuse, she was not too young to be his wife. Margaret told herself sadly that here he was in error, that he was not acting up to his responsibilities, to leave this child so much alone.

Fay's frankness and simplicity were touching Margaret's heart; even this one interview proved to her that under the girlish crudities there was something very sweet and true in her nature; the petty vanities and empty frivolous aims of some women were not to be traced in Fay's conversation. Her little ripple of talk was as fresh and wholesome as a clear brook that shows nothing but shining pebbles under the bright current; the brook might be shallow, but it reflected the sunshine.

Margaret's thoughts had been straying rather sorrowfully, when a speech of Fay's suddenly roused her.

"I do wish we could be friends," she observed, rather piteously. "I am sure my husband must like you both, for he spoke so nicely about you; it is such a pity when people get to misunderstand each other."

"My dear Lady Redmond," returned Raby, kindly, "it is a pity, as you say; and we have no ill feeling to your husband; but, I daresay he is wise if he does not think it possible for us to have much intercourse. Sir Hugh and I do not agree about things," went on Raby after a slight hesitation; "perhaps he will tell you the reason some day; but you may be sure that on this point your husband knows best,"—for he felt himself in a difficulty.

"Of course Hugh is always right," returned Fay with much dignity. "When I said it was a pity, it was only because I like you both so much, and that I know I shall want to see you again."

"You are very good," replied Raby, but there was embarrassment in his tone; it was evident that Hugh's wife knew nothing about his previous engagement to Margaret. It was a grievous error, he told himself, for one day it must come to her ears; why, the whole neighborhood was cognizant of the fact. She would hear it some day from strangers, and then the knowledge that her husband had not been true to her—that he had kept this secret from her—would fill her young heart with bitterness; and as these thoughts passed through his mind, Margaret clasped her hands involuntarily; "The first mistake," she murmured; "the first mistake."

Just then the sound of carriage wheels was distinctly audible on the gravel sweep before the house, and the next moment Erle entered the room.

"I am sorry to have been so long," he said, apologetically, and Fay thought he seemed a little flurried, "but Hugh asked me to go round and put off those people; they all seemed dreadfully sorry to hear of your accident, Fay."

"And Hugh?" with a touch of anxiety in her voice

"Oh, Hugh seemed rather put out about the whole business. I think he wanted to pitch into me for not taking better care of you. How is your foot, Fay—less painful?"

"Oh, yes, and I have been so comfortable; Mr. and Miss Ferrers have been so kind to me. I suppose I ought to go now,"—looking regretfully at Margaret, who had laid aside her work.

"Well, I don't think we ought to lose any more time," observed Erle; "the days are so awfully short, you know, and really these roads are very bad."

"And your husband will be waiting," put in Raby

"Poor Hugh, of course he will," returned Fay quickly. "Erle, I am afraid you will have to carry me to the carriage, unless you ask George to do so;" but Erle stoutly refused to deliver up his charge, so Fay bade good-bye to her new friends.

"Thank you so much, Miss Ferrers," she said, putting up her face to be kissed. "I shall tell Hugh how good you have been to me. I am so sorry it is good-bye, Mr. Ferrers."

"Then we will not say it at all," he returned, heartily, as his big hand seemed to swallow up Fay's little soft fingers. "I will wish you God-speed instead, Lady Redmond. I daresay your cousin, Mr. Huntingdon, will be good enough to let us know how you are if he ever passes the Grange."

"To be sure I will," was Erle's reply to this, and then he deposited Fay in her corner of the carriage and took his place beside her. Both of them lent forward for a parting look at the brother and sister as they stood together in the porch.

"What a grand-looking pair they are," observed Erle, as they turned into the road; "don't you think Miss Ferrers is a very handsome woman, Fay? I admire her immensely."

"Oh, yes, she is perfectly lovely," replied Fay enthusiastically; "she looks so sweet and good; it quite rests one to look at her. But there is something sad about them both. Mr. Ferrers does not look quite happy; once or twice he sighed quite heavily when we were talking. I suppose his being blind troubles him."

"He is a very uncommon sort of a man," returned Erle, who had been much struck by the brother and sister. "He made himself very pleasant to me while you were having your foot doctored. By the by, my Fairy Queen,"—his pet name for her—"Miss Dora gave me a message for you; she says she shall come up and see you to-morrow, as you will be a prisoner."

"That will be nice; but oh, Erle, what a pity we shall have no more delightful walks together. I hope Hugh was not really vexed about our going to the Grange."

"He was just a trifle testy," remarked Erle, quietly suppressing the fact that his cousin had surprised him much by a fit of regular bad temper. "He thinks I am not to be trusted with your ladyship any more;" and he changed the subject by a lively eulogium on the young ladies at the Vicarage, one of whom he declared to be almost as handsome as Miss Selby; and he kept up such a flow of conversation on this topic that Fay had no opportunity to put another question.

Sir Hugh was waiting for them at the Hall door, but Fay thought he looked very grave and pale as he came to the carriage to lift her out.

"This is a very foolish business," he said, as he carried her up to her room, his strong arms hardly conscious of her weight; "how did it happen, Fay?" and she knew at once by his tone that he was much displeased.

"Erle ought to have taken better care of you; I told him so," he continued, as he placed her on the couch. "I cannot let you go running about the country with him like this; of course the lanes were slippery, he ought to have known that."

"You are vexed with me, Hugh," she said, very gently. "You think that I ought not to have gone to the Grange, but indeed I could not help myself."

"There were other houses," he stammered, not caring to meet her clear look. "I thought that you would have respected my wishes, but I see I am mistaken."

"Oh, Hugh," returned the poor child, quite heartbroken at this stern rebuke; "indeed, indeed, I never meant to disobey you, but my foot was so painful, and I felt so faint, and Erle was so peremptory with me."

"Well, well, you need not cry about it," observed her husband impatiently; "you are such a child, Fay, one can never say a word to you; I have a right to be displeased, if my wife goes against my wishes."

"I am very sorry," she answered, meekly, trying to keep back those troublesome tears; "please do not be so angry, Hugh, you know I care for nothing but to please you, and—and I don't fell quite well, and your voice is so loud."

"Very well, then, I will take myself off," in rather a huffy tone, but he relented at the sight of her pale little face, and some of his bad humor evaporated. "The fact is, you are such a child that you don't know how to take care of yourself," he continued, sitting down by her, and letting her rest comfortably against him. "You will do yourself a mischief some day, Fay. I shall get Dr. Martin to come up and see your foot, and then, perhaps, he will give you a lecture."

"Oh, no," she returned, charmed at this change of tone, for his anger had frightened her; "there is no need for that, dear, it is only a sprained ankle, and Miss Ferrers has bandaged it so beautifully, a day or two's rest will put it all right."

"But all the same, I should like to have Dr. Martin's opinion," he answered, quickly "I am afraid you must have found it very awkward, Fay, being cast on the compassion of strangers."

"Oh no, indeed," was the eager answer; "they were so good and kind to me, Hugh; they welcomed me just as though I were an old friend. I was a little faint at first, my foot hurt me so; but when I opened my eyes, I found myself in such a lovely old room, on such an easy couch, and Miss Ferrers gave me some wine, and actually bathed my foot and bound it up herself."

"What sort of a room was it, Wee Wifie?"

Fay thought there was something odd in her husband's voice, but she had her head on his shoulder, and could not see his face, the winter dusk was creeping over the room, and only the fire-light illumined it. Hugh felt himself safe to put that question, but he could not quite control his voice.

"Oh, it was Miss Ferrers' morning-room, she told me so, and it had a bay window with a cushioned seat overlooking the garden. Oh, how lovely Miss Ferrers is, Hugh. I have never seen any one like her, never. I am sure she is as sweet and good as an angel, only I wish she did not look so sad: there were tears in her eyes once when we were talking; let me see, what were we talking about? oh, about those cottages you are building, she did look so interested—did you speak, dear?"

"No—go on," he said, huskily; but if only Fay could have seen his face.

"I feel I should love her so if I could only see more of her. I could not help kissing her when I came away, but she did not seem at all surprised. Mr. Ferrers wished me God-speed in such a nice way, too. Oh, they are dear people; I do wish you would let me know them, Hugh."

"My dear child, it is impossible," but Hugh spoke fast and nervously; "have I not already explained to you that there can be no intimacy between Redmond Hall and the Grange? When old friends quarrel as we have, it is a fatal blow to all of us."

"You were old friends, then?" in some surprise, for he had never said as much to her before.

"Yes," he returned, reluctantly, for he had not meant to admit this fact.

"But quarrels can be made up, Hugh; if it be only a misunderstanding, surely it could be put right." But he silenced her somewhat haughtily.

"This is my affair, Fay—it is not like you to go against my wishes in this way; what can a child like you know about it? I should have thought a wife would have been willing to be guided by her husband, but you seem to think you know best."

"Oh no, Hugh"—very much ashamed at this—"I am quite sure you are always right; only"—hesitating a little as though she feared to offend him—"I should like you to tell me what the quarrel was about."

For a moment Sir Hugh remained absolutely dumb with surprise; it was as though a dove had flown in his face; he had never known Fay persistent before. If only she had asserted herself from the beginning of their married life, she would have gained more influence over her husband; if she had entrenched herself in her wifely dignity, and refused to be treated like a child, kept in the dark about everything, and petted, or civilly snubbed according to her husband's moods, she would have won his confidence by this time.

Sir Hugh was quite conscious that he had been guilty of a grievous error in not telling Fay about Margaret before she became his wife; he wished he had done so from the bottom of his heart; but procrastination made the duty a far more difficult one; he felt it would be so awkward to tell her now, he could not tell how she might take it; it might make her unhappy, poor little thing; it would be a pity to dim her brightness.

He was sheltering his moral weakness under these plausible excuses, but somehow they failed to satisfy his conscience. He knew he had done a mean thing to marry Fay when his heart was solely and entirely Margaret's; what sort of blessing could attach to such a union?

But when Fay begged him to tell her the cause of his estrangement from the Ferrers, he positively shrank from the painful ordeal—he was not fit for it, he told himself, his nerves were disorganised, and Fay looked far from well; some day he would tell her, but not now; and the old sharpness was in his voice as he answered her.

(To be continued.)

From Different Points of View.

Omaha Girl (nearing Chicago)—"Oh, how lovely!"

Chicago Man—"Yes, indeed."

"So large, so broad, so beautiful, so full of changing tints and hues beneath the setting sun. How I would love to get out and take a drink."

"So would I, miss, but they don't sell at retail here."

"Sir, I was referring to the lake."

"Beg pardon. I was looking at Snickenfooty's brewery over yonder."—Omaha World.

In Paris in 1883 115,000,000 people travelled in busses, 131,900,000 in street cars, 188,500,000 in the penny steamers, 65,000,000 in suburban trains. The busses are very popular and have steadily grown for 30 years. In 1854 34,000,000 people used them; 1864, 96,000,000; 1874, 115,000,000; 1884, 191,000,000.

Tennessee has an area of 5,100 square miles of coal, which covers twenty-two counties. During the last six years the output of coal in the State has grown from 494,000 tons to 1,700,000 tons, an increase of 400 per cent.

FARM AND GARDEN.

A good farm maxim: "Remove the cause and the effect will cease."

Humane landlords concern themselves in the prosperity and happiness of their tenants and the laborers under them.

A writer is confident that the day is fast approaching when people will see that Bermuda grass is a blessing instead of a pest.

Potatoes keep better in heaps covered a foot thick with straw and a few inches of earth than with less straw and more earth.

People suffering from weakness of nerves should seek relief in eating largely of celery, bleached, when not in season, onions.

The less sceenings fed to brooding mares the better. There is always more or less foul seed in screenings that is not good for them.

In all planting it should be remembered that character of soil determines growth of roots and that a young fruit tree is not going to grow directly through a hardpan.

String beans may still be planted for a late supply, as the vines grow quickly and bear well during the warm weather.

English hop prospects are not good. There are complaints of fly and weak vines where cultivation has been at all indifferent.

Pinch back the ends of the lima bean runners as soon as they reach four or five feet in height, so as to force them to send out laterals.

There is no curculio-proof plum. The process of jarring the trees is always necessary, no matter what variety of plum may be grown.

Early rising, with the work done in part before the heat of the day, and a good rest at noon, will save the horses during the warm days.

It is quite generally understood that the Canadians are now producing cheese which sells at a higher price in the British market than that made in New York.

Sheep for breeding next season will do well on pasture alone, but a mess of oats at night will compensate for any lack of pasturage where the flock is large.

Shade trees sometimes require attention. Wood ashes should be applied around all kinds of shade trees at least once a year. The hedges will also be benefitted by ashes.

If the clover hay is musty and consequently dusty, it ought to be sprinkled in the manger; if too musty, it should be thrown aside for timothy or some other hay.

Turkeys hatched as late in the season as July will be difficult to raise, owing to the attacks of lice, unless given careful attention. They will also fail to attain large size by the end of the year.

Age has much to do with the profitable milk production of a cow. The best age to purchase is from 4 to 6 years, and it is not generally profitable to keep them beyond 8 or 9 years old.

Do not use a blind mare for breeding purposes. The colt may be all right, but—blind horses are of little value. This would also apply to breeding mares affected with other diseases likely to be inherited.

A fruit grower now ships his berries largely in pint boxes. Naturally enough the smaller bulk carries better and the berries go on the market in splendid condition.

Hawks are very fond of young turkeys, and when once they get a taste of their tender meat and learn where a gang "uses," will swoop down and carry one off every day.

Hard water may be softened by adding sal ammoniac. One can also use spirits of sal ammoniac, one teaspoonful to half a gallon of water. For washing purposes the dose must be stronger.

Flies are terrible annoyances to stock during this season, and every stable should be supplied with screens to windows and doors. They are not expensive and will enable the horses and cows to secure rest.

Good clover hay is always considered equal to any other. It is the standard by which all other grasses are compared and no farm is considered fully supplied for winter that has not had a crop of clover grown upon it.

Butterine, as it is called in England, is used so extensively that the dairymen have applied to Parliament for a law compelling its name to be changed from butterine to magarine. They think they can head it off in that way.

Of blackcaps a writer finds Souhegan and Gregg both good. Souhegan is very hardy and productive, berry a good shipper and of fair quality. Gregg has winter killed more or less, but nevertheless has always borne a good crop of very large berries.

To preserve stakes, posts, etc., placed in the earth, from going rotten or decaying, dip the ends of them in the following mixture: Heat three gallons of tar in an iron pot, then add one pound of lime and one pound of coal powder and stir thoroughly.

The "English Cluster" is a fine hop to yield; they generally grow so much in cluster that they pick very nicely, and pickers sometimes can average five or six boxes a day in picking. For the amount of vines this variety generally yields better than any other.

Buckwheat is an excellent crop for reducing weeds and for turning under as green manure, while its blossoms afford ample work for the bees. About five pecks of seed are sufficient for one acre, but if it is to be ploughed under the thicker it grows the better.

If the lawn be frequently mowed it should have an application of fertilizer twice a year to prevent injury from frequent cropping. A mixture of 200 pounds sulphate of potash, 100 pounds superphosphate and 50 pounds nitrate of soda per acre will be found excellent.

A box with entrance holes no larger than one inch in diameter will be an inducement for the wrens to take possession, as they will then be safe from the attacks of larger birds. Wrens are excellent insect exterminators and should be encouraged in every possible manner.

The manner in which an animal is fastened in the stall—there to remain in some localities most of the time for six or seven months of the twelve—has greatly to do with its well being, thrift, health, improvement, and consequently with the profitable returns naturally expected.

The best time for watering cows is after feeding and twice per day, say 8 a.m. and 5 p.m., is quite sufficient for meeting all her wants in the stable, but cows at pasture are generally supposed to do best with water in each lot, convenient to be had at desire.

For the purpose of protecting outdoor wood structures from decay and preserving for them a light brown color, there is perhaps nothing so efficacious as crude petroleum put on copiously with a coarse brush. What are termed "washes" are liable to scale off by exposure to frost and rain.

After a ten mile journey along a dusty road, if your horse turn aside of his own accord to a watering trough, do not yank him around with the comment that he can wait till he gets home. He can not wait and not suffer for it. Let him drink, not too much perhaps, but just enough. He will be in much better condition at the end of the trip. And so will the driver if he be possessed of any kind feelings at all.

The man who carefully blanketed his cows while being milked, so the flies would not bite them and cause them to kick over pail and milker, might have obtained really humane and at the same time lasting comfort to the cows by allowing them to rest in a darkened shed. The idea may really be carried with profit to providing such refuge in pasture where biting flies are numerous. The subject is especially directed to dairymen.

Beware of bogus tree agents. Make them show reliable credentials before you purchase; the best remedy against imposition is more intelligence on the part of the people generally. They should know enough to discriminate between the genuine and the counterfeit; between honest, reliable, trustworthy agents of nurseries of established reputation and those who succeed in imposing on the ignorant by selling imaginary fruits at wild prices.

There are times when horses will gall that have worked for years without doing so. This may be due to weather, altered condition of harness, to peculiar state of blood, skin, etc. In such a case give a tablespoonful of the following powder three times a day in feed or otherwise: Powdered rhubarb, pure powdered sulphate of iron and cream of tartar, of each six ounces; mix. Use some gall powder to heal the galls, which may be done while the animal is at work.

In planting apple trees many dig a hole one half or two-thirds large enough and jam the roots in, leaving them at the bottom turned up more or less and cramped and crowded, then throw in a lot of coarse manure and fill up with common earth and think they have set a tree, when they might about as well have thrown the tree away. The roots should be all straightened out and have plenty of room and the soil worked with the fingers among them till spaces are filled and then fill up with soil.

If weeds exist on grass lands they should be pulled up if the mower cannot be used, as the seeding of the weeds will soon destroy the value of the grass plot. No weed should ever be allowed to produce seed, says the Philadelphia Record. Theoretically, good; practically, absurd. True enough no weed should be allowed to seed. But by the time the farmer had completed the pulling process on some farms the property would be in the hands of his children of the third and fourth generation.

Don't be in a hurry to leave your farm even if you have had to pull pretty hard and both ways at once to make ends meet. To go from a farm to the city and find all the little things that cost you nothing on the farm have to be bought is something many never think about. A little kindling wood to make the morning fire, a cup of milk to make something, a little piece of butter, an egg or two and scores of little things which you as farmers think nothing of, when they have to be bought amount to quite a sum at the year's end.

The plan of judging of the merits of cows by a comparison of "records," instead of relying entirely on pedigree and color marks, is adding greatly to the value of our pure milk cows. Not only the quantity, but the quality also, is considered, and so rapid has been the improvement that some of the records are seemingly marvellous.

Make a compost heap upon which to place the refuse of the farm, such as tops of vegetables that are not fit to feed stock, rakings and leaves, and add a proportion of manure occasionally. Upon the heap throw soapsuds, urine and other liquids, care being taken to have all material cut fine. Dry dirt may also be added as an absorbent. It will prove excellent for the garden next spring, as its fine condition will permit of its being spread evenly.

An inquirer asks the best summer and winter diet for chickens and states that he feeks cracked corn, shells and garbage. Corn should not be given in summer. The best diet in summer is meat once a day with chopped grass, cooked potatoes or other bulky food. Feed twice a day. In winter give meat and cooked ground grain with potatoes or chopped cabbage morning and wheat and corn at night. Fat hens will not lay. Make the hens scratch and work for grain. Never keep feed before them. Garbage, gravel, ground bone, shells, etc., are also excellent.

More care should be had by those who pack butter in tubs to have them new and well soaked in brine before any butter is put into them. Careful dairymen put a piece of thin muslin over the top of the butter and then sprinkle salt on it. It is a better plan to put the muslin on the bottom, well wet, and a layer of salt and then pack the butter on top. In this way there is a double protection against the effects of the air and surrounding influences. A dry and cool place is best for storing butter. When the tubs get covered with mould or are reeking with the condensation of water from the air, the butter cannot possibly be kept sweet.

A universal competitive exhibition of science and industry will open at Brussels, Belgium, May 1st, 1888, and continue six months. Fifty-six committees, representing all industries and various specialties, have framed questions whose solution forms the basis of competition. Medals, diplomas and $100,000 in cash will be awarded to exhibitors, who are given special inducements by the Belgian Government in the way of transportation, management and duties.

The barrel of eggs in process of hatching through the unusual and protracted heat, which started from Indiana last week, has reached Jersey City and is now located at a grocery store on Bergen avenue. Notwithstanding the number of chickens taken from the barrel at various way stations, there are still quite a number of embryos remaining in the barrel. If the Bergen avenue grocer wants to make his story available he must swear that the chickens came out of the shells ready split and broiled with a piece of buttered toast under each chicken.

CURRENT TOPICS.

The street railway managers at Syracuse are sufficiently progressive to adopt electricity for a line about to be constructed without waiting until every other city in the country has done so. They have selected the Dafoor Sprague system, which involves the use of a trolley running upon overhead wires. The cars are to be lighted by electricity, and electric push buttons will enable the passengers to signal their desire to get off.

Susanna Madora Salter, Mayor of Argonia, Kan., is having a very successful administration. When she was elected to her present office her enemies predicted that she would make a failure of her effort to run the municipal affairs of Argonia. Up to the present time she has made no great blunders. She is, however, tired of the burdens of office and says that when her present term expires she will retire to private life and leave the government of Argonia to the care of the sterner sex.

Kalakaua, the jocund monarch of the Sandwich Islands, may have signed the new Hawaiian Constitution under duress, but it contains one potent clause which will doubtless be a valuable consolation to his perturbed spirits, i. e., "The King cannot be sued or held to account in any court or tribunal of the kingdom." This leaves the door wide open for the two most phenomenal phases of His Dusky Highness' activity, the amassing of "I. O. U.'s" and an illimitable programme of royal sprees.

Col. John H. Pierce, who lives at Plantsville, a little manufacturing town in New England on the New Haven and Northampton road, is preparing to astonish the world by his inventive genius. He claims that he has proved the practicability of establishing passenger traffic between this country and England by means of pneumatic tubes placed under the ocean. He thinks that in the future a man will be able to breakfast in New York and take lunch in London. All that Pierce needs to establish his invention, so he says, is money. But we regret to note in the pictures of inventor Pierce a slight resemblance to Charles J. Guiteau.

The mysterious death of Mrs. Cleveland a pet monkey during that lady's absence from home is a matter that will doubtless receive investigation when the Mistress of the White House returns. It has often been observed that pet dogs, cats and parrots, cherished by their mistresses, but secretly detested by the master of the house, are subject to an unusually high death rate when the woman that dotes on them is absent and her husband is at home. It is perhaps charitable to suppose that the President of 60,000,000 people has been too busy with public affairs, and with preparations for his journey to the south and west, to connive at the taking off of the monkey. But a straight certificate of death will be required before Mr. Cleveland can be wholly relieved of suspicion.

The arrest of a Russian princess in Paris on the charge of stealing, shows that even the nobility has its kleptomaniacs. They tell of an English Prime Minister, now dead and gone, who was given to this weakness. He could not see a pair of gloves or a snuff box or any portable article lying about without feeling an almost irresistible desire to put it in his pocket. It is said that one of the duties of his private secretary when they went home was to search his pockets to see if he had picked up anything that did not belong to him. Kleptomania is usually called stealing, but it is a fact admitted by medical men that kleptomania is a disease. Victims of it have been known to abstract the most useless things, and even things that were of the smallest value.

Watercress can be successfully grown where the ground may be alternately drained and flooded, but it will grow on the margin of any running streams after it is once established. Or, ditches may be dug from the main stream so that the water will be a few inches deep and about two feet wide, and the seeds sown or the plants set in these ditches, after which it will take care of itself. Peter Henderson stated some years ago that many a farmer in the vicinity of New York realized more profit from the water cress, cut from the margin of a brook running through his farm, in two or three weeks of spring, than from a whole year's hard labor in growing corn or potatoes.

Ireland is famous for its stout and its whiskey, and it also promises to become so for its bottles. An Irishman, Mr. Francis Hazlett, has invented, and an Irish company have brought out, a mechanical apparatus for blowing glass by the mouth. Hitherto it has been considered impossible to improve upon the human lungs, and so the glassblowers of the world have gone on puffing themselves away at 42 years of age, which is the low average of life among the handicraftsmen. The new invention dispenses entirely with the human lungs, and injects the air into the molten glass by an air-pump not unlike an ordinary syringe in shape and action. This is fastened to the ordinary blow pipe and makes little difference to the workman in handling. Manifestly the invention is of advantage to the workman, and as to the employer, it will enable him to produce bottles at two and a half times greater speed.

You have often read wondrous and lying tales of justice administered with unerring judgment in Turkey. Here, says the London correspondent of the New York Sun, is a true story of Turkish justice: A drover complained to a cross-legged magnate at Rodosto that he had been robbed of two oxen. Three Turkish gendarmes were sent to recover the property, and soon discovered two peasants going off with two oxen. One of the men was shot dead. The other escaped, and the policemen hastily buried their man and came back in triumph with two oxen. But the man said those oxen had not been stolen from him, and it was plain that the peasant had been shot for driving his own cattle. The situation was uncomfortable, but Turkish diplomacy fixed things. Another man was found to swear he had been robbed of the oxen, and they were turned over to him, which relieved the gendarmes from guilt. They did not go unpunished, however, for they had buried the dead peasant without first washing the body, which in Turkey is a crime except in case of a soldier killed in bottle. For that negligence they were imprisoned.

The humane efforts of the United States and the Canadian Governments to protect the lives of codfish and mackerel are worthy of recognition by Mr. Bergh's society. Canada punishes the American who catches fish, and the United States imposes a fine upon the Canadian who tries to sell fish. The real secret of the trouble is that Americans have a depraved and unnatural appetite for fish, and contumaciously persist in eating them in defiance of the well-meant effort of the two Governments to extirpate the evil of fish-killing. This evil should be attacked at the root, and fish-eating be made a crime punishable by imprisonment without the alternative of a fine. If the possession of fish bones, scales, sounds or tails, or of fishing rods, lines, bait or little brown jug were made prima facie evidence of guilt, the fish habit would be as completely destroyed as is the whiskey habit in a prohibition town—Bangor, Me., for example. The present half-way method of reform only makes fish come more expensive to the American people without in the least lessening their reprehensible liking for the article.—N. Y. Standard.

The parting of the two Emperors at Gastien was, as the cable describes it, exceedingly touching. The veteran Prussian was "overcome with emotion," and "kissed Emperor Francis Joseph again and again." A pair of lovers separating after a month of billing and cooing by the seaside could not have been more demonstrative. Possibly the much-kissed Austrian forgot in the excitement of the moment that his effusive adorer some few years ago thrashed him most effectually at Sadowa, deprived him of the headship of Germany, which his family had held for hundreds of years, and left to him only the empty shadow of his former greatness as a German sovereign. Yet the humiliations of that day when the fate of Germany was decided as much by the rapid marching of the Prussians and the dilatoriness of some of Benedek's legions as by the actual conflict of arms cannot already be entirely blotted from the memory of the loser in the fight. The venerable Prussian is said to still cherish the remembrance of the first Napoleon's despotic oppression of Prussia in the early days of the century; and it may be imagined that something more than kissing will be needed to wholly cure the Hapsburg kaiser of a suppressed longing for his day of revenge for a defeat that is not yet twenty years old.

Thomas Nelson & Sons, American agents of the Oxford Bible Society, say that the sales of the revised Old Testament are steady; they are not increasing, but hold their own. They are not, however, to be compared with the sales of the King James version. The revised New Testament is practically dead, in spite or perhaps as a result of the enormous sale when it first appeared. The American Tract Society people say that only 1 per cent. of the Bibles sold are of the revised version. The price of the New Testament has been reduced from $1.50 to 80 cents, and from 40 cents to 15. James Pott & Co. report that they do not even keep the revised version in stock. The American Bible Society is required by its charter to publish the Bible "in common use." It has been waiting to see if the revised version became the one in common use. It has not as yet, and is not regarded as likely to. An officer of the society, however, says that the revised version will always have a sale as a good commentary. The American Baptist Publication Society reports a steady sale of the revised version, to be used mainly as a companion to the King James. The Methodist Book Concern does not handle it at all and never has a call for it. A representative of Thomas Whittaker, when consulted, called the revised version a literary rather than a commercial success, and did not believe it would ever supersede the King James.

Canada on Her Dignity.

Uncle Sam—Say, Canada, you ought, as a matter of honor, decency and justice, to return McGarigle.

Canada—McGarigle, McGarigle, who's he?

"An American office-holder who stole a lot of money belonging to Chicago taxpayers. We want to put him in the penitentiary where he can't do any more mischief to the community."

"Did he have help?"

"Yes, plenty of it. Buck McCarthy and a lot of others."

"Did you put Buck McCarthy in the penitentiary?"

"No."

"Well, when you cage Buck McCarthy it will be time enough to talk to us about McGarigle."—Omaha World.

She Knew Where It Was.

"Sis," he said, "do you know where my baseball mask is? I've hunted high and low for it."

"I didn't know you wanted to use it today, Dick," said his sister, uneasily.

"Well, I do."

"I'll see if I can find it for you," and she went upstairs.

She found it without much trouble.

She Was All Right.

Mrs. Blobson—What's that? Oh, horrors! The hotel afire!

Mr. Blobson—Yes, come on. We've no time to lose.

Mrs. Blobson—But here I am in my nightdress!

Mr. Blobson—Good enough! I'm glad you've got out of your ball dress and into something decent.

Not Very Encouraging.

Featherly (to messenger boy)—"Did you deliver the note to the young lady?"

Messenger Boy—"Yes, sir."

Featherly—"And what did she say?"

Messenger Boy—"She said: 'Oh, pshaw! It's from Mr. Featherly.'"—New York Sun.

A Promising Youth.

Magistrate (to Chinaman)—What is your complaint against this young man, John?

Chinaman (unable to collect a laundry bill)—He too muchee by and by.

It has been found that the plant which produces the licorice root of commerce will grow without irrigation or cultivation in the little valleys and flats of Nevada. There is an indigenous plant of the same species that grows wild everywhere on the hills.

What Mother Says.

Now, here's a hand-glass, let me try
If I can this time see
Just one of all those funny things
My mother sees in me.

She says my eyes are violets—
And what she says is true—
But I think they are just two eyes;
Don't they look so to you?

She says my lips are cherries red,
And makes b'lieve take a bite;
They never look like that to me—
But mother's always right.

She says each cheek is like a rose;
And thus I surely know,
I never would believe it—but
What mother says is so.

She says my teeth are shining pearls;
Now that's so very queer,
If some folks said it, why, I'd think—
But then 'twas mother dear.

I only see a little girl,
With hair that's rather wild,
Who has two eyes, a nose and mouth,
Like any other child.

—Lizbeth B. Comins, in St. Nicholas for September.

THE TIE.

'Twas the counter for gentlemen's ties,
Where maid with the brightest of eyes
Made the quickest of sales
To extravagant males
Of the baubles frivolity buys.

Said a chap by her witcheries caught:
"Oh deary, I say, have you got
Some wear I can buy
That will never untie
In a strong, indissoluble knot?"

"Oh, yes!" she exclaimed, "I can make
A knot that you never can break,
Except you resort
To a lawyer and court.
Now, what sort of a tie will you take?"

Said the lad, with a face very red:
"You may tie me the knot as you said—
Will you tie it for me?"
"Yes, deary," said she.
Soon the papers announced they were wed.

RURAL JOYS.

Oh, let me drink from the moss-grown pump
That was hewn from the pumpkin tree,
Eat mush and milk from a rural stump,
From form and fashion free;
New-gathered mush from the mushroom vine,
And milk from the milk-weed sweet,
With luscious pineapple from the pine—
Such food as the gods might eat.

And then to the whitewashed dairy I'll turn,
Where the dairymaid hastening hies,
Her ruddy and golden red butter to churn
From the milk of her butter-flies;
And I'll rise at morn with the early bird,
To the fragrant farmyard pass,
When the farmer turns his beautiful herd
Of grasshoppers out to grass.

Like Her Elders.

A story of the rising generation:

In one of the suburban towns there is a young lady—quite a young lady she is, too—whose somewhat boyish aspect and innocently masculine tastes have won for her the soubriquet of Tommy. Not long ago she gave a little party to the children of the neighborhood, and in preparing for the event her mother, in order to get at an idea of the sort of young people her daughter would like to have attend, told her to prepare a list of those she wished to invite. Tommy went to work with zest and in a short time finished a pretty long list.

"There, mamma," said she, with an air of conclusiveness, "there's every single one that I want to come."

Her mother took the document and read it with an astonishment that increased as her eye approached the end of the list. Tommy had only one girl's name on the whole list!

"Why, Tommy," her mother exclaimed, "do you want none but boys to come to your party? What are you thinking of?"

"Well, mamma," said Tommy, "you know girls aren't any fun!"

"But would your boys have fun if there weren't any girls?"

"Weren't any girls? Why, there'll be Kitty Bickerstaff and me, and that ought to be girls enough!"

The mother, however, insisted upon the nomination of a full quota of girls; but in order to get it she had to make inquiries herself. Tommy's information was deficient. —Boston Transcript.

Couldn't Withstand Temptation.

The door of a Cannon street cottage opened in answer to the bell, and the book agent inquired if the lady of the house was in.

"I'm her."

"I have a little gem here, the 'Laurel Wreath of Poetry;' it's one of the——"

"Don't want it; house full o' trash o' that kind now."

"Maybe you'd like something in the religious line, now. I can recommend this 'Eliza Spriggins' Faith Cure' as the most inter——"

"All nonsense every word of it; don't believe such stuff."

"Ah, then your inclinations run to fiction. Here's a pleasing work, 'James the Lumberman; a Tale of Tonawanda.' Pathos, hu——"

"None o' them things for me; you may's well go; I don't want any of 'em."

"This little book on the 'Preservation of Female Beauty' is a treasure; I'm sure——"

"How much is it?"

"Only seventy-five cents. I've sold 1,300 copies myself."

She took it, and before she was rid of him she'd subscribed to Bunyan's "Pilgrim's Progress," the "Life of Daniel O'Connell" and an illustrated edition of "Anonymous Poems."

An Economical Jury.

"How did it happen that you didn't find that man guilty?" asked a New York man of the foreman of a jury in Dakota, "the evidence was dead against him." "I know that," was the reply, "but if we'd a found him guilty we'd 'uv had to hang him." "Certainly." "Well, we're paying taxes enough now. Hangin's is expensive."—Washington Critic.

Where Woman is Solid.

Some things a woman doesn't know, of course, but one of them isn't what she thinks of some other woman.—Journal of Education.

She Caught On.

Husband—"Sarsaparilla"—(winking knowingly).

Wife—"Lemon! without the wink!"

"The Boston bicyclist never takes a header," says the Transcript. But if asked if he ever was "projected from the periphery of his circular steed" a gleam of intelligence overspreads his face.

THIS PAPER may be found on file at Geo. P. Rowell & Co's Newspaper Advertising Bureau (10 Spruce St.), where advertising contracts may be made for it IN NEW YORK.

THE ADVANCE.

Is published

Every Thursday,

FROM THE OFFICE,

Collingwood Street, - - Flesherton, Ont.

TERMS OF SUBSCRIPTION:

$1 per annum when paid strictly in advance
$1.50 per annum when not so paid.

A. R. FAWCETT,
Editor and Proprietor.

FLESHERTON:
THURSDAY, SEPT. 1, 1887.

EDITORIAL NOTES.

The News says a few of the Thornbury boys have "sticks" "that they amuse themselves with leisurely, but they can hardly be dignified with the title of a lacrosse team." But they can be dignified with another title, viz., "youthful prevaricators."

The Thornbury people are wondering why beef is so cheap in Flesherton and so dear there. To solve the problem we suggest that they leave their orders with Petch & Mitchell, our butchers, and they will be enlightened. Better still—let them move out to Flesherton and spend the remainder of their days here. Then they'll get everything they require cheap and good.

"Ratepayer" writes an excellent letter to the Durham Chronicle on the subject of bonusing manufacturing industries, in which he says among other things: "The experience of some towns which have contributed most largely in this way has been most disastrous, and the increase in population and assessment has been only of a temporary character."

We clip the following from an English paper:—There are losses which people suffer unconsciously, like that sustained by the geologist who hired a Scotch gillie to carry his bag of specimens across the mountains. "It was a heavy load, and just nothing but stones," said Donald, relating his experience to a friend, "and I was not fool enough to drag the pebbles a guid ten miles. I just emptied the bag before I started, and filled it at the cairn I last came to, and the gentleman was just as pleased." The unlucky geologist was doubtless puzzled by the contents of the bag when he came to examine it later.

The Canada Citizen (Toronto) is an ably conducted Temperance journal, but even it is liable to fall into error. It represents THE ADVANCE as preaching the doctrine, "that bad laws fostering evil practices must be protected, if even a strong minority favored them, and one bad man by influence and vote, must command as much respect as three good men," and gives a quotation from THE ADVANCE to prove its statement. The quotation teaches nothing of the sort, and, in order to show that it does not, we republish it:—

Unless carried by a very large majority, the proper enforcement of local option laws, regulating the traffic, is an impossibility. There should be at the least a three-fourth vote of the state or county in its favor to ensure that success all earnest Temperance people desire. Otherwise it is better—far better—to wait until Temperance principles so strongly predominate as to render failure impossible.—"Flesherton Advance."

Besides, the Citizen is not honest, in that it garbles the paragraph from which the above quotation is taken. This method of argument is often adopted by politicians and anti-prohibitionists, but seldom do we find advocates of any great and good cause descending to the use of similar weapons. We hope the Citizen will never find it necessary to do so again.

It does not follow, that because a gentleman is opposed to prohibition, he is a "bad man!" Nor does it follow that only "good men" are prohibitionists! Hundreds and thousands of good men and true there are on "both sides of the fence." Tyrannical logic that which only discovers good in those who think the country is ripe for prohibition, and bad in those of a different opinion! In speaking thus, however, we do not include those prohibitionists who are such simply because of certain monetary considerations! Far from it! We mean those men who are honest in their opinions and who are not actuated by sordid and base motives. The Citizen will no doubt acknowledge that there are such men—even in the ranks of the enemy. And yet it certainly does not admit anything of the kind in the article before us.

"ONWARD!"

Yes, the Flesherton Roller Mill is now a accomplished fact; and already the throbbing of a new and vigorous element is awakening the dormant faculties of this favorably situated town. Increased activity is noticed all along the line. Old fogyism is rapidly being relegated to the oblivion it has deservedly earned for itself. The cobwebs are disappearing in every direction. New industries are yearly springing into existence. Energetic operations in the building line are noticeable in the many handsome and comfortable structures erected within the past few years, now in course of erection, and in contemplation for next season. And now comes the Roller Mill, infusing new vitality and inspiring all with unbounded confidence in the future of Flesherton.

A glance back into the past history of our town, must convince the worst cynic and chronic grumbler, that Flesherton has been making steady progress year after year in every direction. In what place of the same population in Ontario will you find such handsome business blocks, public buildings, churches, private residences, etc.?—and all erected in a comparatively brief period of time. Look at the elegant Presbyterian church, the stately Methodist church, and the snug Baptist chapel—all of solid brick. Then cast your eyes towards the setting sun and gaze on that beautiful and massive Public School building—built of solid white brick, and, in all its details, a most charming structure—situated on a sloping eminence overlooking the town, and in the midst of the most extensive as well as the most beautiful school grounds in the County of Grey. Behind you, on gently sloping uplands, nestles one of the most elegant private residences in Ontario, viz., that of Squire Armstrong, our popular Division Court Clerk and Justice of the Peace. The grounds in connection with the residence are in perfect keeping with this beautiful structure. A little further South we see the largest general store in the County—three storys high—a monument to the enterprise and patriotism of M. Richardson, Esq. To the left is the "Flesherton Hotel"—owned and run by Mr. A. Murshaw, and enjoying a provincial reputation. On Collingwood street is the handsome three-story block erected by Dr. Christoe, Artemesia's popular Reeve. On Durham street is Mr. J. H. Heard's three-story carriage works—the largest in Grey. We might go on in this way ad infinitum almost, but space will not permit at present: some future time we propose publishing a complete review of the place. But enough has been said to show that steady and healthy progress has been made, and that we are now making greater strides than ever. Further, there is not the shadow of a doubt but that Flesherton will "lead the procession" in the very near future—indeed, in many respects, it leads now. But be ever our motto—Onward!

Call at KEEFER'S and get a barrel of choice Roller Flour. Oats, Bran, Shorts, &c. always on hand.

The Prince of Wales Receiving a Lesson.

During Her Majesty's residence, some years ago, at Osborne, in the Isle of Wight, her children were accustomed to ramble along the seashore. Now, it so happened on one occasion that the young Prince of Wales met a boy who had been gathering sea shells. The boy had got a basketful. The young prince, presuming upon his high position, thought himself privileged to do what he pleased with impunity. So without any notice he upset the boy's basket and shells. The poor lad was very indignant, and observed

"You do that again, and I'll lick you."

"Put the shells into the basket," said the prince, "and see if I don't."

The shells were gathered up and put into the basket.

"Now," said the lad, "touch 'em again, old fellow, if you dare!"

Whereupon the prince again pitched over the shells. And the lad "pitched into him," and gave him such a licking as few princes ever had. His lip was cut open, his nose knocked considerably out of its perpendicular, and his eyes of a colour which might have well become the champion of a prize-ring. His disfigured face could not long be concealed from the royal mother. She inquired the cause of its disfigurement. The prince was silent, but at last confessed the truth.

New Way of Acknowledging Payment.

"Do you understand about notes of hand?" asked one colored gentleman of Sam, the Park Row bootblack, the other day.

"I think so."

"Wall, I had a feller's note for twenty dollars. It ain't due till de first of October, but last night he paid me half of it."

"And you endorsed the amount on the back of the note?"

"Was dat de way to do?"

"Of course. How did you do?"

"Cut de note in two an' gin him half."

The CHILDRENS
HEALTH.

One of Natures Kindest Gifts is a Healthy Constitution. Guard it against disease by using

Siamese Worm Powders.

Worms are the fruitful cause of many disorders in Children. SIAMESE WORM POWDERS will expel Worms in every case where they exist, will regulate the Stomach and Bowels at the same time. Use them, you won't regret it.

Peck's
Pleasant
Pills!

Should always be used for Sick Headache. Their operation is mild and pleasant. They strike home each time when used for a Disordered Liver. Ask for them. Get them. Don't forget the name, Peck's Pleasant Pills.

If your druggist has not the above preparation in Stock, W. W. STEPHEN & CO., of Meaford, will send them to you prepaid on receipt of 25c. for either, 5 of each, or assorted for $1.00.

W. W. STEPHEN & CO.
Druggists, Wholesale & Retail,
MEAFORD.

WHAT IS IT?

IT IS A FACT AND NO CONTROVERSY THAT
JOHNSON'S
TONIC BITTERS
and NERVINE is the best remedy in the market for nervous diseases of any sort. Hysteria, Loss of Appetite, Debility from loss of fluids or overwork, Paleness of Complexion so often seen in young females and all complaints arising from poverty of blood.

It is a fact and no gainsaying that JOHNSON'S TONIC LIVER PILLS are the very best in the market for diseases caused by Torpid Liver and derrangement of the Stomach or Kidneys.

It is a fact and no one will deny it that JOHNSON'S ALL HEALING WHITE OINTMENT is the best in the market for Burns, Scalds, Chilblains, Salt Rheum, Barbers Itch, Pimples and all Skin Disorders arising from scrofulous taint

W. S. CHRISTOE has been appointed Agent for the above and has them on sale at his Medical Hall, Flesherton. Try for yourselves and be satisfied.

NOTICE.
GRAY CHAMPION!

A THOROUGH-BRED DURHAM BULL, with good pedigree, will stand for service at Lot 142 West T. & S.R., Artemesia. TERMS, $1 if paid on or before Jan. 1st, 1888 otherwise, $1.25.
Also thorough-bred BIRKSHIRE BOAR at same place. JACOB A. LEVER.

The Appetite

May be increased, the Digestive organs strengthened, and the Bowels regulated, by taking Ayer's Pills. These Pills are purely vegetable in their composition. They contain neither calomel nor any other dangerous drug, and may be taken with perfect safety by persons of all ages.

I was a great sufferer from Dyspepsia and Constipation. I had no appetite, became greatly debilitated, and was constantly afflicted with Headache and Dizziness. I consulted our family doctor, who prescribed for me, at various times, without affording more than temporary relief. I finally commenced taking Ayer's Pills. In a short time my digestion and appetite my bowels were regulated, and, by the time I finished two boxes of these Pills my tendency to headaches had disappeared, and I became strong and well.—Darius M. Logan, Wilmington, Del.

IMPROVED

I was troubled, for over a year, with Loss of Appetite, and General Debility. I commenced taking Ayer's Pills, and, before finishing half a box of this medicine, my appetite and strength were restored.—C. O. Clark, Danbury, Conn.

Ayer's Pills are the best medicine known to me for regulating the bowels, and for all diseases caused by a disordered Stomach and Liver. I suffered for over three years with Headache, Indigestion, and Constipation. I had no appetite, and was weak and nervous most of the time.

BY USING

three boxes of Ayer's Pills, and, at the same time dieting myself, I was completely cured. My digestive organs are now in good order, and I am in perfect health.—Philip Lockwood, Topeka, Kans.

Ayer's Pills have benefited me wonderfully. For months I suffered from Indigestion and Headache, was restless at night, and had a bad taste in my mouth every morning. After taking one box of Ayer's Pills, all these troubles disappeared, my food digested well, and my sleep was refreshing.—Henry C. Hemmenway, Rockport, Mass.

I was cured of the Piles by the use of Ayer's Pills. They not only relieved me of that painful disorder, but gave me increased vigor, and restored my health.—John Lazarus, St. John, N. B.

Ayer's Pills,

Prepared by Dr. J. C. Ayer & Co., Lowell, Mass. Sold by all Druggists and Dealers in Medicine.

James Sullivan,
The Tinsmith, - Flesherton

Repairing, Eavetroughing, and in fact everything in the business will receive my prompt and careful attention at reasonable prices.

STRAY COW.

Came to the premises of the subscriber Lot 30, Con. 4, Artemesia, on the 23rd inst., a red and white cow. Owner can have same by proving property and paying expenses.
ANTHONY KENNY.
Artemesia, July 29th, 1887.

THE MARKETS.

FLESHERTON.

Carefully Corrected Each Week.

Flour	$4	00 to	4	20
Fall Wheat	$0	75 to	0	75
Spring Wheat	0	75	0	75
Barley	0	30	0	45
Oats	0	28	0	28
Peas	0	47	0	48
Butter	0	15	0	16
Eggs, fresh	0	15	0	15
Potatoes bush	0	50	0	50
Pork	5	60	5	60
Hay, per ton	6	00	6	00
Hides	6	00	7	00
Wool		21		23
Sheepskins	0	40	0	56
Geese	0	05	0	05
Turkeys	0	8	0	8
Chickens per pair	0	25	0	30
Ducks per pair	0	40	0	50

AT GORDON'S
HARNESS SHOP
FLESHERTON,

You will find an assortment of

Heavy and Light Harness,

Whips, Brushes, Curry Combs, Sweat Pads, and the celebrated "Harness Oil."

COLLARS A SPECIALTY.

Cheap for Cash. Call and Examine.

R. J. SPROUL,
Flesherton. Conveyancer, Appraiser, Valuator and Money lender. Deeds, Mortgages, leases and Wills drawn up and Valuations made on shortest notice. Charges very low. Apply to R. J. SPROULE, Postmaster, Flesherton.

CLAYTON'S
HARNESS SHOP!
FLESHERTON,

Is the place to get your Harness Collars, &c., made up in good style.

"Shop in Johnston's Livery Office, Flesherton."

DUNDALK
PUMP WORKS!
C. R. PHILLIP'S,
Manufacturer of all kinds of PUMPS.
Cylinder Check Valve &
Cistern Pumps.

Orders Respectfully Solicited and satisfaction guaranteed.

JAMES SULLIVAN,
Tin-Smith, AGENT.
FLESHERTON

PHOTOGRAPHY.
MRS. BULMER.
Photographer,
Flesherton - Ont.

Having spent some time in the studio of the famous Toronto Photographer, Mr. S. J. Dixon where I acquired valuable knowledge in Retouching, I feel assured I can give good general satisfaction. A call respectfully solicited,
MRS. BULMER.
Flesherton, Sept. 17th, 1887.

THE CELEBRATED
Dr CHASES
MANDRAKE
DANDELION LIVER CURE

HAVE YOU
Liver Complaint, Dyspepsia, Indigestion, Biliousness, Jaundice, Headache, Dizziness, Pain in the Back, Loss of Appetite, or any disease arising from a deranged Liver, Dr. Chase's Liver Cure will be found a sure and certain remedy.
NATURE'S REMEDY
The unparalleled success of Dr Chase's Liver Cure in Liver Complaint rests entirely with the fact that it is compounded entirely of Nature's well-known liver regulators, MANDRAKE AND DANDELION, combined with many other vegetable roots, herbs and herbs, having a powerful effect on the Kidneys, Stomach, Bowels and Blood.
600 000 SOLD
Our unsolicited mention of Dr. Chase's Recipe Books were sold in Canada alone. We want every man, woman and child who is troubled with Liver Complaint to try this excellent remedy.
SOMETHING NEW GIVEN AWAY FREE
Wrapped around every bottle of Dr. Chase's Liver Cure is a valuable Household Medical Guide and Recipe Book (34 pages), containing over 200 useful recipes, pronounced by medical men and druggists as invaluable, and worth ten times the price of the medicine.
TRY CHASE'S CATARRH CURE. A safe and positive remedy. Price, 25 cents.
TRY CHASE'S KIDNEY AND LIVER PILLS 25 cts. per box.
SOLD BY ALL DEALERS
T. EDMANSON & CO., Sole Agents, Bradford.

Flesherton
Meat Market.
S. SPIRIT, - - PROPRIETOR.

Cash paid for fat Cattle and Sheep.
Fresh Meats constantly on hand for Cash. Orders promptly filled.

—EUGENIA—
Real Estate Agency

MONEY TO LOAN at lowest rates of interest and on terms of repayment to suit borrower.
FARMS bought and sold.
CONVEYANCES of all kinds properly executed.
COMMISSIONER for taking affidavits in H.C.J., Agent for the Norwich Fire Insurance Society. All business promptly, carefully and confidentially attended to.
Office, Corner of Inkerman and Napoleon Streets.

HENRY MELDRUM,
AGENT.

For The Advance.]

AN ABOMINABLE FLIRT.

By E. E. VanDusen, Owen Sound.

Once more we see them in Professor Strander's elegant rooms, where every picture every adornment, and all arrangement bespoke good taste. Flowers filled the windows...Their freshness, and the delicious coolness of the room, struck Kathie pleasantly as she came up from the noisy street. The Professor was in the midst of Beethoven's Sonata Pathetique, but rose at once as she came in, saying good-morning in his bright way, and inquiring if she had quite recovered the effects of her indisposition.

"Perfectly, thank you. I was sorry to lose an evening's pleasure." . . . A thought here crossed her mind . . . He did not know that she was aware of his presence at Mrs. James' ball. . . . It would be best to feign ignorance—more natural to make a query if he were there.

"You were present?" she interrogated, and not waiting for a reply, continued "I returned home early."

"Yes, I was detained, unfortunately," he said, laying peculiar stress upon the last word, "and so made a late arrival. Shortly after, I understood, you left. It was too bad." These words, though simple enough, were made to convey much importance by his tone, which was low, but distinct . . . And by his glance which seemed to penetrate Kathie's half-veiled lids, entering into her very soul.

She began to attribute this earnestness to his sympathetic nature; made some trifling rejoinder, and took her place at the instrument.

This time there was no startling blunders. her manners were natural and calm. Whatever came and went, he must never guess that each tone of his voice, fell like the music. down deep into her memory.

When she had finished and received the usual praise for good execution, Kathie ran her fingers softly over the keys; very softly, and faintly—for she was saying in an indifferent way, that she would be gone for some time. . . . and consequently the lessons would be discontinued.

"And once in St. Louis, farewell to all those hours of practice, requisite to perfect performance," said he, lightly.

"Oh no, I promise—indeed you know that I love music too well to neglect it," Kathie said, now speaking in really relieved tones.

"Yes, I can trust you always," he said. He had been standing behind her while played, but at the beginning of this conversation, moved to her side. At this point,—he now rested one arm upon her shoulder, and ere she dreamt of his intention, kissed her deliberately once, twice, thrice. She sprang up, turning angrily upon him.

"You dare this, sir? You abominable, deceitful flirt! This is the—"

"Wait, please," "broke in the gentleman's voice. "Since the word flirt implies all that is abominable and deceitful, you might at least have spared me those horrible sounding adjectives." There was a suspicion of humor in his tone.

"Pray consider this no joke, Professor Strander. I think little of one who acknowledges having stooped so low."

"But I acknowledge nothing of the sort," he said, leaning carelessly against the instrument, while his eyes danced with an amused light.

"Your actions speak, then!" cried Kathie, with burning cheeks. "I will never come here again! You are obliged to beg my pardon instantly," she exclaimed with righteous indignation, remembering the "beauty at whose shrine he worshipped," and longing to hurl at him the conversation he had carried on with Mason.

"I am obliged to do nothing of the sort," he said positively, "and," lowering his voice perceptibly, "you will come here again!"

"Really Professor Strander, you indeed forget yourself. Such ignorance and presumption are unpardonable! Allow me to bid you good morning and good-bye." This was uttered in an indignant and pained manner. With the air of a queen she brushed past him, but he also moved toward the door, placing his hand firmly upon the knob, while Kathie inwardly wondering, exclaimed haughtily, "Pray allow me to leave the room!"

"Kathie," he then said gravely, and as though he loved to say that word, "you know I never sought to detain you in this way before. Let us come to an understanding. . . . It is you who owe to me an apology for your unjust words. You have called me by a name I despise . . . and without reason."

"No, no! not without reason," she interrupted. "You must know I never would have so spoken without grounds!"

"Without grounds? Grounds? . . . What grounds? I swear you can positively have no grounds for speaking as you did." His face now wore a wholly puzzled look. Presently a light overspread his features. "Stay," he said, but rather doubtingly, "was it because you chanced to see one morning a photo of a young girl, which you knew to be in my possession?" A moment after and he was sorry at having thus questioned.

"Pray, "she answered, unutterable scorn gleaming in her eyes, "do not imagine that such a knowledge would force me to speak as I have done! Yet it is that knowledge combined with—"

Here the long restrained tears sprang to her eyes.

"You have doubtless something to say," said he. gently, placing a chair for her and seating himself at a respectful distance. "But let me speak first. . . . I might go on and swear by all sacred things, to what I now say, but I won't. You must believe my simple word. . . . These arms were never placed about any woman save you; my kisses never bestowed on any other, save you—and my sainted mother. Towards you my intentions are honorable, for," he rose then and stood beside her, "I love you."

Kathie pressed her burning face against the wall, and away from the man she loved. There was some mystery here. . . . She felt forced to tell him of the overheard conversation, wondering what explanation he could grant. But while she thought of words to use, her trembling lips uttered no sound. She was really dumb-founded at this man's confession, and the joy it gave was mingled with pain at the bare possibility of any deception on his part. No! What he had said she felt. must be true.

"I believe, too, that you love me—in spite of those lofty airs and tragic acting. You have been endeavoring to hide this fact, Kathie, but it seems as though I have been gifted to see beyond mere facial expression. . . . Eyes, at some times, will reveal the feelings of our souls! But you have called me an abominable flirt, Kathie, and I wait to hear you substitute that statement." He now took one little hand. . . . It was not withdrawn.

"Forgive me," she said, with downcast lids, "for now I cannot doubt you, or distrust your word. Then she told him of the over-heard conversation.

"If you recollect it, you cannot blame me so very much for believing you in love with another woman. You remember you said to Mr. Mason that you would show him a likeness of the beauty at whose shrine you worshipped. . . . That was not my picture, Professor Strander, pray what did you mean? Kathie now looked up. She had expected to find him serious, but to her amazement found that he was laughing at her.

"Excuse me, Kathie, but—really I cannot help it. This is such a comical affair!"

"Will you please explain?" she asked quietly, and so earnestly that he answered at once:

"I will. Last winter I went to Des Moines—as you know."

"Yes," assented Kathie, only wondering.

"And I carried with me, in my heart, your own dear self. Well, as I went along the street in Des Moines one afternoon I caught sight of a face in a photographer's window. At first glance, I could have sworn it to be yours, but a closer observation assured me that it was not. But so striking was the resemblance, and I so longed to have even your picture," —touching his breast, "that I purchased it, then and there. Kathie, I have been waiting to prove the reality of my love; and to-day you are ten times dearer to me than when I first began to treasure your proud face in my memory. I admit, Kathie, I might have acted a little more discreetly to-day towards you; but I knew not when I might see you again, and was inspired by the perfect unconsciousness of your own charms. You had the right to speak as you did, not knowing what my conversation with Mason meant. I told him I would show him a likeness of the beauty I worshipped, and I am certain that he cannot deny but that it is a good one. Now Kathie, let me hear what your answer to all this is. What are you going to say to such an abominable, deceitful, ignorant flirt?"

"Oh, don't!" she cried, pressing his hand. "Only forgive my distrust of you. I do not know what to say."

That you love me, and are going to give Mason that chance of dancing at our wedding." . . .

But I am not going to write down here all that Kathie said, nor Professor Strander's replies, for prudes to object to and spinsters to grind their teeth in envy over. Nor will I dwell on a description of that happy Christmas wedding; nor enter into the particulars of the chagrin of Miss Ruyter, whose precise crimps stood erect from the effect of the "green-eyed monster. Who could doubt the sincerity of such a love as that which Geoffrey Strander offered Kathie? . . . The love of a heart untainted by the wiles of treachery.

* * * * *

On the first anniversary of their wedding-day, Geoff goes to his young wife where she stands looking out upon the falling snow.

"What are you thinking of, Kathie?" he asks, placing his arm around her.

"Thinking what a good, kind husband heaven gave me, one year ago to-day."

"Yes. Kathie," he said, with a bright smile, and kissing her in his old passionate manner, "but what an abominable flirt!"

THE END.

Osprey Council.

The seventh meeting of this Council was held at Singhampton on 20th August.

Members all present. Minutes of last meeting confirmed.

COMMUNICATIONS

From Co.-Treas., Co. Rates and Tax sale list; Provincial Board of Health, Act to amend the Act respecting Public Health; Co. Clerk, Supplement to minutes of June session; J. Rutherford, acc. $25 for stationery; C. W. Rutledge, acc. $36 printing Voter's List; A. R. Fawcett, acc. $2.50 advertising Voters' List; W. Long, acc. $2 for plan of bridge and $6 stamps; Hunter Brothers, recommending Iron Bridges; James Bateman and 10 others, Petition asking aid for P. McQueen and Widow McLean; W. Service, notice of firing fallow.

MOTIONS.

Taylor, McIntyre.—That the Reeve, J. Hudson and J. Speers be a committee to inquire into the validity of the Treasurer's Securities and report at next meeting of Council.

Mr. Hudson, Chairman of Committee on 40th Sideroad presented report as follows: Your committee having examined 40th Sideroad, South of 3 Con. find it cut out a good length by statute and gratis labour but find that the road allowance South does not correspond with the road North and that it would be wise for this Council to make a proper survey of said sideroad before expending any more money on it. The Report adopted.

By-Laws were passed to levy and collect rates and to appoint Collectors.

The total rate is ½ mill lower than last year, being 7½ mills.

N. A. McLean and James Elliott were reappointed collectors.

ORDERS ISSUED.

Widow McLean, indigent, $4.00; Joseph Taylor, examining 40th Sideroad, $2.00; John Hudson, examining 40th Sideroad, $2.00; John Speers, letting bridge 10th Sideroad, $2.00; W. Long, plan of bridge 10th Sideroad, $2.00; W. Long, postage stamps for Clerk, $6.00; A. R. Fawcett, advertising Voters' List, $2.50; C. W. Rutledge, printing Voters' List, $36.00; J. Rutherford, municipal stationery, $25.00; N. A. McLean, posters, 75c.

Council adjourned to meet at the call of the Reeve. WM. MILNE, Clerk.

The Last Thing He Heard.

A grotesque story of an interrupted wedding ceremony comes from New Zealand. The church in which it took place was wooden and aged and rickety, and when the lovely bride, accompanied by her mother, entered the building it shook beneath them. Things went on smoothly enough, however, until the clergyman inquired: "Do you take this man—?" and then before he could finish the sentence the floor opened and the whole happy squad went down together into the cellar. The bride led the way head foremost, with the baptismal font, the altar, and a spectator's baby close behind, and after them came the bridegroom with the bulk of the wedding party on top of him, his collar burst, his hat flying loose and a black eye. The parson, however, remained above, clinging to the pulpit rail and the last thing he heard was the voice of the bride calling out, "I will," as she was half way down. She was under the impression that the bridegroom was beneath her, and as he was a wealthy man, she had resolved with great presence of mind to get through the service and get a claim on his assets before she fell on him and squashed him flat.

New Bakery.

The undersigned begs to inform the people of Flesherton and neighborhood generally, that he has leased the Flesherton Bakery for a term of years and respectfully solicits their patronage. Bread, Buns, Cakes and any other kind of Baking that may be required by any of my patrons will receive prompt and careful attention. Liberal estimates for large supplies. I intend shortly to add Home made Confectionery warranted pure and manufactured on the premises.

JACOB STEPHEN.

Flesherton, Aug. 17th 1887.

BE ON YOUR GUARD.—Don't allow a cold in the head to slowly and surely run into Catarrh, when you can be cured for 25c. by using Dr. Chase's Catarrh Cure. A few applications cure insipient catarrh; 1 to 2 boxes cures ordinary catarrh; 2 to 5 boxes is guaranteed to cure chronic catarrh. Trit. Only 25 cents and sure cure. Sold by all dealers.

A Wrinkle for the Blind.

A blind man sits in the corner of a door-way, and when he hears the light footsteps of a lady he takes off his hat and bows his head, covered with the snows of seventy winters, saying: "Oh! madam, take pity on a poor blind man who is deprived of the pleasure of seeing you!"

That fetches them.

A WONDERFUL ORGAN. The largest organ and one that plays a controlling part of the health of the body is the liver. If torpid or inactive the whole system becomes diseased. Dr. Chase's Liver Cure is made specially for Liver and Kidney diseases, and is guaranteed to cure. Receipe book and medicine $1. Sold by all dealers.

An Important Point.

"Old Lawyer—"I don't like that case and am sorry that you took hold of it."

Young Lawyer—"Oh, it's all right, We'll win.

"Have you arranged for the witnesses?"

"No, but I have arranged for the jury."

The First Sign

Of failing health, whether in the form of Night Sweats and Nervousness, or in a sense of General Weariness and Loss of Appetite, should suggest the use of Ayer's Sarsaparilla. This preparation is most effective for giving tone and strength to the enfeebled system, promoting the digestion and assimilation of food, restoring the nervous forces to their normal condition, and for purifying, enriching, and vitalizing the blood.

Failing Health.

Ten years ago my health began to fail. I was troubled with a distressing Cough, Night Sweats, Weakness, and Nervousness. I tried various remedies prescribed by different physicians, but became so weak that I could not go up stairs without stopping to rest. My friends recommended me to try Ayer's Sarsaparilla, which I did, and I am now as healthy and strong as ever.—Mrs. E. L. Williams, Alexandria, Minn.

I have used Ayer's Sarsaparilla, in my family, for Scrofula, and know, if it is taken faithfully, that it will thoroughly eradicate this terrible disease. I have also prescribed it as a tonic, as well as an alterative, and must say that I honestly believe it to be the best blood medicine ever compounded.—W. F. Fowler, D. D. S., M. D., Greenville, Tenn.

Dyspepsia Cured.

It would be impossible for me to describe what I suffered from Indigestion and Headache up to the time I began taking Ayer's Sarsaparilla. I was under the care of various physicians and tried a great many kinds of medicines, but never obtained more than temporary relief. After taking Ayer's Sarsaparilla for a short time, my headache disappeared, and my stomach performed its duties more perfectly. To-day my health is completely restored.—Mary Harley, Springfield, Mass.

I have been greatly benefited by the prompt use of Ayer's Sarsaparilla. It tones and invigorates the system, regulates the action of the digestive and assimilative organs, and vitalizes the blood. It is, without doubt, the most reliable blood purifier yet discovered.—H. D. Johnson, 383 Atlantic ave., Brooklyn, N. Y.

Ayer's Sarsaparilla,

Prepared by Dr. J. C. Ayer & Co., Lowell, Mass.
Price $1; six bottles, $5.

Agents, Agents!

NOW READY— OUR NEW BOOK.

EARTH, SEA AND SKY

OR—

Marvels of the Universe

Being a full and graphic description of all that is wonderful in every Continent of the Globe, in the world of waters and the starry Heavens. Containing thrilling adventures on land and sea, renowned discoveries of the world's greatest explorers in all ages, and remarkable phenomena in every realm of nature. Embracing the striking physical features of the earth the peculiar characteristics of the human race, of animals, birds, insects, etc., including a vivid description of the Atlantic, Pacific and Indian Oceans and of the Polar Seas, the monsters of the deep, beautiful seashells and plants, singular fishes and dwellers in the world of waters, remarkable ocean currents, etc., together with the amazing phenomena of the solar and starry systems, by Henry Davenport Northrop, D.D., embellished with over 300 fine engravings. Liberal terms to agents. Oxford Publishing Company, 5 Jordan St., Toronto, Ont. 316-368

Medical.

DR. CARTER,

M.C.P. & S., ONT.

PHYSICIAN, SURGEON, &c.

FLESHERTON.

Office, Strain's block. Residence, Wm. Wright's

Dentistry.

DENTISTRY.

Thomas Henderson, L.D.S.

SURGEON DENTIST,

Gold Medalist and Honor Graduate of the R.C.D.S.,

Will visit FLESHERTON, (Munshaw's Hotel) 1 and 2 of each month. Teeth extracted, inserted and filled in the highest styles of the art, and at moderate rates.

HEAD OFFICE, 761 YONGE ST., TORONTO.

Legal.

J. W. FROST, LL.B.,

Barrister, Solicitor, Conveyancer.

Office,—Strain's Building, FLESHERTON.

A. A. CHESLEY, Solicitor and Conveyancer, Resident Manager.

MR. FROST will be found at the Office on Thursdays as heretofore.

P. McCULLOUGH,

Barrister, Solicitor, &c.

Office, over McFarland's Store, Markdale. Money to Loan.

MASSON & MASSON,

BARRISTERS, SOLICITORS, &c.

OFFICES—Owen Sound, in Vicker's block, Poulett St.; Branch office in Markdale, over McFarland's store, on Friday and Saturday every week.

J. MASSON, Q.C. S. MASSON. W. MASSON.

N.B.—Private & Company's funds to invest at from Six to Eight per cent.

Business Cards.

John W. Armstrong,

FLESHERTON, CO. GREY.

DIVISION COURT CLERK, COMMISSIONER in B. R., Conveyancer, &c. Agent for purchased sale of lands. Appraiser for C. L. C. Com. and F. P. B. & S. Society. Money to Loan on the most reasonable terms. ISSUER OF MARRIAGE LICENSES. NOTARY PUBLIC.

MONEY TO LOAN.

At 6 Per Cent.

On Town or Farm Property.

S. DAMUDE,
Flesherton.

W. J. BELLAMY.

TWP. CLERK ARTEMESIA.

CONVEYANCER, COMMISSIONER, INSURANCE AGT, &C

DEEDS, MORTGAGES, LEASES, &c., prepared and properly executed. Insurance affected in first-class companies. Money to lend at lowest rates.

GET YOUR MEAT

—FROM—

Petch & Mitchell,

GENERAL BUTCHERS.

FLESHERTON!

☞Cash paid for fat cattle, &c., &c.

NEW LIVERY!

THE undersigned begs to announce that he has started a first-class Livery in the stand opposite Munshaw's Hotel, Flesherton, where the travelling public can be accommodated with good rigs and horses at most reasonable prices Try me and be convinced.

Respectfully yours,

W. H. JOHNSTON.

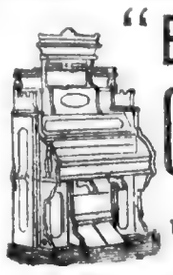
Flesherton, Nov. 19th, 1886.

Picture Framing,

Neatly, Cheaply & Quickly Done, by

J. E. MOORE,

Durham St., Opposite Clayton's Harness Shop



"BELL" ORGANS

Unapproached for Tone and Quality.

CATALOGUES FREE.

BELL & CO., Guelph, Ont.

THE CITY OF MONTREAL.

Burning of the Ill-fated Vessel in Mid-Ocean.

THE MISSING BOAT.

Cool Behavior of the Passengers and Steadiness of the Crew.

A last (Friday) night's London cable says: The passengers and crew of the City of Montreal were taken off the York City by the tug Mount Etna, and landed at Queenstown. All were accounted for except the thirteen persons in the missing boat. It is learned that shortly after the passengers had gone to bed on the night of the 10th, the ship being in latitude 43 north at the time, they were aroused by an alarm of fire. A scene of consternation ensued, and the passengers were greatly terrified when they found out the true state of affairs. The smoke caused by the fire was suffocating. The passengers dressed and got on deck as quickly as possible, and with but little appearance of panic. The fire originated in the cotton stored in the after main hold. Nine streams of water were soon working on the flames, and the course of the vessel was shaped toward Newfoundland, 400 miles distant. The flames spread with great rapidity, and soon had burst with terrific force through the midway and after hatches, the heat being intense. It becoming evident that it was impossible to save the ship, a momentary panic ensued.

The boats were lowered and passengers and crew got into them. The boats soon scattered, and one entirely vanished. This contained two stewards, two seamen and seven passengers, and there is but little doubt that the whole boat load perished. The boat did not contain a full crew, and left the City of Montreal against the captain's orders, as there was time to take many more in it. The other survivors consider the fate of the occupants of the lost boat as a judgment for their cowardice.

A barque was sighted shortly after the boats left the steamer, and her crew was preparing to pick up the survivors when the steamer York City, attracted by the flames of the burning vessel, which were shooting up a hundred feet in the air, bore down and with difficulty took all hands on board. The rescued people were treated with the utmost kindness by the captain and crew of the York City, and the passengers speak with much feeling of the consideration which was accorded to them. The York City proceeded to London after landing the City of Montreal's passengers and crew at Queenstown. The survivors are unanimous in declaring that the officers and crew of the City of Montreal did their duty nobly and skilfully.

The steamer City of Montreal carried no first cabin passengers. The value of her cargo was $350,000, and the steamer was worth $400,000. The crew numbered 85 men.

The boats were eight in number, and consisted of four lifeboats and four pinnaces. These were launched and stocked with provisions. The flames spread with great fierceness, and the efforts to quench them it was soon found were futile. At 8 o'clock in the morning the passengers were marshalled on deck, preparatory to entering the boats. Many of them were weeping, but on the whole they were quiet and orderly. The family groups presented a sight pitiful to see, as they huddled together in fear and trembling. There was a heavy sea running, and it was with great difficulty that the boats were kept from being smashed. The crew worked splendidly and all the passengers were placed in the boats in a comparatively short time. How the boats floated with their heavy loads is a miracle. As the last boat was pulling off from the ship several of the passengers and crew were seen aft. They had been overlooked, and were screaming to the boats to return. They were subsequently bravely rescued half dead from the effects of smoke and heat. The masts of a ship were seen on the horizon, but ten hours elapsed before if came near.

CAPT. LAND'S REPORT.

Capt. Land, commander of the City of Montreal, makes the following report: On the 10th inst. the wind was north to northwesterly. About 9 o'clock of the evening of that day fire was discovered in the after hatch among the cotton. The fire hoses were at once connected and streams of water were poured down upon the flames; annihilators and hand-grenade fire extinguishers were also freely used. The fire, however, overcame all efforts to suppress it and spread over the upper and lower decks. The ship was doomed from the beginning of the fire, and the boats had been actively prepared and provisioned. At 6 o'clock on the morning of the 11th inst. the flames burst through the after hatches. The boats were then lowered. There was a high sea at the time, and this caused much difficulty. The women and children were first put aboard the boats, and the male passengers and the crew were embarked afterwards. The lack of time prevented the manning of the boats with their respective crews, the men being compelled to continue until the last moment the work of keeping the flames down. All the boats left the ship safely, but by an unfortunate oversight twenty people were left aboard the burning vessel. Boat No. 3 returned and took off six of the number; boat No. 5, with the 4th officer, took off six more. A barque was then reported approaching, and when all the boats had put their people aboard her they returned and took off those remaining on the burning vessel. It was found that boat No. 8 was missing. She was seen to put herself before the wind when she left the ship, using her oars in support of the sails. She ran away from the vessel in direct disobedience to the captain's orders. Everybody spent the night aboard the German barque Trobant, from Charleston, July 24th, for London, and all were then transferred to the York City, which stayed by throughout the night and vainly searched for the missing boat. Capt. Land says he is sanguine that the people in boat No. 8 are saved, as the accident occurred in the track of steamers bound east and west. The passengers, he adds, were cool and obedient during the crisis, and the crew were steady. The passengers and crew lost everything they had aboard the City of Montreal except what thy stood in when they went into the boats. The origin of the fire is unknown. Capt. Land is certain it broke out in more than one place among the cottons. The ship was lost in lat. 43, 38 north, long. 43, 54 west.

NAMES OF THE MISSING.

The following is a list of the passengers who were in boat No. 8: Intermediate passengers, Samuel Kaufman, George Arnold, Samuel McKee; steerage, Kennard Woolton, Stephen Tupper, Simon Kowelsky, S. Kachumchi; crew, Henry Fraser, Charles Read, William Franney, Patrick Hughes; Chas. Smith, interpreter; Thos. Wilberforce, steward. The rescued passengers and crew when landed at Queenstown by the York City were in a pitiable condition.

France's Wonderful New Rifle.

The Lebel rifle, the new arm with which the French infantry will be supplied before next spring, is, according to all accounts, a wonder, and several models of the gun which have been received here have excited great interest. The new rifle is known by the name of its inventor, Lebel, and is smaller and lighter than the rifles now in use; the French soldiers call it "the little gun." The most authentic descriptions given to the gun agree in attributing to it a carrying power beyond that of any rifle heretofore in use. The models received in New York are not known to be accurate copies of the Lebel gun, and experiments with them are impossible, owing to the fact that the powder used is a secret compound of which the French Government has the monopoly. According to all accounts the Lebel gun will carry its bullet more than a mile and a half, and with a more certain aim than has been possible with ordinary rifles. The bore of the gun is very small, and the ball, which is of steel and sharply pointed at one end, is said to revolve at a speed of one thousand revolutions a second. In the tests made by the French Government this bullet has penetrated a brick wall eight inches thick at a distance of five hundred yards; it will go through any kind of armor that can be worn by soldiers, and at a distance of more than a mile will pass through a man as easily as at ten paces. The gun has no recoil under fire, and the powder gives out no smoke whatever. It has been said that the powder used must be a type of smokeless hunting powder already in the market; but this is denied by the inventor, who says that he uses an entirely new compound. The Lebel gun is, of course, a repeater, and the cartridges are so small that each soldier carries two hundred and twenty rounds of ammunition, as against one hundred and sixteen rounds, formerly considered the maximum. The French Government is now making these guns at the rate of five hundred a day at St. Etienne, and is preparing to turn out double that number. Four factories, those at Chatellerault, Tulle and St. Etienne, will soon be at work upon them.—N.Y. Evening Post.

Superstition.

"The persistence of superstition is amazing," the professor observed. I have a singular instance in the case of a friend of mine. He has conjured up a superstitious fear of 'Ivanhoe,' and he could not be induced to read the book or have it in his house."

"But what begot so odd a whim?" I asked.

"A string of coincidences. He began to read the novel and his wife was taken sick. He sent the book back to the circulating library from which he had taken it and the horses ran away and broke the carriage. About a year after he tried it again. He bought a copy and took it on a journey. The train ran off the track and his leg was broken. Then a friend, who thought his notions absurd, sent him a copy of the book, and the next night his house took fire. He told me one or two minor details which I have forgotten. He is a hard-headed Boston business man, but I cannot urge him out of this notion. He says that if he is wrong it can certainly do no harm to give the book a wide berth, while if he is right it is certainly wise to avoid it."

"I should say," remarked a voice from a hammock, in which in the dusk one could dimly discern a heap of white draperies, "that he had better read the book to the bitter end and break the spell."

"The result might be too tragic."—Providence Journal.

Flowers.

Leaves of rose geranium are placed in finger bowls instead of a lemon slice.

Purple asters combined with white roses fasten the tulle scarfs on seaside hats.

Bush baskets filled with water lilies and aquatic foliage are favorite gifts at watering places.

Bridesmaids are carrying white China asters with a luster of gardenias at one side of the bouquet.

Large conch shells containing wood mosses and English moss rose buds are fashionable for table centres.

Wedding bouquets are made of Niphetos rose buds or lily of the valley. The flowers are turned down over the stems in a very highly artistic style.

Golden pompon chrysanthemums are just blossoming and are used with fine effect in the gilded creels which ornament luncheon tables when damask and potteries are yellow.

The bleeding heart is the newest design for laying on the funeral casket. It is a large heart formed of forget-me-nots. From the centre falls a spray of crimson roses, which droop over one side of the coffin.

A bank of blossoms is arranged for the piece de resistance on lawns where garden parties are given. Ferns make a wide circle with a background of arundo donax; the centre of the bank is mignonette with a crescent of roses, varying from pale pink to deep red stretching over these fragrant flowers.

No Need for Alarm.

On coming out of the Mayor's office where they had just been married, she throws herself into his arms, exclaiming: "Forgive me, dear, but I've kept something from you—I did not tell you I didn't know how to cook." "Oh, never mind, dear; don't cry about that, for you'll have but little cooking to do—I'm a poet."—Paris Figaro.

Mrs. William K. Vanderbilt is the beauty and the dasher par excellence of all the Vanderbilts. She courts publicity and admiration. The rest of the family desire quiet and seclusion.

LAWYER DUNN'S ADVICE.

"Steal a Million and People will Say You are Smart"—Defaulter Scott's Confession—His Accomplices Got Most of the Plunder.

NEW YORK, Aug., — Richard Seaman Scott, who absconded with $160,000 that belonged to the Manhattan Bank, of which he had been a pet employee, in 1885, and about whose disappearance and whereabouts there was such profound mystery, has made a confession before Consul-General Waller at London.

A suit has just been instituted in the Supreme Court which discloses not only Scott's action, but the fact that he was not alone in this stupendous defalcation. This suit is against John R. Dunn, Scott's colleague, for $140,000.

The documents included in this case embrace an affidavit by the defaulter, which is in truth a confession of his theft. Scott, according to the complaint, was for twenty years a trusted employee of the Manhattan Company up to June 1st, 1885. In the latter part of his service he was the paying teller of the bank. Most of the time he had in his custody daily over $1,000,000. On June 1st, 1885, he absconded with $160,000.

Scott states that at various times prior to June 1st, 1885, he extracted small sums of money from the safe, which aggregated $10,000. This he used in speculation. About this time there was a change in the administration of the bank. Scott feared the change might cause an investigation and expose his irregularities.

John R. Dunn was practicing law then and Scott hastened to him for advice. Dunn asked him how much money was within his reach. Scott replied that at all times there was over a million dollars in his charge. Dunn, addressing Scott, said: "My advice to you is to take $1,000,000. It will be enough to cripple the bank and will enable you to go to Canada. If you take a small amount people will laugh at you, but if you take a large amount people will say you are smart and you will compel the bank to compromise."

Dunn advised Scott to get an old suit of clothing, shave off his moustache, travel second-class to Canada, disguise himself as much as possible, and do as little talking as possible. They parted to meet at Central Park on the following afternoon. When he went to the bank the next day he took $300,000 in gold and silver certificates of the denomination of $5,000, $1,000 and $500, and placed them in a package, which he concealed about his person. He met Dunn at Central Park, and they went to a secluded spot and talked. Dunn asked him if he had any friends with whom to leave the money, telling him that under international treaties if he carried any stolen property into Canada he could be arrested and extradited. Scott said that he had no one with whom to leave it. "Then," said Dunn, "I feel so warm a regard for Cousin Lizzie (Scott's wife) that I would do for you what I would do for no other person on earth—take charge of that package, the contents of which I need not know, and take care of it, subject to your order at all times."

This was Friday. They agreed to meet on Monday. Scott went to the bank next day and replaced the $300,000, determining to make an effort to borrow enough money to make up the deficiency of the $10,000. But in this he failed. Finding it impossible to get the necessary money before going to the bank on Monday, he got a disguise. Scott had read about the Park Bank defalcation. He saw that the directors cut down the salaries of the clerks in order to make up the deficiency. He felt friendly toward the clerks in the Manhattan Company, so he determined to take only $150,000 in order that there might be no cut in their salaries. He put the money in two packages, one of $140,000 and the other of $10,000. He went to Central Park and met Dunn. They walked to a secluded spot, and Scott pulled out the $140,000 package and said to Dunn, "There's the money." Dunn looked around, saw that he was unobserved, and put it in his inside pocket. Scott said: "Dunn, I shall leave to-night." They shook hands and parted. Scott assumed his disguise and took the evening train for Montreal. He shaved off his moustache on the way. He arrived on the following morning. He didn't stop in Canada long, visiting only quiet and secluded points. He corresponded with Dunn under various aliases which the two had previously arranged. Dunn's letters consisted principally of newspaper clippings of the defalcation. He also sent Scott money in bills of $500 and $1,000. Scott took passage on the Allan line steamer for Europe in September of 1885. He has lived economically in London ever since. His wife joined him in May, 1886. Scott corresponded with Dunn and Mrs. Jennie A. Searles, his sister-in-law, from London. He has received money there amounting to $20,000.

In the latter part of 1886 attempts at a compromise with the bank were made by Scott, various sums being mentioned. In December of that year he asked the bank to give him a general release for $60,000. It is said that this offer was accepted by the bank. He wrote Dunn telling him to get ready to pay that sum. Dunn replied in January, 1887, that he had lost all the money in speculation. Then came the crisis and these proceedings were instituted.

Girls Who Fence.

It is said that Grecian women would enter the arena in the old Olympian days and wrestle with one another to encourage their children and strengthen themselves. Thus Spartan mothers had Spartan sons, and the name to this day is synonymous with bravery and physical endurance. In these modern days ladies, as a rule, consider that their constitutions are too delicate for any greater physical exercise than a gentle stroll or a little shopping, and so many a physician has deplored the absence of proper bodily exercise among the fair sex and has preached wise though ineffectual sermons about the need of it. But fashion, like a miracle, will do what preaching will not do, and, as in the east fencing has become fashionable, and the fashions travel with the star of empire, so fencing is now being introduced in this city.—San Francisco Chronicle.

—In Kalamazoo a man is expelled from he Grand Lodge after he has been carried home three times in a wheelbarrow. Twice on a wheelbarrow and once on a shutter doesn't count.

REMARKABLE OPERATION.

Removing a Spoon from the Stomach of a Man.

A most remarkable and successful surgical operation was performed upon one of the male patients of the Cincinnati Hospital, Sunday morning last, by Dr. E. W. Walker, who was assisted by Surgeon John A. Murphy and several of the internes of the hospital corps. On July 16th a man of medium build, who registered as Andrew J. Driver, aged 22, and residing at No. 61 Pierson street for three months past, entered the hospital. He was almost bent double and walked with great difficulty, and in answer to questions, stated that he was suffering from most agonizing pains in the stomach. For several years he had been travelling with shows about the country as a faker, and performing the sword swallowing feat. About four years ago, while giving a performance in one of the smaller towns in the northern part of this State, he was bantered by a number of spectators, who thought the sword he swallowed was worked by springs, and they dared him to go through the same act with the ordinary case-knife. In this he was successful, and a number made up a purse and wagered him quite a sum that he could not swallow an ordinary teaspoon. He accepted their challenge, and picking up a triple-plated teaspoon of Rogers' manufacture, slowly placed it in his mouth and swallowed it. He after that continued the sword act, feeling no ill effects from the spoon until about six months ago, when during one of his performances he distinctly felt the end of the sword blade strike the spoon, and for several days could feel it gradually changing its course toward his stomach. Yet all this while he had experienced no painful sensation. Some two weeks later, however, he was attacked with violent cramps and pains, beginning in his right side and afterward changing the course of the suffering to the stomach, in the immediate neighborhood of the navel. These attacks were only periodical at first, but became gradually more frequent, and finally he concluded to come to Cincinnati for treatment. Arriving here he had a more favorable turn, and remained most of the time about home until on the date mentioned, when he was again attacked in a more violent form than at any previous time. He then concluded to seek medical aid, and to that end entered the hospital for treatment. He was closely questioned and placed under a rigid examination, but owing to the excessive hot weather and the delicacy with which his case would necessarily have to be handled, the surgeons thought it advisable to defer the operation until the weather became more favorable. He was informed on Sunday morning that in order to extract the spoon from his stomach a very delicate and yet severe surgical operation would have to be performed that would be attended by great danger. He bravely agreed to have the operation performed, and accordingly during the early morning hours of that day he was placed under the influence of an anæsthetic and the operation began. Dr. Walker skilfully handled the knife and opened the stomach a trifle below the navel, where, toward the right side, imbedded in the intestines, was found first the handle of the spoon, and, working the finger along through the growth, the bell part of the spoon was reached, and the spoon removed intact from the patient. The intestines were placed carefully back and the wound dressed and sewed up, the patient during the operation giving hardly any indication of pain. During Sunday, after recovering from the effects of the anæsthetic administered, he complained of pain and was quite restless, but seemed to be recovering nicely, and last night when the hospital was visited he was resting easily.

Lightning Strokes.

In nearly all of the reports of personal injury by lightning strokes victims who recover say they saw balls of fire. The fire ball seems to figure conspicuously in all stories of prostration by lightning, and it would be interesting to study this special phase of the phenomenon for the purpose of ascertaining whether the fiery ball has any existence except as the result of the bright flash upon the optic nerves. Almost invariably the persons who are close enough to a flash of lightning to see this ball have declared that it moved slowly, dancing and bounding through the room or across the field, and in cases where men and women have been prostrated and subsequently recovered they have asserted that the ball bounded slowly toward them and struck them full in the chest. I recently talked with a man who was in a factory which was struck by lightning, and he told me that two balls of fire approached him from the end of the room, slowly bounding along the floor and leaping almost to the ceiling. When they reached him, he said, they both struck him on the breast at the same instant, and he fell insensible. The factory chimney was struck on this occasion and partly demolished. He recovered in fifteen minutes and carefully examined his clothes to see if they were burned. I firmly believe that the ball of fire is merely an optical illusion, and that it is seen only by persons who are not in the direct line of the electric current.—N.Y. Sun.

A Short-Lived Race.

From a statement made by Dr. Tomlinson, registrar of vital statistics, to-day the people of Chicago are a short-lived race.

"Over one-half die under 5 years of the total number," said the doctor, "and one-third under 20. One-sixth live beyond that age, and it is only once in a decade that a man lives to be 100, as in the case of Byrnes who died last week in the Home for the Aged, and then it was owing to the fact that he was a native of Ireland and had only been in Chicago thirty-nine years."

"We live too much," said another prominent official. "What with the intense excitement of watching the 'boodlers' cases, having McGarigle's escape sprung on us, hot weather and people who tell us about it, we are being worn out, physically, at a most alarming rate."—Chicago News.

It is something quite amusing to see the great number of Indian canoe-oars and paddles which tourists bring from Alaska as old Indian relics. The most of these paddles are made and painted by Chinamen in San Francisco, shipped to Alaska points and sold as Indian relics, brought down to Tacoma on the steamers, and carried thousands of miles away.

OLIVE'S LOVER.

"I may as well add, Mr. Atherton, that my answer can never be anything else but 'No.' I appreciate the honor you would pay me, but I can never be your wife!" There was a dignity in Olive Mosely's manner as she spoke.

The stout, elderly man to whom her remarks were addressed shuffled his feet uneasily and coughed.

"Your aunt led me to think your answer would be different," he stammered. "Anyway, I shall not give up all hope. I will wish you good morning," and he bowed himself out.

Olive watched him disappear with a sigh of relief as she sank into a chair. She knew her aunt would be angry with her for refusing the richest man in the country, but her heart was in far-off India with Edward Russell, the brother of her playmate, Amy.

There was a stormy interview in the dining-room that evening between the orphan girl and her aunt. The old lady reminded her of the benefits she had received and how ungrateful had been her return. Olive's feelings were hurt, and the old place grew wearisome to her.

One afternoon a letter was brought to Olive from Amy Russell. The girl opened it with the nervous expectancy she always felt when Amy's letters were received.

After reading a few lines this is what met her astonished gaze:

"Mamma and I are rejoicing over the news just received from Edward. He has been very successful in business and is coming home. Not only that, but, would you believe it?—is going to bring a wife with him. Just fancy my having a sister! He does not give us a description of the lady, but says he hopes we will be pleased with his choice."

Olive did not faint nor cry out, but sat white and still, with the letter tightly crushed in her small hands.

While she was so doing the door opened and a gentleman was shown in. Olive rose and faced the stranger and for a moment they looked at each other.

In spite of the bronzed complexion and the heavy beard Olive recognized him. And Mr. Russell—he saw the slight figure, the beautiful eyes, the golden-brown hair, the sweet red lips. He came forward with outstretched hands.

"Olive!"

It was the same voice that had bidden so sorrowful an adieu to her, only now there was a glad, triumphant ring in it. What did it mean?

She did not speak, but she trembled so excessively that she was obliged to put out one hand and rest it on the piano.

"Olive, you have no word for me? Am I forgotten?"

"Why are you here?" she gasped.

Mr. Russell looked surprised.

"Have you forgotten what you promised me before I went away, Olive?"

"I have forgotten nothing, but you—you—where is your wife?"

"My wife! I do not understand you, Olive."

"Amy wrote me that you were married; that you were going to bring a wife home with you, at least, and I—I——" She broke off with a sob.

"There must be some mistake. I wrote that I was coming home and that I was now in a position to marry and they must prepare a welcome for the young bride that, God willing, I should soon bring to them. I never dreamed they would think of my marrying out there. I never thought of marrying any one but you."

Olive looked at him earnestly; the grave, tender eyes were watching her closely. With a sudden, impulsive movement she put out her hands. They were quickly clasped and she was drawn to the shelter of loving arms—poor, weary Olive—and fond kisses were pressed on her pale face.

After a long time Olive showed her lover his sister's letter.

"I am sorry, darling," he said. "I intended as soon as I reached England to come to you and make arrangements for our marriage, then go home to Surrey for a few days until you intended to be my wife——"

"Haven't you been home yet?" asked Olive, shyly.

"Of course not. Who is so near and dear to me as my promised wife?"

Her Style of Leaving.

Pedestrians who happened to be passing a certain house in Columbia street east yesterday forenoon saw a servant girl come out of the front door in a hurry. She seemed perturbed and ill at rest. She was followed by her hat, a couple of aprons, a pair of shoes and a trunk, and the door was shut with a bang and the key turned in the lock.

"Anything wrong?" inquired a peddler at the curbstone.

"I—think there is," replied the girl, as she placed the things in her trunk.

"What is it?"

"Why, I didn't want to redden my face doing up strawberries over a hot stove."

"And do you always leave as suddenly as this?"

"Not always, but in this case I wanted to. I threw a can at her and she dodged it."—Detroit Free Press.

An Old Story Revised and Amended.

A good story to tell the children on the value of politeness is going the rounds about the monkey which, when about to be assaulted by a dog, lifted his hat politely, as he had been taught to do, while the abashed dog slunk away with his tail between his legs.

This is a good little story, and it has a good little moral, but it isn't the way we used to hear it in the day when we played hookey and our bearing toward ye ancient pedagogue was not exactly Chesterfieldian. As the original version had it, the monkey jumped nimbly on the dog's back and had him whipped before the pup knew what had hold of him.

But that was in the good old days when, if a boy didn't look out for number one, he didn't cut much of a swath in the community.—Lowell Times.

The women who make the "ruby" match-boxes in England receive 2½ pence per 144 boxes. They have to find paste, hemp and firing for drying purposes. They can gain, if skilful, 3 farthings per hour, or less than tenpence for twelve hours' work. If they work eight hours per diem, and take a holiday on Sundays, they would realize the handsome salary of 3 shillings per week. The company pays its shareholders above 20 per cent. dividend.

AN UNEXPECTED MARRIAGE.

It was a cold December twilight, but the room was cozy where Harry Cutter was seated in an easy-chair before the grate. Winnie was standing beside the chair, with one fair hand resting lightly upon her brother's shoulder, the other hanging listlessly by her side.

Harry Cutter had been left an orphan at the age of 20. His parents were wealthy, and every comfort wealth could give was lavished upon him. About this time a malignant disease broke out in the city where his parents resided, and his father immediately sickened with it and died. A month later his mother gave birth to a daughter; but before the little Winnie was an hour old she was motherless. Harry procured a nurse for the babe, and soon she grew to be a gay, lively, fascinating child. She regarded her brother more in the light of a father or guardian, and he in return watched over her with all the tenderness of a brother, mingled with the love and devotion of a father. At the age of 10 she had been placed at a boarding-school, at which place she remained until she was 16 years of age. She was rather slight of frame, with blue eyes, a fair complexion, a profusion of light-brown ringlets and an artless and winning manner.

"Come, Harry, why don't you speak? You have been silent at least ten minutes. What are you thinking about?" questioned Winnie, trying to rouse her brother from the reverie into which he had fallen.

"I was thinking, Winnie," he replied, "what you and Walter are going to do if you get married. He has only his clerkship."

"I know it, Harry," said Winnie, "but we intend to wait a year at least. You will consent to our union, then. Will you not?"

"Yes, Winnie, and I should not withhold my consent now if you wished to be married, for I know of no man more worthy of my precious sister than Walter Adams."

"I am happy to hear you speak so, Harry, for your manner towards Walter has always been so reserved that I did not know whether you liked him or not."

A silence ensued for a few moments, which was broken only by the monotonous ticking of the old clock on the mantel. At length Harry spoke:

"Would you and Walter like to be married now?"

"Yes, indeed," replied Winnie, the rose tint deepening upon her cheeks, while her brother smiled at her earnestness. "Walter said last night," she continued, "that he did not wish to wait a year; but we cannot do otherwise."

"Yes, you can, Winnie. Half of the fortune our father left us is yours. Next Thursday will be Christmas. You can be married then and live here with your husband. What say you to this arrange ment?"

"Oh, how happy we shall be!" murmured Winnie, almost audibly.

After a pause of a few moments, she asked:

"How old are you, Harry—37?"

"Yes, Winnie," was the reply.

"Were you ever in love, Harry," was the next question.

"Yes, Winnie, I loved once. But we will not talk of that now—some time I will tell you all about it."

"Please tell me now," said Winnie, coaxingly.

"Well, I will, since you desire it.

"When I was a young man I loved a woman named Lucy Alcott, and her parents had appointed the day for our marriage She was 20 years of age, a beautiful, accomplished woman, with a kind word and smile for everybody.

"She was the only woman I ever loved, and I think she reciprocated my love; but I am not sure. Once I was absent from home for a week, attending to busines distant city. While I was gone Lucy attended a party with a young man who did not bear a good reputation. On my return I heard of it and immediately called to see her. She greeted me affectionately, as was her wont, but I was angry and upbraided her harshly for her thoughtless conduct.

"'Why did you attend Mrs. Loring's party with Charles Baker?' I asked.

"'Because I wanted to. I did not think there was any harm in it,' she replied.

"'You knew it was against my wishes,' I said sternly.

"'You might have delayed yourbusiness, for you knew I wished to attend that party,' she replied, a little wilfully.

"'My business was of importance, and could not be delayed.'

"'Well, Mr. Cutter, I am not your wife, and I am not bound to obey you,' she said, in a voice of mingled pride and anger.

"'Lucy Alcott, do you mean this?' I asked.

"'I do,' was the reply.

"'Very well, Miss Alcott. Henceforth you are free from all engagements with me,' I said, calmly, and, rising, took up my hat and prepared to depart.

"She accompanied me to the door, and there was a perceptible tremor in her voice when she bade me 'good evening,' and I think she regretted the words she had spoken as bitterly as I did mine; but I was too proud to seek a reconciliation. Now you know, Winnie, why I never married."

"Have you ever seen Lucy Alcott since you parted with her that night?" asked Winnie, after her brother had concluded.

"No, Winnie, I have not; but I have heard she still continues to reside in this city, but in seclusion. Let us drop this subject now. Isn't it most time for your lover to be here?"

"Oh, Harry! I forgot to tell you about Walter's aunt—his mother's sister. He has lived with her since his mother's death, which occurred about ten years ago. Perhaps she will not like to be separated from him."

"She shall not, Winnie. You can tell one of the servants to prepare a chamber for her. How old is she? Do you know?"

"Thirty-five, I believe," replied Winnie; and, with a happy face and a light heart, she left the room, while Harry relapsed into a thoughtful silence.

It was a clear, cold Christmas afternoon. Harry Cutter was seated in his own room, deeply engaged in the contents of a book.

Everything had been arranged for the marriage of his sister, which was to take place in the evening.

The opening of the door of his room roused Harry, and Winnie came in, exclaiming:

"Come down in the library and let me introduce you to Walter's aunt. She has been here nearly three hours, but you have kept yourself aloof, as if you did not desire to see her."

"Well, I do not, to tell the truth, Winnie," replied Harry, reluctantly rising and closing his book.

"I think you will when you know who she is," said Winnie, while she vainly tried to repress the merry light that danced in her blue eyes.

"Winnie!"

The voice was grave, and Harry looked inquiringly at his sister.

"Oh, Harry! it is Lucy Alcott!"

"I cannot see her, Winnie," was the reply.

"You must, Harry! She loves you! Why do you wish to wreck two lives?"

For an hour Winnie reasoned with her brother, and, at last, she persuaded him to seek a reconciliation with Lucy Alcott.

Need I add more? Need I tell the reader there was a double marriage in that mansion that night?

And Harry Cutter often says he is glad his bachelor life is over; while his sister tells him if it had not been for her he would have been a bachelor to this day.

Fads and Fancies.

The favorite reticule is the Marguerite pocket.

Lovely tinted ribbons trim dressy morning camisoles.

The latest shade of blue green takes the name of wave blue.

The neck is dressed as high as ever in spite of the hot weather.

Serviceable articles of wear are the steamer wrappers and hoods, which answer the purpose so admirably.

Real seal and real alligator pocket-bocks, lined with calfskin, are in favor with many ladies.

French cheviot suiting look extremely well, and are being worn more than formerly.

Some exquisite sacques for house wear are made of embroidered muslin in "all-over" designs, with borders to match.

India lawn suits, with solid embroidered front, plaited panels, and French draped back, are exceedingly handsome.

Dresses of white Irish linen are made up with belted blouse waists, and trimmed with dark blue dungaree bands, on which are rows of white linen braid.

China crape shoulder scarfs and small white and tinted shawls, with deep-netted fringes, are the favorite piazza wraps at watering places.

Fashions are so elastic just now that every woman can be in the mode and yet wear nothing unbecoming to her own peculiar style.

Pin head dotted white muslins are revived for young girls' wear. They are worn over colored slips or white ones at pleasure.

The shades most admired in the popular English seaside serges are blue, black, brown, chocolate, and a sort of mahogany—preference, if any, however, being given to blue.

A new thing in hats is the white silk dotted net varieties. They are trimmed with wild flowers and net, and are, of course, very light weight, a commendable quality at this season of the year.

A pretty wrap to throw about the shoulders while on the gallery in the evening is a three-cornered piece of China crepe, embroidered with a light-running vine pattern, and deeply fringed. These come in lovely shades of blue, rose, cream, pale green, poppy red and color.

Black stockings are being somewhat superseded by those which match the color of the costume. A new idea, but not a pretty one, nor deserving of popularity, is of stockings with front and back of different color. Some are shown with the front of black and the back of red; others are blue behind and olive in front.

White, cream-tinted and yellow sashes are most used, though shades of tilleul and lettuce green are still liked for black and white lace dresses. Watered ribbons, with picot-edges, are the general choice of these sashes. The pompadour sashes are a novelty, with bands of satin strewed with small flowers of natural colors alternating with watered-silk stripes.

Lace dresses, made of the forty-inch laces, either black or white, are worn with belted waists of China crape and wide sashes. Sometimes the sashes are of the new Roman moire, which comes in such wide widths that the belted waists can also be made of them and with the lace skirts have a very bright and pretty effect. The broadest sashes worn with these dresses are fourteen inches wide, but those from ten to eleven in width are much more popular.

Sound Sense.

Speaking of the latest railroad horror, a travelling man at a hotel said last evening: "There is one lesson taught by that terrible accident, and that is the wisdom and necessity of compelling the older railroad companies to employ iron and masonry in the construction of culverts as well as bridges and trestles. The use of any other material should not be allowed, except by new companies. In such cases, of course, it would not do to draw the line so close, as there would be but very few new railroads built, but as rapidly as possible, after they get in operation, the wooden structures should be supplanted by iron or steel."

Advice to Young Men.

No man should marry until he has made himself worthy of a good wife and able to maintain her and his children in comfort. And he should choose her as he would choose his destiny, with range of choice from earth to heaven. No man should marry under 24; no girl under 18.—John Ruskin in "Young Men."

The shrewdest tramp of the times has just turned up in New York State. A ragged, lame and dirty fellow visited the stores in succession and begged a cake of soap. The purpose was so apparent that he was rarely refused. After putting in a day solid at this he held an auction at night and disposed of his day's plunder, which was large. The result was a neat sum, enough to keep him in luxuries for some time.

CURED BY PRAYER.

Miss Carrie Webb's Own Story of Her Complete Restoration to Health.

Miss Carrie C. Webb, who believes that she experienced the faith cure recently while sojourning in Northport, L.I., has returned to her home, 416 Gold street, Brooklyn, and many friends and neighbors have called to see her and hear her remarkable story. She is 23 years old, of slender form, grey eyes, and dark brown hair. She has been a teacher in the Hanson Place Baptist Church for several years, and her father is a deacon in the Bedford Avenue Baptist Church, whose venerable pastor, Rev. Dr. Hutchings, and many members of the congregation are firm believers in the efficacy of prayer in removing disease. Two months ago Miss Webb went to spend the summer at her brother's house at Northport, and her condition, physically and mentally, was such that her friends never expected to see her come back alive. She has, however, returned with her mind bright and clear and her health apparently fully restored. This is Miss Webb's explanation of how the change was brought about:

"I had been in declining health for nearly seven years, suffering constantly from bronchitis and a severe cough. My mind became affected and I had strange and uncontrollable fancies and became morbid and despondent. I was at last attacked with neuralgia and often prayed that I might die, as I became a burden to my family. One day soon after I arrived at Northport, and while I was lying on a lounge in the library at my brother's house, my eye lighted on a book on the faith cure. I read it. That same afternoon my brother asked me if I had ever thought of the faith cure, and I told him of the book incident, adding that I had never thought of it in connection with myself. I said I did not think I had sufficient faith to receive such a blessing. He told me to think over and pray about the matter, and three days afterward I went to him and told him I was ready to be anointed. My brother sent for the Presbyterian minister of the village, and when he arrived we went into the library. The service was very impressive, and I wept all the time it was going on, and when he was pouring oil on my head. I did not feel any better the next day, but rather worse. Just one week after the anointing I awoke in unusual pain, and prayed to God to let me die. Then I suddenly thought it would be better for me to pray for health, and I prayed and cried for three hours. Finally, when I arose and stood erect, I felt a sensation of health and strength I had not known for seven long years. I realized that I was well again, and that my prayers had been answered. Not only had my pains all vanished, but the cloud also disappeared from my mind. The cure was genuine and complete. I have not had a pain or ache since that morning of prolonged prayer."—N. Y. Sun.

A Monte Carlo Sensation.

I remember that during one of my visits, when the weather was exceptionally hot, a cab horse, after cantering up the hill of Monte Cristo, fell in a fit at the Casino door. It was necessary to kill the horse, and when the carcass had been removed some blood remained on the gravel. A few moments later a French newspaper correspondent came up, and, perceiving the blood, immediately concluded that somebody must have committed suicide. The horror of the imaginative journalist was considerably intensified by the approach of a director of the Casino, who, with the greatest unconcern, walked on the blood-stained sand, and, unmoved, entered the gaming-rooms. A few hours later the press of most of the capitals of Europe re-echoed with the heart-rending story of the young man who, having lost in a few hours at roulette the entire fortune his father had taken a lifetime to accumulate, blew his brains out at the very doors of the Casino. But the directors, unmoved by the ruin they occasioned, actually trod in their victim's blood. Their consciences were so hardened by perpetual crime they had not even the decency to remove the blood with which their boots were bespattered.—Memphis Avalanche.

A Cheap Girl.

"How much does your best girl cost you, old fellow?" was plumped at a beardless boy who makes his bread and butter, about $8 a week, in the carpenter trade. After demurring as usual over looking at the sentimental affair in so practical a light, his objections were finally overruled, and he consented to talk. "Me and my girl take in all the museum shows. Ten weeks of museums at 20 cents a week makes $2. All the girls hanker after ice-cream, and I generally put up $2 on ice-cream. I have to get her 10 cents worth of taffy off and on. That comes to 75 cents easy. In summer time we get reckless and go to two big blow-outs any way—most generally picnics. With the car fare that comes to $3. Other evenings we go to the parks and freeze to one of them benches. That don't cost nothing except the car fare. Sixty cents would about settle that, for sometimes we walk, don't you see? When Christmas comes I do the grand, and buy a pair of ear-rings or some other piece of finery, the kind girls like, and never pay less than $2 neither. Let's see, $2, $2, 75 cents, $3, 80 cents, $2 comes to $10.35. My girl says that's good enough for her."—Buffalo Times.

"There is, after all, a deplorable lack of romance in this progressive age of ours," said a gentleman in one of our leading jewellery stores. "In days gone by the betrothal ring was considered as a sort of love token, and the maiden who received it wore it and doted upon it because of the spirit in which it was given. Now, however, the girls are very particular, and it is no unusual thing for them to come here with their engagement rings and have settings changed or some other little matter that doesn't just suit them corrected. Now that sort of thing is calculated to knock romance higher than a kite."

A large pie manufacturer in Chicago calculates that Chicago eats 40,000 pies a day. As a person is said rarely to eat more than a quarter of a pie, there must be at least 160,000 people, or one-fourth of Chicago's population, who eat pie every day.

Everybody found smoking on the streets of Saugatuck, Mich., during the dry spell was liable to be arrested under the orders of the village council.

HER MONEY TAKEN.

Mrs. Halverson Charges Matt Pinkerton and Three Lawyers With Having Deliberately Robbed Her.

Mrs. Sofie Halverson secured a capias in the Circuit Court yesterday against Matthew W. Pinkerton, the detective, and Frank D. Turner, W. H. Buttner and F. W. Bigger, lawyers, in an action on the case for $1,000 damages.

Mrs. Halverson says that July 21st Ole Halverson, her husband, was arrested on a criminal charge, and was confined in the county jail. He was the owner of $1,000 in city of Chicago bonds, which were deposited in a safety deposit box. On July 23rd he gave the bonds to the plaintiff, and two days later, she claims, the three lawyers and Pinkerton took her to the latter's office, No. 204½ South Clark street, and there kept her for a day. During the species of imprisonment she says she was searched by Mrs. M. W. Pinkerton, and the bonds taken from her by Mrs. Pinkerton by force. Bigger then went before Justice R. H. White and secured a warrant for her arrest, charging her with obtaining the bonds from her husband by false pretences. When the warrant was issued she had been arrested and was in the office of Matthew W. Pinkerton. The complaint brought by Bigger was never brought to a hearing, and Mrs. Halverson was never tried on it, but, after being imprisoned by Matthew W. Pinkerton for a day, she was taken before Justice White and there directed to sign a paper, which she is now informed was a recognizance for her appearance before the justice the day after. She did not appear and the suit was abandoned, but Pinkerton, Bigger, Buttner and Turner converted the bonds into money and divided all but $300, which they turned over to plaintiff in cash and told her to take that or she would get nothing. Buttner and Bigger were arrested by the Sheriff, but Pinkerton and Turner are out of town and were not taken in custody. Judge Tuthill issued the capiases and directed that each of the defendants be held in $1,000 bail.—Chicago Times.

A Plucky Correspondent.

Camille Farcy, a newspaper correspondent, accompanied the Frem expedition in Algiers. The commander was a martinet who hated newspapers and newspaper men. He compelled the correspondents to sign a document which made their mission fruitless. Farcy signed it under protest, and announced that he should elude the censorship, if possible, accepting the penalty as a matter of course. A spy was set upon him. In less than a week a letter was intercepted. It contained criticisms on the general. A court-martial was summoned. Farcy made no defence. The verdict was brief:

"Camille Farcy is condemned to be shot at 6 in the morning."

He was taken to Tunis for execution. The train arrived at 5.30. A ball was in progress at the Governor-General's house. He asked Farcy if he could do anything for him before he died.

"Yes," he replied, "I would like to have a waltz before I die."

The Governor introduced him to his daughter. At 6 he bowed to the guests. He was conducted to the guard. He refused to have his eyes bandaged and demanded permission to give the word of command.

"May all journalists do as I have done," said he; "it is their duty," and, folding his arms, he cried:

"Fire!"

A crash of muskets and he was dead.—Paris Figaro.

Living Witnesses!

Ask any one who has used Dr. Pierce's Pleasant Purgative Pellets as to their merits. They will tell you that pimples, blotches and eruptions disappear; that constipation—that breeder of disorders—is relieved; that the appetite is restored; that the whole system is renovated and regulated beyond any conception by these little wonder-workers. Being purely vegetable, they are perfectly harmless; being composed of concentrated, active ingredients, they are powerful! Purge and purify the system and disease will be unknown. Of all druggists.

It is said Diogenes slept in a tub. We suppose somebody had to wring him up in the morning.

A Great Legacy

to bequeath to your children is a strong, clean, pure constitution—better than wealth, because it will never prove a curse. You cannot give what you do not possess, but mothers will find in Dr. Pierce's Favorite Prescription a wonderful help—correcting all weaknesses, bringing their system into perfect condition, so that their children, untainted, shall rise up to call them blessed!

There is not a druggist in all this land
But always keeps a stock on hand.

A London gas company which had rendered a bill for $64 was forced to accept $40 on complaint of the consumer to a magistrate that for the preceding quarter he had paid but $39, and in that time had used more gas than during the subsequent quarter.

With Satisfaction.

Polson's Nerviline, the new and certain pain cure, is used with satisfaction in every instance. There is abundant reason for this, for it performs all that is claimed for it. Nerviline is a never-falling cure for cramps, pain in the side or back, lumbago, sore throat chilblains, toothache. Nerviline is in fact a sure remedy for all pains, both internal and external. Try a 10 cent sample bottle. Large bottles only 25 cents, by all druggists.

It is a little singular that our sport-loving people have not taken advantage of the warm summer to get up a thermometer race.

The highest price that was ever paid for hock was paid the other day by an American firm to Drexel Brothers in Frankfort-on-the-Main. Two hundred bottles of Schloss Johannisberg, the last of 1861 vintage, fetched 105 marks, or $25 per bottle.

Elder Evans, of the Shaker community, at New Lebanon, Columbia County, N.Y., has just celebrated his 85th birthday. For fifty-five years he has abstained from eating fish and flesh.

A Good Investment

is that which yields large returns from a small outlay. Reader, the way is clear! No speculation, no chance, big returns! If you are like most of mankind you have somewhere a weakness—don't feel at all times just as you'd like to—headache to-day, backache to-morrow, down sick next week—all because your blood is out of order. A small outlay and what large returns! You invest in Dr. Pierce's Golden Medical Discovery and soon pure, fresh blood courses through your veins, and you are another being!

Princess Helen, daughter of the Count and Countess of Paris, has been betrothed to young Dom Pedro, of Brazil. Her future father-in-law is also her uncle.

Victoria, B. C., is lighted by electricity, the works having started up on the 6th.

A man was fined $30 by a Rhode Island justice one day recently for calling a woman "a snake in the grass."

Pierce's Pleasant Purgative Pellets — The Original LITTLE LIVER PILLS.

SIZE OF PELLETS

BEWARE OF IMITATIONS. ALWAYS ASK FOR DR. PIERCE'S PELLETS, OR LITTLE SUGAR-COATED PILLS.

Being entirely vegetable, they operate without disturbance to the system, diet, or occupation. Put up in glass vials, hermetically sealed. Always fresh and reliable. As a laxative, alterative, or purgative, these little Pellets give the most perfect satisfaction.

SICK HEADACHE,

Bilious Headache, Dizziness, Constipation, Indigestion, Bilious Attacks, and all derangements of the stomach and bowels, are promptly relieved and permanently cured by the use of Dr. Pierce's Pleasant Purgative Pellets. In explanation of the remedial power of these Pellets over so great a variety of diseases, it may truthfully be said that their action upon the system is universal, not a gland or tissue escaping their sanative influence. Sold by druggists, 25 cents a vial. Manufactured at the Chemical Laboratory of WORLD'S DISPENSARY MEDICAL ASSOCIATION, Buffalo, N. Y.

$500 REWARD

is offered by the manufacturers of Dr. Sage's Catarrh Remedy, for a case of Chronic Nasal Catarrh which they cannot cure.

SYMPTOMS OF CATARRH.—Dull, heavy headache, obstruction of the nasal passages, discharges falling from the head into the throat, sometimes profuse, watery, and acrid, at others, thick, tenacious, mucous, purulent, bloody and putrid; the eyes are weak, watery, and inflamed; there is ringing in the ears, deafness, hacking or coughing to clear the throat, expectoration of offensive matter, together with scabs from ulcers; the voice is changed and has a nasal twang; the breath is offensive; smell and taste are impaired; there is a sensation of dizziness, with mental depression, a hacking cough and general debility. Only a few of the above-named symptoms are likely to be present in any one case. Thousands of cases annually, without manifesting half of the above symptoms, result in consumption, and end in the grave. No disease is so common, more deceptive and dangerous, or less understood by physicians.

By its mild, soothing, and healing properties, Dr. Sage's Catarrh Remedy cures the worst cases of Catarrh, "cold in the head," Coryza, and Catarrhal Headache. Sold by druggists everywhere; 50 cents.

"Untold Agony from Catarrh."

Prof. W. HAUSNER, the famous mesmerist, of Ithaca, N. Y., writes: "Some ten years ago I suffered untold agony from chronic nasal catarrh. My family physician gave me up as incurable, and said I must die. My case was such a bad one, that every day, towards sunset, my voice would become so hoarse I could barely speak above a whisper. In the morning my coughing and clearing of my throat would almost strangle me. By the use of Dr. Sage's Catarrh Remedy, in three months, I was a well man, and the cure has been permanent."

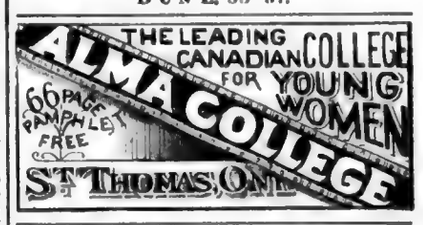
"Constantly Hawking and Spitting."

THOMAS J. RUSHING, Esq., 2902 Pine Street, St. Louis, Mo., writes: "I was a great sufferer from catarrh for three years. At times I could hardly breathe, and was constantly hawking and spitting, and for the last eight months could not breathe through the nostrils. I thought nothing could be done for me. Luckily, I was advised to try Dr. Sage's Catarrh Remedy, and I am now a well man. I believe it to be the only sure remedy for catarrh now manufactured, and one has only to give it a fair trial to experience astounding results and a permanent cure."

Three Bottles Cure Catarrh.

ELI ROBBINS, Runyan P. O., Columbia Co., Pa., says: "My daughter had catarrh when she was five years old, very badly. I saw Dr. Sage's Catarrh Remedy advertised, and procured a bottle for her, and soon saw that it helped her; a third bottle effected a permanent cure. She is now eighteen years old and sound and hearty."

D C N L, 35 87.



CONSUMPTION.

I have a positive remedy for the above disease; by its use thousands of cases of the worst kind and of long standing have been cured. Indeed, so strong is my faith in its efficacy, that I will send TWO BOTTLES FREE, together with a VALUABLE TREATISE on this disease to any sufferer. Give express and P. O. address.

DR. T. A. SLOCUM,
Branch Office, 37 Yonge St., Toronto

DUNN'S BAKING POWDER

THE COOK'S BEST FRIEND

I CURE FITS!

When I say cure I do not mean merely to stop them for a time and then have them return again. I mean a radical cure. I have made the disease of FITS, EPILEPSY or FALLING SICKNESS a life-long study. I warrant my remedy to cure the worst cases. Because others have failed is no reason for not now receiving a cure. Send at once for a treatise and a Free Bottle of my infallible remedy. Give Express and Post Office. It costs you nothing for a trial, and I will cure you. Address DR. H. G. ROOT,

Branch Office, 37 Yonge St., Toronto.

Tit-Bits.

Continued from First Page.

Get your Lemons at KEEFER'S.

New brick buildings to be erected next season are already being spoken of.

Mr. Wm. Wilson advertises a fine farm for sale or to rent in this issue of THE ADVANCE.

See Mr. Samuel Sheardown's advt. in another column, headed, "Tenders," and govern yourselves accordingly.

Mr. R. C. Mitchell caught a trout in Mill creek on Friday last which weighed three pounds and a half.—Thornbury Standard.

Mrs. E. Morris, of lot 8, in the 4th con., Tecumseth, hung herself in her husband's barn on Thursday last. Her husband was looking for her some three hours before she was discovered. No cause can be assigned for the rash act, as they were in very comfortable circumstances.—Shelburne Free Press.

As a rule the very rich men are not those who build up a community and create booms. A single business man full of life and snap and enterprise, who is not afraid to talk and talk sense, and knows how to advertise, is worth any dozen of very rich men who usually only take advantake of other people's booming to increase their values.—Chicago Inter Ocean.

At Flesherton Station, on Monday evening, Rev. J. Cashman gave a lecture on "India", in the Orange Hall. The attendance was good considering that the lecture had not been sufficiently published. Having been twice or more to this immense and interesting country, Mr. C. was able to relate many things which his hearers were amused and instructed by.

In the interests of humanity—fallen though it may be—we rise to kindly advise those of our town youths who have been in the habit of "goin' to hook apples," etc., from gardens and orchards, and who still intend carrying on their depredations in this line, to provide themselves with bullet proof suits, otherwise they need not be surprised to find themselves suddenly filled with small shot or salt on one of their trips. —Meaford Mirror.

THE KINDERGARTEN & PRIMARY DRAWING COURSE.—Parts I and II. Authorized for use in the Public Schools. Each part 10c. For sale by all booksellers. Toronto: SELBY & Co., Publishers.

The wants of the age have long demanded such a series of drawing-books for the very young children, such as the Kindergarten and Primary Drawing Course recently authorized for use in the public schools by the Minister of Education.

One great feature of this series is that it requires no previous knowledge of drawing by the teacher before begining teaching. This will enable it to be introduced into schools where drawing has not hitherto been taught. The very simplicity of the series is its best recommendation, it is founded on the Frobelian plan, and has much of the idea and spirit of the Kindergarten, and one wonders at the multiplicity and simplicity of the Designs, and they cannot fail to be appreciated by parents, teachers and pupils. Their use is authorized from the infant class to the junior second.

When used according to directions, Ayer's Ague Cure is warranted to eradicate, from the system, Fever and Ague, Intermittent, Remittent, and Bilious Fevers, and all malarial diseases. Try it.

Pa Stood no Show After This.

"Freddie, I hope when you grow up to be a man you will be a worker. No matter how much money a man has he ought to know how to work," said a rich aunt to her nephew the other day.

"I realize that, aunt," replied the old little fellow, "for I heard pa say the other day that if he hadn't worked that one thousand dollars out of you this spring he couldn't have fixed the house over."

And he never realized what a gold mine he had closed for his pa.

ADVICE TO MOTHERS.—Are you disturbed at night and broken of your rest by a sick child suffering and crying with pain of Cutting Teeth? If so send at once and get a bottle of "Mrs. Winslow's Soothing Syrup" for Children Teething Its value is incalculable. It will relieve the poor little sufferer immediately. Depend upon it, mothers; there is no mistake about it. It cures Dysentery and Diarrhœa, regulates the Stomach and Bowels, cures Wind Colic, softens the Gums, reduces Inflammation, and gives tone and energy to the whole system. "Mrs. Winslow's Soothing Syrup" for children teething is pleasant to the taste and is the prescription of one of the oldest and best female physicians and nurses in the United States, and is for sale by all druggists throughout the world. Price twenty-five cents a bottle. Be sure and ask for MRS. WINSLOW'S SOOTHING SYRUP," and take no other kind.

FLESHERTON SONS OF TEMPERANCE.

Resolve to Retain their Charter and Continue on in the Good Work.

EXTRACTS FROM GRAND SCRIBE'S LETTER.

For some time past it has been felt that the work—so well and ably performed by Flesherton Division of Sons of Temperance in the past—was being amply covered by sister organizations. With a view of considering the question, and arousing apathetic members to a sense of the duty devolving upon them—and also to take up some decisive line of action, in the matter of retaining or surrendering the charter—the following was published in THE ADVANCE of the week before last :—

"A special meeting of all members of the Sons of Temperance, Flesherton, will be held on Wednesday evening next the 24th inst., when the following motion will be considered and voted on. That whereas this district does not offer scope for two similar Temperance societies, and whereas the work for which the Flesherton Division was originally organized is now being so efficiently done by our sister society, the Royal Templars of Temperance, we therefore resolve to suspend all meetings for the present except such as are necessary to retain the charter and secure all privileges to insured members. Full attendance particularly requested."

Accordingly, on the evening of the 24th ult., a number of the members assembled and discussed the question pro and con. A lengthy and interesting letter from Mr. W. H. Bewell, Grand Scribe, was read; also one from a Markdale member, urging the members not to surrender the charter. After considerable discussion, it was at length unanimously decided (1) to retain the charter, (2) to hold regular business and Open Divisions the first Wednesday in each month hereafter, and (3) to push forward the good work in every legitimate manner in the interval. It is intended to make these monthly metings of a specially interesting and instructive character. The private business of the Order will be transacted between 7:30 and 8 o'clock p.m. sharp every meeting night. At 8 o'clock the doors of the Division room will be thrown open to the public, when a choice and varied program lasting from one hour to an hour and a half—will be gone through with. By this means a new line of action will be inaugurated in which the public will be cordially taken into "partnership" in the great work of Temperance Reform, and a better system for effective outside work commenced.

In this connection, we make the following extracts from the Grand Scribe's highly interesting letter :—

"Flesherton Division is not new to me. During the years 1873-4-5-6, I frequently met members of your Division. I was then a resident of Feversham and interested in the work of the order and the cause in your County. I remember the noble work done by your division during the Dunkin Act contest in Artemesia and Grey County. I remember the help that your Division gave us in Osprey, where we gained such a splendid victory, giving inspiration to the Temperance people in Grey, resulting in the first overwhelming majority in a County, after which the fire spread over the Province, and the Government gave us the Scott Act. I remember what Flesherton Division has done for the order and for the cause of Temperance in Canada. .....It is one of the best societies that has ever graced the Province—best in members, best in labors, best in results. Wherever my lot has been cast, it has been my pleasure to speak in terms of praise of your Division. I do not speak flattery, but I assure you that where I am known personally, Flesherton Division has been heard of and with favor.....Your ex-members are widely scattered and hundreds have known your members or your work..... A great battle is yet to be fought and the services of your Division will be needed .....Do not think of surrendering your charter for one moment. For your own sake; for the sake of the work yet to be done in your County; for the sake of the order; for the sake of the influence you have and do exert beyond the limits of your village; for the sake of scores throughout Canada who look to Flesherton Division as their starting point in life's success; for the sake of the many loyal members you now have, who will stand by the Division..... Hold meetings less frequently if you deem it wise, but never, never surrender the charter you have so long, so worthily and so proudly graced and honored."

A Different State of Affairs.

"Catherine, what makes you sit so near Alexander whenever he calls? I hope you will not forget the proprieties."

"Oh, but ma, poor Alec is so dreadfully deaf, as you know."

"Yes, dear, and, as I know, your father was troubled with the same complaint before we were married, but now I can't go through his trousers pockets of a morning without waking him up."

NEW ADVERTISEMENTS.

To RENT or for SALE.

BEING North half of Lot 31, Con. 10, Township of Artemesia, 63 acres, 50 of which is cleared and in good state of cultivation. Good barn, house, and pump at the door. For fuller particulars apply to WM. WILSON, 323—1m. on the premises.

FARM for SALE

CONTAINING 50 acres, being Lot 170 in the 1st Con. South West of the Toronto and Sydenham Road, in the Township of Artemesia; 45 acres well cleared; about ¾ of an acre of good Orchard; splendid well; good log house 18x24, also log barn; near the thriving village of Flesherton. Reasonable terms. For full particulars, apply to THOMAS O'MELLIA, [323-6] Collingwood P.O., Ont.

FOR SALE or to RENT.

LOT 32, Con. 7, Artemesia, 100 acres; about 65 acres cleared and in good state of cultivation. Situated about half way between Flesherton and Maxwell on the Collingwood road. Good well, good spring at rear of lot; barn, stable and other accommodations. For full particulars and terms, apply to JAMES KESTER,
Aug. 25th, 1887.—1 m. Flesherton.

Notice to Contractors!

SAULT SAINTE MARIE CANAL.

CONTRACTORS intending to tender for works of construction of the Canal proposed to be formed on the Canadian side of the Saint Mary's River, are hereby informed that Tenders will be received about JANUARY next, and that the most favourable time to examine the locality will be between the present time and the early part of November next.

When plans, specifications and other documents are prepared due notice will be given, Contractors will then have an opportunity of examining them and be furnished with blank forms of tender, etc.

By order,
A. P. BRADLEY,
Secretary.

Department of Railways and Canals,
Ottawa, 24th August, 1887. 36-3t

Tenders

WILL be received up to the 17th Day of September, for the repairing of Church and Shed at Mount Zion. The lowest or any tender not necessarily accepted. Specifications of work to be seen at the house of

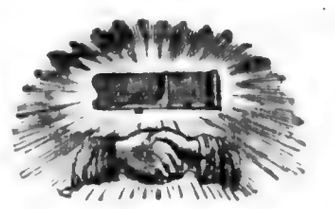
SAMUEL SHEARDOWN.

STRAY STEER.

CAME to the premises of the undersigned, Lot 18, Con 11, Artemesia, about one month ago, a yearling Steer Owner can have same by proving property and paying expenses.

DAVID JOHNSTON.

August 24th, 1887.



Publisher's Announcement:

In the matter of

FINE JOB

Printing!

It is generally conceded that the

Flesherton Advance

TAKES THE

BISCUIT!

EVERY TIME!

Posters! Posters!

From an Eighth Sheet to a mammoth Three-Sheeter—plain or in colors—at prices that will arrest your attention and surprise you.

Auction Sale Bills

WHILE YOU WAIT.

DRUGGISTS' LABELS

As cheap and as good as can be obtained in the city.

MAXWELL

CARRIAGE WORKS!

LITTLE & BLAKELY,

MANUFACTURERS OF

Carriages, Democrats, Wagons &c.

Repairing, Painting, Horse-Shoeing, and General Jobbing

Done on Short Notice and at Reasonable Prices.

JOHNSON LITTLE. Blacksmith, THOS. A. BLAKELY, Wagon-Maker & Painter.

Maxwell, May 26th, 1887.

BOOTS & SHOES!

Having received large auditions to my Stock, I have a good supply on hand of Summer Goods.

LADIES' WEAR.—A fine assortment in Prunella, French Kid, Goat, Polish Calf, Buff and Heavy Boots.

MISSES AND BOYS WEAR.—A large variety of Lace & Button Boots, Shoes and Slippers.

CHILDRENS WEAR.—A very large assortment of all sorts and sizes.

MENS WEAR.—I have Buff, Calf and Enamelled Balmorals, Oxford Ties and Strong Lace Boots.

FOR PRICE AND QUALITY, CANNOT BE SURPASSED.

WM. CLAYTON, . Flesherton.

CHEAP ❋ AND ❋ DURABLE!

—THE WELL-KNOWN—

SPEIGHT WAGON!

Call and get Prices, &c. from undersigned.

STOVES, TINWARE, &c. for sale as usual

First class value in every department.

Agent for VICKER'S EXPRESS. All parcels left with him will be promptly and carefully attended to.

STRAIN'S. - FLESHERTON.

FLESHERTON.

MARBLE WORKS:

E. VANZANT,

ALL KINDS OF

Marble and Monumental Works,

Such as Monuments, Tomb Tables, Headstones Counter and Table Tops—in American and Italian Marble and Granite, and made on short notice. Also Mantles in Marble and Marbleized Slate, &c., &c.

Flesherton, Aug. 30, 1883.

HEALTH FOR ALL.

HOLLOWAY'S PILLS & OINTMENT

THE PILLS

Purify the Blood, correct all Disorders of the

Liver, Stomach, Kidn'ys, and Bowels.

They invigorate and restore to health Debilitated Constitutions, and are invaluable in all Complaints incidental to Females of all ages. For Children and the aged they are priceless.

THE OINTMENT

Is an infallible remedy for Bad Legs, Bad Breasts, Old Wounds, Sores and Ulcers. It is famous for Gout and Rheumatism. For disorders of the Chest it has no equal.

For SORE THROAT, BRONCHITIS, COUGHS, COLDS

Glandular Swellings, and all Skin Diseases it has no rival; and for contracted and stiff joints it acts like a charm.

Manufactured only at Professor HOLLOWAY'S Establishment,

78, New Oxford Street (late 533, Oxford Street), London,

and are sold at 1s. 1½d., 2s. 9d., 4s. 6d., 11s., 22s., and 33s. each Box or Pot, and may be had of all Medicine Vendors throughout the World.

☞ Purchasers should look to the Label on the Pots and Boxes. If the address is not 533, Oxford Street, London, they are spurious.

TAMARAC ELIXIR
NATURE'S REMEDY.
FOR COUGHS, COLDS, HOARSENESS
THROAT & LUNG COMPLAINTS
INSTANT RELIEF POSITIVE CURE

SOUTHERN ASTHMA CURE
DOUBLE TREATMENT IN EACH PACKAGE
INSTANT RELIEF FOR
ASTHMA AND BRONCHITIS
BY MAIL ON RECEIPT OF PRICE
SAMPLES, 25c.; REGULAR SIZE, $1.00
ADDRESS FULFORD & CO., BROCKVILLE, ONT.

J. W. BATES,

Furniture Dealer and Undertaker,

FLESHERTON, ONT

FLESHERTON ADVANCE.

"TRUTH BEFORE FAVOR."—"PRINCIPLES, NOT MEN."

VOL. VII., NO. 324. FLESHERTON, ONTARIO. THURSDAY, SEPTEMBER 8, 1887. A. R. FAWCETT, EDITOR & PROPRIETOR.

Everybody

Wait.

Don't buy any Watches, Clocks, or Plateware from me or any other Jeweller till you see my Lines and Prices at the Flesherton Fall Fair!

I intend making, without exception the FINEST DISPLAY ever shown at that Fair, and will clear some

Staple Lines

—at—

"YOUR OWN" PRICES."

Be Prepared to Buy.

FOR 5 YEARS

The People's Jeweller.

W. A. BROWN,

Markdale.

SAY, HALLO THERE! ADVERTISING PAYS! Of course it does. Just plant an advertisement in THE ADVANCE and see for yourself. Hundreds have done so and were benefitted. Have you a farm you want to sell or rent? Advertise in THE ADVANCE. Have you anything under the sun you want to sell or trade? An advertisement in THE ADVANCE will bring you customers every time. Do you want to buy anything or hire help? Advertise in THE ADVANCE every time. Address or call on A. R. Fawcett, ADVANCE Office, Flesherton, for terms, &c.

CONSUMPTION IN FLESHERTON.

There being good prospects of a fresh quantity of Flour to be consumed in the village and surrounding country the present season, the undersigned has opened out with a good stock of the following lines:—

ROLLER FLOUR!

Best Brands.

Rolled & Granulated Oat-Meal.

Corn Meal,
Cracked Wheat,
Chop,
Shorts,
Bran and Oats,

At Bottom Prices for Cash.

Special Discounts

According to amount of Purchase.

W. W. TRIMBLE,

Next door to Clayton's Shoe Store.

(312-364)

PRINTING! YES, OH, YES! IT WILL PAY all manners of persons who read this advt. to get their Printing done at THE ADVANCE Office, Flesherton. Good work at honest prices every time! A dollar saved is a dollar earned—so the proverb goes. Pamphlets, Posters, Circulars, Programs, Dodgers, Streamers, Bill Heads, Note Heads, Receipts, Note Forms, Business Cards, Visiting Cards, Labels, Tags, &c., Plain or Colored. Address or call on A. R. Fawcett, ADVANCE Office, Flesherton, for terms.

ADVERTISE in The ADVANCE

Tit-Bits.

Consisting of Local and Other Interesting Items gathered by The Advance Reporters.

Mr. Ed. Abercrombie, of Euphrasia, and Mr. Marshall, jr., of Griersville, gave us a pleasant call on Saturday last.

Mr. J. W. Ford, one of the Markdale millers, has been obliged to make an assignment for the benefit of his creditors.

Fine stock of stationery just received at THE ADVANCE office. Now is the time to get your Billheads, Statements, Circulars, Business Cards, Envelopes, Letter Heads, posters, &c. printed in the best styles of the art.

Auction sale of farm stock and implements at Lot 34, Con. 9, Artemesia, on Friday (to-morrow) Sept. 9th, commencing at 1 o'clock p. m. 16 months credit on all sums over $5. David Jamison, proprietor; John Speers, auctioneer. See bills.

We learn that Mr. Henry Hunt, storekeeper of Balaclava, who was arrested in connection with the silk handkerchiefs stolen from Ogilvy, Anderson & Co., of Toronto, was honorably discharged on Friday last, the prosecution failing to identify the handkerchiefs.—Owen Sound Times

A would-be-poet writes us a lot of the most wretched doggerel, describing a marriage which took place in Priceville a short time ago. We earnestly and sincerely advise the young man to break stones or pound sand for a living, sooner than let his mind run into what he calls poetry. For heaven,s sake, unhappy youth, if you cannot furnish the newspaper's with anything better than the execrable trash you mailed to THE ADVANCE office, drop it as quickly as you would the hot end of a poker. You are a good writer of prose, but a poet—never!

Mr. Wm. Parks died on the 25th inst. at his residence on the 6th concession of this township near Ravenna at the age of 72 years, 9 months and 10 days. Deceased came from England about 42 years ago and settled in the township of Vaughan, and many years ago settled in Euphrasia near the farm of Mr. Wm. Fawcett, Deputy Reeve of that Township. He some years ago settled on the 6th of this Township. He is wide and popularly known as one of our oldest and best settlers. His end was peace.—Thornbury Standard.

Mr. John O'Brien, of this township, brought a load of hogs to the railway station on Wednesday last. While passing through Flesherton it occurred to him to have the load weighed on Mr. Munshaw's scales, which was accordingly done. At the Station the load was again weighed with the following result: Gross weight, 2500 lbs.; weight of waggon, 1200 lbs.; net weight, 1300 lbs. The hogs were paid for according to this latter weight at the rate of $4.75 per cwt. When he returned to Flesherton Mr. O'Brien had the waggon weighed, which showed the following results: Gross weight, 2570 lbs.; weight of waggon, 1200 lbs.; net weight, 1370 lbs.—a difference of no less than seventy pounds in the gross and net weight of the respective scales! The waggon weighed exactly the same on both scales, but there was a difference of 70 lbs. in the gross and net weights, which shows that somebody has blundered—yes, and very seriously at that. This matter should be thoroughly investigated. At present—to put it in the mildest possible form—either Mr. O'Brien is out of pocket $3.32 on his load, or the scales here are "out of kilter"—in reference to which, however, Mr. Munshaw challenges investigation. THE ADVANCE deems it necessary and proper to make the public acquainted with these facts. We hope by next week to give other particulars, which we withold for the present, pending certain private investigations now being made.

Rev. Mr. Goforth, missionary elect to China, delivered an entertaining and instructive lecture in the Presbyterian church here, last Wednesday evening, to a large and appreciative audience. On the platform were Rev. A. Wilson, pastor, and Rev. T. Watson, Baptist minister. The Chinese and other statistics relating to heathen lands were presented in a clear, lucid and highly edifying manner by the lecturer, who appeared to have all the facts and figures in connection with his subject at "his fingers ends." His plain and simple talk with the children was a charming feature and created an excellent impression. The necessity for self-sacrifice on the part of Christians was alluded to in an earnest manner.

Burglars in Flesherton.

The Post Office Safe Blown Open With Dynamite.

About two o'clock on Monday morning many of our citizens were awakened by a loud explosion. Some paid little attention to it and dropped off into the arms of Morpheus again. Others got up and set about to ascertain the cause. It was soon discovered that professional burglars had been making their debut in Flesherton, the store of Mr. R. J. Sproule having been entered, the door of the Post-office safe blown into atoms, and some money and several registered letters stolen. The alarm passed from mouth to mouth and soon the whole town was wide awake with curiosity and excitement. Horses were harnessed and hitched to vehicles in hot haste and soon parties were scouring the roads in all directions, while the moon shone forth in all the soft brilliancy of a glorious autumn night. Some in the direction of Maxwell, some Dundalk-wards, and some in the direction of Durham, from and to which latter quarter, it was soon learned, the knights of the jimmy and drill had come—and gone!

As this was the first burglary recorded in the history of Flesherton, it may be readily presumed that the excitement was intense. And so it was. All morning the post-office and store were thronged with an idle, eager, curious throng—viewing the wrecked safe and propounding various possible and impossible theories in connection therewith.

The safe stood near the North-Eastern angle of the store. There were two burglars, one of whom stood on the corner of Collingwood and Sydenham streets, revolver in hand, on the outlook for "intruders," while the other "worked the safe." The latter drilled a small hole into the door near the keyhole and, from the absence of the smell of powder, we should judge that dynamite was inserted into the aperture. The safe is an old-fashioned one and presented no serious obstacle to the midnight workmen. The dynamite, or whatever explosive was used, tore the heavy iron door from its hinges and hurled it across the room—some fifteen or twenty feet—with terrific force against the wall, bending the door as though it were paper and smashing the heavy inner lining into a thousand atoms. A barrel of vinegar which had evidently been used to deaden the sound, was blown over and the contents emptied out on the floor. Strangely enough nothing but the door of the safe was injured. The burglars then abstracted and made away with about $60 in cash, and several registered letters—two of the latter having been dropped, in the hurry, near Heard's factory, and restored by the finder. One registered letter addressed to Squire Armstrong was opened but as there 'was nothing of value to them found inside they left it.

INCIDENTS.

We understand that our esteemed citizen, Mr. Robt. Trimble, made a gallant attempt to circumvent the bold burglars on Monday morning. We are credibly informed that Mr. Trimble moved forward to the attack with that caution said to be a characteristic of skilful generalship—now dodging behind the angle of a building, now peering around the safest corner of an empty barrel, and occasionally standing forth unsheltered, with a ready-cocked revolver firmly grasped in his right hand. It was prudent in Mr. Trimble to fall back on his base of operations when the explosion took place, and he did so accordingly. Many of us would have done the same thing ourselves!

Detective VanDusen, Deputy-Sheriff Moore, and Mr. W. H. Johnston followed the burglars as far as Varney and then took the road leading to Mt. Forest. It is thought they took the wrong road and that the burglars had gone to Eaton.

The burglars broke into Milburn's blacksmith shop and got some tools with which to aid them in "cracking" the safe. They forgot to return the tools, which were found on a shelf near the scene of their villainous exploit.

The identity of the burglars has been pretty well established and strong hopes are entertained that they will be eventually captured and sent to a free boarding house, where they may crack their precious skulls against the stone walls if they choose: society would be the gainer thereby.

The money taken by the burglars belonged to Mr. R. J. Sproule. There was over $100 worth of postage stamps in the safe at the time which the cracksmen failed to gobble.

The finest Watches, Clocks, Jewelry, Silverware, at lowest prices are to be found at Russell's Noted Jewelry Store, Flesherton.

A STITCH IN TIME.—When first attacked with a cold in the head, droppings from the nasal passages into the throat, pain in the head, or any of the symptoms or forerunners of catarrh, a 50 cent package of Nasal Balm will cure you.

What They are Saying.

By our Junior Reporter.

"I would give five years wages, to have had one shot at those burglars."—T. H.

"If I was after them, I would shoot them down like dogs."—Dan. Mc.—

"I wanted, you know, I wanted to capture them without arousing their suspicion, without arousing their suspicion, you know."—R. T.

"If Mr. T. had aroused me when he saw them, I could have stopped them, or watched which way they went."—J. K.

"There is more gas than anything else among the people."—W. P.

"If I'd have been near there, I would have gone right up and arrested them."—J. W. B.

See Russell's display of Watches, Clocks, Jewelry, Silverware, &c., at Flesherton Fall Fair. It will undoubtedly be the finest part of the show.

Just received a large assortment of Fruit at Keefer's Flour and Feed Store.

The Quarterly Meeting of the District Council, R. T. of T. for Grey, was held in the village of Maxwell, on Tuesday the 6th inst., a large representation being present. The question of submitting the Scott Act in Grey was discussed and a large representative Committee was struck to co-operate with other organizations with the view of carrying out the desired object. A successful entertainment was held in the evening in the Methodist Church to a large and appreciative audience, which consisted of spirited addresses by Grand Councillor Steele, the Revds. Messrs Ferrier, D'Argent, Robt. Gordon, and Dist. Councillor Gordon. Vocal Music by Bro. Steele, of Guelph, Miss Burgess, Listowel, Miss Mills, Harriston, the Flesherton Glee Club and others. The meetings were decidedly successful.

Russell, Flesherton, leaves for the city in a few days to complete his purchases for fall and winter. Look out for the Noted Jewelry Store announcement next week.

—AT—

RUSSELL'S

NOTED

JEWELRY

STORE,

Flesherton!

Is to be found the finest and most complete stock of

WATCHES, CLOCKS, JEWELRY,

SILVERWARE, and FANCY Goods in this section of country.

Some beautiful designs in ladies' R. Plate Bar Pins and Brooches. Just received, SPECTACLES for the million. In Watches, we keep Waltham, Elgin, Springfield, Illinois, Hampden, Columbus, Swiss, in gold, gold-filled, silver and silver-ore cases, 2, 3, 4, & 5 ozs. at from $6.90 to $60, warranted from 2½ to 5 years.

☞Our Watch Repair Book tells the startling tale of 486 watches repaired from July 1st 1886 to July 1st 1887, which is 140 over and above what any other dealer can show in this section and (We) did not add the watch sales and clock repairs and call them watch repairs to swell the number as some dealers do. Of course our watch repairs increased considerably since last fall on account of so many poor watches being auctioned off around here which needed any amount of repairing and the people are becoming wise to the fact now that for thoroughly good Watches, Clocks, Silverware, etc., and for Fine Watch Repairing, they have of necessity to go to Russell's Not'd Jewelry Store, Flesherton.

She Plainly Objected.

A West Side youth has a red-headed sweetheart, and in poetical parlance he addressed her as "Sweet Auburn, loveliest of the plain." But "Sweet Auburn" got mad about it, and declared that she wouldn't be classed among the "plain," even though accorded the enviable distinction of being designated the "loveliest" of their number.

Ayer's Ague Cure acts directly on the liver and biliary apparatus, and drives out the malarial poison which induces liver complaints and bilious disorders. Warranted to cure or money refunded. Try it.

—FARMERS!—

Don't forget there is good work done at the Flesherton

WOOLEN FACTORY

And we are doing all in our power to please. Customers are finding out it is to their advantage to deal with us as our Prices are Low and Our Goods are Reliable, and notwithstanding price being cut so close on account of hard times, I intend to reduce the manufacturing prices in nearly every branch, viz., ROLLCARDING, SPINNING, WEAVING, &c., &c. Give us a trial and see for yourself.

W. H. FLESHER.

Flesherton, May 19th, 1887.

How to Write a Love Story.

Now bring me a maid that is plump and dark,
And bring me a maid that is tall and fair;
One must be gay as a meadow lark,
One with a grave and queenly air,
And a sort of a high-toned stately stare;
A man, old, rich, and a perfect fright;
A man that is young and debonair;
And lo! the story that I will write.

Bring me a summery, moonlit park,
Bring me a house in a handsome square;
One in the country, a kind of ark
Of refuge for lovers; some had despair,
Duty, temptation and grief and care,
To take the edge off love's delight;
A few odd people from here and there,
And lo! the story that I will write.

Bring me a trip in the treacherous barque,
A wreck in the midseas anywhere;
Bring me a duel—heaven save the mark!
A reunited and happy pair.
A gown from Worth's for the bride to wear,
And bring me a fate as dark as night,
For all of the bold, bad ones to share;
And lo! the story that I will write.

ENVOY.

Bring ink and pen to my easy chair,
Of paper a ream all fair and white,
A publisher all ready to do and dare,
And lo! the story that I will write.

SIR HUGH'S LOVES.

"I cannot tell you; you should not tease me so, Fay. I think you might have a little faith in your husband."

"Very well, dear, I will not ask," she replied, gently; but the tears sprang to her eyes in the darkness. She would not think him hard if she could help it; of course she was young—ah, terribly young—and Hugh was so much older and wiser. The "Polite Match-Maker" had told her that husbands and wives were to have no secrets from each other; but she supposed that when the wife was so much younger it made difference—perhaps when she got older, and knew more about things, Hugh would tell her more. She longed to grow older—it would be years before she would be twenty; why? she was only seventeen last month.

Hugh thought his Wee Wifie was tired, and tried to coax her to go to sleep; he brought her another cushion, and attended to the fire, and then went away to leave her to her nap. Fay would rather have had him stay and talk to her, but she was too unselfish to say so; she lay in her pretty room watching the fire-light play on the walls, and thinking first of her husband and then of Margaret. She longed with a vague wistfulness that she were more like that lovely Miss Ferrers, and then, perhaps, Hugh would care to talk to her. Were the creeping shadows bringing her strange thoughts? Fay could not have told any one why there were tears on her cheeks; was the consciousness beginning to dawn upon her that she was not close enough to her husband's heart?—that she was his pet, but not his friend—that other wives whom she knew were not kept outside in the cold?

"I am not too young to understand, if Hugh would only think so," she said to herself plaintively. "How could I be, when I love him so?"

When Sir Hugh returned to the room an hour later, he was sorry to see Fay look so flushed and weary. "We shall have you ill after all this," he said, reproachfully; "why have you not been a good child and gone to sleep as I told you?"

"Because I was troubling too much. Oh, Hugh!" clasping him round the neck, and her little hands felt hot and dry, "are you sure that you are not angry with me, and that you really love me?"

"Of course I am not angry with you," in a jesting tone. "What an absurd idea, Wee Wifie."

"I like you to call me that," she answered, thoughtfully, drawing down one of his hands and laying her cheek on it; and Hugh thought as Margaret had, what a baby face it was. "I mean to grow older, Hugh, and wiser too if I can; but you must be patient with me, dear. I know I cannot be all you want just at present—I am only Wee Wifie now."

"Well, I do not wish to change her," replied Sir Hugh, with a touch of real tenderness in his voice, and then very gently he unloosed the clinging arms. Somehow Fay's voice and look haunted him as he went downstairs. "She is a dear little thing," he said to himself as he sat in his library sorting his papers; "I wish I were a better husband to her;" and then he wondered what Margaret had thought of his Wee Wifie.

CHAPTER XVIII.

ERLE'S VISIT TO THE GRANGE.

He gazed—he saw—he knew the face
Of beauty and the form of grace.
Byron.

Fay was not very well the next day, and Sir Hugh insisted on sending for Dr. Martin; Fay was much surprised when the kind old doctor lectured her quite seriously on her imprudence; and put a veto on any more skating and riding for the present. The sprained ankle was a trifle, but all the same he told her grimly she must consider herself a prisoner for a few days—a very hard sentence to Fay, whose nimble little feet had never been still for long, and who had certainly never known a day's illness in her healthy young life; but, with her usual docility, she promised obedience. Sir Hugh was unusually busy just then. Some vexatious law-suit in which the Redmonds had been involved for a year or two, and in which both Sir Wilfred and his son had taken great interest, was just drawing to a conclusion, and he was obliged to go up to town for a few hours almost daily, and but for Erle's society Fay would have been sadly moped; but with his usual good humor, Erle gave up his out-of-door pursuits to devote himself to her amusement.

He was always contriving odd surprises for her; the mystified servants often heard Fay's merry laugh ringing like a peal of silvery bells, and thought that there could be very little the matter with their young mistress; sometimes these sounds were supplemented by others that were still more extraordinary.

One day Erle brought up the stable puppies—three black-faced, snubnosed, roundabout creatures, in whom Fay had taken a kindly interest since the hour of their birth—and to her intense delight deposited them on her lap, where they tumbled and rolled over each other with their paws in the air, protesting in puppy fashion against this invasion of their liberties.

Another time there was an extraordinary clucking to be heard outside the door, and the next moment Erle entered with a hen under each arm, and very red in the face from suppressed laughter.

"I thought you would be pining after your favorites Speckles and Tufty," he observed, with a chuckle; "so, as you could not visit the poultry-yard, my Fairy Queen, I have brought dame Partlet and her sister to visit you," and he deposited the much injured fowls on the rug.

It was unfortunate that Sir Hugh should have come in that moment; his disgusted look as he opened the door nearly sent Fay into hysterics; Speckles was clucking wildly under the sofa—Tufty taking excited flights across the room.

"How can you be so ridiculous," observed Sir Hugh, with a frown; "Fay, do you think Dr. Martin would approve of all this excitement;" but even he was obliged to check a smile at Erle's agonizing attempts to catch Speckles.

Fay began to wonder what he would do next; Erle gravely assured her that if he could have induced Bonnie Bess to walk upstairs, which she would not do under any pretence, preferring to waltz on her hind legs in the hall, he would have regaled her with a sight of her favorite; but after the baby from the lodge, a half-frozen hedgehog, some white rats kept by the stable boy, and old Tom the veteran cat with half a tail, had all been decoyed into the boudoir, Erle found himself at the end of his resources.

But he used to go down to the Vicarge with a very long face, and the result was that every afternoon there were fresh girlish faces gathering round Fay's couch. Dora Spooner would come with one of her sisters or a Romney girl to help Erle amuse the invalid.

There were delightful little tea-parties every afternoon. Janet, who waited on them, thought her mistress never seemed happier. Fay was treated as though she were a little queen; Dora, and Agnes Romney vied with each other in attentions; perhaps Erle's pleasant face and bright voice were powerful inducements in their way; the girls never seemed to think it a trouble to plough their way through the snowy lanes—they came in with glowing faces to narrate their little experiences.

"Yes, it is very uncomfortable walking; but we could not leave you alone, Lady Redmond. Mr. Huntingdon begged us so hard to come," Dora would say, and the hazel eyes looked at Erle rather mischievously.

Erle was up to his old tricks again. Fay used to take him to task when their visitors had gone.

"You are too fond of young ladies," she would say to him severely. "You will make poor Dora think you are in love with her if you pay her so much attention. Those are your London manners, I suppose, when you are with that young person who has the go in her, or with the other one with the pretty smile, of whom you say so little and think so much."

"Come, now; I do call that hard on a fellow," returned Erle, in an injured voice.

"You see I take an interest in you, my poor boy," continued Fay, with quite a matronly air. "I cannot allow you to make yourself so captivating to our country girls. What will Dora think if you go down to the Vicarage every morning with that plausible little story that no one believes? I am not dull one bit. I am laughing from morning to night, and Mrs Heron comes up and scolds me. No; Dora will believe that you admire hazel eyes and long lashes. Poor girl, she knows nothing about that young person with the go in her."

"Oh, do shut up, Fay," interrupted Erle quite crossly at this. "Why do you always speak of Miss Selby in this absurd fashion? she is worth a dozen Dora Spooners. Why, the girls who were here this afternoon could not hold a candle to her."

"Oh, indeed!" was Fay's response to this, as she lay and looked at Erle with aggravating calmness.

"Why do you want to make out that girls are such duffers?" he went on in a still more ruffled tone, as though her shrewdness had hit very near the truth; "they have too much sense to think a fellow is in love with them because he has a little fun with them; you married women are so censorious," he finished, walking off in a huff; but the next moment he came back with a droll look on his face.

"Mrs. Spooner wants me to dine there to-morrow; there is to be a little dance; some of the Gowers are coming. Do you think you can spare me, Fay?"

"Oh, go away! you are all alike!" returned Fay, impatiently; "you have only to blame yourself if Mr. Spooner asks your intentions. I do not think Mr. Huntingdon would approve of Dora one bit; she is not very handsome, she will not hold a candle to you know whom, and she has no money—a vicar with a large family cannot afford dowries to his daughter." But, as Erle had very rudely marched out of the room, she finished this little bit of worldly wisdom to empty walls.

Erle had been over to the Grange. He had mooted the question one evening when he and Sir Hugh were keeping Fay company; and, to Fay's great surprise, her husband had made no objection. "I suppose it would be right for you to call and thank them, Erle," he had said, as though he were prepared for the suggestion; "and perhaps, Fay,"—hesitating slightly,—"it might be as well for you to write a little note and say something civil after all their attention." And Fay thanked him for the permission with a radiant face, as though he had done her a personal favor, and the next day wrote the prettiest and most grateful little note, which Erle promised to deliver.

"You will be sure to keep the girls until I get back," had been his parting request when he came to fetch the dogs.

It was not exactly the sort of afternoon that Erle would have selected for a country walk—a thaw had set in, and the lanes were perfect quagmires of half-melted snow and slush, in which the dogs paddled and splashed their way with a perfect indifference to the state of their glossy coats; any amount of slush being better than enforced inaction.

"I shall have to leave you outside, my fine fellows," observed Erle, as Nero took a header into a heap of dirty-looking snow, in which he rolled delightedly. "I am afraid I shall hardly be presentable myself; but these are the joys of country life, I suppose."

But he was not at all sorry when he found himself at the Grange, and a pleasant-looking, grey-haired woman had ushered him into a room where Mr. Ferrers and his sister were sitting. It was a far larger room than the one where Fay had had her foot doctored that day, and was evidently Mr. Ferrers' peculiar sanctum—two of the walls were lined from the floor to the ceiling with well-filled bookshelves, an ordinary writing-table occupied the centre of the room; instead of the bay-window, a glass door afforded egress to the garden, and side windows on either side of the fireplace commanded a view of the yew-tree walk; a Scotch deer-hound was stretched on the rug in front of the blazing fire, and two pet canaries were fluttering about a stand of ferns.

Miss Ferrers had evidently been writing from her brother's dictation, for several letters were lying ready for the post. As Erle had crossed the hall he had distinctly heard the sound of her clear, musical voice, as she read aloud; but the book was already laid aside, and she had risen to welcome him.

Erle fancied she looked paler than on the previous occasion, and he wondered what Mr. Ferrers would have said if he had seen those dark lines under her eyes; perhaps she never told him when she was tired—women liked to be martyrs sometimes.

He was received very cordially; and Miss Ferrers seemed rather touched at the contents of her little note.

"It was good of Lady Redmond to write," she said to Erle with a smile; "but she makes far too much of my little services."

"Oh, that is just her way," returned Erle, candidly. "She is such a grateful little soul. Most people take all one's attentions as a matter of course; but Fay is not like that."

"Oh, no, she is very sweet," observed Margaret, thoughtfully; somehow she had yearned to see that pretty, bright face again.

"She is the finest ltttle creature that ever lived," returned Erle with boyish enthusiasm; "it is wonderful how little she thinks about herself. And she is about the prettiest girl one can see anywhere; and she is clever, too, though you would not believe it to hear her; for she always wants to make out that she can do nothing."

Mr. Ferrers smiled at this. "Lady Redmond did seem bent on proving that fact to us."

"Of course, did I not tell you so? but don't you believe her, Mr. Ferrers. Why, even Hugh, critical as he is, owns Fay is the best horsewoman in these parts. I should like to see her and Bonnie Bess in the Row; she would make a sensatien there. And it is quite a treat to see her drive her ponies; she knows how to handle a horse's mouth. Why, those tiny hands of her could hold in a couple of thoroughbreds. Oh, she is a good sort; the Spooner girls swear by her."

Miss Ferrers looked kindly at the young man; she liked to hear him vaunting his cousin's excellencies after this unsophisticated fashion. She had taken rather a fancy to this boyish, outspoken young fellow; and her brother shared this liking. She was about to put a question to him, when he suddenly started up with an exclamation, and the next moment he had crossed the room and was standing before a picture, with a very puzzled expression on his face. It was the portrait of a girl, and evidently painted by a good artist. Of course it was she, Erle told himself after another quick look; in spite of the smiling mouth, he could not mistake her. There was the small, finely-shaped head, set so beautifully on the long neck; the coils of black hair; the dark, dreamy eyes, which always seemed to hold a shadow in them.

"I beg your pardon; but I had no idea you knew Miss Davenport," he said at last, looking at Margaret as he spoke. But it was Mr. Ferrers who answered.

"Davenport? We know no one of the name, do we, Margaret? What does Mr. Huntingdon mean? Is it some picture?"

"Yes, dear, Crystal's picture. Mr. Huntingdon seems to recognize it."

"Crystal? why, that is her name too. I have heard Miss Trafford use it a dozen times. As though there could be two faces like that"—pointing to the canvas. "She looks younger, yes, and happier, in the picture; but then, of course, one has never seen her smiling like that. But it is Miss Davenport—ay, and to the life too."

"You must be mistaken," observed Mr. Ferrers in a voice so agitated that Erle regarded him with astonishment. He was strangely pale, and the hand that was grasping the chair back was visibly trembling. "That is the portrait of our young cousin Crystal Ferrers."

"Yes, our adopted child," added Miss Ferrers, "who left our home nearly eighteen months ago."

Erle looked more puzzled than ever. "I cannot understand it," he said, in a most perplexed voice. "If she be your cousin Crystal Ferrers, why does she call herself Crystal Davenport? There can be no question of identity; that is the face of the Miss Davenport I know—the young governess who lives with the Traffords; that is the very ring she wears, too"—with another quick glance at the hand that was holding a sheaf of white lilies. But here Mr. Ferrers interrupted him.

"Will you describe that ring, Mr. Huntingdon?"

"Willingly—it is of Indian workmanship, I fancy, and has a curiously wrought gold setting, with an emerald very deeply sunk into the centre."

"Yes, yes; it must be she," murmured Raby, and then for the moment he seemed able to say no more; only Margaret watched him, with tears in her eyes.

Erle's interest and curiosity were strongly excited. There must be some strange mystery at the bottom of this, he thought. He had always been sure that Miss Davenport had some history. She was wonderfully handsome; but with all his predilection for pretty faces he had never quite taken to her; he had regarded her with involuntary distrust.

He looked at Mr. Ferrers as he stood evidently absorded in thought. What a grand-looking man he was, he said to himself, if he would only hold his head up, and push back the mass of dull brown hair that lay so heavily on his forehead.

There was something sad in that spectacle of sightless strength; and to those who first saw him, Raby Ferrers always seemed like some patient giant oppressed and bowed down, both physically and mentally, but grand in a certain sublime resignation that endured because he was too proud to complain.

"It must be so," he observed at last. "Margaret, I see light at last. Mr. Huntingdon," turning to his guest—"I have been very rude, very uncourteous, but your words have given me a shock; you have touched accidentally on a deep trouble. Now, will you be good and kind enough to sit down and tell me all you can about Miss Davenport, as you call her."

"Certainly, if you wish it, Mr. Ferrers." And, with very few interruptions from either the brother or sister, Erle gave a full and graphic description of Crystal's present home and surroundings—all the more willingly that his listeners seemed to hang breathlessly on his words.

He described eloquently that shabby room over Mrs. Watkins', that was yet so pleasant and homelike; the mother with her worn, beautiful face, who moved like a duchess about her poor rooms, and was only the head teacher in a girls' school. He dismissed the subject of the gentle, fair-haired Fern in a few forcible words; but he spoke of little Florence, and then of Percy, and of the curious way in which all their lives were involved.

Only once Mr. Ferrers stopped him. "And Miss Davenport teaches, you say?"

"Yes, both she and Miss Trafford have morning engagements. I think Miss Martingale, where Mrs. Trafford is, has recommended both the young ladies. There are not many gentle-people living there; the Elysian Fields and Beulah Place are not exactly aristocratic neighborhoods. But Miss Trafford goes to the Vicarage; there are young children there; and by good luck the senior curate, Mr. Norton, wanted some help with his two little boys. Miss Davenport is a Latin scholar, and they took her on the Traffords' recommendation."

"And only her mornings are occupied? Excuse these seemingly trifling questions, Mr. Huntingdon"—with a sad smile—"but you are speaking of one who is very dear to us both."

"I will tell you all I know," returned Erle, in his kind-hearted way; "but I am only a visitor at Mrs. Trafford's. I think, at least I am sure, that they do a good deal of needlework in their spare time—embroidery for shops; they are very poor, you see. There is always work about; sometimes they are making their gowns. They are never ashamed of anything they do, they are such thorough gentlewomen. I do not think you could find a prouder woman than Mrs. Trafford anywhere, and yet she is frank and generous to a fault."

"They must be charming people," observed Margaret, thoughtfully. "Crystal has told us all this in her letters, Raby. Mr. Huntingdon's account most fully endorses hers."

"Yes," he returned, quietly, "she is in good hands; our prayers have been answered, Maggie. But now, dear, if we have heard all that Mr. Huntingdon can tell us about our poor child, will you leave me with him a little, for I want to take him into our confidence; when he knows all, he may be willing to help us." And Margaret rose without a word; but her beautiful eyes rested on Erle a moment, wistfully, as though to beg him to be patient.

And then, as the twilight crept over the room; while the girls were laughing and chatting round Fay's couch, and wondering—Dora especially—what could have happened to detain Mr. Huntingdon so late; and while the blazing pine knots threw a ruddy glow over Raby's pale face, Erle sat listening to one of the saddest stories he had ever heard.

And when it was finished they had a long talk together, and Erle told Raby about Percy's hopeless passion, and of the impatience and loathing with which Crystal seemed to turn from her handsome young lover.

"He makes his way with other girls, but not with her," went on Erle; "and yet he is clever and fascinating, and will be rich, too, some day. It seems strange, does it not, Mr. Ferrers?"

"Not to me," returned Raby, quietly; but there was a smile on his face as he spoke. "Crystal will never care for your friend, Mr. Huntingdon; it is no use his persecuting her with his attentions."

"If I could only get Percy to believe it; but he seems absolutely crazy on that point. Miss Davenport—Miss Ferrers, I mean—is not quite the style I admire; but she is superbly handsome, one must own that."

"Yes," replied Raby, with a sigh; "I always said her face would do for Vashti's. She has Italian blood in her veins; her mother was a Florentine. Oh, here comes Margaret," as the door opened and she reappeared. "Maggie, what do you think? Mr. Huntingdon has invited me to Belgrave House."

"My uncle is very hospitable, Miss Ferrers," observed Erle, with a smile at her surprise; "Percy and I can always ask our friends. He is old, and has his own rooms; so we never interfere with him. Mr. Ferrers would find himself very comfortable with us, and I would take great care of him."

"You are very good"—but rather doubtfully, "You will not go to London without me, Raby?"

"I think it will be better, Maggie. Mr. Huntingdon has promised to take me over to Beulah Place; we shall go there one evening. Oh yes, it is all arranged. Please God, I shall bring her home with me," and there was a strange, beautiful smile on his face as he spoke.

CHAPTER XIX.

AMONG THE SHADOWS.

When no more the shattered senses round the throne of reason dwell
Thinking every sight a spectre, every sound a passing bell;
When the mortal desolation falleth on the soul like rain,
And the wild hell-phantoms dance and revel in the human brain.
Philip Stanhope Worsely.

It was nearly dinner-time when Erle reached Redmond Hall; Sir Hugh had not returned from London, Ellerton told him; he had telegraphed that he might be detained all night—my lady was in the damask drawing-room, and the young ladies had left an hour ago. Erle listened to all this, and then rushed up to his room, to make himself presentable; and the dogs slunk off evidently on the same errand.

He had to dine in solitary state by himself, while Fay ate her chicken in the big drawing-room, where the old-fashioned mirrors always reflected the tiny figure

Fay was looking very pretty to-night, but just a trifle sad at the thought that Hugh might not be home. She had put on his favorite gown too, to do honor to her first appearance in the drawing-room; it was a lovely gown, and she looked a perfect fairy queen in it, as Erle told her when he came into the room; but somehow Erle's praise was rather flat to-night. Fay was longing for her husband; and she had only dressed to please his eyes. She played with her wedding-ring rather restlessly while Erle talked his nonsense, and then she remembered that he must be amused.

"The girls were so dreadfully disappointed," she said, trying to rouse herself; "they were very good and kind, and stayed with me until six, and then Dora said they must go; she kept looking at the door, and fancying she heard Nero bark; and then the younger one Connie—no, not Connie, it was Addie—asked so many questions about you—where you lived, and if I had ever been to Belgrave House? trying to find out things, you know; and, Erle—I don't believe you are listening a bit," with a stamp of her little foot.

"I don't believe I was," returned Erle, frankly. "Don't be vexed, my Fairy Queen, I can't bother about the girls to-night. I want to tell you about my visit to the Grange—it is no secret, Mr. Ferrers says, and I thought you would be interested, it is such a strange affair altogether."

(To be continued.)

No Accounting for Tastes.

Experience can alone reveal the secret of the Esquimaux's love for a nice, greasy, yielding tallow candle, and of the "lingering sweetness long drawn out" as he pulls the wick gently between his teeth, so as not to lose one particle of its flavor.

Porpoise meat was once a favored dish with the old English nobility, at least so runs the story, which declares the proper sauce to have been compounded of sugar, vinegar and bread crumbs.

In Central America the stately curassow and the sober quam, both large birds, are diligently hunted as table delicacies, yet the first-named biped must not be eaten by the hunter's dog, for it will assuredly poison it.

The Japanese are fond of flying fox. The dessert of the Chinese middle classes consists of melon pips, the scarlet and yellow varieties being grown solely for their seed.

When the natives of the West Indies are regarded from a dietetic standpoint, baked snakes glide into the menu along with palm worms (a finger long), fried in their own fat. Yet these colored gourmands cannot abide a rabbit stew! Rats are there also considered a nice side dish, with occasional relishes of gecana eggs and palm-tree snout beetles.

In Siam the dried sinews of various animals form a dish much liked. Alligators' eggs are eaten in many eastern countries, and a nastier dish it would be hard to imagine. Ants enter largely into Oriental bills of fare, and in Ceylon the busy bee is masticated by the very men who have profited by the honey it has made.

In Africa such trifles as blue mole, mice, fat sheep tails, stewed puppies, puma, baked elephant's trunk and feet, ostrich eggs, ants stewed in butter, caterpillars, roasted spiders, snails (eight inches long), and odd articles not generally regarded as food are consumed.

At the Falkland Islands a gourmet can enjoy a new sensation by eating a sea lion's tongue. It is excellent, but it must be fresh. Trinidad prides itself on alligator and turtle eggs. The best place, however, for everything relating to turtle is the Isle of Ascension. There they are bred, fed, and from there exported.

In South America the Ottomacs largely subsist on a fat and ferruginous kind of clay, each man eating daily a pound of more. The Indians of the Amazon eat a kind of loam, preferring it to other and decidedly better food. The Peruvians are also clay eaters, their mess being a mixture of talc and mica—rather tough food, even for Peru. Other nations are earth-eaters—the inhabitants of New Guinea, some of the Bolivians, the negroes of Jamaica, and the natives of New Caledonia, as well as many people who dwell in Siam, Siberia and Kamschatka. The Ottomacs, however, are the only ones who subsist on clay when other food is obtainable.

The Australasian is rather odd in the matter of dietetics. A New Hollander has been known to dispose of more than a hundred vaulting rats at one repast, swallowing them, for the most part, with some of the hair still upon them, holding them by the tails and biting the bodies off with his teeth. Not to be wasteful, he afterward disposed of the tails. The same innocent children of nature affect stale shark, rancid whale blubber, earthworms and such trifles. Kangaroo tail is a dish an Australian finds much flavor in. It is delicious. The natives highly esteem the silent but wild dingo, neither do they turn up their noses at rats, but gluttony is allied to rudeness. The black fellow, when at meals, devours all he can, only now and then flinging a morsel over his shoulder to his wife and children. He is likewise improvident, for he seeks food only when he craves it, gorges to the last possible tension of his dirty, black skin, and then sleeps for several days and nights consecutively.

Old-Time Remedies.

Nails driven into an oak tree were not a cure but a preventive against toothache.

A halter which had served to hang a criminal with al when bound round the temples was found an infallible remedy for headache.

The chips of a gallows on which several persons had been hanged, when worn in a bag round the neck, was pronounced an infallible cure for ague.

A ring made of the hinge of a coffin was credited with the power of relieving cramps, which also received solace when a rusty old sword was hung up by the patient's bedside.

A dead man's hand could dispel tumors of the glands by stroking the parts nine times. But the hand of a man who had been cut down from the gallows-tree was a remedy infinitely more efficacious.

The nightmare, supposed, of course, to be caused by supernatural agency, was banished by means of a stone with a hole in it being suspended at the head of the sufferer's bed. This last remedy went by the name of a "hag-stone," because it prevented the witches, who, of course, wrought the mischief, from sitting on the patient's stomach.

The Christian at Work unblushingly declares that "a practical book on 'What to Buy for Food' would be about as practical a form of benevolence as the establishment of a new denominational mission station at Ujiji."

Her Preference.

He was handsome and tall,
The envy of all
The men as he walked by her side,
While slowly the light
Of day changed to night
And merrily rippled the tide.

She, pretty and sweet,
Entrancing and neat,
Demurely beside him was walking,
While softly the air
Caressed her fair hair
And listened the while to their talking.

"You'll please pardon me"—
He glanced playfully—
"If really my question should tire,
Do you care for men tall
Or those who are small—
What kind of men do you admire?"

Her lashes quick fell
And veiled her eyes well.
"No pardon for such a request;
I like mankind all,
Both little and tall,
But then I like Hymen the best."

A LOAD OF APPLES.

Kitty and I had just come in from milking the cows, and were eating our suppers in the great farm kitchen. We were tired from our day's work, for ever since father had the last stroke of paralysis we had been compelled to do much of the farm-work ourselves.

"Do you know," said Kitty, laying down her bowl of milk suddenly, "that the interest on the mortgage is due to-morrow? That is $35, and we have only $15 toward it. Can't you get Willis Avery to wait?"

"I don't choose to ask him to wait," said I.

Now it happened that Willis Avery, who held the mortgage on our homestead, was the son of a neighbor and an old playfellow and boy-beau of my own, who had gone to the prosperous young city a few miles north of us and commenced business on his own account, and I had a particular aversion to asking aid or help of him in any way. I might be poor, but I was always proud, and Kitty was quite sympathetic enough to understand me.

"But, then, what are we to do?" asked Kitty.

I sat down on the hearth-rug, with my chin in my hands, and stared earnestly at the big, crackling back-log.

"Look here, Kitty," I said, suddenly. "Those russet apples we have left."

"Well?"

"We can sell them. There are eight barrels at the least. Eight barrels at $2.50 a barrel. I will take them to Mapleton and sell them."

"You will, Addy?"

"And why not? Squire Dyson would charge at least 20 per cent. commission, and make a favor of it at that. I can't afford either the price or the patronage. Don't say anything about it to father. He would only fret and raise objections."

"But, Addy, how? All this seems so perfectly wild and visionary to me."

"Well, it needn't; for, believe me, it's the most practical thing in the world. All we have to do is to sort the apples out in barrels, nice and sound—I can easily do it by lantern-light to-night—and to-morrow morning we'll rise early, harness old Dobbin to the lumber waggon——"

"And what shall we tell papa?"

"Oh, he'll think I've gone to singing-school with the Dyson girls, and I don't think it's a Christian's duty to undeceive him," answered I.

But notwithstanding the brave face I put upon affairs my heart quivered a little the next day as I drove off toward Mapleton with the scarlet stain of sunrise dyeing all the east and my own cheeks flushed with the keen morning air.

Mr. Holloway, of the firm of Holloway Brothers, produce and commission merchants, didn't want any apples, I speedily learned.

"Just bought a ship-load from Albany," he said, as carelessly as if ship-loads of apples were as common a purchase as 10 cents' worth of tape. And I drove on, beginning to feel infinitesimally small.

Mr. Lovejoy could give me $1 a barrel. "Apples wasn't worth no more at this season of the year!" And I whipped old Dobbin up, determined to carry them home again sooner than sell them at that price.

At the next place I stopped a pleasant-looking, middle-aged man came out, and critically examined my apples.

"How much?" he asked.

"Two dollars and a half a barrel."

He reflected.

"It's a good price," said he, as if he were talking to his own vest-buttons; "but then they look like good apples, and we've a tolerably large western order to fill. I'll see what my partner thinks."

He went back into the gloomy depths of his store, and I, happening to glance up, saw the words painted in black letters over the door: "Hull & Avery."

My first impulse was to drive on and leave the chance of a bargain behind me; my next to sit still and await my fate as Providence dealt it out to me. And presently out came Willis Avery himself.

"I think we will take your load if—why!" breaking off short, "it's Addy Walters!"

I colored scarlet.

"Yes," said I, as composedly as possible. "Good morning, Mr. Avery. I shall be obliged if you will examine the fruit as speedily as possible, as I am in a hurry."

Mr. Hull bought the load of apples, and said that if I had any more at the same price—and of the same quality, he cautiously added—he would be happy to take them. Willis Avery touched his hat and I drove away as loftily as Queen Boadicea in her chariot of old.

* * * * * * *

"Just $35, counting in the melode on money," cried Kitty, gleefully. "And now Mr. Avery may come as soon as he likes."

She had scarcely spoken the words before there came a knock at the door and in walked no less a personage than Mr. Willis Avery himself. I received him with the air of an empress.

"Your money is ready, Mr. Avery."

"I was not thinking of the money, Addy," he said, reproachfully. "Do you think one's mind runs always on money?"

"Mine does, a good deal," I said, laughing.

"But I had no idea you were reduced to this—I did not know——"

"Mr. Avery, this is scarcely business-like," I interposed.

"Addy," said he, abruptly, "I admired your spirit and courage to-day. I always liked you as a girl, but now——"

"Well?" for he hesitated.

"I would do something more if you would let me. I would love you!"

I did not answer. In truth and in fact I could not.

"Dear Addy, will you let me sign back the old place to your father on our wedding day?" he asked, earnestly.

And somehow he had got hold of my hand, and somehow, before I knew it, we were engaged!

LONDON HOSPITAL SCENES.

Operations Performed by the Greatest Surgeon in the World.

(London Letter in the Baltimore Sun.)

I spent all of this afternoon in one of the great public hospitals of this city, that of King's College. In the role of a student of surgery, and in the company of men of that profession from Europe and America, some of them of middle age, who have come here to get the benefit of London hospital practice, I was an observer of two surgical operations performed by Sir Joseph Lister, said to be one of the greatest, if not the greatest, surgeon in the world. The London hospitals have a wider field than those in any part of the globe to draw practice and experience from. London is a city both richer and poorer than any other in the world. Gaunt poverty stalks in the highways and byways, where hundreds of thousands of wretched creatures who are said to bear the imprint of God dwell. I venture to say that more abject penury and more degradation exists to-day in London alone than in all Ireland. The public hospitals, extensive and numerous as they are, have seldom an empty cot. The poor and the lowly, who are to a very large extent the recipients of their benefits, seem in some unaccountable way to be afflicted with an infinite variety of diseases, and to be subject to horrible tumors and abscesses, more terrible and complicated fractures of the bones, and more abnormal conditions of the organic functions than those who are better off so far as this world is concerned. At least, this is the case in London, and it is for this reason that those who are ambitious to excel in surgery come here for a knowledge very difficult or impossible to obtain elsewhere. It is for this reason that such eminent men as Sir Joseph Lister perform operations in the charity hospitals without charge. I make no doubt that had the two patients upon whom Sir Joseph operated this afternoon been rich or distinguished he would have pocketed at least five or six hundred guineas for his two hours' work. One of the operations, although somewhat novel, was not very dangerous or difficult. The patient, a boy of 18, had fractured the bone at the elbow which we lay people know very well as the crazy bone, but the technical name of which I really forget. The bone had begun to decay in consequence. It was laid bare, the decayed portions chiseled off, wires run through to make it reunite, and the flesh then sewed up again. The other operation, the removal of calcareous deposits from the kidney, was of a much more important nature. A deep incision was made in the abdomen extending around the side, and after probing, the hand of the operator was inserted so deep that it was not visible. I cannot, of course, describe this as a professional, but in due time no less than six stones were removed, three of which were with sharp and jagged ends, and which had given the patient so much pain that for weeks he had been unable to attain a comfortable position either lying or sitting. Sir Joseph said it was a most beautiful case. After the conclusion of his operations he discoursed upon their nature in a style equally as entertaining and instructive. I am told that not only he but any of the other eminent surgeons of London will at any time go to the hospitals and cheerfully perform an operation which the regular surgeons may hesitate to undertake.

EXTRADITED FOR BIGAMY.

He Says that he Married Wife No. 2 it was When he was Drunk.

Dr. Frank Vernon Cooke was brought from New Jersey to Brooklyn late on Wednesday and lodged in the First Precinct Police Station, on a requisition from Governor Hill. He was arraigned before Justice Walsh on a charge of bigamy, in having married Mary E. Hambel, of No. 80 South Eighth street, while he had a lawful wife living. His first wife has since got judgment of divorce, based on her husband's intimacy with Miss Hambel.

"I am a physician and surgeon, a member of the College of Physicians and Surgeons of Boston," Dr. Cooke said to a Herald reporter. "I studied with my cousin, Dr. L. L. Bryant, of Cambridge, Mass., and in Boston, and have my diploma. I married Miss Watson in Everett, Mass., and had a fine practice, when my mother-in-law caused trouble and my wife refused to live with me. Then I took to drinking and lost my practice. If I was ever married to Miss Hambel it was when I was drunk, for I know nothing about it.

"Myself and a friend, Dr. Munoz y Ramorata, of Montevideo, a student in New York, met Miss Hambel and Ella Harvey on the street, and were in their company for over ten days. I was so drunk that a waiter at Heiss' Hotel had to put me in a carriage. I want Dr. Munoz and the waiter as witnesses. I expect my friends here, and will employ counsel. Miss Hambel said she was friendly with a colonel in New York, and once remarked, 'What would the old man say if he saw me with you?'"

Dr. Cooke's examination was set down for Monday next.—N. Y. Herald.

* Mrs. Cleveland is a fairly good swimmer but does not care much for diving. She likes to wade out until the water is about up to her neck and then swim shoreward with a slow and graceful stroke. Her mother does not swim, but is very fond of salt-water bathing. Together they have taken a great deal of pleasure in this sport at Marion, and nothing but unfavorable weather has interfered with their daily bath.

The remarkable story comes from San Francisco of a boy who was vaccinated and upon his arm has come the picture of a cow's head. It is about the size of a standard dollar. It is an exact representation of a cow's head, en silhoutte. The nose, jaw and horns are perfect. There is even a speck of white flesh visible where the eye is supposed to be located.

LATEST FROM THE NORTHWEST.

Telegraphic reports from sixty different points respecting harvesting operations are, with one exception, of a most satisfactory nature, and corroborate previous accounts of the rich harvest in store for Manitoba this year. At the lowest estimate the wheat yield will be from 25 to 30 bushels per acre and other cereals in proportion. This indicates that the amount for export will be at least 7,000,000 bushels. Harvesting is nearly completed.

A train load of fish passed through the city yesterday from the British Columbia salmon canneries to the Eastern Provinces. It was composed of seventeen cars, containing 3,200 cases.

Two Indians have been shot by William Thomson, a settler near Calgary. The redskins were attempting to steal his cattle and attacked Thomson, who shot in self-defence.

Robert S. Keene, a cowboy, was found dead recently near Calgary. It is supposed that he tumbled from his horse.

A private letter from Banff says Hon. Mr. Mackenzie is much improved in health.

The Canadian Pacific magnates went on a trip over the southwestern branch to-day. Mr. VanHorne informed a contractor last night that his company had decided to extend the Southwestern 75 miles beyond Deloraine this season, operations to be commenced immediately.

A pamphlet just issued by the Winnipeg & Hudson Bay Railway Company states that 100 miles will be completed and in operation this fall.

A number of small contractors employed on the Red River Valley have completed their work and returned to the city. They are trusting that work will soon be commenced on the connection with Portage la Prairie.

Letters have been received from Messrs. Colin Frazier and Charles Stewart, dated Fort Chippewayan, July 5th. They were thirty days getting there from the Landing, about three times as long as they should have been, owing to lack of knowledge of the river, but by being careful they had no mishaps. They report that the fires were terrific; the country around Chippewayan is rock, sometimes covered with moss or timber.

There have been lively times at Portage la Prairie over the action of one Blythe, a liquor informer. A mob was organized yesterday to assault him, but although he escaped a beating he did not get entirely clear of a shower of rotten eggs. Several hotel-keepers through his efforts were fined $50 each.

It is reported that an arrangement has been made with American capitalists to take the million dollar Provincial loan.

The Northwest Council has been summoned to meet at Regina on October 4th.

A Banff despatch of yesterday says Hon. Mr. Mackenzie and his wife are expected to leave there in the evening for the East on their way home.

A Calgary special says it is reported that the settlers on the Cochrane lease have formed a protective committee and threaten to burn the grass and run off the stock if molested by the company. Trouble is expected.

Rowand, who was guarding the property for Browning near Morris, to prevent the Red River Road from crossing, was examined before the court to-day. He said he received his instructions from the Canadian Pacific officials, thus establishing the fact that the company is behind the whole railway trouble.

Saved His Car Fare.

As the Arounder came down Main street yesterday morning, says the Buffalo Courier, a car overtook him and bowled on. At the same time he noticed a boy over the way, apparently racing with a horse car. When the car stopped to take on a passenger the boy would slow up and walk to recover his breath. But as soon as the car came up with him he would start on again, "Indian trot," as the boys term it. The Arounder boarded the car to watch the outcome of the race. The boy kept it up, and when he reached Eagle street was a length or two ahead. Here he stopped, and the Arounder, alighting, accosted him. "What were you racing with the car for?" "'Cause, so's to get 5 cents. Mother wanted me to come down to the sewing machine place for a needle and a bottle of oil. She gave me money to ride both ways. So I ran down just as fast as the car, and kept the 5 cents; and I'm going to run all the way back, but I won't have to run so fast 'cause it's up hill. That'll make it 10 cents. That's fair, ain't it? When you are given 10 cents so's to ride and hurry back, it don't matter how you go when you get there just the same, does it, eh? I've been sent down twice this week already. If she only sends me once more I can go to the ball game Saturday and have a glass of chocolate besides. Don't you like chocolate? Oh, it's bully!" and the boy went away on his errand.

Japanese Footgear.

In Japan children's shoes are made of blocks of wood secured with cords. The stocking resembles a mitten, having a separate place for the great toe. As these shoes are lifted only by the toes, the heels make a rattling sound as their owners walk, which is quite stunning in a crowd. They are not worn in the house, as they would injure the soft straw mats on the floor. You leave your shoes at the door. Every house is built with reference to the number of mats required for the floors, each room having from eight to sixteen, and in taking lodging you pay so much for a mat. They think it extravagant in us to require a whole room to ourselves. The Japanese shoe gives perfect freedom to the foot. The beauty of the human foot is only seen in the Japanese. They have no corns, no ingrowing nails, no distorted joints. Our toes are cramped until they are deformed, and are in danger of extinction. They have the full use of their toes, and to them they are almost like fingers. Nearly every mechanic makes use of his toes for holding his work. Every toe is fully developed. Their shoes cost 1d. and last six months.

Farmer, be careful how you let any machine oil or lubricator come in contact with a cut or scratch on your hand or arm. In the manufacture of some of those machine oils fat from diseased and decomposed animals is used. All physicians know how poisonous such matter is. The only safeguard is not to let any spot where the skin is broken be touched by any machine oil or lubricator.

SOME COLD-BLOODED HUMOR.

Little Anecdotes Tending to Show that Some People Do Not Get Excited.

Our neighbors across the channel are fond of relating humorous little incidents of sang-froid in which an Englishman usually acts the role of chief character, says Chambers' Journal. As for instance: A man entered a furniture shop and said: "Have you any old furniture?" "No, sir; but we can make you some!" This reminds us of the Englishman in a restaurant who called for stale bread. "We have none, my lord." "Make some, then; I will wait," was the calm reply. Instances of remarkable coolness and assurances among adventurers "out west" are only to be expected. To begin with a small example: A boy who comes of a chronically borrowing family went to a neighbor's for a cup of sour milk. "I haven't got anything but sweet milk," said the woman pettishly. "I'll wait till it sours," said the obliging youth, sinking into a chair.

But in many of the cases now under consideration foreigners of several nationalities will be found to have figured conspicuously in the matter of taking things coolly.

It is related that a lady and gentleman came to a ferry, and the boatman deputed his grandson to row them across. "Why do you not manage your boat yourself," asked the lady, "instead of letting this child do it?" "Oh, don't you be afraid, ma'am," answered the ferryman; "the lad can swim."

Equally indifferent to the fate of others was one of the sufferers by a late railway accident. He was seen rushing anxiously about, when some one asked if he was hurt. "No; but I can't find my umbrella."

About a year ago, when the upper part of an hotel was on fire, one of the servant girls was directed to awaken two gentlemen who were asleep in an up-stairs room. She knocked at the door, and, with the greatest simplicity, said: "I beg pardon, gentlemen, for disturbing you, but the house is on fire." This case of what may be called ludicrous politeness brings to mind another: "Hi! you dropped a brick up there!" shouted a pedestrian on whose shoulders one of those articles had fallen from a three-story scaffold. "All right," cheerfully responded the bricklayer; "you needn't take the trouble to bring it up."

"What's the matter?" asked a lawyer of his coachman. "The horses are running away, sir." "Can't you pull them up?" "I am afraid not." "Then," said the lawyer, after judicial delay, "run into something cheap."

"Ah me!" sighed Potts, "I'm tired of living,
The world is hollow, ambition's vain."
"Come now!" said his chum "I know the symptoms,
It's all your liver—that's very plain.

You need not suffer, for help is easy;
Pierce's Pellets go right to the place.
'A friend to the bilious,' I well might call them—
There's nothing better; they'll suit your case."

Potts ceased his sighing and bought the "Pellets."
No more he mourneth his hapless lot!
His face is cheerful, his heart is lightsome,
His melancholy is quite forgot!

It is reported the nut crop this season promises to be the heaviest known for years. Walnuts and butternuts are of prodigious size, and the limbs of trees are bending under the weight of the fruit. Hickory nuts also promise to be plentiful, whilst the chestnut will be fully an average.

Ill Temper

Is more rapidly improved by relief from physical suffering than in any other way. Step on your friend's corn and the impulse to strike is strongest. Putnam's Painless Corn Extractor, by quickly and painlessly removing them, insures good nature. Fifty imitations prove its value. Beware of substitutes. "Putnam's," sure, safe, painless.

From all accounts business was never so dull on the stock exchange as now. A seat in that body was sold a few days ago for $20,000, whereas a few years ago it would have brought $35,000. There are altogether too many rotten stocks on the active list to make it inviting for people of sense to come in, and most of this generation of lambs have been sheared to the hide.—Rochester Herald.

Popular Education.

We sympathize with the feelings which often leads citizens to boast that no child born in this country need grow up in ignorance, and yet it is a fact that many people who have learned to read and write have never taught themselves to think. A man who suffered from catarrh, consumption, bronchitis, scrofula, or "liver complaint," might read till his eyes dropped out how these and many other diseases have been cured by Dr. Pierce's Golden Medical Discovery, but if he did not take the lesson to himself and test the virtues of this great medicine, his time would be thrown away.

Advertising is one of the powers of this world. It is an encyclopedia upon the wall; it knows all, or at least talks about everything with equal self-possession—history, science, finance, strategy, commerce. It meddles with every subject.

Dr. Sage's Catarrh Remedy cures when every other so-called remedy fails.

You have all heard of the hen that got buried under a pile of hay and lived from two weeks to three months, according to the ability of the man telling the story, and then came out somewhat thin in flesh, but nevertheless in first-class health and all right mentally. Well, a Dakota hen recently had a worse time than that. She accidentally got shut in the store of a man who doesn't advertise and remained there four weeks. When she was rescued she was a mere wreck, having eaten a peck of dried apples and then drank three or four quarts of kerosene. During her enforced confinement the owner of the store was making a little trip in the country and painting the fences and bridges with:

By Yor. PRuNs: & Etc at. Fossil s' grocry

A case of poisoning by nutmeg is recorded in the British Medical Journal, in which one nutmeg had been eaten by a patient as a cure for diarrhœa. It caused him to become giddy, stupid and very drowsy all next day. The narcotic properties of these seeds, as of others of the same natural order, do not appear to be generally known and seem worthy of investigation.

Poor Thing.

Carrie—"Where have you been?"

Clara—"I've been to the druggist's to get some medicine."

Carrie—"What did you get?"

Clara—"Well, I got some gum drops, and a pound of marshmallow paste, and a pot of rouge, and two sheets of fly paper, and a glass of vanilla cream soda, and a sachet."

Carrie—"Poor thing! You must have a good deal of sickness at your house."—Town Topics.

The treatment of many thousands of cases of those chronic weaknesses and distressing ailments peculiar to females, at the Invalids' Hotel and Surgical Institute, Buffalo, N. Y., has afforded a vast experience in nicely adapting and thoroughly testing remedies for the cure of woman's peculiar maladies.

Dr. Pierce's Favorite Prescription is the outgrowth, or result, of this great and valuable experience. Thousands of testimonials, received from patients and from physicians who have tested it in the more aggravated and obstinate cases which had baffled their skill, prove it to be the most wonderful remedy ever devised for the relief and cure of suffering women. It is not recommended as a "cure-all," but as a most perfect Specific for woman's peculiar ailments.

As a powerful, invigorating tonic, it imparts strength to the whole system, and to the womb and its appendages in particular. For overworked, "worn-out," "run-down," debilitated teachers, milliners, dressmakers, seamstresses, "shop-girls," housekeepers, nursing mothers, and feeble women generally, Dr. Pierce's Favorite Prescription is the greatest earthly boon, being unequaled as an appetizing cordial and restorative tonic.

As a soothing and strengthening nervine, "Favorite Prescription" is unequaled and is invaluable in allaying and subduing nervous excitability, irritability, exhaustion, prostration, hysteria, spasms and other distressing, nervous symptoms commonly attendant upon functional and organic disease of the womb. It induces refreshing sleep and relieves mental anxiety and despondency.

Dr. Pierce's Favorite Prescription is a legitimate medicine, carefully compounded by an experienced and skillful physician, and adapted to woman's delicate organization. It is purely vegetable in its composition and perfectly harmless in its effects in any condition of the system. For morning sickness, or nausea, from whatever cause arising, weak stomach, indigestion, dyspepsia and kindred symptoms, its use, in small doses, will prove very beneficial.

"Favorite Prescription" is a positive cure for the most complicated and obstinate cases of leucorrhœa, excessive flowing, painful menstruation, unnatural suppressions, prolapsus, or falling of the womb, weak back, "female weakness," anteversion, retroversion, bearing-down sensations, chronic congestion, inflammation and ulceration of the womb, inflammation, pain and tenderness in ovaries, accompanied with "internal heat."

As a regulator and promoter of functional action, at that critical period of change from girlhood to womanhood, "Favorite Prescription" is a perfectly safe remedial agent, and can produce only good results. It is equally efficacious and valuable in its effects when taken for those disorders and derangements incident to that later and most critical period, known as "The Change of Life."

"Favorite Prescription," when taken in connection with the use of Dr. Pierce's Golden Medical Discovery, and small laxative doses of Dr. Pierce's Purgative Pellets (Little Liver Pills), cures Liver, Kidney and Bladder diseases. Their combined use also removes blood taints, and abolishes cancerous and scrofulous humors from the system.

"Favorite Prescription" is the only medicine for women, sold by druggists, under a positive guarantee, from the manufacturers, that it will give satisfaction in every case, or money will be refunded. This guarantee has been printed on the bottle-wrapper, and faithfully carried out for many years.

Large bottles (100 doses) $1.00, or six bottles for $5.00.

For large, illustrated Treatise on Diseases of Women (160 pages, paper-covered), send ten cents in stamps. Address,

World's Dispensary Medical Association,
663 Main St., BUFFALO, N. Y.

D C N L. 36 87.

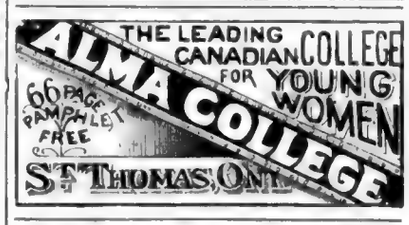
Merchants, Butchers,

AND TRADERS GENERALLY.

We want a GOOD MAN in your locality to pick up

CALFSKINS

For us. Cash furnished on satisfactory guaranty. Address C. S. PAGE, Hyde Park, Vermont, U. S



I CURE FITS!

When I say cure I do not mean merely to stop them for a time and then have them return again. I mean a radical cure. I have made the disease of FITS, EPILEPSY or FALLING SICKNESS a life-long study. I warrant my remedy to cure the worst cases. Because others have failed is no reason for not now receiving a cure. Send at once for a treatise and a Free Bottle of my infallible remedy. Give Express and Post Office. It costs you nothing for a trial, and I will cure you. Address DR. H. G. ROOT,

Branch Office, 37 Yonge St., Toronto.

DUNN'S BAKING POWDER
THE COOK'S BEST FRIEND

CONSUMPTION.

I have a positive remedy for the above disease; by its use thousands of cases of the worst kind and of long standing have been cured. Indeed, so strong is my faith in its efficacy, that I will send TWO BOTTLES FREE, together with a VALUABLE TREATISE on this disease to any sufferer. Give express and P. O. address.

DR. T. A. SLOCUM,

Branch Office, 37 Yonge St., Toronto

THIS PAPER may be found on file at Geo. P. Rowell & Co's Newspaper Advertising Bureau (10 Spruce St.), where advertising contracts may be made for it IN NEW YORK.

THE ADVANCE.

Is published

Every Thursday,

FROM THE OFFICE,

Collingwood Street, - - Flesherton, Ont.

TERMS OF SUBSCRIPTION:

$1 per annum when paid strictly in advance
$1.50 per annum when not so paid

A. R. FAWCETT,
Editor and Proprietor.

FLESHERTON:
THURSDAY, SEPT. 8, 1887.

EDITORIAL NOTES.

"The FLESHERTON ADVANCE is now said to be a whisky paper."—Hanover Post.

You lie.

Commercial Union is simply the velvet that covers the claws of Annexation. Such, at least, is the opinion of THE ADVANCE.

Will Dr. Landerkin kindly inform his constituents in South Grey on which side of the fence he would roost in case the Scott Act is submitted in this County?

As a Temperance educator the Scott Act is really an important factor, for it brings all the evils in connection with intemperance to the surface and exposes them to the public gaze. For that reason, if for no other, we feel bound to say a good word in favor of the Act.

There is every facility for establishlishing a thorough drainage system in Flesherton at a comparatively small outlay of private and public capital. First and foremost, leading drains should be made—convenient of access to all—at the public expense. Private drains will follow as a matter of course. The satisfactory completion of the drainage system might be greatly accelerated by prompt action on the part of the Board of Health. Talk it over.

The Dufferin Police Magistrate, Rev. Mr. Gray, is reported in last week's Post as having said, that "the Scott Act is a complete farce," and bitterly reproaching Temperance people for the lack of support he received at their hands. THE ADVANCE is of opinion, that it is the people themselves who are largely to blame in rendering the Act unworkable. They imagine that when victory has been secured at the polls, no further support or work on their part is necessary. There never was a greater mistake: it is just then that the hard work commences—particularly in a county like Dufferin, where public sentiment is so evenly divided. Without the strong voice of the people to back it up, no act ever passed by parliament can be properly enforced. There is a law against murder, but in many communities throughout the world, that law cannot be enforced, because the lawless element predominates. Where law is respected, the murderer is speedily brought to justice. So, where the Temperance element predominates, the Scott Act can be successfully operated; and where the other element prevails, it can't. For it is possible to secure the passage of the Scott Act in a county where the mass of public opinion is really opposed to it.

Always leave your Watches at Russell's for repair. It will pay you to get a perfect job done at a reasonable price.

ADVICE TO MOTHERS.—Are you disturbed at night and broken of your rest by a sick child suffering and crying with pain of Cutting Teeth? If so send at once and get a bottle of "Mrs. Winslow's Soothing Syrup" for Children Teething. Its value is incalculable. It will relieve the poor little sufferer immediately. Depend upon it, mothers; there is no mistake about it. It cures Dysentery and Diarrhœa, regulates the Stomach and Bowels, cures Wind Colic, softens the Gums, reduces Inflammation, and gives tone and energy to the whole system. "Mrs. Winslow's Soothing Syrup" for children teething is pleasant to the taste and is the prescription of one of the oldest and best female physicians and nurses in the United States, and is for sale by all druggists throughout the world. Price twenty-five cents a bottle. Be sure and ask for "MRS. WINSLOW'S SOOTHING SYRUP," and take no other kind.

THANKS, DEAR READERS.

To those of our many readers who have so promptly and cheerfully responded to the accounts recently sent out from this office, we return our warmest and most grateful thanks. The accounts are small but a lot of them "soon count up," to use a homely phrase. We have some five or six hundred dollars yet out, but have no doubt a great deal of it has already been mailed, or soon will be, and therefore we thank those readers also. These little accounts are easily paid, and when discharged there is a sense of duty well performed which is highly satisfactory to both Reader and Editor.

SCOTT ACT IN GREY.

It is said that the Scott Act is to be submitted in this County in the near future; and in this connection we have a few words to say to Temperance people.

When your minds are fully made up to submit the Act for the consideration of the ratepayers, you must also make up your minds to sacrifice your political proclivities on the altar of Temperance. Ambitious politicians have sought to foist themselves on the people in the past as advocates of Temperance and sobriety; but, no sooner were they within the walls of the parliament buildings, than, throwing of all disguise, they voted in favor of certain clauses calculated to destroy the usefulness of this very same Scott Act. And yet so strongly ran the political current, that you sent them again to parliament where they made another strenuous effort to tear down the structure you had so laboriously erected. Worse than all, prominent Temperance workers defended them, thereby sacrificing their Temperance principles to the exigencies of party and bringing reproach to the good cause they should have had at heart. Such actions are not calculated to bear good fruit, and they don't.

In view of the inefficient support rendered Police Magistrates in the enforcement of the Act in several counties, the Temperance people in Grey should remember—in the event of the Scott Act becoming law in the county—that unless they are fully prepared to do all in their power to see that its provisions are rigidly enforced, it will degenerate into a mere farce.

Fire at Collingwood.

COLLINGWOOD, Sept. 1.—A destructive fire occurred at the Northern Railway docks this morning, whereby the freight sheds were totally destroyed and the docks on which they stood ruined. The alarm was sounded about 3:30 a.m., and in a very few minutes after the entire building was a mass of flames, which began spreading along the docks towards the elevator. Five loaded box cars were destroyed and two empties before the fire was checked in this direction, and a staff of employees has been busy ever since clearing up the wreck and putting the road in running order.

On the other side of the dock and just about where the majority claim that the fire broke out, the Frances Smith was tied up, and would doubtless have shared the same fate as the sheds had not the citizens who went to the fire taken her rope and towed her back to a safe position. The Campana and Niagara were lying at the town dock, and though the former immediately steamed out into the harbor the paint on her cabins, etc., was badly scorched.

The utmost that could be done was to save the cars and prevent the fire from reaching the harbor. All the books and papers were saved from the company's offices and the customs people got out nearly all their stock. All the baggage and the express parcels were also saved. It is estimated that local business men had about $2000 worth of goods in the sheds and the property of outsiders is placed at about the same figure. Fully $1900 worth of grain was destroyed.

Mr. Holgate, Chief Engineer of the Northern, arrived in town by the noon train. He estimates the road's total loss at about $18,000, on which there is an insurance of $10,000. There was also insurance to the amount of $25,000 on freight in transit. It is the intention of the company to at once erect accommodation for the fall traffic, and it is not expected that shipping will be retarded beyond a few hours. The origin of the fire is unknown.

Mary Put Her Foot in it.

"Mary," said a prominent gentleman to his wife a few mornings ago, just before leaving for his place of business, "Mary, I expect a couple of gentlemen will be out here to-day to look at our place with a view of buying. Don't be careless with them and neglect to show them all the good points about the premises. If you are a little discreet now we can get a good price for the property."

"I understand, lovey. I'll not neglect them," hearing which the "lovey" departed.

In the course of the day two gentleman called, and the lady gave them all the aid possible in inspecting the place. No real estate dealer could ever have been more voluble in describing property in an option town than was this loyal little spouse.

"Why, gentlemen," said she, "we have actually received repeated offers of $60,000 for this property, and have held it all along to be worth every cent of $75,000.

That night, as the husband entered his home, he said, "I was sorry to-day, Mary but those gentlemen had some down-town engagement, so that they could not come out."

What's that you say?" exclaimed the wife.

"I said those gentlemen couldn't come out."

"But they did, though, and I tell you I cracked up the place to them. I verily believe I made them think the old rookery was worth $60,000."

"How did they look?" asked the husband.

The wife described them, when, with a solemn invocation, the husband threw up both hands and yelled: "Mary, you have undone me completely. You have been talking to the assessors!"

The CHILDRENS
HEALTH.

One of Nature's Kindest Gifts is a Healthy Constitution. Guard it against disease by using

Siamese Worm Powders.

Worms are the fruitful cause of many disorders in Children. SIAMESE WORM POWDERS will expel Worms in every case where they exist, will regulate the Stomach and Bowels at the same time. Use them, you won't regret it.

Peck's
Pleasant
Pills!

Should always be used for Sick Headache. Their operation is mild and pleasant. They strike home each time when used for a Disordered Liver. Ask for them. Get them. Don't forget the name, Peck's Pleasant Pills.

If your druggist has not the above preparation in Stock, W. W. STEPHEN & CO., of Meaford, will send them to you prepaid on receipt of 25c. for either, 5 of each, or assorted for $1.00.

W. W. STEPHEN & CO.,
Druggists, Wholesale & Retail,
MEAFORD.

WHAT IS IT?

IT IS A FACT AND NO CONTROVERSY THAT
JOHNSON'S
TONIC BITTERS
and NERVINE is the best remedy in the market for nervous diseases of any sort. Hysteria, Loss of Appetite, Debility from loss of fluids or overwork, Paleness of Complexion so often seen in young females and all complaints arising from poverty of blood.

It is a fact and no gainsaying that JOHNSON'S TONIC LIVER PILLS are the very best in the market for diseases caused by Torpid Liver and derrangement of the Stomach or Kidneys.

It is a fact and no one will deny it that JOHNSON'S ALL HEALING WHITE OINTMENT is the best in the market for Burns, Scalds, Chilblains, Salt Rheum, Barbers Itch, Pimples and all Skin Disorders arising from scrofulous taint.

W. S. CHRISTOE has been appointed Agent for the above and has them on sale at his Medical Hall, Flesherton. Try for yourselves and be satisfied.

NOTICE.

GRAY CHAMPION!

A THOROUGH-BRED DURHAM BULL, with good pedigree, will stand for service at Lot 142 West T. & S.R., Artemesia. TERMS, $1 if paid on or before Jan. 1st, 1888; otherwise, $1.25.

Also thorough-bred BERKSHIRE BOAR at same place. JACOB A. LEVEE.

SCROFULA

Humors,

Erysipelas,

Canker, and

Catarrh,

Can be cured by purifying the blood with

I do not believe that Ayer's Sarsaparilla has an equal as a remedy for Scrofulous Humors. It is pleasant to take, gives strength and vigor to the body, and produces a more permanent, lasting, result than any medicine I ever used.—E. Haines, No. Lindale, O.

I have used Ayer's Sarsaparilla, in my family, for Scrofula, and know, if it is taken faithfully, it will thoroughly eradicate this terrible disease.—W. F. Fowler, M. D., Greenville, Tenn.

For forty years I have suffered with Erysipelas. I have tried all sorts of remedies for my complaint, but found no relief until I commenced using Ayer's Sarsaparilla. After taking ten bottles of this medicine I am completely cured.—Mary C. Amesbury, Rockport, Me.

I have suffered, for years, from Catarrh, which was so severe that it destroyed my appetite and weakened my system. After trying other remedies, and getting no relief, I began to take Ayer's Sarsaparilla, and, in a few months, was cured.—Susan L. Cook, 909 Albany st., Boston Highlands, Mass.

Ayer's Sarsaparilla is superior to any blood purifier that I have ever tried. I have taken it for Scrofula, Canker, and Salt-Rheum, and received much benefit from it. It is good, also, for a weak stomach.—Millie Jane Peirce, South Bradford, Mass.

Ayer's Sarsaparilla,
Prepared by Dr. J. C. Ayer & Co., Lowell, Mass.
Price $1; six bottles, $5.

James Sullivan,
The Tinsmith, - Flesherton
Repairing, Eavetroughing, and in fact everything in the business will receive my prompt and careful attention at reasonable prices.

STRAY COW.

Came to the premises of the subscriber Lot 29, Con. 4, Artemesia, on the 23rd inst., a red and white cow. Owner can have same by proving property and paying expenses.

ANTHONY KENNY.
Artemesia, July 29th, 1887.

THE MARKETS.

FLESHERTON.

Carefully Corrected Each Week.

Flour	$4 00 to 4 20
Fall Wheat	$0 70 to 0 75
Spring Wheat	0 70 0 75
Barley	0 45 0 55
Oats	0 28 0 28
Peas	0 48 0 50
Butter	0 16 0 16
Eggs, fresh	0 14 0 14
Potatoes bush	0 50 0 50
Pork	5 60 5 60
Hay, per ton	6 00 6 00
Hides	6 00 7 00
Wool	18 21
Sheepskins	0 40 0 50
Geese	0 05 0 05
Turkeys	0 8 0 8
Chickens per pair	0 25 0 30
Ducks per pair	0 40 0 50

AT GORDON'S
HARNESS SHOP
FLESHERTON,
You will find an assortment of
Heavy and Light Harness,
Whips, Brushes, Curry Combs, Sweat Pads, and the celebrated "Harness Oil."
COLLARS A SPECIALTY.
Cheap for Cash. Call and Examine.

R. J. SPROUL,
Flesherton. Conveyancer, Appraiser, Valuator and Money lender. Deeds, Mortgages, leases and Wills drawn up and Valuations made on shortest notice. Charges very low. Apply to R. J. SPROULE, Postmaster, Flesherton.

CLAYTON'S
HARNESS SHOP!
FLESHERTON.
Is the place to get your Harness Collars, &c, made up in good style.
"Shop in Johnston's Livery Office, Flesherton."

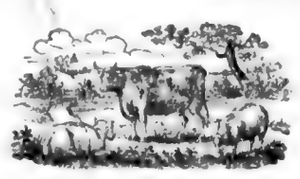
DUNDALK
PUMP WORKS!
C. R. PHILLIP'S,
Manufacturer of all kinds of PUMPS.
Cylinder Check Valve &
Cistern Pumps.
Orders Respectfully Solicited and satisfaction guaranteed.
JAMES SULLIVAN,
Tin-Smith, AGENT.
FLESHERTON

PHOTOGRAPHY.
MRS. BULMER.
Photographer,
Flesherton - Ont.
Having spent some time in the studio of the famous Toronto Photographer, Mr. S. J. Dixon, where I acquired valuable knowledge in Retouching, I feel assured I can give good general satisfaction. A call respectfully solicited.
MRS. BULMER.
Flesherton, Sept. 17th, 1885.

THE CELEBRATED DR CHASE'S MANDRAKE DANDELION LIVER CURE

HAVE YOU
Liver Complaint, Dyspepsia, Indigestion, Biliousness, Jaundice, Headache, Dizziness, Pain in the Back, Costiveness, or any disease arising from a deranged liver, Dr. CHASE'S LIVER CURE will be found a sure and certain remedy.
NATURE'S REMEDY.
The unqualified success of Dr Chase's Liver Cure in Liver Complaint rests solely with the fact that it is compounded from nature's well-known liver regulators, MANDRAKE AND DANDELION, combined with many other invaluable roots, herbs and herbs, having a powerful effect on the Kidneys, Stomach, Bowels and Blood. 500 000 SOLD
Over one-half million of Dr. Chase's Recipe Books were sold in Canada alone. Have you, every man, woman and child who is troubled with Liver Complaint to try the excellent remedy.
SOMETHING NEW. GIVEN AWAY FREE
Wrapped around every bottle of Dr Chase's Liver Cure is a valuable Household Medical Guide and Recipe Book (224 pages), containing over 200 useful recipes, pronounced by medical men and druggists as invaluable, and worth ten times the price of the medicine.
TRY CHASE'S CATARRH CURE. A safe and positive remedy. Price, 25 cents.
TRY CHASE'S KIDNEY AND LIVER PILLS. 25 cts. per box.
SOLD BY ALL DEALERS
T. EDMANSON & CO., Sole Agents, Bradford

Flesherton
Meat Market.
S. SPIRIT, - - PROPRIETOR.



Cash paid for fat Cattle and Sheep.
Fresh Meats constantly on hand for Cash. Orders promptly filled.

EUGENIA
Real Estate Agency
MONEY TO LOAN at lowest rates of interest and on terms of repayment to suit borrower.
FARMS bought and sold.
CONVEYANCES of all kinds properly executed.
COMMISSIONER for taking affidavits in H.C.J., Agent for the Norwich Fire Insurance Society. All business promptly, carefully and confidentially attended to.
Office, Corner of Inkerman and Napoleon Streets.
HENRY MELDRUM,
AGENT.

Publisher's

Announcement:

In the matter of

FINE JOB

Printing!

It is generally conceded that the

Flesherton Advance

TAKES THE

BISCUIT!

EVERY TIME!

Posters! Posters!

From an Eighth Sheet to a mammoth Three-Sheeter—plain or in colors—at prices that will arrest your attention and surprise you.

Auction Sale Bills

WHILE YOU WAIT.

DRUGGISTS' LABELS

As cheap and as good as can be obtained in the city.

PAMPHLETS!

Big, Little, Great and Small.

Circulars, Bill Heads,
Note Heads, Streamers,
Flyers, Dodgers,
Business Cards,
Visiting Cards,
Shipping Tags,
Labels, etc. etc.

New Material

Is added to our stock every Spring and Fall.

NOTICE!

THE ADVANCE will be sent to any address in Canada or the United States for $1 per year; and to England, Ireland, or Scotland for $1.50

THE ADVANCE unquestionably has no superior as a live Local and Family newspaper in Simcoe, Grey, or Bruce.

A. R. FAWCETT,

Editor and Proprietor,

FLESHERTON, ONT.

County News.

A new fire hall is being built in Meaford.

A new Methodist church is to be erected in Shelburne next season.

Owen Sound defeated Markdale base ball team on Tuesday of last week.

Sneak thieves are making things interesting for owners of orchards in Meaford this season.

The Mirror says St. Vincent's rate for 1887 is 4½ mills on the $, independent of school rates.

Mr. Job Almond, of St. Vincent left Meaford last week on an extended visit to friends in Ireland.

Mt. Forest's new High School building will probably be ready for occupation about the 1st of October.

Sixteen tons (32,000 lbs.) of plums were shipped from Thornbury railway station in two days recently.

Mrs. Wm. Weir, of Ravenna—the excellent and kind hostess of the hotel there—died on Sunday of last week.

Mr. Geo. Morrison, of Egremont, fell off the top of a high stack on Monday of last week and was instantly killed.

Wm. Bruce, of Holland, died on Sunday of last week after a lingering illness extending over a period of some ten years.

A Normanby rowdy, named Tom Hill, "sassed" some circus colored men at Mt. Forest recently and got a trouncing in return.

A Hanover family is after the Post man in full "paint and feathers." They want his scalp. Foolish people! it isn't worth the taking!

A Hanover merchant keeps a couple of artificial hams hanging in the front of his store with which to have larks with unwary customers.

A writer, signing himself "Citizen," gives readers of the Standard to understand that he is in favor of incorporating Markdale as a village.

Rev. Mr. Fleming will be inducted as pastor of the Presbyterian congregations at Thornbury and Heathcote on the 15th inst., at the former place.

Three Shelburne sports recently returned from a day's fishing at Brewster's Lake, Osprey, bringing with them over sixty pounds of speckled trout. The Economist shoulders the responsibility of the above yarn.

"Peter Simple's" letter in last week's Meaford Mirror contained, among other things, the following startling conundrum and answer thereto:—"Why do women not get bald. It's because they don't have wives."

The Dufferin Post reports Mr. Grey, Police Magistrate there, as being of opinion that the Scott Act is a failure—chiefly, however, on account of the lack of support accorded by Temperance people themselves.

Kincardine hotel keepers are reported as having entered into an agreement not to accommodate anybody and to close their hotels to the public after Sunday, August 28th. They've undertaken a mighty silly contract.

A patent medicine vendor gulled a lot of Owen Sounders a short time ago on the "watch presentation racket." Those who may chance to have a "Globe" watch about them will know what is meant without further explanations.

Three Thornbury boys hired a livery rig to come to Flesherton recently. On their return one of the boys kicked against paying his share, when his pa was yanked before the beak and compelled to disgorge as well as pay "coort" expenses.

The Markdale Standard completed the seventh year of its existence last week, under the proprietorship of Mr. C. W. Rutledge. Bro. Rutledge is one of the most amiable and honorable members of the Fourth Estate we have ever met, and our wish is that his measure of success may be equal to his goodness of heart.

Reducing the Surplus.

"That's a pretty good idea, mother," said Mr. Jones, the father of seven quite aged daughters, to his wife.

"What's that, John?" asked Mrs. J.

"Why, the Secretary of the Navy advertises for proposals for building some torpedo boats. We might advertise for proposals for the girls!"

The Use of a Friend.

"Colonel Brown, come dine with me at my place to-night, will you?"

"Certainly—pleasure. Will your wife expect me?"

"No; that's the beauty of it. We had a row this morning about a Saratoga trip and I want to make her mad."

Asthma cured by the double treatment of Southern Asthma Cure, is a common remark.

Our Township Fathers.

Council met shortly after ten o'clock a. m., Reeve in the chair.

Members all present.

Minutes read and confirmed.

Communications received from J. B. Sloan, re church lots in Eugenia; and D. Lamont, re draining J. Brander's cellar in Priceville.

Mr. Brander put in an appearance in person before the Fathers and stated his position fully re petition of D. Lamont and others in reference to drainage. The matter was discussed for over one hour, when it was finally decided by the introduction of the following motion:—

Moved by Mr. Boland, seconded by Mr McArthur, That Mr James Brander's application be not entertained.—Carried.

Mr. Brander then announced his intention to take legal proceedings against Council.

Moved by Mr. McArthur, seconded by Mr. Sharp, That the matter in dispute between Graham and Campbell and the twp. of Artemesia, re deviation through Lots Nos. 23 & 24, Con. 12, be left to arbitration for settlement.—Carried.

Moved by Mr. McArthur, seconded by Mr. Sharp, that the usual grant of $25 be made to the Twp. of Artemesia Agricultural Society, and the same be paid upon the application of that Society's Treasurer.—Carried.

Moved by Mr. Cairns, seconded by Mr. Sharp, that the County Treasurer be instructed to redeem Lot 21 South side Pellessier street, Eugenia, Lot 22 North Simpson street, and Lot 2 St. Arnaud street from sale for taxes in 1887, as the same is church property and therefore not liable to taxation.—Carried.

Moved by Mr. McArthur, seconded by Mr. Sharp, that Surveyor Gilliland be instructed to re-survey the deviation on South Line, Lot 27, Con. 2, S. D. R., and the Clerk notify Surveyor to this effect.—Carried.

Moved by Mr. McArthur, seconded by Mr. Sharp, that Mr. Boland be and is hereby appointed to settle the matter between Walker, McFarland and the Twp., re Lot 4, North Cavan street, in the village of Markdale.—Carried.

Boland, Sharp—That a grant of $5 be made by this Council to repair a bridge on 10th con., over Saugeen.—Carried.

Sharp, McArthur—That in the matter of Road as established by By-Law 122 in the year 1860, running on part between the 9th and 10th concession and two rods wide, this Council thinks it is not liable for such ground or any fence built, or to be built, and if Mr. Smith chose to fix the said road for his own convenience, this Council will not object.—Carried.

Council adjourned.

A WONDERFUL ORGAN. The largest organ and one that plays a controlling part of the health of the body is the liver. If torpid or inactive the whole system becomes diseased. Dr. Chase's Liver Cure is made specially for Liver and Kidney diseases, and is guaranteed to cure. Receipe book and medicine $1. Sold by all dealers.

Must have Cistern Water.

A very simple man may be a very obliging husband. The following instance proves it:

"I've been a-workin' like all possessed to-day," said Uncle Solon.

"So? what have you been doing?"

"My wife, ye see, has the rheumatics, an' 'twas wash-day: so she says to me, says she, 'Solon, the water in the cistern is out, an' I can't wash without cistern water, and my rheumatic's so bad that I can't fetch it.' Says I, 'Sally, I'll bring the water.' An' I brought twenty-five pails of water from my neighbor's well an' poured into that cistern, an' then I pumped every drop out for the washin'. Mighty hard work.

"Why, in the name of common-sense, didn't you put the water in the tubs instead of turning it into the cistern and pumping it out again?"

"Coz," said uncle Solon, bristling up, "coz, 'in the name of common-sense,' she had to have cistern water to wash with!"

He "Wasn't No Little Beggar."

Little Arthur had been told by his mother that he must never ask any one for anything. "Mamma don't want her little darling to become a little beggar," she plaintively put it.

Arthur promised to heed the injunction. An hour or two later his Uncle William called. Remembering his relative's generosity of heart and frequent bestowals of candy money, the little fellow timidly and hesitatingly asked:

"Mamma don't want me to be a little beggar boy; do you ever give five centses to little boys what don't ask for 'em?"

Visions of coveted sweetmeats and nuts, neatly folded in a paper bag, soon gladdened the little fellow's raptured sight.

Fall Exhibitions.

Toronto, Dom. & Industrial,	Sep.	5—17
London, Western,	"	19—24
Guelph, Central,	"	20—22
Orangeville,	"	21—23
Stayner,	"	21—23
FLESHERTON, EAST GREY	"	22—23
Markdale, Glenelg Tp.,	"	20—21
Hamilton, Great Central,	"	26—30
Collingwood, Great Northern,	"	27—30
Durham, South Grey,	"	27—28
Tara,	Oct.	3—4
Clarksburg, Collingwood Tp.,	"	4—5
Shelburne,	"	4—5
Barrie, Central Simcoe,	"	4—7
Walkerton, Northern,	"	4—7
Derby Tp.,	"	5—6
Meaford, St. Vincent,	"	6—7
Owen Sound, North Grey,	"	11—12
Sydenham,	Oct.	7
Sullivan,	"	7
PRICEVILLE, ARTEMESIA Tp.,	"	4
Dundalk, Proton Tp.,	Oct.	6—7
Hanover, Bentinck Tp.,	Sept.	22—23
Holland Centre,	Sept.	28
Sarawak,	Sep.	27
Rocklyn, Euphrasia Tp.
Osprey Tp.

Regulating Swearing for the Boys.

"Now, boys," said Farmer Slikens, when he had gathered his three sons about him, "you know yer old father's jined the church, an' conserkintly we ort to have some gne'ral piety reggerlations fur the fam'ly. There ain't no use in b'longin' to a church an' puttin' money into the conterbution box 'nless yer goin' ter see the hull thing through. In the fus' place I've noticed consid'able leanin' ter strong words 'mongst you boys 'n thet's the fust thing I'm goin' ter reggerlate. Of course no perfane swearin' is allowed, not under no circumstances, but some pervision for human natur hev got ter be made. So on week days ye can range along all the way from 'dog-gon to gosh-darn.' But if I hear anything wuss'n 'dad blame' out o' you on Sundays ye kin jest make up yer mind ter git it."

A Common Cold

Is often the beginning of serious affections of the Throat, Bronchial Tubes, and Lungs. Therefore, the importance of early and effective treatment cannot be overestimated. Ayer's Cherry Pectoral may always be relied upon for the speedy cure of a Cold or Cough.

Last January I was attacked with a severe Cold, which, by neglect and frequent exposures, became worse, finally settling on my lungs. A terrible cough soon followed, accompanied by pains in the chest, from which I suffered intensely. After trying various remedies, without obtaining relief, I commenced taking Ayer's Cherry Pectoral, and was

Speedily Cured.

I am satisfied that this remedy saved my life.—Jno. Webster, Pawtucket, R. I.

I contracted a severe cold, which suddenly developed into Pneumonia, presenting dangerous and obstinate symptoms. My physician at once ordered the use of Ayer's Cherry Pectoral. His instructions were followed, and the result was a rapid and permanent cure.—H. E. Simpson, Rogers Prairie, Texas.

Two years ago I suffered from a severe Cold which settled on my Lungs. I consulted various physicians, and took the medicines they prescribed, but received only temporary relief. A friend induced me to try Ayer's Cherry Pectoral. After taking two bottles of this medicine I was cured. Since then I have given the Pectoral to my children, and consider it for Colds, Coughs, and all Throat and Lung diseases, ever used in my family.—Robert Vanderpool, Meadville, Pa.

The Best Remedy

Some time ago I took a slight Cold, which, being neglected, grew worse, and settled on my lungs. I had a hacking cough, and was very weak. Those who knew me best considered my life to be in great danger. I continued to suffer until I commenced using Ayer's Cherry Pectoral. Less than one bottle of this valuable medicine cured me, and I feel that I owe the preservation of my life to its curative powers.—Mrs. Ann Lockwood, Akron, New York.

Ayer's Cherry Pectoral is considered, here, the one great remedy for all diseases of the throat and lungs, and is more in demand than any other medicine of its class.—J. F. Roberts, Magnolia, Ark.

Ayer's Cherry Pectoral,

Prepared by Dr. J. C. Ayer & Co., Lowell, Mass. Sold by Druggists. Price $1; six bottles, $5.

Agents, Agents!

NOW READY—A—OUR NEW BOOK.

EARTH, SEA AND SKY

—OR—

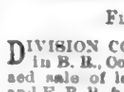
Marvels of the Universe

Being a full and graphic description of all that is wonderful in every Continent of the Globe, in the world of waters and the starry Heavens. Containing thrilling adventures on land and sea, renowned discoveries of the world's greatest explorers in all ages, and remarkable phenomena in every realm of nature. Embracing the striking physical features of the earth the peculiar characteristics of the human race, of animals, birds, insects, etc., including a vivid description of the Atlantic, Pacific and Indian Oceans and of the Polar Seas, the monsters of the deep, beautiful seashells and plants, singular fishes and dwellers in the world of waters, remarkable ocean currents, etc., together with the amazing phenomena of the solar and starry systems, by Henry Davenport Northrop, D.D., embellished with over 300 fine engravings. Liberal terms to agents. Oxford Publishing Company, 5 Jordan St., Toronto, Ont. 346-368

Medical.

DR. CARTER,
M.C.P. & S., ONT.
PHYSICIAN, SURGEON, &c.
FLESHERTON.
Office, Strain's block. Residence, Wm. Wright's

Dentistry.



DENTISTRY.

Thomas Henderson, L.D.S.
SURGEON DENTIST,
Gold Medalist and Honor Graduate of the R.C.D.S.,

Will visit FLESHERTON, (Munshaw's Hotel) 1 and 2 of each month. Teeth extracted, inserted and filled in the highest styles of the art, and at moderate rates.

HEAD OFFICE, 761 YONGE ST., TORONTO.

Legal.

J. W. FROST, LL.B.,
Barrister, Solicitor, Conveyancer.
Office,—Strain's Building, FLESHERTON.
A. A. CHESLEY, Solicitor and Conveyancer, Resident Manager.
MR. FROST will be found at the Office on Thursdays as heretofore.

P. McCULLOUGH,
Barrister, Solicitor, &c.
Office, over McFarland's Store, Markdale. Money to Loan.

MASSON & MASSON,
BARRISTERS, SOLICITORS, &c.
OFFICES—Owen Sound, in Vicker's block, Poulett St.; Branch office in Markdale, over McFarland's store, on Friday and Saturday every week.
J. MASSON, Q.C. S. MASSON. W. MASSON.
N.B.—Private & Company's funds to invest at from Six to Eight per cent.

Business Cards.

John W. Armstrong,
FLESHERTON, CO. GREY.
DIVISION COURT CLERK, COMMISSIONER in B. R., Conveyancer, &c. Agent for purchased sale of lands. Appraiser for C. L. C. Com. and F. P. B. & S. Society. Money to Loan on the most reasonable terms. ISSUER OF MARRIAGE LICENSES. NOTARY PUBLIC.

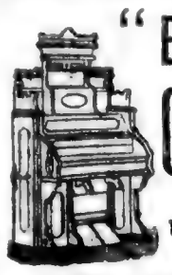
MONEY TO LOAN.
At 6 Per Cent.
On Farm or Town Property.
S. DAMUDE,
Flesherton.

W. J. BELLAMY.
TWP. CLERK ARTEMESIA.
CONVEYANCER, COMMISSIONER, INSURANCE AGT, &C
DEEDS, MORTGAGES, LEASES, &c., prepared and properly executed. Insurance effected in first-class companies. Money to lend at lowest rates.

GET YOUR MEAT
—:FROM:—
Petch & Mitchell,
GENERAL BUTCHERS,
FLESHERTON!
Cash paid for fat cattle, &c., &c.

NEW LIVERY!
THE undersigned begs to announce that he has started a first-class Livery in the stand opposite Munshaw's Hotel, Flesherton, where the travelling public can be accommodated with good rigs and horses at most reasonable prices. Try me and be convinced.
Respectfully yours,
W. H. JOHNSTON.
Flesherton, Nov. 19th, 1886.

Picture Framing,
Neatly, Cheaply & Quickly Done, by
J. E. MOORE,
Durham St., Opposite Clayton's Harness Shop



"BELL" ORGANS
Unapproached for Tone and Quality.
CATALOGUES FREE.
BELL & CO., Guelph, Ont.

THE FATE OF THE LEAGUE.

A Majority of Seventy-eight Support its Proclamation.

TREVELYAN OPENS THE BALL.

Harangues by Hartington, Harrington, Harcourt and Others.

BALFOUR SAYS "YOU'RE ANOTHER."

A last (Friday) night's London cable says: In the debate on Mr. Gladstone's motion in the House of Commons last night Mr. Timothy Harrington commented severely upon the character of the documents which Mr. Balfour had quoted but had refused to lay upon the table, and declared them to be utterly worthless. He asserted that the plain duty of the League was to continue its work and not shrink from the consequences.

Mr. T. W. Russell, member for South Tyrone, after remarking that Mr. Gladstone had somewhat misconstrued some of his (Mr. Russell's) statements, protested against the coercion of the League, but said that having supported the Crimes Bill he could not consistently deny the right of the Government to the powers they demanded and secured by the passage of that Act.

Mr. Bradlaugh asked why, if the Government's statements were true, the Ministry had not proclaimed the League before they did.

Mr. T. P. O'Connor said the effect of the proclamation would be to remove the partition between the tenantry and the evicting landlords. The Government could deal with cases of intimidation, if there be any, without proclaiming the League.

On motion of Sir George Trevelyan, the debate was adjourned.

Sir George O. Trevelyan, one of the late Gladstonite recruits, resumed the debate to-night on Mr. Gladstone's motion for an address to the Queen, praying for a nullification of the Government's proclamation of the Irish National League. He said the late Government did not ask the House of Commons to pass the Irish Crimes Bill on hearsay, but that they based their demands on Parliamentary returns of grave outrages. There had been committed 7,788 outrages during the previous year and 26 agrarian and political murders during the first half of the year. He contended that the House should have tabulated statistics of crime in Ireland, and that to mention one crime here and another crime there was not sufficient to justify such action as the Government were now taking against the whole Irish people. He denied that the general operations of the Irish National League increased crime in Ireland or led to the general non-payment of rent. Let the House understand, he continued, that if the proclamation of the League is sanctioned every Irishman belonging to it who will not leave it at the command of the Government will be liable to be punished as a common criminal, and that liability will not depend on any judicial proceedings worthy of the name. In conclusion he complained that the statements made by Mr. Balfour and only given out last night left no time for examination of their character. Mr. Balfour had presented a series of alleged facts in justification of the Government's action. These allegations the House should have a chance to corroborate or refute before coming to a decision.

Sir Richard E. Webster, Attorney-General, held the reason why there were not more convictions of crime in Ireland was simply because of the terror of the League. He reminded the House that Earl Spencer's Government had repeatedly proclaimed the Land League meetings, and that Sir George O. Trevelyan had supported these proclamations on the ground that the objects of the Land League were to put down landlordism and to effect a separation between Ireland and England. The objects of the existing League, said the speaker, were the same. Its aim had not been changed. Abundant evidence had already been adduced as to the evil workings of the League. The Government would now try the experiment whether the suppression of League meetings would not lessen the intimidation. (Irish cheers.) They were told this would be the death struggle. Well, either the League or the Government would go down. (Irish cheers.) He did not fear for the result. The Government would be supported by the consciousness that they had done their duty.

Mr. Harrington (Nationalist) said that, as one largely responsible for the League, he desired to reply to the calumnies that had been hurled at its character. He read letters from branches of the League condemning the practices which the Government declared the League promoted. The League repudiated every form of outrage. The League would go on doing what it had done in spite of proclamations, which had no terrors for the Irish people. (Cheers.)

Mr. Wm. Redmond accused the Orange society of worse intimidation than was ever charged to the League, which was a genuine national association. Under certain circumstances, he said, boycotting was justifiable and necessary. (Cheers from the Ministerial benches.)

Lord Hartington said he did not think the speech of Mr. Redmond would influence the House in favor of the constitutional and legitimate character of the League. He doubted whether if Sir George O. Trevelyan's views upon the Crimes Act had been known in Bridgeton he would have got the support of the Irish electors. (Laughter.) Sir George Trevelyan did not dwell on the object or the tyranny of the League, or the ruin and loss it caused, nor did he enter upon the question whether Lord Salisbury and Earl Spencer were justified in the policies they adopted. The question for the present decision was whether the previous policy, which had been so successful, should be followed by the present Government, if the tyranny of the League became more rampant and more organized. Now, as far as the act of an association was wholly political, it could not be condemned, but if the action of an association destroyed the liberty of the people and subverted order and good government, it did not matter what the supposed motives of the association were. It was enough that its action was hostile to social order. (Cheers.) The House had already decided that intimidation prevailed, preventing persons from pursuing thei lawful occupations. He contradicted the reports that he had disagreed with the Government upon the step proposed. He believed that the League's aim was spoliation and injustice, and that its methods were in defiance of the law. (Cheers.) Continuing, Lord Hartington said that he had some doubt as to the course adopted. He should have preferred if it had been possible that the Government should resort in the first instance to the provisions of the Crimes Act; but with their aim and object he entirely and earnestly sympathized. They were justified by the facts before them in the course they had taken. He would oppose Mr. Gladstone's resolution, because it asked the House to interfere needlessly and prematurely with the Government's exercise of the authority which Parliament had entrusted to them and intended that they should use. (Loud cheers.)

Sir William Vernon Harcourt said he thought the preceding speech was an extraordinary one from such a responsible statesman, knowing that the step he was taking was fateful both for Ireland and for England. Instead of advising the country, under these grave circumstances, Lord Hartington only endeavored to show that he had not been consulted, and therefore was not responsible for what had been done. (Laughter.) The Government allowed a verdict of not guilty to be entered on several clauses of the indictment against the League; for they did not dare to proclaim it as an association for the promotion of crime or interfering with the maintenance of law and order. He would not extenuate or apologize for intimidation, but if that was all the Government wanted to prevent they could have attained that object by adopting the advice of their Unionist friends and putting in force the "combination" clause of the Crimes Bill. The reason they had not taken that course was because they would have been compelled to produce evidence that would satisfy the country that intimidation prevailed in Ireland, and they were unable to produce such evidence. But the men they wished to suppress were not intimidators, but restrainers of intimidation. (Irish cheers.) The Government wanted to strike the League because it was inconvenient to them, adverse to their political opinions and to the pecuniary interests of the class they represented, and it was characteristic of them that the first member struck was an Irish member of Parliament, the editor of an Irish newspaper. The only specific cases which had been adduced to justify the proclamation had been specifically disproved. The country would appreciate the unfairness of their conduct and object.

Mr. Goschen observed that Sir William Harcourt had been elected to hold the brief for the League. Continuing, he said that the Government were fully conscious of their responsibility. The difficulty of their task was increased by the persistent opposition of those who had themselves held high office, and who, under similar circumstances, were supported by the Conservatives. Mr. Goschen then proceeded to denounce the League in strong terms.

Mr. Healy, who ended the debate, counselled the Irish people to wait patiently and abstain from violence.

The vote was then taken, 194 voting in favor of Mr. Gladstone's motion and 272 against, giving a Government majority of 78 votes.

The O'Gorman Mahon, Nationalist, the newly-elected member for Carlow, entered the House this afternoon and took his seat. He was greeted with cheers by the Parnellite members.

HE SAYS HE DID IT.

Murderer Captured in Windsor and Confesses His Crime to the Authorities.

A Windsor despatch says: Chief of Police Bains, of Windsor, arrested a man who has been living in the town for the past two weeks on the strength of the fact that he tallied with the description of one Emmanuel Myers, charged with murdering his wife in Jackson, Mich. After the arrest the man confessed his crime. The murder took place in February last. The girl was his third wife and was only 20 years of age. They had been married three years. He was extremely cruel to her, and on that account they separated about four months prior to the shooting. Subsequently a son of Myers by a former wife fell ill and Mrs. Myers returned home to nurse him. On his recovery she prepared to take her departure again, and Myers helped her to pack her trunk and said he would go part of the way with her. As she turned to leave the house he suddenly drew a revolver and shot her, the bullet passing through her lungs and lodging in the liver, inflicting a fatal wound. Immediately after the shooting the murderer disappeared, and although the police made diligent search to discover his whereabouts they failed to locate him, and it was thought he had ended his life by jumping into the river, which runs by his home. Instead of committing suicide Myers made tracks for the south, where he had been up to the time he arrived in Windsor. He looks and acts like a lunatic, and while living in Jackson was regarded as half crazy, besides being of an extremely jealous and quarrelsome disposition. He is over six feet in height, stooped shouldered, grizzly grey hair and whiskers. He is owner of four houses and lots in Jackson, and a short time before he murdered his wife he stated to neighbors he would send her to eternity if she did not sign off her claim to the property. It is probable he will consent to return to Jackson without the formality of extradition, as he is completely broken down in health.

General Middleton's Retirement.

An Ottawa despatch says: It is understood that Major-General Middleton's tenure of office as the general officer commanding the Canadian militia will expire in November next. He will then have attained the maximum age of retirement from active service as fixed by the Imperial Army regulations, viz., 62 years. As under the Dominion Militia Act the officer charged with the military command and discipline of our militia must hold rank in Her Majesty's regular army i. e., on the active list—General Middleton will perforce retire. His retiring allowance will, it is stated, be about seven hundred pounds sterling annually.

Every girl should learn to play the piano. Music has charms to soothe the savage, and there is no telling what sort of a temper the man will have she catches for a husband.

PELTED WITH STICKS AND STONES.

Savage Attack on Salvationists at Quebec—Both Women and Men Assaulted—Narrow Escape of Commissioner Coombes from Being Murdered.

A last (Thursday) night's Quebec despatch says: A most brutal and uncalled for attack on the Salvation Army took place here to-night. A large number of brothers and sisters of the Army arrived here yesterday for the purpose of taking part in their fifth annual jubilee. They came from Halifax, St. John (N.B.), the Eastern townships, Montreal, Ottawa, Toronto and other places west, probably about 100 delegates in all. Last evening, in the usual way, they with the city members paraded through the streets, headed by a brass band. They did not interfere with any one. A few evil-disposed ruffians who probably detest religious worship in any form, threw a few large rocks at the procession, slightly injuring passers-by as well as members of the Army. No particular notice was taken of this and the cowards desisted, only to renew the attack to-night with reinforcements. The procession had just reached Place d'Armes square, when a well-known Quebec bully, backed by 300 or 400 similar cowards, rushed on the unprotected Salvationists and poured a continual fusilade of rocks at them, with an occasional thump of a stick. They did not stop in their murderous assault even when men and women, one after the other, fell to the ground, maimed. In fact, this seemed to increase their fury, and if any sympathizers went to the assistance of the injured ones they were given a stormy reception. By the greatest efforts the injured ones were rescued and taken to the barracks. In the meantime the mob followed the Army, and, like the sneaking cowards that they were, hid behind a fence which encircles the Jesuit grounds, opposite the Basilica. There they opened fire again and caused a general stampede amongst the Army, who were taken at fearful odds. A young lady who was passing Simons & Foulds' dry goods store, on Fabrique street, during this attack, escaped death by a hair's breadth. A rock weighing about two pounds struck her hat, glanced off and smashed a $100 pane of glass. Further down the street a lady member of the Army was struck on the back of the neck with a huge stick, by a burly ruffian. The young girl ran as hastily as she could into a store on Fabrique street for protection, but was rudely ejected and again attacked. The Army were making as fast time as possible and reached the barracks, where it was found that some fifteen or more were seriously injured. Color-Sergeant Merritt, of Quebec, was hit on the temple and is suffering from concussion of the brain. He is now delirious and the doctor cannot pronounce on his case. Adjutant VanAllen, of Montreal, and McHardy, of Ottawa, have split heads. Bateman, Gardiner and Young, of Montreal, are injured on the face, head and body. Miss Lloyd, a captain, of Waterloo, was kicked in the ribs and is almost prostrated. Commissioner Coombes was set upon by a number of the mob and would undoubtedly have been killed but for the timely assistance of a man named Low, who mixed up with the row and changed hats with the commissioner.

Commissioner Coombes states that he demanded police protection for to-night after being assailed last night, and was only allowed four men, who arrived, in the usual way, after the storm was over. Dr. Gale, who is in attendance, has refused to allow several of the injured ones to be removed to-night. There is great indignation felt over this outrage of civil rights. The ringleader was fully recognized by several persons, and, it is said, will be arrested. Commissioner Coombes will, it is said, remain over and push the prosecution.

ANOTHER ANTI-SCOTT ACT OUTRAGE.

A Temperance Man Treated to a Dose of Dynamite—The Windows of the House Broken.

A Farmersville, Ont., despatch says: The Scott Act has been in force in the County of Leeds for about fifteen months, during which time feeling between the advocates of the Act and the Anti-Scott men has run very high in this section of the county. The two hotelkeepers here, together with the one at Charleston Lake, five miles distant, have been twice hauled up for selling liquor. During the last few days, therefore, the feeling has been very bitter, and Monday night the excitement was intensified by the explosion of a dynamite cartridge shortly before midnight in front of the residence of Richard Arnold, a leading temperance man, breaking all the windows on the south and west sides of the house, but fortunately no one was injured. Had the cartridge been placed nearer the building the results would have been more serious. Who committed the dastardly deed is unknown, but it is believed that its effect is to intimidate witnesses to be heard at to-day's trial. The driver of the stage between here and Mallorytown (Hogaboom) states that on Monday evening he brought a package from Mallorytown to McIntosh Mills, six miles from here, which he was afterwards informed contained dynamite, and it is believed that the cartridge used last night was taken from this package. Nearly a year ago Arnold and the village constable, George Brown, both received anonymous letters threatening the use of dynamite if they persisted in carrying out the law.

Acute "Loco Motive Eat Us."

Everybody is talking about the extraordinary number of railroad disasters, crossing-slaughters, collisions and runaway engines reported in the daily newspapers during the past two or three weeks. It does not indicate that railway men are becoming more reckless or that the average of risk is increasing. Casual events of any class distribute themselves in groups and not at regular intervals, and just now we are passing through an uncommonly thick group of incidents of this sort. The effect is somewhat startling, however. It looks very much as if an epidemic of acute locomotivitis had attacked the railroads of the country.—N. Y. Sun.

Mr. Sorley will leave London (Eng.) immediately in connection with the failure of the Bank of London, in the interest of Scotch holders of the debentures issued by the Ontario Investment Association, in which the directors of the bank are largely interested.

FAINT HEARTED SHERIFF.

Desperate Eviction Battle Fought, Ending in the Defeat of the Evictors.

